It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Graver had a strife
VVith Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but have dravne his VVit
As vvell in Brasse, as he hath hit
His Face; the Print vvould then surpasse

TO THE MOST NOBLE

AND INCOMPARABLE PAIRE OF BRETHREN,

WILLIAM
Earle of Pembroke, &c. Lord Chamberlaine to the Kings most Excellent Majestie.

AND PHILIP
Earle of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Majesties Bed-Chamber. Both Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good LORDS.

Right Honourable,

*Hilſt we ſtudy to be thankefull in our particular, for the many favors we have received from your L. L.
we are ſalne upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the moſt divers things that can be, feare, and raſhneſſe; raſhneſſe in the enterprize, and feare of the ſuc-ceſſe. For, when wee value the places your H. H. ſuſtaine, wee cannot but know their dignity greater, than to deſcend to the reading of theſe trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have depriv'd our ſelves of the defence of our Dedication. But ſince your L. L. have beene pleas'd to thinke theſe trifles ſomething, heretofore; and have proſequuted both them, & their Author living, with ſo much favour: we hope, (that they out-living him, and he not having the fate, common with ſome, to be Exequutor to his owne writings) you will uſe the ſame indulgence toward them, you have done unto their* parent. There is a great difference, whether any Booke choose his Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, so much were your L.L. likings of the severall parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the Volumne ask'd to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of selfe-profit, or fame: onely to keepe the memory of so worthy a Friend, and Fellow alive, as was our SHAKESPEARE, by humble offer of his Playes, to your most Noble Patronage. Wherein, as we have justly observed, no man to come neere your L.L. but with a kind of religious addresse; it hath been the height of our care, who are the Presenters, to make the Present worthy of your H.H. by the Perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be considered, my Lords. We cannot goe beyond our owne powers. Countrey hands, reach forth Milke, Creame, Fruits, or what they have: and many Nations (we have heard) that had not Gummes and Incense, obtained their requests with a leavened Cake; It was no fault to approach their gods, by what meanes they could: And the most, though meanest, of things, are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly consecrate to your H.H. these remaines of your servant Shakespeare; that what delight is in them, may be ever your L.L. the reputation his, and the faults ours, if any be committed, by a paire so carefull to shew their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

To the great variety of Readers.

From the most able, to him that can but spell : There you are number'd. We had rather you were weigh'd. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities : and not of your heads alone, but of your Purfes Well, it is now publike, and you will stand for your priviledges, we know : to reade, and censure. Doe so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a Booke, the Stationer sayes. Then, how odde soever your braines be, or your wisedomes, make your licence the same, and spare not. Iudge your sixe-penny' orth, your shillings worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, whatever you doe, buy. Censure will not drive a Trade, or make the lacke goe. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and sit, on the Stage at Black-Fryers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dayly, know, these Playes have had their triall already, and stood out all Appeals ; and doe now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had beene a thing, we confesse, worthy to have beene wished, that the Author himselfe had liv'd to have set forth, and overseene his owne writings ; But since it hath been ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you doe not envy his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to have collected and publish'd them ; and so to have publisht them, as where (before) you were abus'd with divers stolne, and surreptitious Copies, maimed and deformed by the frauds and stealths of injurious Impostors, that expos'd them : even those, are now offer'd to your view cured, and perfect of their limbes ; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers as he conceived them. Who, as he was a happy imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His minde and hand went together : And what he thought, he uttered with that easinesse, that we have scarce received from him a blot in his Papers. But it is not our Province, who onely gather his workes, and give them you to praise him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you : for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be lost. Reade him, therefore ; and againe, and againe : And if then you doe not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him And so we leave you to other of his Friends, who, if you need, can be your guides : if you neede them not, you can leade your selves, and others. And such Readers we wish him.

Vpon the Effigies of my vworthy
Friend, the Author Master VVilliam
Shakespeare, and his VVorkes,

Spectator, this Lifes Shaddow is ; To see
The truer image and a livelier be Turne Reader. But, observe his Commicke vaine,
Laughe, and proceed next to a Tragicke straine,
Then weepe ; So when thou find'st two contraries,
Two different passions from thy rapt soule rise
Say, (who alone effect such wonders could)
Rare Shake-speare to the life thou dost behold.

An Epitaph on the admirable Dramaticke
Poet, VV. SHAKESPEARE.

What neede my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an Age, in piled stones
Or that his hallow'd Reliques should be hid Vnder a starre-ypointing Pyramid ?
Deare Sonne of Memory, great Heire of Fame,
What needst thou such dull witnesse of thy Name ?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thy selfe a lasting Monument :
For whil'st to th'shame of slow-endavouring Art
Thy easie numbers flow, and that each part,
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued Booke,
Those Delphicke Lines with deepe Impression tooke
Then thou our fancy of her selfe bereaving,
Dost make us Marble with too much conceiving,
And so Sepulcher'd in such pompe dost lie
That Kings for such a Tombe would wisht to die.

TO THE MEMORIE

of the deceased Author, Master

VV. SHAKESPEARE.

SHake-speare, at length thy pious Fellowes give
The World thy Workes: thy Workes, by which, out-live
Thy Tombe, thy name must: when that stone is rent,
And Time dissolves thy Stratford Monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still. This Booke,
When Brasse and Marble fade, shall make thee looke
Fresh to all Ages: when Posteritie
Shall loath what's new, thinke all is prodigie
That is not Shakespeares; ev'ry Line, each Verse
Here shall revive, redeeme thee from thy Herse.
Nor Fire, nor cankring Age, as Naso said,
Of his, thy wit-fraught Booke shall once invade.
Nor shall I e're beleeve, or thinke thee dead
(Though mist) untill our bankrout Stage be sped
(Impossible) with some new straine t'out-doe
Passions of Iuliet, and her Romeo;
Or till I heare a Scene more nobly take,
Than when thy halfe-sword parlying Yomans spake.
Till these, till any of thy Volumes rest
Shall with more fire, more feeling be exprest,
Be sure, our Shake-speare, thou canst never dye,
But crown'd with Laurell, live eternally.

L. Digges.

To the Memory of M. W. Shake-speare.

Wondred (Shake-speare) that thou went'st so soone
From the Worlds-Stage, to the Graves-Tyring-roome.
We thought thee dead, but this thy Printed worth,
Tels thy Spectatōrs, that thou went'st but forth
To enter with applause. An Actors Art,
Can dye, and live, to act a second Part.
That's but an Exit of Mortality;
This, a Re-entrance to a Plaudite.

To the memory of my beloved,
The AVTHOR

MR. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

what he hath left us.

DO draw no envy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame:
While I confesse thy writings to be such,
As neither Man, nor Muse, can praise too much:
Tis true, and all mens suffrage. But these wayes
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise:
For feeliest Ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but eccho's right;
Or blinde Affection, which doth ne're advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty Malice, might pretend this praise,
And thinke to ruine, where it seem'd to raise.
These are, as some infamous Baud, or whore,
Should praise a Matron. What could hurt her more?
But thou art prooffe against them, and indeed
Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.
I therefore will begin. Soule of the Age!
The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage!
My Shakespeare rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lye
A little further, to make thee a roome:
Thou art a Monument, without a tombe,
And art alive still, while thy Booke doth live,
And we have wits to read, and prayse to give.
That I not mixe thee so, my braine excuses;
I meane with great, but disproportion'd Muses:
For, if I thought my judgement were of yeeres,
I should commit thee surely with thy peeres,
And tell, how farre thou didst our Lily out-shine,
Or sporting Kid, or Marlowes mighty line.
And though thou hadst small Latine and lesse Greeke,
From thence to honour thee, I would not seeke
For names; but call forth thund'ring Æschilus,
Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
Paccuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,
To live againe, to heare thy Buskin tread,
And shake a Stage: Or, when thy Sockes were on,
Leave thee alone for the comparison

Of all, that insolent Greeke, or haughty Rome sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
 Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to shewe,
 To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe.
 He was not of an age, but for all time!
 And all the Muses, still were in their prime,
 When like Apollo he came forth to warne
 Our eares, or like a Mercury to charme!
 Nature her selfe was proud of his designs,
 And joy'd to weare the dressing of his lines!
 Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
 As, since, she will vouchsafe no other Wit.
 The merry Greeke, tart Aristophanes,
 Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
 But antiquated, and deserted lye
 As they were not of Natures family:
 Yet must I not give Nature all: Thy Art,
 My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
 For though the Poets matter, Nature be,
 His Art doth give the fashion. And, that he,
 Who casts to write a living line, must sweat,
 (such as thine are) and strike the second heat
 Upon the Muses anvil: turne the same,
 (And himselfe with it) that he thinkes to frame;
 Or for the lawrell, he may gaine a scorne,
 For a good Poet's made, as well as borne.
 And such wert thou. Looke how the fathers face
 Lyes in his issue, even so, the race
 Of Shakespeares minde, and manners brightly shines
 In his welltorned, and true filed lines:
 In each of which, he seemes to shake a Lance,
 As brandisht at the eyes of Ignorance.
 Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were
 To see thee in our water yet appeare,
 And make those sights upon the bankes of Thames,
 That so did take Eliza, and our Iames!
 But stay, I see thee in the Hemisphere
 Advanc'd, and made a Constellation there!
 Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage,
 Or influence, chide, or cheere the drooping Stage;
 Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourn'd like night,
 And despaire's day, but for thy Volumes light.

BEN. IONSON.

On Worthy Master Shake- speare and his Poems.

A Mind reflecting ages past, whose cleere
And equall surface can make things appeare
Distant a Thousand yeares, and represent
Them in their lively colours just extent.

To cut run hasty time, retrieve the fates,
Rowle backe the heavens, blow ope the iron gates
Of death and Lethe, where (confused) lye
Great heapes of ruinous mortalitie.
In that deepe duskie dungeon to discern
A royall Ghost from Churles; By art to learne
The Physiognomie of shades, and give Them suddaine birth, wondring how oft they live.
What story coldly tells, what Poets faine
At second hand, and picture without braine
Senselesse and souleslesse shewes. To give a Stage (Ample and true with life) voyce, action, age,
As Plato's yeare and new Scene of the world
Them unto us, or us to them had hurld.
To raise our auncient Soveraignes from their herse
Make Kings his subjects, by exchanging verse
Enlive their pale trunks, that the present age
Joyes in their joy, and trembles at their rage:
Yet so to temper passion, that our eares
Take pleasure in their paine; And eyes in teares
Both weepe and smile; fearefull at plots so sad,
Then laughing at our feare; abus'd, and glad
To be abus'd, affected with that truth which we perceive is false; pleas'd in that ruth
At which we start; and by elaborate play
Tortur'd and tickled; by a crablike way
Time past made pastime, and in ugly sort Disgorging up his ravaine for our sport——
while the Plebeian Impe from lofty throne,
Creates and rules a world, and workes upon
Mankind by secret engines; Now to move
A chilling pittie, then a rigorous love;
To strike up and stroake downe, both joy and ire;
To steere th'affections; and by heavenly fire
Mould us anew. Stolne from our selves——

This and much more which cannot bee exprest,
But by himselfe, his tongue and his owne brest,
was Shakespeares freehold, which his cunning braine
Improv'd by favour of the nine fold traine.

*The buskind Muse, the Commicke Queene, the graund
And lowder tone of Clio; nimble hand,
And nimbler foote of the melodious paire,
The Silver voyced Lady; the most faire
Calliope, whose speaking silence daunts.
And she whose prayse the heavenly body chants.*

*These joyntly woo'd him, envying one another
(Obej'd by all as Spouse, but lov'd as brother)
And wrought a curious robe of sable grave
Fresh Greene, and pleasant yellow, red most brave,
And constant blew, rich purple, guiltlesse white
The lowly Russet, and the Scarlet bright;
Branch't and embroydred like the painted Spring
Each leafe match't with a flower, and each string
Of golden wire, each line of silke; there run
Italian workes whose thred the Sisters spun;
And there did sing, or seeme to sing, the choyce
Birdes of a forraine note and various voyce.
Here hangs a mossie rocke; there playes a faire
Bnt chiding fountaine purled: Not the ayre
Nor cloudes nor thunder, but were living drawne
Not out of common Tiffany or Lawne.
But fine materialls, which the Muses know
And onely know the countries wherethey grow.*

*Now when they could no longer him enjoy
In mortall garments pent; death may destroy
They say his body, but his verse shall live
And more then nature takes, our hands shall give.
In a lesse volume, but more strongly bound
Shakespeare shall breath and speake, with Laurell crown'd
Which never fades. Fed with Ambrosian meate
In a well-lyned vesture rich and neate.*

*So with this robe they cloath him, bid him weare it
- For time shall never staine, nor envy teare it.*

*The friendly admirer of his Endowments.

Vpon the Lines and Life of the Famous Scenicke Poet, Master
VV. SHAKESPEARE.

Hose hands, which you so clapt, goe now and wring
You Britaines brave; for done are Shake-speares dayes:
His dayes are done, that made the dainty Playes,
Which made the Globe of Heav'n and Earth to ring.
Dry'd is that Veinie, dry'd is the Thespian Spring,
Turn'd all to teares, and Phœbus Cloudes his Rayes:
That Corpe's, that Coffin now besticke those Bayes,
Which crown'd him Poet first, then Poets King.
If Tragedies might any Prologue have,
All those he made, would scarce make one to this:
Where Fame, now that he gone is to the Grave,
(Deaths publique Tying-house) the Nuncius is,
For though his Line of life went soone about,
The Life yet of his Lines shall never out.

THE TEMPEST.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

A tempestuous noise of Thunder and Lightning heard : Enter a Ship-master, and a Boteswaine.

Master.

Ote-swaine.

Botes. Heere Master : What cheere ?

Mastr. Good : Speake to th' Mariners : fall too't, yarely, or we run our selves a ground, bestirre, bestirre. Exit.

Enter Mariners.

Botes. Heigh my hearts, cheerely, cheerly my hearts : yare, yare : Take in the toppe-sale : Tend to th' Masters whistle : Blow till thou burst thy winde, if roome enough.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Anthonio, Ferdinando, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good Bote-swaine have care : wher's the Master ? Play the men.

Botes. I pray now keepe below.

Anth. Where is the Master, Boson ?

Botes. Do you not heere him ? you marre our labour, Keepe your Cabins : you do assist the storme.

Gonz. Nay, good be patient.

Botes. When the Sea is : hence, what cares these roarsers for the name of King ? to Cabine ; silence : trouble us not.

Gon. Good yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Botes. None that I more love then my selfe. You are a Counsellor, if you can com mand these Elements to silence, and worke the peace of the present, wee will not hand a rope more, use your authoritie : If you cannot, give thanks you have liv'd so long, and make your selfe readie in your Cabine for the mischance of the houre, if it so hap. Cheerely good hearts : out of our way ! Exit.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow : methinkes he hath no drowning marke upon him, his complexion is perfect Gallowes : stand fast good Fate to his hanging, make the rope of his destiny our Cable, for our owne doth little advantage : If he be not borne to bee hang'd, our case is miserable. Exit.

Enter Boteswaine.

Botes. Downe with the top-Mast : yare, lower, lower, bring her to Try with Maine-course. A plague—upon this howling : they are lowder then the weather, or our office : yet againe ? What do you heere ? Shall we give ore and drowne, have you a minde to sinke ?

A cry within. Enter Sebastian, Anthonio & Gonzalo.

Sebas. A poxe o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous incharitable Dog.

Botes. Worke you then.

Anth. Hang cur, hang, you whoreson insolent Noyse-maker ; we are lesse afraid to be drownde, then thou art.

Gonz. I'll warrant him for drowning, though the Ship were no stonger then a Nutt-shell, and as leaky as an unstanchd wench.

Botes. Lay her a hold, a hold, set her two courses off to Sea againe, lay her off.

Enter Mariners wet.

Mari. All lost, to prayers, to prayers, all lost.

Botes. What must our mouths be cold ?

Gon. The King, and Prince, at prayers, let's assist them, for our case is as theirs.

Sebas. I am out of patience.

An. We are meerly cheated of our lives by drunkards, This wide-chopt rascall, would thou mightst lye drowning the washing of ten Tides.

Gonz. Hee'l be hang'd yet, Though every drop of water sweare against it, And gape at widst to glut him. A confused noise within. Mercy on us.

We split, we split, Farewell my wife, and children, Farewell brother : we split, we split, we split.

Anth. Lets all sinke with King

Seb. Let's take leave of him. Exit.

Gonz. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of Sea, for an Acre of barren ground : Long heath, Browde firs, any thing ; the wills above be done, but I would faine dye a dry death.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mira. If by your Art (my dearest father) you have Put the wilde waters in this Rore, alay them :

The skye it seemes would powre downe stinking pitch,

But that the Sea, mounting to th' welkins cheek,

Dashes the fire out. Oh ! I have suffered

With those that I saw suffer : A brave vessel

(Who

(Who had no doubt some noble creature in her)
Dash'd all to peeces: O the cry did knocke
Against my very heart: poore soules, they perish'd.
Had I bin any God of power, I would Have suncke the Sea within the Earth, or ere
It should the good Ship so have swallow'd, and
The fraughting Soules within her.

Prof. Be collected,
No more amazement: Tell your pittieus heart,
there's no harme done.

Mira. O woe, the day.

Prof. No harme.
I have done nothing, but in care of thee
(Of thee my deere one; thee my daughter) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am: nor that I am more better
Then Prospero, Master of a full poore cell,
And thy no greater Father.

Mira. More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Prof. 'Tis time
I should informe thee farther: Lend thy hand
And plucke my Magick garment from me: So,
Lye there my Art: wipe thou thine eyes, have comfort,
The direfull spectacle of the wracke which touch'd
The very vertue of compassion in thee:
I have with such compassion in mine Art
So safely ordered, that there is no soule
No not so much perdition as an hayre
Betide to any creature in the vessell
Which thou heardest cry, which thou saw'st sinke: Sit
For thou must now know farther. (downe,

Mira. You have often
Begun to tell me what I am, but stopt
And left me to the bootlesse Inquisition,
Concluding, stay: not yet.

Prof. The houre's now come,
The very minute byds thee ope thine eare,
Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember
A time before we came unto this Cell?
I doe not thinke thou canst, for then thou was't not
Out three yeares old.

Mira. Certainly Sir, I can.

Prof. By what? by any other house; or person?
Of any thing the Image, tell me, that Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mira. 'Tis farre off.
And rather like a dreame, then an assurance
That my remembrance warrants: Had I not
Fowre, or five women once, that tended me?

Prof. Thou hadst; and more Miranda: But how is it
That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou els
In the dark-backward and Abisme of Time?
Yf thou remembrest ought ere thou cam'st here,
How thou cam'st here thou mayst.

Mira. But that I doe not.

Prof. Twelve yere since (Miranda) twelve yere since,
Thy Father was the Duke of Millaine, and
A Prince of power:

Mira. Sir, are not you my Father?

Prof. Thy Mother was a peece of vertue, and
She sayd thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was Duke of Millaine, and his onely heire:
And Princeesse; no worfe Issued,

Mira. O the heavens,
What fowle play had we, that we came from thence?

Or blessed was't we did?

Prof. Both, both my Girle.
By fowleplay (as thou sayest) were we heaved thence,
But blessedly holpe hither.

Mira. O my heart bleedes
To thinke oth' teene that I have turnd you to,
Which is from my remembrance, please you, farther;

Prof. My brother and thy vncle, call'd Ambrosio:
I pray thee marke me, that a brother should
Be so perfidious: he, whom next thy selfe
Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put
The mannage of my state, as at that time
Though all the signories it was the first,
And Prospero, the prime Duke, being so reputed
In dignity; and for the Liberall Artes,
Without a paralell; those being all my studie,
The Government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies, thy false vncle
(Doe'st thou attend me?)

Mira. Sir, most heedfully.

Prof. Being once perfected how to grant suites,
How to deny them: whom t'advauce, and whom
To trash for over-topping; new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd 'em,
Or else new form'd 'em; having both the key,
Of Officer, and office, set all hearts e' th state
To what tune pleas'd his eare, that now he was
The Ivy which had hid my princely Trunk,
And suckt my verdure out on't: Thou attend'st not?

Mira. O good Sir, I doe.

Prof. I pray thee marke me:
I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closenes, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which but by being retired
Ore-priz'd all popular rate: in my false brother
Awak'd an evill nature, and my trust
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood in it's contrary, as great
As my trust was, which had indeede no limit,
A confidence fans bound. He being thus Lorded,
Not onely with what my renew yeelded,
But what my power might else exact. Like one
Who having into truth, by telling of it,
Made such a synner of his memorie
To credite his owne lie, he did beleve
He was indeed the Duke, out o'th' Substitution
And executing th' outward face of Roialtie
With all prerogative: hence is Ambition growing:
Do'st thou heare?

Mira. Your tale, Sir, would cure deafnesse.

Prof. To have no Schreene between this part he plaid
And him he plaid it for, he needes will be Absolute Millaine, Me (poore man) my Librarie
Was Dukedome large enough: of temporall roialties
He thinkes me now incapable. Confederates
(So drie he was for Sway) with King of Naples
To give him annuall tribute, doe him homage
Subject his Coronet, to his Crowne, and bend
The Dukedome yet unbowed (alas poore Millaine)
To much ignoble stooping.

Mira. Oh the heavens:

Prof. Marke his condition, and th'event, then tell me
If this might be a brother.

Mira. I should sinne
To thinke but Noblie of my Grand-mother,

Good

Good wombes have borne bad sonnes.

Pro. Now the condition.

This King of Naples being an Enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens my brothers suit;
Which was, That he in lieu o'th' premises,
Of homage, and I know not how much Tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the Dukedome, and confer faire Milaine
With all the honors, on my brother : Whereon
A treacherous Armie levied, one mid-night
Fated to th' purpose, did Antonio open
The gates of Milaine, and ich' dead of darkenesse
The Ministers for th' purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying selfe.

Mir. Alack, for pittie :

I not remembring how I ride out then
Will cry it ore againe : it is a hint
That wrings mine eyes too't.

Pro. Heare a little further,
And then I'll bring thee to the present businesse
Which now's upon's : without the which, this story
Were most impertinent.

Mir. Wherefore did they not
That houre destroy us?

Pro. Well demanded, wench :
My Tale provokes that question : Deare, they durst not,
So deare the love my people bore me : nor set
A marke so bloody on the businesse; but
With colours fairer, painted their foule ends.
In few, they hurried us a-board a Barke,
Bore us some Leagues to Sea, where they prepared
A rotten carkasse of a Butt, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, nor sayle, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively have quit it : There they hoyft us
To cry to th' Sea, that roard to us ; to sigh
To th' windes, whose pittie sighing backe againe
Did us but loving wrong.

Mir. Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you ?

Pro. O, a Cherubin
Thou was't that did preserve me; Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt,
Vnder my burthen groan'd, which rais'd in me
An undergoing stomacke, to beare up
Against what should ensue.

Mir. How came we ashore ?

Pro. By providence divine,
Some food, we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan Gonzalo
Out of his Charity, (who being then appointed Master of this designe) did give us, with Rich garments, linnens, stuffs, and necessities
Which since have steeded much, so of his gentlenesse
Knowing I lov'd my bookes he furnishd me
From mine owne Library, with volumes, that I prize above my Dukedome.

Mir. Would I might
But ever see that man.

Pro. Now I arise,
Sit still, and heare the last of our sea-sorrow:
Heere in this Iland we arriu'd, and heere
Have I, thy Schoolemaster, made thee more profit
Then other Princeesse can, that have more time
For vainer howres; and tutors, not so carefull.

Mir. Heavens thanke you for't. And now I pray you Sir,

For still 'tis beating in my mind ; your reason
For rayning this Sea-storme ?

Pro. Know thus far forth,
By accident most strange, bountifull Fortune
(Now my deere Lady) hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore : And by my pretciense
I finde my Zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious starre, whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droope : Heare cease more questions;
Thou art inclinde to sleepe : 'tis a good dulnesse,
And give it way : I know thou canst not chuse ;
Come away, Servant, come; I am ready now,
Approach my Ariel. Come. Enter Ariel.

Ari. All haile, great Master, grave Sir, haile I come
To answer thy best pleasure ; be it to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire : to ride
On the curld clowdes : to thy strong bidding, taské
Ariel, and all his Qualitie.

Pro. Hast thou, Spirit,
Performd to point, the Tempest that I bad thee.

Ari. To every Article.
I boarded the Kings ship : now on the Beake;
Now in the Walle, the Decke, in every Cabyne,
I flam'd amazement, sometimes I'd divide
And burne in many places ; on the top-mast,
The Yards and Bore-sprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meete, and joyne. Joves Lightning, the precursors
O'th' dreadfull Thunder-claps more momentarie
And sight out-running were not; the fire and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptunus
Seeme to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dead Trident shake.

Pro. My brave Spirit,
Who was so firme, so constant, that this coyle
Would not infect his reason ?

Ari. Not a foule
But felt a Feaver of the madde, and plaid
Some trickes of disperation; all but Mariners
Plung'd in the foaming bryne, and quit the vessell;
Then all a fire with me the Kings sonne Ferdinand
With haire up-flaring (then like reeds, not haire)
Was the first man that leapt; cride hell is empty,
And all the Divells are heere.

Pro. Why that's my spirit :
But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. Close by, my Master.

Pro. But are they (Ariel) safe ?

Ari. Not a haire perisht:
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher then before : and as thou badst me,
In troops I have disperfd them 'bout the Isle :
The Kings sonne have I landed by himselfe,
Whom I left cooling of the Ayre with sighes,
In an odde Angle of the Isle, and sitting,
His armes in this sad knot.

Pro. Of the Kings ship,
The Marriners, say how thou hast disposd,
And all the rest o'th' Fleet?

Ari. Safely in harbour
Is the Kings shippe, in the deepe Nooke, where once
Thou callidst me up at midnight to fetch dewe
From the still-vest Bermoothes, there she's hid;
The Marriners all under hatches stowed,
Who, with a Charme joynd to their suffered labour
I have left asleepe : and for the rest o'th' Fleet

(Which I dispers'd) they all have met againe,
And are upon the Mediterranean Flote
Bound sadly home for Naples,
Supposing that they saw the Kings ship wrackt,
And his great person perish.

Pro. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more worke:
What is the time o'th' day?

Ar. Past the mid season.

Iro. At least two Glasses: the time 'twixt six & now
Must by us both be spent most preciously.

Ar. Is there more toyle? Since you doft give me paines,
Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd,
Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pro. How now? moodie?
Which is't thou canst demand?

Ar. My Libertie.

Pro. Before the time be out? no more:

Ar. I preethee,

Remember I have done thee worthy service,
Told thee no lyes, made thee no mistakings, serv'd
Without or grudge, or grumbings; thou did promise
To bate me a full yeare.

Pro. Do'st thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee? Ar. No.

Pro. Thou do'st: & thinkest it much to tread the Ooze
Of the salt deepe;
To run upon the sharpe winde of the North,
To doe me businesse in the veines o'th' earth
When it is bak'd with frost.

Ar. I doe not Sir.

Pro. Thou liest, malignant Thing: hast thou forgot
The fowle Witch Sycorax, who with Age and Envy
Was gowne into a hoope? hast thou forgot her?

Ar. No Sir.

Pro. Thou hast: where was she born? speak: tell me:

Ar. Sir, in Argier.

Pro. Oh, was she so: I must

Once in a moneth recount what thou hast bin,
Which thou forgetst. This damn'd Witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and forceries terrible
To enter humane hearing, from Argier
Thou know'st was banish'd: for one thing she did
They would not take her life: Is not this true? Ar. I Sir.

Pro. This blew ey'd hag, was hither brought with
And here was left by th' Saylor; thou my slave, (child,
As thou reportst thy selfe, was then her servant,
And for thou wast a Spirit too delicate
To A& her earthy, and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hefts, she did confine thee
By helpe of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmittigable rage,
Into a cloven Pyne; within which rift
Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remaine
A dozen yeares: within which space she di'd,
And left thee there: where thou didst vent thy groanes
As fast as Mill-wheeles strike: Then was this Island (Save for the Sunne that he did littour heere,
A frekelld whelp, hag-borne) not honour'd with
A humane shape.

Ar. Yes: Caliban her sonne.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so: he, that Caliban
Whom now I keepe in service, thou best know'st
What torment I did finde thee in; thy groanes
Did make wolues howle, and penetrate the brefts
Of ever-angry Beares; it was a torment

To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not againe undoe: it was mine Art,
When I arriu'd, and heard thee, that made gape
The Pyne, and let thee out.

Ar. I thanke thee Master.

Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an Oake
And peg thee in his knotty entrailes, till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Ar. Pardon, Master.

I will be correspondent to command
And doe my spryting, gently.

Pro. Doe so: and after two dayes
I will discharge thee.

Ar. That's my noble master:

What shall I doe? say what? what shall I doe?

Pro. Goe make thy selfe like to a Nymph o'th' Sea,
Be subject to no sight but thine, and mine: invisible
To every eye-ball else: goe take this shape
And hither come in't: goe: hence
With diligence. Exit.

Pro. Awake, deere heart awake, thou hast slept well, Awake.

Ar. The strangenes of your story, put Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off: Come on,
Wee'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yeelds us kinde answers.

Ar. 'Tis a villaine Sir, I doe not love to looke on.

Pro. But as 'tis

We cannot misse him: he do's make our fire,
Fetch in our wood, and serves Offices
That profit us: What hoa: slave: Caliban:
Thou Earth thou: speake.

Cal. within. There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth I say, there's other businesse for thee:
Come thou Tortoys, when? *Enter Ariel like a water-
Fine apparition: my quaint Ariel, Nymph.*
Hearke in thine care.

Ar. My Lord, it shall be done. Exit.

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the divell himselfe Vpon thy wicked Dam; come forth. Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dewe, as ere my mother brush'd
With Ravens feather from unwholesome Fen,
Drop on you both: A Southwest blow on yee,
And blister you all ore.

Pro. For this be sure, to night thou shalt have cramps,
Side-stitches, that shall pen thy breath up, Vrchins
Shall for that vast of night, that they may worke
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thicke as hony-combe, each pinch more stinging
Then Bees that made 'em.

Cal. I must eate my dinner:
This Island's mine by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me: when thou cam'st first
Thou stroakst me, & made much of me: wouldst give me
Water with berries in't: and teach me how
To name the bigger Light, and how the lesse
That burne by day, and night: and then I loved thee
And shewed thee all the qualities o'th' Isle,
The fresh Springs, Brine-pits, barren place and fertill,
Curs'd be I that I did so: All the Charmes
Of Sycorax: Toades, Beetles, Batts light on you:
For I am all the Subjects that you have,
Which first was mine owne King: and here you sty-me
In this hard Rocke, whiles you doe keepe from me
The rest o'th' Island.

Pro. Thou

Pro. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, nor kindness: I have us'd thee
(Filt'as thou art) with humane care, and lodg'd thee
In mine owne Cell, till thou didst seeke to violate
The honour of my childe.

Cal. Oh ho, oh ho, would't had bene done:
Thou didst prevent me, I had peopel'd else
This Isle with Calibans.

Mr. Abhorred Slave,
Which any print of goodnesse will not take,
Being capable of all ill: I pittied thee,
Took paines to make thee speake, taught thee each houre
One thing or other: when thou didst not (Savage)
Know thine owne meaning; but wouldst gabble, like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them knowne: But thy vild race
(Thou thou didst learn) had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd into this Rocke, who hadst
Deseru'd more then a prison.

Cal. You taught me Language, and my profit on't,
Is, I know how to curse: the red-plague rid you
For learning me your language.

Pro. Hag-sced hence:
Fetch us in Fewell, and be quicke thou'rt best
To answer other businesse: shrug'st thou (Malice)
If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, Ile racke thee with old crampes,
Fill all thy bones with Aches, make thee rore,
That beasts shall tremble at thy dyn.

Cal. No, 'pray thee.
I must obey, his Art is of such pow'r,
It would controll my Dams god Seubos,
And make a vassaile of him.

Pro. So slave, hence. Exit Cal.

Enter Ferdinand & Ariel, invisible playing & singing.

Ariel Song. Come unto these yellow sands, and then take hands:

Cursied when you leave, and kist
the wilde waves whist:

Foot it feastly heere, and there, and sweete Sprights beare
the burthen. Burthen disperdely.

Harke, harke, bowgh wagh: the watch-Dogges harke, bowgh-wagh.

Ar. Hark, hark, I heare the straine of strutting Chanielers cry cackadiddle-dowe.

Fer. Where shold this Musicke be? I'th aire, or th'earth?
It founds no more: and sure it waytes upon
Some god'oth' Island, sitting on a banke,
Weeping againe the King my Fathers wracke.
This Musicke crept by me upon the Waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my passion
With it's sweet ayre: thence I have follow'd it
(Or it hath drawne me rather) but 'tis gone.
No, it begin: againe.

Ariel Song. Full fadom five thy Father lies,
Of his bones are Corall made:
Those are pearles that were his eyes,
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a Sea-change
Into something rich, & strange:
Sea-Nymphs hourly ring his knell.

Burthen: ding dong.

Harke now I heare them, ding-dong bell.

Fer. The Ditty do's remember my drown'd father,
This is no mortall busines, nor no found

That the earth owes: I heare it now above me.

Pro. The fringed Curtaines of thine eye advance,
And say what thou see'st yond.

Mira. What is't a spirit?

Lord, how it lookes about: Beleeve me sir,
It carries a brave forme. But 'tis a spirit.

Pro. No wench, it eats, and sleepest, & hath such senses
As we have; such. This Gallant which thou see'st,
Was in the wracke: and but hee's something stain'd
With griefe (that's beauties canker) y might'st call him
A goodly person: he hath lost his fellowes,
And strays about to finde'em.

Mr. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing naturall
I ever saw so Noble.

Pro. It goes on I see
As my soule prompts it: Spirit, fine spirit, Ile free thee
Within two dayes for this.

Fer. Most sure the goddesse
On whom these ayres attend: Vouchsafe my pray'r
May know if you remaine upon this Island,
And that you will some good instruction give
How I may beare me heere: my prime request
(Which I do last pronounce) is (O you wonder)
If you be Mayd, or no?

Mr. No wonder sir,
But certainly a Mayd.

Fer. My Language? Heavens:
I am the best of them that speake this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro. How? the best?

What wer't thou if the King of Naples heard thee?
Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To heare thee speake of Naples: he do's heare me,
And that he do's, I weepe: my selfe am Naples,
Who, with mine eyes (never since at ebbe) beheld
The King my Father wrack't.

Mr. Alacke, for mercy.

Fer. Yes faith, and all his Lords, the Duke of Millaine
And his brave sonne, being twaine.

Pro. The Duke of Millaine
And his more braver daughter, could controll thee
If now 'twere fit to do't: At the first sight
They have chang'd eyes: Delicate Ariel,
Ile set thee free for this. A word good Sir,
I feare you have done your selfe some wrong: A word.

Mr. Why speakes my father so urgently? This Is the third man that ere I saw: the first
That ere I sigh'd for: pittie move my father
To be inclin'd my way.

Fer. O, if a Virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, Ile make you
The Queene of Naples.

Pro. Soft Sir, one word more.
They are both in cythers pow'rs: But this swift busines
I must uneasy make, least too light winning
Make the prize light. One word more: I charge thee
That thou attend me: Thou do'st heere usurpe
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thy selfe
Vpon this Island, as a spy, to win it
From me; the Lord on't

Fer. No, as I am a man.

Mr. Ther's nothing ill, can dwell in such a Temple,
If the ill-spirit have so faire a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.

Pro. Follow me:

Prof. Speake not you for him : hee's a Traitor: come,
He manacle thy necke and feete together :
Sea water shalt thou drinke : thy food shall be
The fresh-brooke Mussels, wither'd roots, and huskes Wherein the Acorne cradled. Follow.

Fer. No,
I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy ha's more pow'r.

He draves, and is charmed from moving.

Mira. O deere Father,
Make not too rash a triall of him, for Hee's gentle, and not fearefull.

Prof. What I say,
My foote my Tutor? Put thy sword up Traytor,
Who makes a shew, but dar'st not strike: thy conscience
Is posselt with guilt: Come from thy ward,
For I can heere disarme thee with this sticke,
And make thy weapon drop.

Mir. Beseech you Father.

Pro. Hence: hang not on my garments.

Mir. Sir have pity,
He be his surety.

Pro. Silence: One word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee: What,
An advocate for an Impostor? Hush :
Thou think'st there is no more such shapes as he,
(Having seene but him and Caliban;) Foolish wench,
To th'most of men, this is a Caliban,
And they to him are Angels.

Mir. My affections
Are then most humble: I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Pro. Come on, obey:
Thy Nerves are in their infancy againe.
And have no vigour in them.

Fer. So they are :
My spirits, as in a dreame, are all bound up :
My Fathers losse, the weaknesse which I feele,
The wracke of all my friends, nor this mans threats,
To whome I am subdu'd: are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this Mayd: all corners else o'th' Earth
Let liberty make use of : space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pro. It workes: Come on.
Thou hast done well, fine Ariell: follow me.
Harke what thou else shalt do me.

Mir. Be of comfort,
My Father's of a better nature (Sir)
Then he appeares by speech: this is unwonted
Which now came from him.

Pro. Thou shalt be as free
As mountaine windes, but then exactly do
All points of my command.

Ar. To th'syllable.

Pro. Come follow: speake not for him. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gonz. Beseech you Sir, be merry: you have cause,
(So have we all) of joy; for our escape

Is much beyond our losse; our hint of woe
Is common, every day, some Saylor's wife,
The Masters of some Merchant, and the Merchant
Have just our Theame of woe: But for the miracle,
(I meane our preservation) few in millions
Can speake like us: then wisely (good Sir) weigh
Our sorrow, with our comfort.

Alfon. Prethee peace.

Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. The Visitor will not give him orefo.

Seb. Looke, hee's winding up the watch of his wit,
By and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir.

Seb. On: Tell.

Gon. When every greefe is entertain'd,
That's offer'd comes to th' entertainer.

Seb. A dollor.

Gon. Dolour comes to him indeed, you have spoken truer then you purpos'd.

Seb. You have taken it wiselier then I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore my Lord.

Ant. Fie, what a spend-thrift is he of his tongue.

Alon. I pre-thee spare.

Gon. Well, I have done: But yet

Seb. He will be talking.

Ant. Which, of he, or Adrian, for a good wager,
First begins to crow?

Seb. The old Cocke.

Ant. The Cockrell.

Seb. Done: The wager?

Ant. A laughter.

Seb. A match.

Adr. Though this Island seeme to be desert.

Seb. Ha, ha, ha.

Ant. So: you'r paid.

Adr. Vninhabitable, and almost inaccessible.

Seb. Yet.

Adr. Yet.

Ant. He could not misse't.

Adr. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.

Seb. I, and a subtle, as he most learnedly deliver'd.

Adr. The ayre breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had Lungs, and rotten ones.

Ant. Or, as 'twere perfum'd by a Fen.

Gon. Heere is every thing advantageous to life.

Ant. True, save meanes to live.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little.

Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks?
How Greene?

Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of Greene in't.

Ant. He missees not much.

Seb. No: he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rariety of it is, which is indeed almost beyond credit.

Seb. As many voucht rarieties are.

Gon. That our Garments being (as they were) drencht in the Sea, hold notwithstanding their freshnesse and glosses, being rather new dy'de then stain'd with salte water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speake, would it not say he lyes?

Seb. I, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon.

Gon. Me thinks our garments are now as fresh as when wee put them on first in Affricke, at the marriage of the kings faire daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Seb. 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our returne.

Adri. Tunis was never grac'd before with such a Paragon to their Queene.

Gon. Not since widdow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow? A pox o'that: how came that Widdow in? Widdow Dido!

Seb. What if he had sayd Widdower Aeneas too? Good Lord, how you take it?

Adri. Widdow Dido said you? You make me study of that: She was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis Sir was Carthage.

Adri. Carthage? Gon. I assure you Carthage.

Ant. His word is more then the miraculous Harpe.

Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easy next?

Seb. I thinke hee will carry this Island home in his pocket, and give it his sonne for an Apple.

Ant. And sowing the kernels of it in the Sea, bring forth more Islands.

Gon. I. Ant. Why in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seeme now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now Queene.

Ant. And the rarest that ere came there.

Seb. Bate (I beseech you) widdow Dido.

Ant. O widdow Dido? I, Widdow Dido.

Gon. Is not my doublet Sir as fresh as the first day I wore it? I meane in a fort.

Ant. That fort was well fish'd for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughters marriage.

Alon. You cram these words into mine eares, against the stomacke of my sense: would I had never Married my daughter there: For coming thence My sonne is lost, and (in my rate) she too, Who is so farre from Italy removed, I ne're againe shall see her: O thou mine heire Of Naples and of Millaine, what strange fish Hath made his meale on thee?

Fran. Sir he may live,

I saw him beate the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water
Whose enmity he slung aside: and brested
The surge most swolne that met him: his bold head
Boye the contentious waves he kept and oared
Himselfe with his good armes in lusty stroke
To th'shore; that ore his wave-worne basis bowed
As stooping to releve him: I not doubt
He came alive to Land.

Alon. No, no, hee's gone.

Seb. Sir you may thanke your selfe for this great losse, That would not blesse our Europe with your daughter, But rather lose her to an Affrican.
Where she at least, is banish'd from your eye,
Who hath cause to wet the greefe on't.

Alon. Pre-thee peace.

Seb. You were kneel'd too, & importun'd otherwise By all of us: and the faire soule her selfe Waigh'd betweene loathnesse, and obedience, at Which end o'th' beame should bow: we have lost your I feare for ever: Millaine and Naples have (son, Mo widdowes in them of this businesse making, Then we bring men to comfort them:

The fault's your owne.

Alon. So is the deer'st oth' losse.

Gon. My Lord Sebastian,

The truth you speake doth lacke some gentlenesse,
And time to speake it in: you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaister.

Seb. Very well. Ant. And most Chirurgionly.

Gon. It is foule weather in us all, good Sir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb. Fowle weather? Ant. Very foule,

Gon. Had I plantation of this Ile my Lord.

Ant. Hee'd sow't with Nettle-seed.

Seb. Or Dockes, or Mallowes.

Gon. And were the King on't, what would I do?

Seb. Scape being drunke, for want of Wine.

Gon. I'th' Commonwealth I would (by contraries)

Execute all things: For no kinde of Trafficke

Would I admit: No name of Magistrate:

Letters should not be knowne: Riches, poverty,

And use of service, none: Contract, Succession,

Borne, bound of Land, Tith, Vineyard none:

No use of Mettall, Corne, or Wine, or Oyle:

No occupation, all men idle, all:

And women too, but innocent and pure:

No Sovereignty.

Seb. Yet he would be King on't.

Ant. The latter end of his Common-wealth forgets the beginning.

Gon. All things in common Nature should produce

Without sweat or endeuour: Treason, felony,

Sword, Pike, Knife Gun, or neede of any Engine

Would I not have: but Nature should bring forth

Of it owne kinde, all foyzon, all abundance

To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his subjects?

Ant. None (man) all idle; Whores and Knaues,

Gon. I would with such perfection governe Sir:

'T Excell the Golden Age.

Seb. 'Save his Majesty. Ant. Long live Gonzalo.

Gon. And do you marke me, Sir? (me

Alon. Pre-thee no more: thou dost talke nothing to

Gon. I do well beleve your Highnesse, and did it to minister occasion to these Gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble Lungs, that they alwayes esse to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas your we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kinde of merry fooling am nothing to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given?

Seb. And it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are Gentlemen of brave mettall: you would lift the Moone out of her spheare, if she would continue in it five weekes without changing.

Enter Ariell playing solemn Musicke.

Seb. We would so, and then go a Bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay good my Lord, be not angry.

Gon. No I warrant you, I will not adventure my discretion so weakly: Will you laugh me a sleepe, for I am very heavie.

Ant. Go sleepe and heare us.

Alon. What, all so soone asleepe? I wish mine eyes

Would (with themselves) shut up my thoughts,

I finde they are inclin'd to do so.

Seb. Please you Sir,

Do not omit the heavy offer of it:

It sildome visits sorrow, when it doth, it is a Comforter

Ant.

Ant. We two my Lord, will guard your person,
While you take your rest, and watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you : Wondrous heavy.

Seb. What a strange drowsinesse possesses them?

Ant. It is the quality o'th' Clymate.

Seb. Why.

Doth it not then our eye-lids sinke? I finde
Not my selfe dispos'd to sleepe :

Ant. Nor I, my spirits are nimble :

They fell together all, as by consent

They dropt, as by a Thunder-stroke : what might Worthy Sebastian? O, what might? no more :

And yet, me thinks I see it in thy face,

What thou should'st be : th' occasion speakes thee, and

My strong imagination see's a Crowne

Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What? art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not heare me speake?

Seb. I do, and surely

It is a sleepey Language ; and thou speak'st

Out of thy sleepe : What is it thou didst say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleepe

With eyes wide open: standing, speaking, moving :

And yet so fast a sleepe.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,

Thou let'st thy fortune sleepe : die rather : wink't

Whiles thou art waking.

Seb. Thou do'st snore distinctly,

There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious then my custome : you

Must be so too, if heed me : which to do,

Trebbles thee o're.

Seb. Well : I am standing water.

Ant. Ile teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so : to ebbe,

Hereditary Sloth instructs me.

Ant. O!

If you but knew how you the purpose cherish

Whiles thus you mocke it : how in stripping it

You more invest it : ebbing men, indeed

(Most often) do so neere the bottome run

By their owne feare, or sloth.

Seb. 'Pre-thee say on,

The setting of thine eye, and cheeke proclaime

A matter from thee ; and a birth, indeed,

Which throwes thee much to yeeld.

Ant. Thus Sir :

Although this Lord of weake remembrance; this

Who shall be of as little memory

When he is earth'd, hath here almost perswaded

(For hee's a Spirit of perswasion, onely Professes to perswade) the King his sonne's alive,

'Tis as impossible that hee's undrown'd,

As he that sleepes heere, swims.

Seb. I have no hope,

That hee's undrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that no hope,

What great hope have you? No hope that way: Is Another Way so high a hope, that even

Ambition cannot pierce a winke beyond

But doubt discovery there. Will you grant with me

That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. Hee's gone.

Ant. Then tell me who's the next heire of Naples?

Seb. Claribell.

Ant. She that is Queene of Tunis : she that dwels

Ten leagues beyond mans life : she that from Naples

Can have no note, unlesse the Sun were post:

The Man i'th Moone's too slow, till new-borne chinnes

Be rough, and Razor-able : She that from whom

We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast againe,

(And by that destiny to performe an act,

Whereof, what's past in prologue; what to come

In yours, and my discharge.

Seb. What stufte is this? How say you?

'Tis true, my brothers daughter's Queene of Tunis,

So is she heyre of Naples, 'twixt which Regions

There is some space.

Ant. A space, whose ev'ry cubit

Seemes to cry out, how shall that Claribell

Measure us backe by Naples? keepe in Tunis.

And let Sebastian wake. Say, this were death

That now hath seiz'd them, why they were no worfe

Then now they are : There be that can rule Naples

As well as he that sleepes : Lords, that can prate

As amply, and unnecessarily

As this Gonzalo : I my selfe could make

A Chough of as deepe chat : O, that you bore

The minde that I do; what a sleepe were this

For your advancement? Do you understand me?

Seb. Me thinks I do.

Ant. And how do's your content

Tender your owne good fortune?

Seb. I remember

You did supplant your Brother Prospero.

Ant. True :

And looke how well my Garments sit upon me,

Much feater then before : My Brothers servants

Were then my fellowes, now they are my men.

Seb. But for ydur conscience.

Ant. I Sir : where lies that? If 'twere a kybe

'Twould put me to my slipper : But I feele not

This Deity in my bosome : Twentie consciences

That stand 'twixt me, and Millaine, candied be they,

And melt ere they mollest : Heere lies your Brother,

No better then the earth he lyes upon,

If he were that which now hee's like (that's dead)

Whom I with this obedient steele (three inches of it)

Can lay to bed for ever : whiles you doing thus,

To the perpetuall winke for aye might put

This ancient morfell : this Sir Prudence, who

Should not upbraid our course : for all the rest

They'l take suggestion, as a Cat laps milke,

They'l tell the clocke, to any businesse that

We say befits the houre.

Seb. Thy case, deere Friend

Shall be my president : As thou got'st Millaine,

I'll come by Naples : Draw thy sword, one stroke

Shall free thee from the tribute which thou paie'st,

And I the King shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together :

And when I reare my hand, do you the like

To fall it on Gonzalo.

Seb. O, but one word.

Enter Ariel with Musicke and Song.

Ariel, My Master through his Art foresees the danger

That you (his friend) are in, and sends me forth

(For else his project dies) to keepe them living.

Sing in Gonzalo's ears.

While you here do snoring lie,

Open-ey'd Conspiracie

His time doth take :

*If of Life you keepe a care,
Shake off slumber and beware.
Awake, awake.*

Ant. Then let us both be sodaine.

Gen. Now, good Angels preserve the King.

Alo. Why how now ho; awake? why are you drawn? Wherefore this ghastly looking?

Gen. What's the matter?

Seb. Whiles we stood here securing your repose, (Even now) we heard a hollow burst of bellowing Like Bulls, or rather Lyons, did't not wake you? It strooke mine eare most terribly.

Alo. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a Monsters eare; To make an earthquake: sure it was the roare Of a whole heard of Lyons.

Alo. Heard you this Gonzalo?

Gen. Vpon mine honour, Sir, I heard a humming, (And that a strange one too) which did awake me: I shak'd you Sir, and cride: as mine eyes opend, I saw their weaponous drawne: there was a noyse, That's verily: 'tis best we stand upon our guard; Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Alo. Lead off this ground and let's make further search For my poore sonne.

Gen. Heavens keepe him from these Beasts: For he is sure i'th Island.

Alo. Lead away.

(done.)

Ariell. Prospero my Lord, shall know what I have So (King) goe safely on to seeke thy Son.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda:

Enter Caliban, with a burthen of Wood (a noyse of Thunder heard.)

Cal. All the infections that the Sunne suckes up From Bogs, Fens, Flats, on Prosper fall, and make him By ynch-meale a discafe: his Spirits heare me, And yet I needes must curse. But they'll nor pinch, Fright me with Vrchyn-shewes, pitch me i'th mire, Nor lead me like a fire-brand, in the darke Out of my way, unlesse he bid'em; but For every trifle, are they set upon me, Sometime like Apes, that moe and chatter at me, And after bite me: then like Hedg-hogs, which Lye tumbling in my barefoote way, and mount Their pricks at my foote-fall: sometime am I All wound with Adders who with cloven tongues Doe hisse me into madnesse: Lo, now Lo, Enter Here comes a Spirit of his, and to torment me, Trinculo. For bringing wood in slowly: Ile fall flat, Perchance he will not minde me.

Tri. Here's neither bush, nor shrub to beare off any weather at all: and another storme brewing, I heare it sing i'th winde: yond same blacke cloud, yond huge one, lookes like a foule bumbard that would shed his licquor: if it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond same cloud cannot chuse but fall by pailc-fuls. What have we here, a man, or a fish? dead or alive? a fish, he smels like a fish: a very ancient and fish-like smell: a kinde of, not of the newest poore-Iohh: a strange fish: were I in England now (as once I was) and had but his fish painted; not a holyday-foole there but would give a peece of silver: there, would this monster, make a man: any strange beast there, makes a man: when they will not give a doitt to relieve a lame Begger, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian: Leg'd like a man; and his Finnes like Armes; warme o' my troth: I doe now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an Islander, that hath lately suffered by a Thundebolt: Alas, the storme is come againe: my best way is to creepe under his Gaberdine: there is no other shelter hereabout: Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows: I will here throwd till the dregges of the storme be past.

Enter Stephano singing.

Ste. I shall no more to sea to sea, here shall I dye ashore.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a mans

Funerall: well, here's my comfort.

Drinkee.

Sings. The Master, the Swabber, the Boate-swaine & I; The Gunner, and his Mate

Lon'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margerie,

But none of us car'd for Kate.

For she had a tongue with a tang,

Would cry to a Saylor goe hang:

She lov'd not the favour of Tar nor of Pitch,

Yet a Tailor might scratch her where ere she did itch.

Then to Sea Boyes, and let her goe hang.

This is a scurvy tune too:

But here's my comfort.

drinkee.

Cal. Doe not torment me: oh.

Ste. What's the matter?

Have we divels here?

Doe you put trickes upon's with Salvages, and Men of Inde? ha? I have not scap'd drowning, to bee afraid now of your foure legges: for it hath bin said; as proper a man as ever went on foure leges, cannot make him give ground: and it shall be sayd so againe, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The Spirit torments me: oh.

Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with foure legs; who hath got (as I take it) an ague: where the divell should he learne our language? I will give him some reliefe if it be but for that: if I can recover him, and keepe him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a Present for any Emperour that ever trod on Neates-leather.

Cal. Doe not torment me 'prethee: Ile bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and doe's not talke after the wisest; hee shall taste of my Bottle: if hee have never drunke wine afore, it will goe neere to remove his Fit: if I can recover him, and keepe him tame, I will not take too much for him; he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou do'st me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: Now Prospero workes upon thee.

Ste. Come on your wayes: open your mouth: here is that which will give language to you Cat; open your mouth; this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps againe.

Tri. I should know that voyce:

It should be, ———

But

But he is dround; and these are divels; O defend me.

Ste. Foure legges and two voyces; a most delicate Monster: his forward voyce now is to speake of his friend; his backward voyce, is to utter foule speeches, and to detract: if all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will helpe his Ague: Come: Amen, I will poure some in thy other mouth.

Tri. Stephano.

Ste. Dost thou other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy: This is a Divell and no Monster: I will leave him, I have no long Spooone.

Tri. Stephano: if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speake to me: for I am Trinculo; be not afraid, thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo: come forth: I'll pull thee by the lesser legges: if any be Trinculo's legges these are they: Thou art very Trinculo indeede: how cam'st thou to be the siege of this Moone-calf? Can hee vent Trinculo's?

Tri. I tooke him to be kild with a thunder-stroke; but art thou not dround Stephano: I hope now thou art not dround: Is the storme over-blowne? I hid me under the dead Moone-Calfes Gaberdine, for feare of the Storme: And art thou living Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitanes escap'd?

Ste. Prethee doe not turne mee about, my stomacke is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, and if they be not sprights: that's a brave god, and beares Celestiall liquor: I will kneele to him.

Ste. How did'st thou scape? How cam'st thou hither?

Swear by this Bottle how thou cam'st hither: I escap'd upon a But of Sacke, which the Saylor heaved o're-board, by this Bottle which I made of the barke of a Tree, with mine owne hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll sweare upon that Bottle, to be thy true subject, for the liquor is not earthly:

Ste. Heere: sweare then how thou escap'd'st.

Tri. Sworn ashore (man) like a Ducke; I can swim like a Ducke: I'll be sworne.

Ste. Here, kisse the booke.

Though thou canst swim like a Ducke, thou art made life a Goose.

Tri. O Stephano, ha'st any more of this?

Ste. The whole But (man) my Cellar is in a rocke by th' sea-side, where my wine is hid:

How now Moone-Calf, how do's thine Ague?

Cal. Ha'st thou not dropt from heaven?

Ste. Out o'th Moone I doe assure thee. I was the Man ith' Moone when time was.

Cal. I have seene thee in her: and I doe adore thee: My Mistris shew'd me thee, and thy Dog, and thy Bush.

Ste. Come sweare to that: kisse the Booke: I will furnish it anon with the new contents: Sweare.

Tri. By this good light, this is a very shallow Monster: I afraid of him? a very shallow Monster:

The Man ith' Moone?

A most poore credulous Monster:

Well drawne Monster, in good sooth.

Cal. He shew thee every fertill ynoch Isle: and I will kisse thy foote: I prethee be my god.

Tri. By this light, a most perfidious, and drunken Monster, when's god's asleepe he'll rob his Bottle.

Cal. He kisse thy foot. He sweare my selfe thy Subject.

Ste. Come on then: downe and sweare.

Tri. I shall laugh my selfe to death at this puppi-headed Monster: a most scurvie monster: I could finde in my heart to beate him.

Ste. Come, kisse.

Tri. But that the poore Monster's in drinke: An abhominable Monster.

Cal. I'll shew thee the best Springs: I'll plucke thee Berries: I'll fish for thee; and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the Tyrant that I serve; I'll beare him no more Sticks, but follow thee, thou wondrous man.

Tri. A most ridiculous Monster, to make a wonder of a poore drunkard.

Cal. I prethee let me bring thee where Crabs grow; and I with my long nayles will digge thee pig-nuts; show thee a layes nest, and instruct thee how to snare the nimble Marmazet: I'll bring thee to clustring Philbirts, and sometimes I'll get thee young Scamels from the Rocke: Wilt thou goe with me?

Cal. I prethee now lead the way without any more talking. Trinculo, the King, and all our company else being dround, wee will inherit here: Here; beare my Bottle: Fellow Trinculo; we'll fill him by and by againe:

Celiban Sings drunkenly.

Farewell Master; farewell, farewell.

Tri. A howling Monster: a drunken Monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish,

Nor fetch in firing, at requiring,

Nor scrape trenchering, nor wash dish,

Ban' ban, Cacalyban

Has a new Master, get a new Man.

Freedom, high-day, high-day freedom, freedom high-day freedom.

Ste. O brave Monster, lead the way.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Ferdinand (bearing a Log.)

Fer. There be some sports are painfull; and their labour Delight in them set off: Some kinds of basenesse Are nobly undergon; and most poore matters Point to rich ends: this my meane Taske Would be as heavie to me, as odious, but The mistris which I serve, quickens what's dead, And makes my labours pleasures: O she is Ten times more gentle, then her Father's crabbed; And he's compos'd of harshnesse. I must remove Some thousands of these Logs; and pile them up, Vpon a sore injunction; my sweet Mistris Weepes when she sees me worke, and sayes, such basenes Had never like Executor: I forget:

But these sweet thoughts, doe even refresh my labours, Most busie least, when I doe it.

Enter Miranda and Prospero.

Mir. Alas, now pray you

Worke not so hard: I would the lightening had Burnt up those Logs that thou art enjoyned to pile: Pray set it downe, and rest you: when this burnes 'Twill weepe for having wearied you: my Father Is hard at study, pray now rest your selfe,

He's

Hee's safe for these three houres.

Fer. O most deere mistress,
The Sun will set before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you'll sit downe
Ile beare your Logges the while : pray give me that,
Ile carry it to the pile.

Fer. No precious Creature,
I had rather cracke my sinewes, breake my backe,
Then you should such dishonor undergoe,
While I sit lazy by.

Mir. It would become me
As well as it do's you; and I should do it
With much more ease : for my good will is to it,
And yours it is against.

Pro. Poore worne thou art infected,
This visitation shewes it.

Mir. You looke wearily.

Fer. No, noble Mistress, 'tis fresh morning with me
When you are by at night : I do beseech you
Cheefely, that I might set it in my prayers,
What is your name ?

Mir. Miranda, O my Father,
I have broke your heft to say so.

Fer. Admir'd Miranda,
Indeepe the top of Admiratiō, worth
What's deereft to the world : full many a Lady
I have ey'd with best regard, and many a time
Th'harmony of their tongues, hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent care : for severall vertues
Have I like'd severall women, never any
With so full soule, but some defect in her
Did quarrell with the noblest grace she ow'd,
And put it to the foyle. But you, O you,
So perfect, and so peerlesse, are created
Of everie Creatures best.

Mir. I do not know
One of my sexe ; no womans face remember,
Save from my glasse, mine owne : Nor have I seene
More that I may call men, then you good friend,
And my deere Father : how features are abroad
I am skilleffe of; but by my modestie
(The jewell in my dower) I would not wish
Any Companion in the world but you:
Nor can imagination forme a shape
Besides your selfe, to like of : but I prattle
Someting too wildly, and my Fathers precepts
I therein do forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition
A Prince (Miranda) I do thinke a King
(I would not so) and would no more endure
This wooden slaverie, then to suffer
The flesh-flie blow my mouth : heare my soule speake.
The verie instant that I saw you did
My heart flie to your service, there resides
To make me slave to it, and for your sake
Am I this patient Logge-man.

Mir. Do you love me?

Fer. O heaven; O earth, beare witnesse to this sound,
And crowne what I professe with kinde event
If I speake true : if hollowly, invert
What best is boaded me, to mischief : I,
Beyond all limit of what else i'th world
Do love, prize, honor you.

Mir. I am a foole
To weepe at what I am glad of.

Pro. Faire encounter

Of two most rare affections : heavens raine grace
On that which breeds betweene'em.

Fer. Wherefore weepe you ?

Mir. At mine unworthynesse that dare not offer
What I desire to give; and much lesse take
What I shall die to want : But this is trifling,
And all the more it seekes to hide it selfe,
The bigger bulke it shewes. Hence bashfull cunning,
And prompt me plaine and holy innocence.
I am your wife, if you will marrie me;
If not, Ile die your maid : to be your fellow
You may denie me; but Ile be your servant
Whether you will or no.

Fer. My Mistress (deereft)
And I thus humble ever.

Mir. My husband then ?

Fer. I, with a heart so willing
As bondage ere of freedome : heere's my hand.

Mir. And mine, with my heart in't; and now farewell
Till halfe an houre hence.

Fer. A thousand, thousand.

Exeunt.

Pro. So glad of this as they I cannot be,
Who are surpriz'd with all; but my rejoying
At nothing can be more : Ile to my booke,
For yet ere supper time, must I performe
Much businesse appertaining.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo.

Ste. Tell not me, when the But is out we will drinke water, not a drop, before; therefore beare up, and boord em' Servant Monster, drinke to me.

Trin. Servant Monster ? the folly of this Iland, they say there's but five upon this Isle; we are three of them, if th' other two be brain'd like us, the State totters.

Ste. Drinke servant Monster when I bid thee, thy eyes are almost set in thy heart.

Trin. Where should they bee set else ? hee were a brave Monster indeede if they were set in his taile.

Ste. My man-Monster hath drown'd his tongue in Sacke : for my part the Sea cannot drowne mee, I swam ere I could recover the shore, five and thirtie Leagues off and on, by this light thou shalt bee my Lieutenant Monster, or my Standard.

Trin. Your Lieutenant if you list, hee's no standard.

Ste. Wee'l not run Monsieur Monster.

Trin. Nor go neither: but you'll lie like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moone-calfs, speake once in thy life, if thou beest a good Moone-calfs.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me licke thy shoos:
Ile not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou list most ignorant Monster, I am in case to jultle a Constable: why, thou debosh'd Fish thou, was there ever man a Coward, that hath drunk so much Sacke as I to day? wilt thou tell me a monstrous lie, being but halfe a Fish and halfe a Monster ?

Cal. Loe, how he mockes me, wilt thou let him my Lord ?

Cal.

Trin. Lord, quoth he? that a monster should be such a Naturall?

Cal. Loe, loe againe: bite him to death I prethee.

Ste. Trinculo, keepe a good tongue in your head: If you prove a mutineere, the next Tree: the poore Monster's my Subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thanke my noble Lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd to hearken once againe to the suite I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I: kneele and repeate it, I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariell invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a Tirant, A Sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me Of the Island.

Ariell. Thou lyest.

Cal. Thou lyest, thou jesting Monkey thou: I would my valiant Master would destroy thee. I do not lye.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in's tale, By this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum then, and no more: proceed.

Cal. I say by Sorcery he got this Isle From me, he got it. If thy Greatnesse will Revenge it on him, (for I know thou dar'st) But this thing dare not.

Ste. That's most certaine.

Cal. Thou shalt be Lord of it, and Ile serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compast?

Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea my Lord, Ile yeeld him thee asleepe, Where thou maist knocke a naile into his head.

Ariell. Thou liest, thou canst not.

Cal. What a py'de Ninnie's this? Thou scurvie patch: I do beseech thy Greatnesse give him blowes, And take his bottle from him: When that's gone, He shall drinke nought but brine, for Ile not shew him Where the quicke frefhes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: Interrupt the Monster one word further, and by this hand, Ile turne my mercie out o'doores, and make a Stockfish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing: Ile goe no further off.

Ste. Didst thou not say he lyed?

Ariell. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? Take thou that, As you like this, give me the lye another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie: Out o'your wittes, and hearing too?

A pox o'your bottle, this can Sacke and drinking doo: A murren on your Monster, and the divell take your fingers.

Cal. Ha, ha, ha.

Ste. Now forward with your Tale: prethee stand further off.

Cal. Beate him enough: after a little time Ile beate him too.

Ste. Stand further: Come proceede.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custome with him I'th afternoone to sleepe: there thou mayst braine him, Having first seiz'd his bookes: Or with a logge Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, Or cut his wezand with thy knife. Remember First to possesse his Bookes; for without them

Hee's but a Sot, as I am; nor hath not One Spirit to command: they all do hate him As rootedly as I. Burne but his Bookes, He ha's brave Vtenfils (for so he calles them) Which when he ha's a house, hee'l decke withall. And that most deeply to consider, is The beautie of his daughter: he himselve Cals her a non-pareill: I never saw a woman But onely Sycorax my Dam, and she; But she as farre surpasseth Sycorax, As great'st do's least.

Ste. Is it so brave a Lasse?

Cal. I Lord, she will become thy bed, I warrant, And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be King and Queene, save our Graces: and Trinculo and thy selfe shall be Vice-royes: Dost thou like the plot Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand, I am sorry I beate thee: But while thou liv'st keepe a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this halfe houre will he be asleepe, Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. I on mine honour.

Ariell. This will I tell my Master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure, Let us be jocond. Will you trouble the Catch You taught me but whileare?

Ste. At thy request Monster, I will do reason, And reason: Come on Trinculo, let us sing.

Sing.

Flout'em, and count'em: and shew'em, and flout'em, Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

Ariell plaies the tune on a Tabor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this fame?

Trin. This is the tune of our Catch, plaid by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beest a man, shew thy selfe in thy likenes: If thou beest a divell, take't as thou list.

Trin. O forgive me my sinnes.

Ste. He that dyes payes all debts: I defie thee; Mercy upon us.

Cal. Art thou affear'd?

Ste. No Monster, nor I.

Cal. Be not affear'd, the Isle is full of noyses, Sounds, and sweet aires, that give delight and hurt not: Sometimes a thousand twangling Instruments Will hum about mine eares; and sometimes voyces, That if I then had wak'd after long sleepe, Will make me sleepe againe; and then in dreaming, The cloudes me thought would open, and shew riches Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd I cride to dreame againe.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdome to me, Where I shall have my musicke for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroy'd.

Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away. Lets follow it, and after do our worke.

Ste. Leade Monster, Wee'l follow: I would I could see this Taborer, He layes it on.

Trin. Wilt come? Ile follow Stephano.

*Exeunt
Scena*

Scena Tertia.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, &c.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can goe no further, Sir,
My old bones ake : here's a maze trod indeed
Through forth rights and Meanders : by your patience,
I needs must rest me.

Alo. Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who, am my selfe attach'd with wearinesse
To th' dulling of my spirits : sit downe, and rest :
Even here I will put off my hope, and keepe it
No longer for my flatterers : he is dround
Whom thus we stray to find, and the Sea mockes
Our frustrate search on land : well : let him goe.

Ant. I am right glad, that he's so out of hope :
Doe not for one repulse forgoe the purpose
That you resolv'd to effect.

Seb. The next advantage will we take throughly :

Ant. Let it be to night,
For now they are oppress'd with travaile, they Will not, nor cannot use such vigilance
As when they are feesh.

Solemne and strange Musicke : and Prosper on the top (invisible.) Enter severall strange shapes, bringing in a Banquet; and dance about it with gentle actions of salutations, and inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.

Seb. I say to night : no more.

Al. What harmony is this ? my good friends, harke.

Gon. Marvellous sweet Musicke.

Alo. Give us kind keepers, heavens : what were these ?

Seb. A living Drollery : now I will beleeve
That there are Vnicornes : that in Arabia
There is one Tree, the Phoenix throne, one Phoenix
At this houre reigning there.

Ant. Ile beleeve both :

And what do's else want credit, come to me
And Ile be sworne 'tis true : Travellers nere did lye,
Though fooles at home condemne 'em.

Gon. If in Naples

I should report this now, would they beleeve me ?
If I should say I saw such Islanders.
(For certes, these are people of the Island)
Who though they are of monstrous shape, yet note
Their manners are more gentle, kind then of Our humane generation you shall find Many, nay almost any.

Pro. Honest lord,

Thou hast said well : for some of you there present,
Are worse then divels.

Alo. I cannot too much muse
Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound expressing
(Although they want the use of tongue) a kind
Of excellent dumbe discourse.

Pro. Praise in departing.

Fre. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since (mackses.)
They have left their Viands behind ; for we have sto-
Wilt please you taste of what is here ?

Alo. Not I.

(Boyes

Gon. Faith Sir, you need not feare : when we were
Who would beleeve that there were Mountayne neeres,
Dew-lapt, like Buls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh ? or that there were such men

Whose heads stood in their breasts ? which now we find
Each putter out of five for one, will bring us
Good warrant of.

Alo. I will stand to, and feede,
Although my last, no matter, since I feele
The best is past : brother : my lord, the Duke,
Stand too, and doe as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariell (like a Harpy) claps his wings upon the Table, and with a quinc device the Banquet vanishes.

Ar. You are three men of sinne, whom destiny
That hath to instrument this lower world,
And what is in't : the never surfeited Sea,
Hath caus'd to belch up you ; and on this Island,
Where man doth not inhabit, you 'mongst men,
Being most unfit to live : I have made you mad ;
And even with such like valour, men hang, and drowne
Their proper selves : you fooles, I and my fellowes
Are ministers of Fate, the Elements

Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt-at-Stabs
Kill the still closing waters, as diminish
One dowle that's in my plumbe : My fellow ministers
Are like-invulnerable : if you could hurt,
Your swords are now too massie for your strengths,
And will not be uplifted : but remember
(For that's my businesse to you) that you three
From Millaine did supplant good Prospero,
Expos'd unto the Sea (which hath requit it)
Him, and his innocent child : for which foule deed,
The Powers, delaying (not forgetting) have Incens'd the Seas, and Shores ; yea, all the Creatures
Against your peace : Thee of thy Sonne, Alonso,
They have bereft ; and doe pronounce by me
Lingring perdition (worse then any death
Can be at once) shall step, by step attend
You, and your wayes, whole wraths to guard you from,
Which here, in this most desolate Ile, else fails
Vpon your heads, is nothing but hearts-sorrow,
And a cleare life ensuing.

He vanishes in Thunder : then (to soft Musicke.) Enter the shapes againe, and daunce (with mockes and mowes) and carrying out the Table.

Pro. Bravely the figure of this Harpy, hast thou
Perform'd (my Ariel) a grace it had deuouring :
Of my Instruction, hast thou nothing bared
In what thou had'st to say : so with good life
And observation strange, my meaner ministers
Their severall kinds have done : my high charmes worke
And these (mine enemies) are all knit up
In their distractions : they now are in my powre ;
And in these fits, I leave them, while I visit
Yong Ferdinand (whom they suppose is dround)
And his, and mine lov'd darling.

Gon. I'th name of something holy, Sir, why stand you
In this strange stare ?

Alo. O, it is monstrous : monstrous :
Me thought the billowes spoke, and told me of it,
The windes did sing it to me : and the Thunder
(That deepe and dreadfull Organ-Pipe) pronounc'd
The name of Prospero : it did bate my Trespasse, Therefore my Sonne i'th Ooze is bedded ; and I'll seeke him deeper then ere plummet sounded,
And with him there lye mudded.

Exit.

Seb. But one feend at a time,
Ile fight their Legions ore.

B

Ant.

Ant. He be thy second.

Exeunt.

Gon. All three of them are desperate : their great guilt (Like poyson given to worke a great time after)
Now gins to bite the spirits ; I doe beseech you
(That are of suppler joynts) follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this extasie
May now provoke them to.

Ad. Follow, I pray you.

Exeunt omnes

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too austere punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends, for I
Have given you here, a third of mine owne life,
Or that for which I live : who, once againe
I tender to thy hand : All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy loue, and thou
Hast strangely stood the rest : here, afore heaven
I ratifie this my rich gift : O Ferdinand,
Doe not smile at me, that I boast her off,
For thou shalt find she will our-strip all praise
And make it halt, behind her.

Fer. I doe beleeeve it Against an Oracle.

Pro. Then, as my guest, and thine owne acquisition
Worthily purchas'd, take my daughter :
If thou do'st breake her Virgin-knot, before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy right, be ministred,
No sweet aspersion shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow ; but barraine hate,
Sower-ey'd disdaine, and discord shall bestrew
The union of your bed, with weeds so loathly
That you shall hate it both : Therefore take heed,
As Hymens Lampes shall light you.

Fer. As I hope
For quiet dayes, faire Issue, and long life,
With such love, as 'tis now the murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion,
Our worser Genius can, shall never melt
Mine honor into lust, to take away
The edge of that dayes celebration,
When I shall thinke, or Phædus steeds are founderd,
Or Night kept chain'd below.

Pro. Fairely spoke ;
Sit then, and talke with her, she is thine owne ;
What Ariell ; my industrious servant Ariel. Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master ? here I am.

Pro. Thou, and thy meaner fellowes, your last service
Did worthily performe : and I must use you
In such another trick : goe bring the rabble
(Or whom I give thee powre) here, to this place :
Incite them to quicke motion, for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this yong couple
Some vanity of mine Art : it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently ?

Pro. I : with a twincke.

Ari. Before you can say come, and goe,
And breathe twice ; and cry, so, so :
Each one tripping on his Toe,
Will be here with mop, and mowe.
Doe you love me Master ? no ?

Pro. Dearely, my delicate Ariell : doe not approach
Till thou do'st heare me call.

Ari. Well : I conceive;

Exit.

Pro. Looke thou be true : doe not give dalliance
Too much the raigne : the strongest oathes, are straw
To th' fire it's blood : be more abstemious,
Or else good night your vow.

Fer. I warrant you, Sir,
The white cold virgin Snow, upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my Liver.

Pro. Well.

Now come my Ariell, bring a Corolari,
Rather then want a spirit, appeare, and perty. Soft musick.
No tongue : all eyes : be silent. Enter Iris.

Ir. Ceres, most bounteous Lady, the rich Leas
Of Wheate, Rye, Bailey, Fetches, Oares, and Pease;
Thy Turphy. Mountaines, where live nibbling Sheepe,
And flat Medes thetchd with Stover, them to keepe :
Thy bankes with pioned, and twilled brims,
Which spungy Aprill, at thy heft betrimms ;
To make cold Nymphes chaste crownes ; and thy broome-
Whose shadow the dismissed Batchelor loves, (groves ;
Being lasse-lorne : thy pole-clipt vineyard :
And thy Sea-marge sterile, and rocky-hard,
Where thou thy selfe do'st ayre, the Queene o'th Skie,
Whose watry Arch, and messenger, am I,
Bids thee leave these, and with her soveraigne grace, Inno
Here on this grasie-plot, in this very place (descends.)
To come, and sport : here Peacocks flye amaine :
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertaine. Enter Ceres.

Cer. Haile, many coloured Messenger, that nere
Do'st disobey the wife of Jupiter :
Who, with thy iassron wings, upon my flowres
Diffusest hony drops, refreshing showres,
And with each end of thy blew bowe do'st crowne
My bosky acies, and my unshrubd downe,
Rich scarph to my proud earth : why hath thy Queene
Summond me hither, to this short gras'd Greene ?

Ir. A contract of true Love, to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the blest'd Lovers.

Cer. Tell me heavenly Bowe,
If Venus or her sonne, as thou do'st know,
Doe now attend the Queene ? since they did plot
The meanes, that dusky Diu, my daughter got :
Her, and her blind-Boyes scandall'd company,
I have forsworne.

Ir. Of her society
Be not afraid : I met her deity
Cutting the cloud towards Paphos : and her son
Dove-drawne with her : here thought they to have done
Some wanton charme, upon this man and maide,
Whose vowes are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymens Torch be lighted : but in vaine,
Marses hot Minion is returnd againe,
Her waspish headed sonne, has broke his arrowes,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with Sparrowes,
And be a boy right out.

Cer. Highest Queene of State,
Great Inno comes, I know her by her gate.

In. How do's my bounteous sister ? goe with me
To blesse this twaine, that they may prosperous be,
And honor in their issue. They Sing.

In. Honor, riches, marriage, blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly joyes, be still upon you,

Inno

*Iuno sings her blessings on you.
Earth's increase, and foison plenty,
Barnes, and Garners, never empty.
Vines, with clustering bunches growing,
Plants, with goodly burthen bowing:
Spring come to you at the farthest,
In the very end of Harvest.
Scarcity and want shall shun you,
Ceres blessing so is on you.*

Fer. This is a most majestick vision, and Harmonious charmingly: may I be bold
To thinke these spirits?

Pro. Spirits, which by mine Art
I have from all their confines call'd to enact
My present fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever,
So rare a wondred father, and a wife,
Makes this place Paradise.

Pro. Sweet now, silence:
Iuno and Ceres whisper seriously,
There's something else to doe: hush, and be mute
Or else our spell is mar'd.

Iuno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Iris. You Nymphs call Nayades of the winding brooks
With your sedge'd crownes, and ever-harmlesse looks,
Leave your cripe channels, and on this greene-land
Answer your summons, Iuno do's command
Come temperate Nymphes, and helpe to celebrate
A Contract of true Love: be not too late.

Enter certayne Nymphes.

You Sun-burn'd Sicklemen of August weary,
Come hether from the furrow, and be merry,
Make holly day: your Rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh Nymphes encounter every one
In Country footing.

Enter certayne Reapers (properly habited:) they joyne with the Nymphes, in a gracefull dance, towards the end whereof, Prospero starts suddenly and speaks, after which to a strange hollow and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pro. I had forgot that foule conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates
Against my life: the minute of their plot
Is almost come: Well done, avoyd: no more.

Fer. This is strange: your father's in some passion
That workes him strongly.

Mir. Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger, so distemper'd.

Pro. You doe looke (my son) in a mov'd sort,
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerefull Sir,
Our Revels now are ended: These our actors,
(As I foretold you) were all Spirits, and
Are melted into Ayre, into thin Ayre,
And like the baselesse fabricke of their vision
The Cloud-capt Towres, the gorgeous Pallaces,
The solemne Temples, the great Globe it selfe,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And like this insubstantiall Pageant faded
Leave not a racke behind: we are such stufte
As dreames are made on; and our little life
Is rounded with a sleepe: Sir, I am vext,
Beare with my weakenesse, my old braine is troubled:
Be not disturb'd with my infirmity,
If you be pleas'd, retire into my Cell,
And there repose, a turne or two, lie walke
To still my bearing mind.

Fer. Mir. We wish your peace.

Exit.

Pro. Come with a thought; I thanke thee Ariell: come.

Enter Ariell.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to, what's thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit: we must prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ari. I my Commander, when I presented Ceres
I thought to have told thee of it, but I fear'd
Least I might anger thee.

Pro. Say againe, where didst thou leave these varlots?

Ari. I told you Sir, they were red-hot with drinking,
So full of valour, that they smote the ayre
For breathing in their faces: beate the ground
For kissing of their feete: yet alwayes bending
Towards their project: then I beate my Tabor,
At which like unback't colts they prickt their eares,
Advanc'd their eye lids, lifted up their noses
As they smelt musicke, so I charm'd their eares
That Calfe-like, they my lowing follow'd, through Tooth'd briars, sharpe firzes, pricking gosse, and thornes,
Which entred their traile shins: at last I left them
I'th' filthy mantled poole beyond you Cell,
There dancing up to th' chins, that the fowle Lake
Ore-stunk their feet.

Pro. This was well done (my bird)
Thy shape invisible retaine thou still:
The trumpery in my house, goe bring it hither
For stale to catch these theeves. Ariell I goe, I goe. Exit.

Pro. A devill, a borne-devill, on whose nature
Nurture can never sticke: on whom my paines
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost,
And, as with age, his body uglier growes,
So his minde cankers: I will plague them all,
Even to roaring: Come, hang on them this line:

Enter Ariell, laden with glistering apparell, &c. Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you tread softly, that the blind Mole may not heare a foot fall: we now are nere his Cell. (Fairy,

Ste. Monster, your Fairy, which you say is a harmles
Has done little better then plaid the Jacke with us.

Trin. Monster, I doe smell all horse-pisse, at which
My nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Doe you heare Monster: If I should Take a displeasure against you: Looke you.

Trin. Thou wert but a lost Monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favour still,
Be patient, for the prize lie bring thee to
Shall hudwinke this mischance: therefore speake softly,
All's hush as midnight yet.

Trin. I, but to lose our bottles in the Poole.

Ste. There is not onely disgrace and dishonor in that (Monster) but an infinite losse.

Trin. That's more to me then my wetting:
Yet this is your harmlesse Fairy, Monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle,
Though I be o're eares for any labour.

Cal. Prethee (my King) be quiet. Seest thou heere
This is the mouth o'th Cell: no noise, and enter:
Doe that good mischance, which may make this Island
Thine owne for ever, and I thy Caliban
For aye thy foot-licker.

Ste. Give me thy hand,
I doe begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O King Stephano, O Peere: O worthy Stephano, Looke what a wardrobe heere is for thee.

Cal. Let it alone thou foole, it is but trash.

Tri. Oh, ho, Monster: we know what belongs to a frippery, O King Stephano.

B 2

Ste. Put

Ste. Put off that gowne (Trinculo) by this hand Ile have that gowne.

Tri. Thy grace shall have it. (meanes)

Cal. The dropie drowne this foole, what doe you To doate thus on such luggage? let's alone And doe the murther first: if he awake, From too to crowne hee'll fill our skins with pinches, Make us strange stuffe.

Ste. Be you quiet (Monster) Mistris line, is not this my Ierkin? now is the Ierkin under the line: now Ierkin you are like to lose your haire, and prove a bald Ierkin.

Trin. Doe, doe; we steale by lyne and levell, and't like your grace.

Ste. I thanke thee for that jest; heer's a garment for't: Wit shall not goe un-rewarded while I am King of this Country: Steale by line and levell, is an excellent passe of pate: there's another garment for't.

Tri. Monster, come put some Lime upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have done on't: we shall lose our time, And all be turn'd to Barnacles, or to Apes With foreheads villanous low.

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers: helpe to beare this away, where my hogthead of wine is, or Ile turne you out of my kingdome: goe to, carry this.

Tri. And this.

Ste. I, and this.

A noise of Hunters heard. Enter divers spirits in shape of Dogs, and Hounds, hunting them about: Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pro. Hey Mountaine, hey.

Ari. Silver: there it goes, Silver.

Pro. Fury, Fury: there Tyrant, there: harke, harke. Goe, charge my Goblins that thou grinde their joynts With dry Convulsions, shorten up their sinewes With aged Cramps, and more pinch-spotted make them, Then Pard, or Cat o' Mountaine.

Ari. Harke, they rore.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly: At this houre Lies at my mercy all mine enemies: Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou Shalt have the ayre at freedome: for a little Follow, and doe me service.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus, Scena Prima.

Enter Prospero (in his Magicke robes) and Ariel.

Pro. Now do's my Project gather to a head: My charmes cracke not: my spirits obey, and time Goes upright with his carriage: how's the day?

Ar. On the sixt houre, at which time, my lord You said our worke should cease.

Pro. I did say so, When first I rais'd the Tempest: say my spirit, How fares the King, and's followers?

Ar. Confin'd together In the same fashion, as you gave in charge, Just as you left them, all prisoners Sir In the Lime-groves which weather-fends your Cell, They cannot boudgetill your release: The King, His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted, And the remainder mourning over them, Brim full of sorrow, and dismay: but chiefly

Him that you term'd Sir, the good old lord Gonzalo, His teares run downe his beard like winters drops From eaves of reeds: your charme so strongly works'em That if you now beheld them, your affections Would become tender.

Pro. Dost thou thinke so, spirit?

Ar. Mine would, Sir, were I humane.

Pro. And mine shall.

Hast thou (which art but ayre) a touch, a feeling Of their afflictions, and shall not my selfe, One of their kind, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindlier mou'd then thou art? Though with their high wrongs I am strook to th'quick, Yet, with my nobler reason, gainst my fury Doe I take part: the rarer Action is In vertue, then in vengeance: they, being penitent, The sole drift of my purpose doth extend Not a frowne further: Goe, release them Ariel, My Charms Ile breake, their fences Ile restore, And they shall be themselves.

Ar. Ile fetch them, Sir.

Exit.

Pro. Ye Elves of hills, brookes, standing lakes and And ye, that on the sands with printlesse foote (groves, Doe chase the ebbing-Neptune, and doe flye him When he comes backe: you demy-Puppets, that By Moone-shine doe the Greene sowre Ringlets make, Whereof the Ewe not bites: and you, whose pastime Is to make midnight-Muskrumps, that rejoyce To heare the solemne Curfewe, by whose ayde (Weake Masters though ye be) I have bedymn'd The Noone-tide Sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds, And twixt the Greene Sea, and the azur'd vault. Set roaring warre: To the dread ratling Thunder Have I given fire, and risted Ioves stout Oke With his owne Bolt: The strong bass'd promontory Have I made shake, and by the spurs pluckt up The Pyne, and Cedar. Graves at my command Have wak'd their sleepers, op'd, and let'em forth By my so potent Art. But this rough Magicke I heere abjure: and when I have requir'd Some heavenly Musicke (which even now I doe) To worke mine end upon their senses, that This Ayry-charme is for, Ile breake my staffe, Bury it certaine fadomes in the earth, And deeper then did ever Plummert sound Ile drowne my booke.

Solemn musicke.

Heere enters Ariel before: Then Alonso with a franticke gesture, attended by Gonzalo. Sebastian and Antonio in like manner attended by Adrian and Francisco: They all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmd: which Prospero observing, speaks.

A solemne Ayre, and the best comforter, To an unsettled fancy, Cure thy braines (Now uselesse) boile within thy skull: there stand For you are Spell-stopt.

Holy Gonzalo, Honorable man, Mine eyes ev'n sociable to the shew of thine Fall fellowly drops: The charme dissolves apace, And as the morning steales upon the night (Melting the darkenesse) so their rising fences Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle Their cleerer reason. O good Gonzalo My true preserver, and a loyall Sir, To him thou follow't; I will pay thy graces Home both in word, and deed: Most cruelly

Didst

Did thou Alonso, use me, and my daughter :
Thy brother was a furtherer in the Act,
Thou art pinch'd for't now Sebastian. Flesh, and bloud,
You, brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,
Expell'd remorse, and nature, whom, with Sebastian
(Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong)
Would heere have kill'd your King : I doe forgive thee,
Vnnaturall though thou art : their understanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shore
That now ly foule, and muddy : not one of them
That yet lookes on me, or would know me : Ariel ;
Fetch me the Hat, and Rapier in my Cell,
I will discase me, and my selfe present
As I was sometime Millaine : quickly spirit,
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ariel sings, and helps to attire him.
Where the Bee sucks, there suck I,
In a Cowslips bell, I lye,
There I couch when Owles doe cry,
On the Batts backe I doe flye
after Sommer merrily.
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the Bow.

Pro. Why that's my dainty Ariel : I shall misse thee,
But yet thou shalt have freedom : so, so, so.
To the Kings ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the Marriners asleepe
Vnder the Hatches: the Master and the Boat-swaine
Being awake, enforce them to this place ;
And presently, I prethee.

Ari. I drinke the ayre before me, and returne
Or ere your pulse twice beate.

Exit.

Gov. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabits heere some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearefull Country.

Pro. Behold Sir King
The wronged Duke of Millaine, Prospero :
For more assurance that a living Prince
Do's now speake to thee, I embrace thy body,
And to thee, and thy Company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alo. Where thou bee'st he or no,
Or some enchanted trifle to abuse me,
(As late I have beene) I not know : thy Pulse
Beats as of flesh, and blood : and since I saw thee, Th'affliction of my mind amends, with which
I feare a madnesse held me : this must crave
(And if this be at all) a most strange story,
Thy Dukedome I resigne, and doe entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs : but how should Prospero
Be living, and be heere ?

Pro. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honor cannot
Be meaur'd, or confin'd.

Gov. Whether this be,
Or be not, Ile not sweare.

Pro. You doe yet taste
Some subtleties o'th' Ile, that will nor let you
Beleeve things certaine : Wellcome, my friends all,
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded
I heere could plucke his highnesse frowne upon you
And justifie you Traitors : at this time
I will tell no tales.

Seb. The divell speakes in him :

Pro. No.

For you (most wicked Sir) whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I doe forgive
Thy rankest fault : all of them : and require
My Dukedome of thee, which, perforce I know
Thou must restore.

Alo. If thou bee'st Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation,
How thou hast met us heere, who three howres since
Were wrackt upon this shore ? where I have lost (How sharpe the point of this remembrance is)
My deere sonne Ferdinand.

Pro. I am woe for't, Sir.

Alo. Irreparable is the losse, and patience
Saves, it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather thinke
You have not sought her helpe, of whose soft grace
For the like losse, I have her soveraigne ayd,
And rest my selfe content.

Alo. You the like losse ?

Pro. As great to me, as late, and supportable
To make the deere losse, have I meanes much weaker
Then you may call to comfort you ; for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alo. A daughter ?

Oh heavens, that they were living both in Naples
The King and Queene there, that they were, I wish
My selfe were mudded in that oo-zy bed
Where my sonne lies: when did you lose your daughter ?

Pro. In this last Tempest. I perceive these lords,
At this encounter doe so much admire,
That they devoure their reason, and scare thinke
Their eie doe offices of truth : their words
Are naturall breath : but howsoever you have Beene justled from your fences, know for certaine
That I am Prospero, and that very Duke
Which was thrust forth of Millaine, who most strangely
Vpon this shore (where you were wrackt) was landed
To be the Lord on't : no more yet of this,
For 'tis a Chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a break-fast, nor Befitting this first meeting : Welcome, Sir ;
This Cell's my Court : heere have I few attendants,
And Subjects none abroad : pray you looke in :
My Dukedome since you have given me againe,
I will requite you with as good a thing,
At least bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much, as me my Dukedome.

Here Prospero discovers Ferdinand and Miranda, playing at Chess.

Mir. Sweet lord, you play me false.

Pro. No my dearest love,
I would not for the world. (wrangle;

Mir. Yes, for a score of Kingdomes, you should
And I would call it faire play.

Alo. If this prove
A vision of the Island, one deere Sonne
Shall I twice loose.

Seb. A most high miracle.

Fer. Though the Seas threaten they are mercifull,
I have curs'd them without cause.

Alo. Now all the blessings
Of a glad father, compasse thee about :
Arise, and say how thou cam'st heere.

Mir. O wonder !

How many goodly creatures are there heere ?
How beauteous making is ? O brave new world

That has such people in't.

Pro. 'Tis new to thee.

(play?)

Alo. What is this Maid, with whom thou wast at Your eld'st acquaintance cannot be three houres :
Is she the goddesse that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?

Fer. Sir, she is mortall ;

But by immortall providence, she's mine ;
I chose her when I could not aske my Father
For his advise : nor thought I had one : She
Is daughter to this famous Duke of Millaine,
Of whom, so often I have heard renowne,
But never saw before : of whom I have Receiv'd a second life ; and second Father
This Lady makes him to me.

Alo. I am hers.

But O, how odly will it sound, that I
Must aske my child forgiveness ?

Pro. There Sir stop,

Let us not burthen our remembrances, with
A heaviness that's gone.

Gen. I have inly wept,

Or should have spoke ere this : looke downe you gods
And on this couple drop a blessed crowne ;
For it is you, that have chalk'd forth the way
Which brought us hither.

Alo. I say Amen, Gonzalo.

Gen. Was Millaine thrust from Millaine, that his issue
Should become Kings of Naples? O rejoyce
Beyond a common joy, and let it downe
With gold on lasting Pillers : In one voyage
Did Claribell her husband find at Tunis,
And Ferdinand her brother, found a wife,
Where he himselfe was lost : Prospero, his Dukedome
In a poore Isle : and all of us, our selves,
When no man was his owne.

Alo. Give me your hands :

Let griefe and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy.

Gen. Be it so, Amen.

Enter Ariell, with the Master and Boatswaine, amazedly following.

O looke Sir, looke Sir, here is more of us :
I prophesied, if a Gallies were on Land
This fellow could not drowne : Now blasphemy,
That sweare't grace ore-board, not an oath on shore,
Hast thou no mouth by land ?
What is the newes ?

Bot. The best newes is, that we have safely found
Our King, and company : The next : our Ship,
Which but three glasses since, we gave out split,
Is tyte, and yare, and bravely rig'd, as when We first put out to Sea.

Ar. Sir, all this service

Have I done since I went.

Pro. My trickley spirit.

Alo. These are not naturall events, they strengthen
From strange, to stranger : say, how came you hither ?

Bot. If I did thinke, Sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you : we were dead of sleepe,
And (how we know not) all clapt under hatches,
Where, but even now, with strange, and severall noyses
Of roring, shrieking, howling, gingling chaines,
And mo diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awak'd : straight way, at liberty ;
Where we, in all our trim, freshly beheld

Our royall, good, and gallant Ship : our Master
Capring to eye her : on a trice, so please you,
Even in a dreame, were we divided from them,
And were brought moaping hither.

Ar. Was't well done ?

Pro. Bravely (my diligence) thou shalt be free.

Ar. This is as strange a Maze, as ere men trod,
And there is in this businesse, more than nature
Was ever conduct of : some Oracle
Must rectifie our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my Leige,

Doe not infest your mind, with beating on
The strangeness of this businesse, at pickt seisure
(Which shall be shortly single) I'll resolve you,
(Which to you shall seeme probable) of every
These happend accidents : till when, be cheerefull
And thinke of each thing well : Come hither spirit,
Set Caliban, and his companions free :

Vntye the Spell : How fares my gracious Sir ?

There are yet missing of your Company
Some few odde Lads, that you remember not,

Enter Ariell, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo in their stolne Apparell.

Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let
No man take care for himselfe ; for all is

But fortune : Coragio Bully-Monster Coragio.

Tri. If these be true spies which I weare in my head,
Here's a goodly fight.

Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed :
How fine my Master is ? I am afraid
He will challise me.

Seb. Ha, ha :

What things are these my lord Anthonio ?
Will money buy em ?

Ant. Very like : one of them

Is a plaine Fish, and no doubt marketable,

Pro. Marke but the badges of these men, my lords,
Then say if they be true : This misshapen knave ;
His Mother was a Witch, and one so strong
That could controule the Moone ; make flowes, and ebs,
And deale in her command, without her power :
These three have robd me, and this demy-divell ;
(For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them
To take my life : two of these Fellowes, you Must know, and owne, this Thing of darkenesse, I Acknowledgé mine.

Cal. I shall be pincht to death.

Alo. Is not this Stephano, my drunken Butler ?

Seb. He is drunke now ;

Where had he wine ?

Alo. And Trinculo is reeling ripe : where should they Find this grand Liquor that hath gilded 'em ?

How cam'st thou in this pickle ?

Tri. I have beene in such a pickle since I saw you last,
That I feare me will never out of my bones :

I shall not feare flye-blowing.

Seb. Why how now Stephano ?

Ste. O touch me not, I am not Stephano, but a Cramp.

Pro. You'd be King o' the Isle, Sirha ?

Ste. I should have beene a fore one then.

Alo. This is a strange thing as ere I look'd on.

Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners
As in his shape : Goe Sirha, to my Cell,
Take with you your Companions : as you looke
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. I that I will : and Ile be wise hereafter,

And

And seeke for grace : what a thrice double Ass
Was I to take this drunkard for a god ?
And worship this dull foole ?

Pro. Goe to, away. (found it.)

Alc. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you

Seb. Or stole it rather.

Pro. Sir, I invite your Highnesse and your traine,
To my poore Cell : where you shall take your rest
For this one night, which part of it, Ile waite
With such discourse, as I not doubt, shall make it
Goe quicke away : The story of my life,
And the particular accidents, gone by Since I came to this Ile : And in the morne
Ile bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,

Where I have hope to see the Nuptials
Of these our deare-belov'd, solemnized,
And thence retire me to my Millaine, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alc. I long

To heare the story of your life ; which must Take the care strangely.

Pro. Ile deliver all,
And promise you calme Seas, auspicious gales,
And saile, so expeditious, that shall carch
Your Royall fleet farre off : My Ariel (Chicke)
That is thy charge : then to the Elements
Be free, and fare thou well : please you draw neare.

Exeunt omnes.

EPILOGVE

spoken by Prospero.

NOW my Charms are all ore-throwne,
And what strength I have's mine owne,
Which is most faint : now tis true
I must be heere confinde by you,
Or sent to Naples : Let me not Since I have my Dukedome got,
And pardon'd t he deceiver, dwell
In this bare Island, by your Spell,
But release me from my bands
With the helpe of your good hands :
Gentle breath of yours, my Sailes
Must fill, or else my project failes,
Which was to please : Now I want
Spirits to enforce : Art to enchant,
And my ending is despaire,
Vnlesse I be reliev'd by prayer,
Which pierces so, that it assaults
Mercy it selfe, and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your Indulgence set me free.

FINIS.

THE Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Valentine, Proteus, and Speed.

Valentine.

 Ease to perswade, my loving Proteus ;
Home-keeping youth, have ever homely wits,
Wer't not affection chaines thy tender dayes,
To the sweet glances of thy honour'd Love,

I rather would entreat thy company,
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Then (living dully sluggardiz'd at home)
Weare out thy youth with shapelesse idlenesse.
But since thou lov'st ; love still, and thrive therein,
Even as I would, when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou be gone ? Sweet Valentine adieu,
Thinke on thy Proteus, when thou (haply) see'st
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travaile.
Wish me partaker in thy happinesse,
When thou do'st meet good hap ; and in thy danger,
(If ever danger doe environ thee)
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy Beades-man, Valentine.

Val. And on a Love-booke pray for thy successe ?

Pro. Vpon some booke I love, Ile pray for thee.

Val. That's on some shallow Story of deepe love,
How yong Leander crost the Hellepont.

Pro. That's a deepe Story of a deeper love,
For he was more than over-shoes in love.

Val. Tis true ; for you are over-bootes in love,
And yet you never swom the Hellepont.

Pro. Over the Boots ? nay give me not the Boots.

Val. No, I will not ; for it boots thee not.

Pro. What ?

Val. To be in love, where sorne is bought with grones :
Coy lookes, with heart-fore sighes : one fading moments
With twenty watchfull, weary, tedious nights ; (mirth,
If haply won, perhaps a haplesse gaine :
If lost, why then a grievous labour won ;
How ever, but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit, by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me foole.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I feare you'll prove.

Pro. Tis Love you cavill at, I am not Love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you ;
And he that is so yoked by a foole,
Me thinks should not be Chronicled for wife.

Pro. Yet Writers say ; as in the sweetest Bud,
The eating Canker dwels ; so eating Love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And Writers say ; as the most forward Bud

Is eaten by the Canker ere it blow,
Even so by Love, the yong and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the Bud,
Losing his verdure, even in the prime,
And all the faire effects of future hopes.
But wherefore waste I time to counsaile thee
That art a Votary to fond desire ?
Once more adieu : my Father at the Roade
Expects my comming, there to see me shipp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no : Now let us take our leave :
At Milaine let me heare from thee by Letters
Of thy successe in love ; and what newes else
Betideth here in absence of thy Friend :
And I likewise will visite thee with mine.

Pro. All happinesse bechance to thee in Milaine.

Val. As much to you at home : and so farewell. Exit.

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after Love ;
He leaves his friends to dignifie them more ;
I love my selfe, my friends, and all for love :
Thou Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me :
Made me neglect my Studies, lose my time ;
Warre with good counsaile ; set the world at nought ;
Made wit with musing, weake ; heart sicke with thought.

Sp. Sir Proteus : have you : saw you my Master ?

Pro. But now he parted hence to embarke for Milaine.

Sp. Twenty to one then, he is shipp'd already,
And I have plaid the sheepe in losing him.

Pro. Indeed a sheepe doth very often stray,
And if the Shepheard be awhile away.

Sp. You conclude that my Master is a Shepheard then, and I a sheepe ?

Pro. I doe.

Sp. Why then my hornes are his hornes, whether I wake or sleepe.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheepe.

Sp. This proves me still a sheepe.

Pro. True ; and thy Master a shepheard.

Sp. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall goe hard but Ile prove it by another.

Sp. The Shepheard seekes the sheepe ; and not the Sheepe the Shepheard ; but I seeke my Master, and my Master seekes not me : therefore I am no sheepe.

Pro. The Sheepe for Fodder follow the Shepheard, the Shepheard for food followes not the Sheepe : thou for wages followest thy Master, thy Master for wages followes not thee : therefore thou art a sheepe.

Sp. Such another proove will make me cry baâ.

Pro. But dost thou heare : gav'st thou my Letter to Julia ?

Sp. I

Sp. I Sir: I (a lost-Mutton) gave your Letter to her (a lac'd Mutton,) and she (a lac'd Mutton) gave me (a lost-Mutton) nothing for my labour.

Pro. Heres too small a Pasture for such store of Muttons.

Sp. If the ground be over-charg'd, you were best stick her.

Pro. Nay, in that you are assay: twere best pound you.

Sp. Nay sir, lesse then a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.

Pro. You mistake; I meane the Pound, a Pinfold.

Sp. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over, 'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your Lover.

Pro. But what said she?

Sp. I.

Pro. Nod-I, why thats Noddy.

Sp. You mistooke sir, I said she did nod: And you aske me if she did nod, and I said I.

Pro. And that set together, is noddys.

Sp. Now you have taken the paines to set it together, take it for your paines.

Pro. No, no, you shall have it for bearing the Letter.

Sp. Well, I perceive I must be faine to beare with you.

Pro. Why sir, how doe you beare with me?

Sp. Marry sir, the Letter very orderly, Having nothing but the word noddys for my paines.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quicke wit.

Sp. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brieft; what said she.

Sp. Open your purse, that the money and the matter may be both delivered.

Pro. Well sir: here is for your paines: what said she?

Sp. Truly sir, I thinke youle hardly win her.

Pro. Why? couldst thou perceive so much from her?

Sp. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; No, not so much as a Duckett for delivering your letter: And being so hard to me, that brought your minde; I feare shee'l prove as hard to you in telling her minde. Give her no token but stones, for shee's as hard as Steele.

Pro. What said she, nothing?

Sp. No, not so much as take this for thy paines: (me; To testifie your bounty, I thanke you, you have Testern'd In requitall whereof, hencefore carry your letter your selfe; And so sir, Ile commend you to my Master.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wracke, Which cannot perish having thee aboard, Being destin'd to a dryer death on shore: I must goe send some better Messenger, I feare my Julia would not deigne my lines, Receiving them from such a worthless post. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say Lucetta (now are we alone) Wouldst thou then counsaile me to fall in love?

Luc. I Madam, so you stumble not unheedfully.

Jul. Of all the faire resort of Gentlemen, That every day with par'le encounter me,

In thy opinion which is worthiest love?

Luc. Please you repeat their names, Ile shew my mind, According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What thinkst thou of the faire Sir Eglamour?

Luc. As of a Knight, well-spoken, neat, and fine; But were I you, he never should be mine.

Jul. What thinkst thou of the rich Mercutio?

Luc. Well of his wealth; but of himselfe, so, so.

Jul. What thinkst thou of the gentle Prothema?

Luc. Lord, Lord: to see what folly raignes in us.

Jul. How now? what meanes this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon deare Madam, tis a passing shame, That I (unworthy body as I am) Should censure thus on lovely Gentlemen.

Jul. Why not on Prothema, as of all the rest?

Luc. Then thus: of many good, I thinke him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a womans reason.

I thinke him so, because I thinke him so.

Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

Luc. I: if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why he of all the rest, hath never mov'd me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I thinke best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shewes his love but small.

Luc. Fire thats closest kept, burnes most of all.

Jul. They doe not love, that doe not shew their love.

Luc. Oh, they love least, that let men know their love.

Jul. I would I knew his minde.

Luc. Peruse this Paper Madam.

Jul. To Julia: say, from whom?

Luc. That the Contents will shew.

Jul. Say, say: who gave it thee?

Luc. Sir Valentines Page: and sent I think from Prothema. He would have given it you, but I being in the way, Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault I pray.

Jul. Now (by my modesty) a goodly Broker:

Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?

To whisper and conspire against my youth?

Now trust me, tis an office of great worth,

And you an officer fit for the place:

There: take the Paper: see it be return'd,

Or else returne no more into my sight.

Luc. To pleade for love, deserves more fee then hate.

Jul. Will ye be gone?

Luc. That you may ruminate. Exit.

Jul. And yet I would I had ore-look'd the Letter;

It were a shame to call her backe againe,

And pray her to a fault, for which I chid her.

What 'foole is she, that knowes I am a Maid,

And would not force the letter to my view?

Since Maides in modesty, say no to that,

Which they would have the profferer construe, I.

Fie, fie; how way-ward is this foolish love;

That (like a testy Babe) will scratch the Nurse,

And presently, all humbled, kisse the Rod?

How churlishly I chid Lucetta hence,

When willingly I would have had her here?

How angerly I taught my brow to frowne,

When inward joy enforc'd my heart to smile?

My pennance is, to call Lucetta backe,

And aske remission for my folly past.

What hoe: Lucetta.

Luc. What would your Ladiship?

Jul. Is't neere dinner time?

Luc. I would it were,

That you might kill your stomacke on your meat,

And

And not upon your Maid.

In. What is't that you
Tooke up so gingerly?

Lu. Nothing.

In. Why didst thou stoope then?

Lu. To take a Paper up, that I let fall.

In. And is that Paper nothing?

Lu. Nothing concerning me.

In. Then let it lye, for those that it concernes.

Lu. Madam, it will not lye where it concernes,
Vnlesse it have a false interpreter.

In. Some Love of yours hath writ to you in Rime.

Lu. That I might sing it (Madam) to a tune:
Give me a note, your Ladiship can set.

In. As little by such toys, as may be possible:
Best sing it to the tune of Light O, Love,

Lu. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

In. Heavy? belike it hath some burden then?

Lu. I: and melodious were it, would you sing it.

In. And why not you?

Lu. I cannot reach so high.

In. Lets see your song:

How now Minion?

Lu. Keepe tune there still, so you will sing it out:
And yet me thinkes I doe not like this tune.

In. You doe not?

Lu. No (Madam) tis too sharpe.

In. You (Minion) are too sawcie.

Lu. Nay, now you are too flat;

And marre the concord, with too harsh a descant:
There wanteth but a Meane to fill your Song.

In. The Meane is drown'd with your unruly base.

Lu. Indeed I bid the base for Protheus.

In. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me;
Here is a coile with protestation:

Goe, get you gone: and let the Papers lye:
You would be fingring them to anger me.

Lu. She makes it strange, but she would be best pleas'd
To be so angred with another Letter. Exit.

In. Nay, would I were so angred with the same:

Oh hatefull hands, to teare such loving words;

Injurious Waspes, to feed on such sweet honey,

And kill the Bees that yeeld it, with your stings;

He kisse each severall Paper for amends:

Looke, here is writ, kinde Julia: unkinde Julia,

As in revenge of thy ingratitude,

I throw thy name against the bruizing stones,

Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.

And here is writ, Love-wounded Protheus.

Poore wounded name: my bosome, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd;

And thus I search it with a soveraigne kisse.

But twice, or thrice, was Protheus written downe:

Be calme (good winde) blow not a word away,

Till I have found each letter in the Letter.

Except mine owne name: That some whirle-wind beare

Vnto a ragged, fearefull, hanging Rocke,

And throw it thence into the raging Sea.

Loe, here in one line is his name twice writ:

Poore forlorne Protheus, passionate Protheus:

To the sweet Julia: that he teare away:

And yet I will not, sith so pretily

He couples it, to his complaining names;

Thus will I fold them, one upon another;

Now kisse, embrace, contend, doe what you will. Enter.

Lu. Madam: dinner is ready, and your father stayes.

In. Well, let us goe.

Lu. What, shall these Papers lie, like tell-tales here?

In. If you respect them; best to take them up.

Lu. Nay, I was taken up, for laying them downe.
Yet here they shall not lie for catching cold.

In. I see you have a monthes minde to them.

Lu. I (Madam) you may say what fights you see;
I see things to, although you judge I winke.

In. Come, come, wilt please you goe?

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Antonio and Panthino. Protheus.

Ant. Tell me Panthino, what sad talke was that,
Wherewith my Brother held you in the Cloyster?

Pan. 'Twas of his Nephew Protheus, your sonne.

Ant. Why? what of him?

Pan. He wondred that your Lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men of slender reputation
Put forth their Sonnes, to seek preferment out.
Some to the warres, to try their fortune there;
Some to discover Islands farre away:
Some, to the studious Vniversities;
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Protheus, your sonne, was meet;
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home;
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having knowne no travaile in his youth.

Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that Whereon, this month I have been hammering.

I have consider'd well, his losse of time,
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried, nor tutor'd in the world:
Experience is by industry achiev'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time:
Then tell me, whither were I best to send him?

Pan. I thinke your Lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthfull Valentine,
Attends the Emperour in his Royall Court.

Ant. I know it well.

(thither,

Pan. 'Twere good, I thinke, your Lordship sent him
There shall he practise Tilts and Turnaments;
Heare sweet discourse, converse with Noblemen,
And be in eye of every exercise
Worthy his youth and noblenesse of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsaile: well hast thou advis'd:
And that thou maist perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make knowne;
Even with the speediest expedition,
I will dispatch him to the Emperours Court.

Pan. To morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other Gentlemen of good esteeme
Are journeying to salute the Emperour,
And to commend their service to his will.

Ant. Good company: with them shall Protheus goe:
And in good time, now will we breake with him. Enter

Pro. Sweet Love, sweet lines, sweet life,

(Pro.

Here is her hand, the agent of her heart,
Here is her oath for love, her honours pawne;

O that our Fathers would applaud our Loves
To seale our happinesse with their consents.
Oh heavenly Julia.

Ant. How now? What Letter are you reading there?

Pro. May't please your Lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations sent from Valentine;
Deliver'd by a friend, that came from him.

Ant. Lend me the Letter: Let me see what newes;

Pro. There is no newes (my Lord) but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well belov'd,
And daily graced by the Emperour;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Pro. As one relying on your Lordships will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish:
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end:
I am resolv'd that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentino in the Emperours Court:
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me,
To morrow be in readinesse to goe,
Excuse it not: for I am peremptory.

Pro. My Lord I cannot be so soone provided,
Please you deliberate a day or two.

Ant. Looke what thou wantst shall be sent after thee:
No more of stay: to morrow thou must goe;
Come on Panthino; you shall be imploy'd,
To hasten on his expedition.

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire for feare of burning,
And drench'd me in the Sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to shew my father Julia's Letter,
Least he should take exceptions to my Love,
And with the vantage of mine owne excuse
Hath he excepted most against my Love.
Oh, how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertaine glory of an Aprill day,
Which now shewes all the beauty of the Sunne,
And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Pan. Sir Protheus, your Father call's for you,
He is in haste, therefore I pray you goe.

Pro. Why this it is: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answer's no.

Exeunt. Finis.

Actus secundus: Scena Prima.

Enter Valentine, Speed, Silvia.

Speed. Sir, your Glove.

Val. Not mine: my Gloves are on.

Sp. Why then this may be yours: for this is but one.

Val. Ha? Let me see: I, give it me, it's mine:
Sweet Ornament, that decks a thing divine,
Ah Silvia, Silvia.

Speed. Madam Silvia: Madam Silvia.

Val. How now Sirra?

Speed. Shee is not within hearing Sir.

Val. Why sir, who bad you call her?

Sp. Your worship sir, or else I mistooke.

Val. Well: you'll still be too forward.

Sp. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Val. Goe to sir, tell me: doe you know Madam Silvia?

Sp. Shee that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Sp. Marry by these speciall markes: first, you have learn'd (like sir Protheus) to wreath your armes like a Male-content: to relish a Love-song, like a Robin-red-breast: to walke alone like one that had the Pestilence:
to sigh like a Schoole-boy that had lost his A. B. C. to weepe like a yong Wench that had lost her Grandam: to fast like one that takes dyet: to watch like one that feares robbing: to speake puling like a Beggar at Hallowmasse:
You were wont when you laughed to crow like a Cocke:
when you walk'd, to walke like one of the Lions: when you fasted, it was presently after dinner: when you lookt sadly, it was for want of money: And now you are Metamorphos'd with a Mistresse, that when I looke on you, I can hardly thinke you my Master.

Val. Are all these things perceiv'd in me?

Sp. They are all perceiv'd without ye.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Sp. Without you? nay, that's certaine: for without you were so simple, none else would: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an Vrinall: that not an eye that sees you, but is a Physitian to Comment on your Malady.

Val. But tell me: dost thou know my Lady Silvia?

Sp. Shee that you gaze on so, as she sits at Supper?

Val. Hast thou observ'd that? even she I meane.

Sp. Why sir, I know her not.

Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not?

Sp. Is she not hard favour'd sir?

Val. Not so faire (Boy) as well favour'd.

Sp. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?

Sp. That shee is not so faire, as (of you) well favour'd?

Val. I meane that her beauty is exquisite,
But her fauour infinite.

Sp. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

Val. How painted? and how out of count?

Sp. Marry sir, so painted to make her faire, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val. How esteem'st thou me? I account of her beauty.

Sp. You never saw her since she was deform'd.

Val. How long hath she been deform'd?

Sp. Ever since you lov'd her.

Val. I have lov'd her ever since I saw her,
And still I see her beautifull.

Sp. If you love her, you cannot see her.

Val. Why?

Sp. Because Love is blinde: O that you had mine eyes, or your owne eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at Sir Protheus, for going un-garter'd.

Val. What should I see then?

Sp. Your owne present folly, and her passing deformity: for he being in love, could not see to garter his Hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your Hose.

Val. Belike (Boy) then you are in love, for last morning
You could not see to wipe my shooes.

Sp. True sir: I was in love with my bed, I thanke you, you swing'd me for my love, which makes me the bolder

bolder to chide you for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her:

Sp. I would you were set, so your affection would create.

Val. Last night she enjoy'd me,
To write some lines to one she loves.

Sp. And have you.

Val. I have.

Sp. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No (Boy) but as well as I can doe them:
Peace, here she comes.

Sp. Oh excellent Motion; Oh exceeding Puppet:
Now will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam and Mistris, a thousand good morrowes.
Sp. Oh, give ye good-cv'n: here's a million of manners.

Sil. Sir Valentine, and servant, to you two thousand.

Sil. He should give her interest: and she gives it him.

Val. As you enjoy'd me; I have writ your Letter
Vnto the secret, namelesse friend of yours:
Which I was much unwilling to proceed in,
But for my duty to your Ladiship.

Sil. I thanke you (gentle servant) 'tis very Clerkly done.

Val. Now trust me (Madam) it came hardly off:
For being ignorant to whom it goes,
I writ at random very doubtfully.

Sil. Perchance you thinke too much of so much paines?

Val. No (Madam), so it steed you, I will write (Please you command) a thousand times as much:
And yet—

Sil. A pretty period: well: I ghesse the sequell;
And yet I will not name it: and yet I care not.
And yet, take this againe: and yet I thanke you:
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Sp. And yet you will: and yet, another yet.

Val. What meanes your Ladiship?
Doe you not like it?

Sil. Yes, yes: the lines are very quaintly writ,
But (since unwillingly) take them againe.
Nay, take them.

Val. Madam, they are for you.

Sil. I, I: you writ them Sir at my request,
But I will none of them: they are for you:
I would have had them writ more movingly:

Val. Please you, Ile write your Ladiship another.

Sil. And when its writ: for my sake reade it over,
And if it please you, so: if not, why so.

Val. If it please me (Madam) what then?

Sil. Why if it please you, take it for your labour;
And so good morrow servant. Exit.
Sp. Oh Iest unseene: inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a mans face, or a Wethercocke on a Steeple:
My Master sues to her: and she hath taught her Tutor,
He being her Pupill, to become her Tutor.
Oh excellent devise, was there ever heard a better?
That my Master being Scribe,
To himselfe should write the Letter?

Val. How now sir?

What are you reasoning with your selfe?

Sp. Nay, I was riming: tis you that have the reason.

Val. To doe what?

Sp. To be a spokel-man from Madam Silvia.

Val. To whom?

Sp. To your selfe: why, she woes you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Sp. By a Letter, I should say.

Val. Why she hath not writ to me?

Sp. What need she,

When she hath made you write to your selfe?
Why, doe you not perceiue the jest?

Val. No, beleeve me.

Sp. No beleeving you indeed Sir:

But did you perceiue her earnest?

Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Sp. Why she hath given you a Letter.

Val. Thats the Letter I writ to her friend.

Sp. And y Letter hath she deliver'd, and there's an end.

Val. I would it were no worfe.

Sp. Ile warrant you tis as well:

For often have you writ to her: and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not againe reply,
Or fearing els some melséger, y might her mind discover
Her selfe hath taught her Love himselfe to write unto her
All this I speake in Print, for in Print I found it. (Lover
Why muse you sir, tis dinner time.

Val. I have din'd.

Sp. I, but hearken sir: though the Cameleon Love can feed on the ayre, I am one that am nourish'd by my victuals; and would faine have meat: oh be not like your Mistresse, be moved, be moved. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prothemus, Julia, Panthion.

Pro. Haue patience, gentle Julia.

Jul. I must where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will returne.

Jul. If you turne not: you will returne the sooner:
Keepe this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.

Pro. Why then wee'll make exchange;
Here, take you this.

Jul. And seale the bargain with a holy kisse.

Pro. Here is my hand, for my true constancie:
And when that houre ore-slips me in the day,
Wherein I sigh not (Julia) for thy sake,
The next ensuing houre, some foule mischance
Torment me for my Loves forgetfulnesse:
My father slayes my comming: answer not:
The Tide is now; nay, not thy tide of teares,
That tide will stay me longer then I should,
Julia farewell: what, gone without a word?
I, so true love should doe: it cannot speake,
For truth hath better deeds than words to grace it.

Pan. Sir Prothemus, you are staid for.

Pro. Goe, I come, I come:

Alas, this parting strikes poore Lovers dumbe. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Launce, Panthion.

Launce. Nay, 'twill bee this houre ere I have done weeping: all the kinde of the Launces have this very fault: I have receiv'd my proportion, like the prodigious foone,

Sonne, and am going with Sir Protheus to the Imperialls Court : I thinke Crab my dog, be the fowrest natured dogge that lives : My Mother weeping : my Father wayling : my Sister crying : our Maid howling : our Catte wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexitie, yet did not this cruell-hearted Curre shedde one teare : he is a stone, a very pibble stone, and has no more pittie in him then a dogge : a few would have wept to have seene our parting : why my Grandam having no eyes, looke you, wept her selfe blind at my parting : nay, Ile show you the manner of it. This shooe is my father : no, this left shooe is my father ; no, no, this left shooe is my mother : nay, that cannot bee so neyther : yes ; it is so, it is so : it hath the worser sole : this shooe with the hole in it, is my mother : and this my father : a veng'ance on't, there 'tis : Now sir, this staffe is my sister : for looke you, she is as white as a lilly, and as small as a wand : this hat is Nan our maid : I am the dogge : no, the dogge is himselfe, and I am the dogge : oh, the dogge is me, and I am my selfe : I ; so, so : now come I to my Father ; Father, your blessing : now should not the shooe speake a word for weeping : now should I kisse my Father ; well, hee weepes on : Now come I to my Mother : Oh that she could speake now, like a would-woman : well, I kisse her : why there 'tis ; heere's my mothers breath up and downe : Now come I to my sister ; marke the moane she makes : now the dogge all this while sheds not a teare : nor speakes a word : but see how I lay the dust with my teares.

Panth. Launce, away, away : a Boord : thy Maister is ship'd, and thou art to post after with oares ; what's the matter ? why weep'st thou man ? away asse, you'll loose the Tide, if you tarry any longer.

Laun. It is no mater if the tide were lost, for it is the unkindest Tide, that ever any man tyde.

Panth. What's the unkindest tide ?

Laun. Why, he that's tide here, Crab my dog.

Panth. Tut man : I meane thou'lt loose the flood, and in loosing the flood, loose thy voyage, and in loosing thy voyage, loose thy Maister, and in loosing thy Maister, loose thy service, and in loosing thy service : — why dost thou stop my mouth ?

Laun. For feare thou shouldst loose thy tongue.

Panth. Where should I loose my tongue ?

Laun. In thy Tale.

Panth. In thy Taile.

Laun. Loose the Tyde, and the voyage, and the Maister, and the Service, and the tide : why man if the River were drie, I am able to fill it with my teares : if the winde were downe, I could drive the boate with my sighes.

Panth. Come : come away man, I was sent to call thee.

Laun. Sir : call me what thou dar'st.

Panth. Wilt thou goe.

Laun. Well, I will goe.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valensine, Silnia, Thurio, Speed, Duke, Protheus.

Sil. Servant.

Val. Mistris.

Spee. Maister, Sir Thurio frownes on you.

Val. I Boy it's for love.

Spe. Not of you.

Val. Of my Mistrisse then.

Spe. 'Twere good you knockt him ;

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, Madam, I seeme so.

Thu. Seeme you that you are not ?

Val. Hap'ly I doe.

Thu. So doe Counterfeits.

Val. So doe you.

Thu. What seeme I that I am not ?

Val. Wife.

Thu. What instance of the contrary ?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quoad you my folly ?

Val. I quoad it in your Ierken.

Thu. My Ierkin is a doublet.

Val. Well then, Ile double your folly.

Thu. How ?

Sil. What, angry, Sir Thurio, do you change colour ?

Val. Give him leave, Madam, he is a kind of Camelion.

Thu. That hath more minde to feed on your blood, then live in your ayre.

Val. You have sayd Sir.

Thu. I Sir, and done too for this time.

Val. I know it well sir, you alwayes end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volly of words, gentlemē, & quickly shot off.

Val. 'Tis indeed, Madam, we thanke the giver.

Sil. Who is that Servant ?

Val. Your selfe (sweet Lady) for you gave the fire, Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your Ladships lookes, And spends what he borrowes kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt. (words,

Val. I know it well sir : you have an Exchequer of And I thinke, no other treasure to give your followers : For it appeares by their bare Liveries That they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more : Here comes my father.

Duke. Now, daughter Silnia, you are hard beset. Sir Valensine, your father is in good health, What say you to a Letter from your friends Of much good newes ?

Val. My Lord I will be thankfull, To any messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your Countriman ?

Val. I, my good Lord, I know the Gentleman To be of worth, and worthy estimation, And not without desert so well reputed.

Duk. Hath he not a Sonne ?

Val. I my good Lord, a Son ; that well deserves The honour, and regard of such a father.

Duk. You know him well ?

Val. I knew him as my selfe : for from our Infancie We have convert, and spent our houres together, And though my selfe have beene an idle Trewant, Omitting the sweet benefit of time.

To cloathe mine age with Angel-like perfection :

Yet hath Sir Protheus (for that's his name)

Made use, and faire advantage of his dayes :

His yeares but yong, but his experience old :

His head un-mellowed, but his Iudgement ripe ;

And in a word (for far behinde his worth Comes all the praises that I now bestow.)

C

He

He is compleat in feature, and in minde,
With all good grace, to grace a Gentleman.

Duk. Beshrew me sir, but if he make this good
He is as worthy for an Empresse love,
As meet to be an Emperors Councillor:
Well, Sir: this gentleman is come to me
With Commendation from great Potentates,
And here he meanes to spend his time a while;
I thinke 'tis no welcome newes to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had beene he.

Duk. Welcome him then according to his worth:
Silvia, I speake to you, and you Sir Thurio,
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it,
I will send him hither to you presently.

Ua. This is the Gentleman I told your Ladiship
Had come along with me, but that his Mistresse
Did hold his eyes, lockt in her Cristall lookes.

Sil. Be-like that now she hath enfranchis'd them
Vpon some other pawne for fealty.

Val. Nay sure, I thinke she holds them prisoners still.

Sil. Nay then he should be blind, and being blind
How could he see his way to seeke out you?

Val. Why Lady, Love hath twenty paire of eyes.

Thur. They say that love hath not an eye at all.

Val. To see such Lovers, Thurio, as your selfe, Vpon a homely object love can winke. Enter.

Sil. Have done, have done: here comes the gentleman.

Val. Welcome, deere Prothens: Mistris, I beseech you Confirm this welcome, with some speciall favour,

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wish'd to heare from.

Val. Mistris, it is: sweet Lady, entertaine him
To be my fellow-servant to your Ladiship.

Sil. Too low a Mistris for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet Lady, but too, meane a servant,
To have a looke of such a worthy Mistris.

Val. Leave off discourse of disabilitie:

Sweet Lady, entertaine him for your servant.

Pro. My dutie will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And dutie never yet did want his meed.
Servant, you are welcome to a worthlesse Mistris.

Pro. He dye on him that saies so but your selfe.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. That you are worthlesse. (you.
Thur. Madam, my Lord your father would speak with

Sil. I wait upon his pleasure: Come Sir Thurio, Goe with me: once more, new servant welcome;
He leave you to confer of home affaires,
When you have done, we looke to heare from you.

Pro. Wee'l both attend upon your Ladiship.

Val. Now tell me how do al from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are wel, & have the much comended.

Ua. And how doe yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Ua. How does your Lady? & how thrives your love?
Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you,
I know you joy not in a Love-discourse.

Ua. I Prothens, but that life is alter'd now,
I have done pennance for contemning Love,
Whose high emperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts, with penitentiall grones,
With nightly teares, and daily heart-fore sighes,
For in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath chac'd sleepe from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of mine owne hearts sorrow.
O gentle Prothens, Love's a mightie Lord,

And hath so humbled me, as I confesse
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his service, no such joy on earth:
Now, no discourse, except it be of love:
Now can I breake my fast, dine, sup, and sleepe,
Vpon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this the Idoll, that you worship so?

Val. Even She; and is she not a heavenly Saint?

Pro. No; But she is an earthly Paragon.

Ua. Call her divine:

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O flatter me: for Love delights in praise.

Pro. When I was sieke, you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minifter the like to you.

Ua. Then speake the truth by her, if not divine,
Yet let her be a principallitie,
Soveraigne to all the Creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my Mistresse.

Val. Sweet: except not any,
Except thou wilt except against my Love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine owne?

Ua. And I will helpe thee to prefer her to;
Shee shall be dignified with this high honour,
To beare my Ladies traine, least the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steale a kisse,
And of so great a favor growing proud,
Disdaine to roote the Sommer-swelling flowre,
And make rough Winter everlastingly.

Pro. Why Valentine, what Bragadisme is this?

Ua. Pardon me (Prothens) all I can is nothing,
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
Shee is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world: why man, she is mine owne,
And I as rich in having such a Jewell
As twenty Seas, if all their sand were pearle,
The water, Nectar and the Rocke pure gold.
Forgive me, that I doe not dreame on thee,
Because thou see'st me doate upon my love:
My foolish Rivall that her father likes
(Onely for his possessions are so huge)
Is gone with her along, and I must after,
For Love (thou know'st) is full of jealousie.

Pro. But she loves you? (howre,

Ua. I, and we are betroathd: nay more, our marriage
With all the cunning manner of our flight
Determin'd of: how I must climbe her window,
The Ladder made of Cords, and all the means
Plotted, and 'greed on for my happinesse.
Good Prothens goe with me to my chamber,
In these affaires to aid me with thy counsaile.

Pro. Goe on before: I shall enquire you forth:
I must unto the Road, to dis-embarque
Some necessaries; that I needs must use,
And then He presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will.

Even as one heate, another heate expels,
Or as one nayle by strength drives out another:
So the remembrance of my former Love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten,
Is it mine then, or Valentineans praise?
Her true perfection, or my false transgression?
That makes me reasonlesse, to reason thus?
Shee is faire: and so is Julia that I love,

(That

(That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd;
Which like a waxen Image gainst a fire
Beares no impression of the thing it was.)
Me thinks my zeale to Valensino is cold,
And that I love him not as I was wont :
O, but I love his Lady too-too much.
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I doate on her with more aduice,
That thus without advice begin to love her ?
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazeld so my reasons light:
But when I looke on her perfections,
There is no reason, but I shall be blinde.
If I can checke my erring love, I will,
If not, to compasse her Ile use my skill.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce, by mine honesty welcome to Padua.

Laun. Forswear not thy selfe, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this alwaies, that a man is never undon till he be hang'd, nor never welcome to a place, till some certaine shot be paid, and the Hostesse say welcome.

Speed. Come-on you mad-cap : Ile to the Ale-house with you presently ; where, for one shot of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes: But sirha, how did thy Master part with Madam Julia?

Laun. Marry after they cloas'd in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Spee. But shall she marry him ?

Laun. No.

Spee. How then ? shall he marry her?

Laun. No, neyther.

Spee. What are they broken?

Laun. No ; they are both as whole as a fish.

Spee. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Laun. Marry thus, when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Spee. What an asse art thou, I understand thee not.

Laun. What a blocke art thou, that thou canst not? My staffe understands me.

Spee. What thou sayst?

Laun. I, and what I do too : looke thee, Ile but leane, and my staffe understands me.

It stands under thee indeed.

Laun. Why, stand-under : and understand is all one.

Spee. But tell me true, wilt be a match ?

Laun. Aske my dogge, if he say I, it will : if hee say no, it will : if he shake his taile and say nothing, it will.

Spee. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Spee. 'Tis well that I get it so : but Launce, how saist thou that my master is become a notable Lover?

Laun. I never knew him otherwise.

Spee. Then how?

Laun. A notable Lubber : as thou reportest him to bee.

Spee. Why, thou whorson Asse, thou mistak'st me.

Laun. Why Foole, I meant not thee, I meant thy Master.

Spee. I tell thee, my master, is become a hot Lover.

Laun. Why, I tell thee, I care not, though hee burne himselfe in Love. If thou wilt goe with me to the Ale-house, so, if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Spee. Why?

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee as to goe to the Ale with a Christian : Wilt thou goe?

Spee. At thy service:

Enter Plotsheim John.

Pro. To leave my Julia ; shall I be forsworne?
To love faire Silvia ; shall I be forsworne?
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworne.
And ev'n that Powre which gave me first my oath
Provokes me to this three-fold perjurie.
Love bad me sweare, and Love bids me for-swear ;
O sweet-suggesting Love, if thou hast sinn'd,
Teach me (thy tempted subject) to excuse it.
At first I did adore a twinkling Starre,
But now I worship a celestiall Sunne :
Vn-heedfull vowes may heedfully be broken,
And he wants wit, that wants resolved will,
To learne his wit, & exchange the bad for better ;
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue, to call her bad,
Whole sovereignty so oft thou hast preferd,
With twenty thousand soule-confirming oathes.
I cannot leave to love, and yet I doe :
But there I leave to love, where I should love.
Julia I loose, and Valentine I loose,
If I keepe them, I needs must loose my selfe :
If I loose them, thus finde I but their losse,
For Valentine, my selfe : for Julia, Silvia.
I to my selfe am deerer then a friend,
For Love is still most precious in it selfe,
And Silvia (witnesse heaven that made her faire)
Shewes Julia but a swarthy Ethiopie.
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Remembring that my love to her is dead.
And Valentine Ile hold an Enemy,
Ayming at Silvia as a sweeter friend:
I cannot now prove constant to my selfe,
Without some trechery us'd to Valentine.
This night he meaneth with a Corded-ladder
To climbe celestiall Silvia's chamber window,
My selfe in counsaile his competitor.
Now presently Ile give her father notice
Of their disguising and pretended flight:
Who (all inrag'd) will banish Valentine :
For Thurio he intends shall wed his daughter,
But Valentine being gone, Ile quickly crosse
By some flie trick, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love lend me wings, to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot his drift.

Scena septima.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsaile, Lucetta, gentle girle assist me,
And ev'n in kinde love, I doe conjure thee,
Who art the Table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly Character'd, and engrav'd,
To lesson me, and tell me some good meane
How with my honour I may undertake
A journey to my loving Prothens.

Luc. Alas, the way is wearisome and long.

Jul. A true-devoted Pilgrime is not weary
To measure Kingdoms with his feeble steps,
Much lesse shall she that hath Loves wings to flie,
And when the flight is made to one so deere,
Of such divine perfection as Sir Prothens.

Luc. Better forbear, till Prothens make returne.

Jul. Oh, know'st thou not, his looks are my soules food?
Pitty the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of Love,
Thou wouldst as soone goe kindle fire with snow
As seeke to quench the fire of Love with words.

Luc. I doe not seeke to quench your Loves hot fire,
But qualifie the fires extreame rage,
Least it should burne above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou dam'st it up, the more it burnes:
The Current that with gentle murmure glides
(Thou know'st) being stop'd, impatiently doth rage:
But when his faire course is not hindered,
He makes sweet musick with th'enameld stones,
Giving a gentle kisse to every sedge
He over-taketh in his pilgrimage.
And so by many winding nookes he straies
With willing sport to the wilde Ocean.
Then let me goe, and hinder not my course:
He be as patient as a gentle streame,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my Love,
And there he rest, as after much turmoile
A blessed soule doth in Elizium.

Luc. But in what habit will you goe along?

Jul. Not like a woman, for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men:
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weedes
As may beseme some well reputed Page.

Luc. Why then your Ladiship must cut your haire.

Jul. No girle, he knit it up in silken strings,
With twentie od-conceited true-love knots:
To be fantastique, may become a youth
Of greater time then I shall shew to be.

Luc. What fashion (Madam) shall I make your bree-

Jul. That fits as well, as tell me (good my Lord)
What compasse will you weare your Farthingale?
Why ev'n what fashion thou best likes (Lucetta).

Luc. You must needs have them with a cod-peece (Ma-

Jul. Out, out, (Lucetta) that wilbe illfavord. (dam)

Luc. A round hose (Madam) now's not worth a pin Vnlesse you have a cod-peece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly,
But tell me (wench) how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unstaid a journey?

If I feare me it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. If you thinke so, then stay at home and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. I then never dreame on Infamy, but go:
If Prothens like your journey when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd when you are gone:
I feare me he will scarce be pleas'd withall.

Jul. That is the least (Lucetta) of my feare:
A thousand oathes, an Ocean of his teares
And instances as infinite of Love,
Warrant me welcome to my Prothens.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitfull men.

Jul. Bait men, that use them to so base effect;
But truer starres did governe Prothens birth,
His words are bonds, his oathes are oracles,
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate,
His teares, pure messengers, sent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. pray heav'n he prove so when you come to him.

Jul. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that wrong,
To beare a hard opinion of his truth:
Onely deserve my love, by loving him,
And presently goe with me to my chamber
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my longing journey:
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my Lands, my reputation,
Onely in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence:
Come; answere not: but to it presently,
I am impatient of my tarriance.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius, Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Thurio, Prothens, Valentius, Launce, Speed.

Duk. Sir Thurio, give us leave (I pray) a while,
We have some secrets to confer about.

Now tell me Prothens, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious Lord, that which I would discover,
The Law of friendship bids me to conceale,
But when I call to minde your gracious favours
Done to me (undeserving as I am)
My dutie pricks me on to utter that
Which else no worldly good should draw from me:
Know (worthy Prince) Sir Valentius my friend
This night intendsto steale away your daughter:
My selfe am one made priuy to the plot.
I know you have determin'd to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be stolne away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus (for my duties sake) I rather chose
To crosse my friend in his intended drift,
Then (by concealing it) heap on your head
A pack of sorrowes, which would presse you downe
(Being unprevented) to your timelesse grave.

Duk. Prothens, I thanke thee for thine honest care,
Which to require, command me while I live.
This love of theirs, my selfe have often scene,
Haply when they have iudg'd me fast asleepe,
And oftentimes have purpos'd to forbid

Sir

Sir Valentine her company, and my Court.
But fearing lest my jealous ayne might erre,
And so (unworthily) disgrace the man
(A rashness that I ever yet have shun'd)
I gave him gentle looks, thereby to finde
That which thy selfe hast now disclos'd to me:
And thou maist perceive my feare of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soone suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper Towre,
The key whereof, my selfe have ever kept:
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know (noble Lord) they have devis'd a meane
How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a Corded-ladder fetch her downe:
For which, the youthfull Lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently.
Where (if it please you) you may intercept him.
But (good my Lord) doe it so cunningly
That my discovery be not aimed at:
For, love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Vpon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adiew, my Lord, Sir Valentine is comming. Enter.

Duk. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

Va. Please it your Grace, there is a Messenger
That stayes to beare my Letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.

Duk. Be they of much import?

Val. The tenure of them doth but signifie
My health, and happy being at your Court.

Duk. Nay then no matter: stay with me a while,
I am to breake with thee of some affaires
That touch me neere: wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknowne to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well (my Lord) (and sure the Match
Were rich and honourable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of Vertue, Bounty, Worth, and Qualities
Beseeming such a Wife, as your faire daughter:
Cannot your Grace win her to fancie him?)

Duk. No, trust me, She is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborne, lacking duty,
Neyther regarding that she is my childe,
Nor fearing me, as if I were her father:
And may I say to thee, this pride of hers
(Vpon advice) hath drawne my love from her,
And where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have bene cherish'd by her child-like dutie,
I now am full resolv'd to take a wife,
And turne her out to who will take her in:
Then let her beautie be her wedding dowre:
For me, and my possessions she esteemes not.

Val. What would your Grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a Lady in Verona heere
Whom I affect: but she is nice, and coy,
And nought esteemes my aged eloquence.
Now therefore would I have thee to my Tutor
(For long agoe I have forgot to court,
Besides the fashion of the time is chang'd)
How, and which way I may bestow my selfe
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Va. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words,
Dumbe Jewels often in their silent kinde

More then quicke words, doe move a womans minde.

Duk. But she did scorne a present that I sent her,

Val. A woman sometime scorns what best cōtents her.
Send her another: never give her ore,
For scorne at first makes after-love the more.
If she doe frowne, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you.

If she doe chide, 'tis not to have you gone,
For why, the fooles are mad, if left alone.
Take no repulse, what ever she doth say,
For, get you gon, she doth not meane away.
Flatter, and prayse, commend, extoll their graces:
Though nere so blacke, say they have Angels faces,
That man that hath a tongue, I say is no man,
If this his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duk. But she I meane, is promis'd by her friends
Vnto a youthfull gentleman of worth,
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duk. I, but the doores be lockt, and keyes kept safe,
That no man hath recourse to her by night.

Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?

Duk. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,
And built so shelving, that one cannot climbe it
Without apparant hazard of his life.

Val. Why then a Ladder quaintly made of Cords
To cast up, with a paire of anchoring hookes,
Would serve to scale another Hero's towre,
So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duk. Now as thou art a gentleman of blood advise me, where I may have such a Ladder.

Val. When would you use it? pray sir, tell me that.

Duk. This very night; for Love is like a childe
That longs for every thing that he can come by.

Val. By seaven a clock, ile get you such a Ladder.

Duk. But harke thee: I will goe to her alone,
How shall I best convey the Ladder thither?

Val. It will be light (my Lord) that you may beare it
Vnder a clocke, that is of any length.

Duk. A cloake as long as thine will serve the turne?

Val. I my good Lord.

Duk. Then let me see thy cloake,
Ile get me one of such another length.

Val. Why any cloake will serve the turn (my Lord)

Duk. How shall I fashion me to weare a cloake?
I pray thee let me feele thy cloake upon me.
What Letter is this same? what's here? to Silvia?
And heere an Engine fit for my proceeding,
Ile be so bold to breake the seale for once.

*My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly,
And slaves they are to me, that send them flying.
Oh, could their Master come, and goe as lightly,
Himselfe would lodge, where (senseless) they are lying.
My Herald Thoughts, in thy pure bosome rest them,
While I (their King) that thither them importune
Doe curse the grace that with such grace hath blest them,
Because my selfe doe want my servants fortune.
I curse my selfe, for they are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their Lord would be.*

What's here? Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee.
'Tis so: and heere's the Ladder for the purpose.
Why Phaeton (for thou art Merops sonne)
Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly Car?
And with thy daring folly burne the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?

Goe base Intruder, over-weening Slave,
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equall mates,
And thinke my patience, (more then thy desert)
Is priviledge for thy departure hence.
Thanke me for this, more then for all the favors
Which (all too-much) I have bestowed on thee.
But if thou linger in my Territories
Longer then swiftest expedition
Will give thee time to leave our royall Court,
By heaven, my wrath shall farre exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or thy selfe.
Be gone, I will not heare thy vaine excuse,
But as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence. Exit.

Val. And why not death, rather then living torment?
To die, is to be banisht from my selfe,
And Silvia is my selfe: banish'd from her
Is selfe from selfe. A deadly banishment:
What light, is light, if Silvia be not seene?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Vnlesse it be to thinke that she is by
And feed upon the shaddow of perfection.
Except I be by Silvia in the night,
There is no musike in the nightingale.
Vnlesse I looke on Silvia in the day,
There is no day for me to looke upon.
She is my essence, and I leave to be;
If I be not by her faire influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive.
I flie not death, to flie his deadly doome,
Tarry I heere, I but attend on death,
But flie I hence, I flie away from life. Enter Pro. and Launc.

Pro. Run (boy) run, run, and seeke him out.

Laun. Soa-hough, Soa hough——

Pro. What seest thou?

Laun. Him we goe to finde,
There's not a haire on's head, but t'is a Valentine.

Pro. Valentine?

Va. No.

Pro. Who then? his Spirit?

Va. Neither,

Pro. What then?

Va. nothing.

Laun. Can nothing speake? Master, shall I strike?

Pro. Whom wouldst thou strike?

Laun. Nothing.

Pro. Villaine, forbear.

Laun. Why Sir, Ile strike nothing: I pray you.

Pro. Sirha, I say forbear? friend Valentine, a word.

Va. My eares are stop't, & cannot heare good newes,
So much of bad already hath possesst them.

Pro. Then in dumbe silence will I bury mine;
For they are harsh, un-tuncable, and bad.

Va. Is Silvia dead?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Va. No Valentine indeed, for sacred Silvia,
Hath she forsworne me?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Va. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworne me.
What is your newes?

Laun. Sir, there is a proclamation, that you are vanished.

Pro. That thou art banish'd: oh that's the newes,
From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.

Va. Oh, I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excesse of it will make me surfet.
Dost Silvia know that I am banish'd?

Pro. I, I: and she hath offered to the doome

(Which un-reverst stands in effectuall force)
A Sea of melting pearle, which some call teares.
Those at her fathers churlish feete she tenderd,
With them upon her knees, her humble selfe,
Wringing her hands, whose whitenesse so became them,
As if but now they waxed pale for woe:
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighes, deepe grones, nor silver-shedding teares
Could penetrate her uncompassionate Sire;
But Valentine, if he be tane, must die.
Besides, her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeale was suppliant,
That to close prison he commaunded her,
With many bitter threatens of biding there.

Va. No more: unles the next word that thou speak'st
Have some maligant power upon my life:
If so: I pray thee breathe it in mine eare,
As ending Antheme of my endlesse dolor.

Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not helpe,
And study helpe for that which thou lament'st,
Time is the Nurse, and breeder of all good;
Here, if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love:
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life:
Hope is a lovers staffe, walke hence with that
And mannage it, against despairing thoughts:
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence,
Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd
Even in the milke-white bosome of thy love.
The time now serves not to expostulate,
Come, Ile convey thee through the City-gate.
And ere I part with thee, conter at large
Of all that may concerne thy love affaires:
As thou lov'st Silvia (though not for thy selfe)
Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Va. I pray thee Launce, and if thou seest my Boy
Bid him make haste, and meet me at the North-gate.

Pro. Goe sirha, finde him out: Come Valentine.

Va. Oh my deere Silvia; haplesse Valentine. Exeunt.
Launce. I am but a foole, looke you, and yet I have the wit to thinke my Master is a kinde of a knave: but that's all one, if he be but one knave: He lives not now that knowes me to be in love, yet I am in love, but a Teeme of horse shall not plucke that from me: nor who 'tis I love: and yet 'tis a woman; but what woman, I will not tell my selfe: and yet 'tis a Milkmaid: yet 'tis not a maid: for she hath had Gossips: yet 'tis a maid, for she is her Masters maid, and serves for wages. Shee hath more qualities then a Water-Spaniell, which is much in a bare Christian: Heere is the Cate-log of her Condition. Inprimis, Shee can fetch and carry: why a horse can doe no more; nay, a horse cannot fetch, but onely carry, therefore is she better then a Iade. Item.
Shee can milke, looke you, a sweet vertue in a maid with cleane hands. Enter Speed.

Speed. How now Signior Launce? what newes with your Mastership?

La. With my Mastership? why, it is at Sea:

Sp. Well, your old vice still: mistake the word: what newes then in your paper?

La. The black'st newes that ever thou heard'st.

Sp. Why man? how blacke?

La. Why, as blacke as Inke.

Sp. Let me read them?

La. Fie on thee Iolt-head, thou canst not read.

Sp. Thou lyest: I can.

La. I will try thee: tell me this: who begot thee?

Sp. Marry,

Sp. Marry, the son of my Grand-father.
La. Oh illiterate loyterer; it was the sonne of thy Grand-mother: this proves that thou canst not read.
Sp. Come foole, come: try me in thy paper.
La. There: and S. Nicolas be thy speed.
Sp. Inprimis she can milke.
La. I that she can.
Sp. Item, she brewes good Ale.
La. And thereof comes the proverbe: (Blessing of your heart, you brew good Ale.)
Sp. Item, she can fowe.
La. That's as much as to say (Can she so)
Sp. Item she can knit.
La. What neede a man care for a stock with a wench, When she can knit him a stocke?
Sp. Item, she can wash and scoure.
La. A speciall vertue: for then she neede not to be wash'd and scowr'd.
Sp. Item, she can spin.
La. Then may I set the world on wheelles, when she can spin for her living.
Sp. Item, she hath many namelesse vertues.
La. That's as much as to say Bastard-vertues: that indeede know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.
Sp. Here followes her vices.
La. Close at the heeles of her vertues:
Sp. Item, she is not to bee fasting in respect of her breath.
La. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast: read on.
Sp. Item, she hath a sweet mouth.
La. That makes amends for her fowre breath.
Sp. Item, she doth talke in her sleepe.
La. It's no matter for that; so she sleepe not in her talke.
Sp. Item, she is slow in words.
La. Oh villanie, that set downe among her vices; To be slow in words is a womans onely vertue: I pray thee out with't, and place it for her chiefe vertue.
Sp. Item, she is proud.
La. Out with that too:
 It was Eves legacie, and cannot be tane from her,
Sp. Item, she hath no teeth,
La. I care not for that neither, because I love crusts.
Sp. Item, she is curst.
La. Well: the best is she hath no teeth to bite.
Sp. Item, she will often praise her liquor.
La. If her liquor be good; she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be prayd.
Sp. Item, she is too liberrall.
La. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ downe she is slow of: of her purse, she shall not, for that ile keepe shut: Now, of another thing she may, and that cannot I helpe. Well, proceede.
Sp. Item, she hath more haire then wit, and more faults then haire, and more wealth then faults.
La. Stop there: Ile have her: she was mine, and not mine twice, or thrice in that Article: rehearse that once more.
Sp. Item, she hath more haire then wit.
La. More haire then wit: it may be ile prove it: The cover of the salt, hides the salt, and therefore it is more then the salt; the haire that covers the wit, is more then the wit: for the greater hides the lesse: What's next?

Sp. And more faults then haire.
La. That's monstrous: oh that that were out.
Sp. And more wealth then faults.
La. Why that word makes the faults gracious Well, ile have her: and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible.
Sp. What then?
La. Why then, will I tell thee, that thy Master staves for thee at the North-gate.
Sp. For me?
La. For thee? I; who art thou? he hath staid for a better man then thee.
Sp. And must I goe to him?
La. Thou must run to him; for thou hast staid so long that going will scarce serve the turne.
Sp. Why didst not tell me sooner? 'pox of your love Letters.
La. Now will he be swing'd for reading my Letter; An unmannerly slave, that will thrust himselfe into secrets: Ile after, to rejoyce in the boyes correction. Exiunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Duke, Thurio, Proteus.

Du. Sir Thurio, feare not, but that she will love you Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.
Th. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most, Forsworne my company, and rail'd at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her.
Du. This weake impression of love, is as a figure Trenched in ice, which with an houres heate Dissolves to water, and doth loose his forme. A little time will melt her frozen thoughts; And worthlesse Valentine shall be forgot. How now Sir Proteus, is your countymari (According to our Proclamation) gon?
Pro. Gon, my good Lord.
Du. My daughter takes his going heavily?
Pro. A little time (my Lord) will kill that griefe.
Du. So I beleve: but Thurio thinkes not so:
Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee, (For thou hast shovne some signe of good desert) Makes me the better to confer with thee.
Pro. Longer then I prove royall to your Grace, Let me not live, to looke upon you Grace.
Du. Thou know'st how willingly, I would effect The match betweene sir Thurio, and my daughter?
Pro. I doe my Lord.
Du. And also I doe thinke, thou art not ignorant How she opposes her against my will?
Pro. She did my Lord, when Valentine was here.
Du. I, and perversly, she perseveres so: What might we doe to make the girle forget The Love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio?
Pro. The best way is to slander Valentine, With falshehood, cowardize, and poore descent: Three things, that women highly hold in hate.
Du. I, but she'll thinke, that it is spoke in hate.
Pro. I, if his enemy deliver it.
 Therefore it must with circumstance be spoken By one, whom she esteemes as his friend.
Du. Then you must undertake to slander him.

Pro.

Pro. And that (my Lord) I shall be loath to doe.
'Tis an ill office for a Gentleman,
Especially against his very friend.

Du. Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him;
Therefore the office is indifferent,
Being intreated to it by your friend.

Pro. You have prevail'd (my Lord) if I can doe it
By ought that I can speake in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him:
But say this weede her love from Valentine,
It followes not that she will love sir Thurio.

Th. Therefore as you unwind her love from him;
Least it should ravell, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottome it on me:
Which must be done, by praying me as much
As you, in worth dispraye, sir Valentine.

Du. And Protheus, we dare trust you in this kinde,
Because we know (on Valentines report)
You are already loves firme votary,
And cannot soone revolt, and change your minde.
Upon this warrant, shall you have access,
Where you, with Silvia may conferre at large.
For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholly,
And (for your friends sake) will be glad of you;
Where you may temper her, by your perswasion,
To hate yong Valentine, and love my friend.

Pro. As much as I can doe, I will effect:
But you sir Thurio, are not sharpe enough:
You must lay Lime, to tangle her desires
By wailefull Sonnets, whose composed Rimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vowes.

Du. I, much is the force of heaven-bred Poesie.

Pro. Say that upon the altar of her beauty
You sacrifice your teares, your sighes, your heart:
Write till your inke be dry; and with your teares
Moist it againe: and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity:
For Orpheus Lute, was strung with Poets sinewes,
Whose golden touch could soften Steele and stones;
Make Tygers tame, and huge Leviathans
Forake unfounded deepes, and dance on Sands.
After your dire-lamenting Elegies,
Visit by night your Ladies chamber-window
With some sweet Confort; To their Instruments
Tune a deploring dumpe: the nights dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance:
This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Du. This discipline, shoves thou hast bin in love.

Th. And thy advice, this night, ile put in practise:
Therefore, sweet Protheus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the City presently
To fort some gentlemen, well skil'd in Musique.
I have a Sonnet, that will serve the turne
To give the on-set to thy good advice.

Du. About it Gentlemen.

Pro. We'll wait upon your Grace, till after Supper,
And afterward determine our proceedings.

Du. Even now about it, I will pardon you. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Valentine, Speed, and certaine Out-Laws.

1. Out-l. Fellowes, stand fast: I see a passenger.

2. Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

3. Out. Stand fir, and throw us that you have about 'ye.
If not: we'll make you sit, and rise you:

Sp. Sir we are undone; these are the Villaines
That all the Travellers doe feare so much.

Val. My friends.

1. Out. That's not so, sir: we are your enemies.

2. Out. Peace: we'll heare him.

3. Out. I by my beard will we: for he is a proper man.

Val. Then know that I have little to lose;

A man I am, cross'd with adversitie:
My riches, are these poore habiliments,
Of which, if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.

2. Out. Whither travell you?

Val. To Verona.

1. Out. Whence came you?

Val. From Millaine.

3. Out. Have you long sojourn'd there? (staid,

Val. Some sixteene moneths, and longer might have
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

1. Out. What, were you banish'd thence?

Val. I was.

2. Out. For what offence?

Val. For that which now torments me to rehearse;
I kil'd a man, whose death I much repent,
But yet I slew him manfully in fight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery.

1. Out. Why nere repent it, if it were done so;
But were you banisht for so small a fault?

Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doome.

2. Out. Have you the Tongues?

Val. My youthfull travaile, therein made me happy,
Or else I often had bene miserable.

3. Out. By the bare scalpe of *Robin hood*s fat Fryer,
This fellow were a King, for our wilde faction.

1. Out. We'll have him: Sirs, a word.

Sp. Master, be one of them:
It's an honorable kinde of thevery.

Val. Peace villaine.

2. Out. Tell us this: have you any things to take to?

Val. Nothing but my fortune.

3. Out. Know then, that some of us are Gentlemen,
Such as the furie of ungovern'd youth
Thrust from the company of awfull men.
My selfe was from Verona banished,
For practising to steale away a Lady,
And heire and Neece, allide unto the Duke.

2. Out. And I from Manina, for a gentleman,
Who, in my moode, I stab'd unto the heart.

1. Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these.
But to the purpose: for we cite our faults,
That they may hold excus'd our lawlesse lives;
And partly seeing you are beautifide
With goodly shape; and by your owne report,
A Linguist, and a man of such perfection,
As we doe in our quality much want.

2. Out. Indeepe because you are a banish'd man,
Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you:
Are you content to be our Generall?
To make a vertue of necessity,
And live as we doe in the wildernesse?

3. Out. What saist thou? wilt thou be of our confort?
Say I, and be the captaine of us all:
We'll doe thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,
Love thee as our Commander, and our King.

1. Out.

1. Oni. But if thou scorne our curtesie, thou dyest.
 2. Oni. Thou shalt not live, to brag what we have of-
Val. I take your offer, and will live with you, (fer'd.
 Provided that you do no outrages
 On silly women, or poore passengers.
 3. Oni. No, we detest such vile base practises.
 Come, goe with us, we'll bring thee to our Crewes;
 And shew thee all the Treasure we have got;
 Which, with our selves, all rest at thy dispose. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Protheus, Thurio, Julia, Host, Musitian, Silvia.

Pro. Already have I bin false to Valentine,
 And now I must be as unjust to Thurio,
 Vnder the colour of commending him,
 I have access to my owne love to prefer.
 But Silvia is too faire, too true, too holy,
 To be corrupted with my worthless gifts;
 When I protest true loyalty to her,
 She twits me with my faithhood to my friend;
 When to her beauty I commend my vowes,
 She bids me thinke how I have bin forsworne
 In breaking faith with Julia, whom I lov'd;
 And notwithstanding all her todaine quips,
 The least whereof would quell a lovers hope:
 Yet (Spaniel-like) the more she spurnes my love,
 The more it growes, and fawneth on her still;
 But here comes Thurio; now must we to her window,
 And give some evening Musique to her care.
Th. How now, sir Protheus, are you crept before us?
Pro. I gentle Thurio, for you know that love
 Will creepe in service, where it cannot goe.
Th. I, but I hope, Sir, that you love not here.
Pro. Sir, but I doe: or else I would be hence.
Th. Whom, Silvia?
Pro. I, Silvia, for your sake.
Th. I thanke you for your owne: Now Gentlemen
 Let's turne: and too it lustily a while.
Ho. Now, my young guest; me thinks you'r allycholly;
 I pray you what is it?
Im. Marry (mine Host) because I cannot be merry.
Ho. Come, wee'll have you merry: ile bring you where you shall heare Musique, and see the Gentleman that you ask'd for.
Im. But shall I heare him speake.
Ho. I that you shall.
Im. That will be Musique.
Ho. Harke, harke.
Im. Is he among these?
Ho. I: but peace, let's heare'm.

Song. Who is Silvia? what is she?
That all our Swaines commend her?
Holy, faire, and wise is she,
The heaven such grace did lend her,
that she might admired be.
Is she kinde as she is faire?
For beautie lives with kindnesse,
Love doth to her eyes repaire,
To helpe him of his blindnesse:

And being help'd, inhabits there.
Then to Silvia, let us sing;
That Silvia is excellant;
She excels each mortall thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling.
To her let us Garlands bring.

Ho. How now? are you sadder then you were before;
 How doe you, man? the Musicke likes you not.
Im. You mistake: the Musitian likes me not.
Ho. Why, my pretty youth?
Im. He plaies false (rather.)
Ho. How, out of tune on the strings?
Im. Not so: but yet
 So false that he grieves my very heart-strings.
Ho. You have a quick ear. (heart.
Im. I, I would I were deafe: it makes me have a slow
Ho. I perceive you delight not in Musicke.
Im. Not a whit; when it jars so.
Ho. Harke what fine change is in the Musicke:
Im. I: that change is the spight.
Ho. You would have them alwaies play but one thing.
Im. I would alwayes have one play but one thing.
 But Host, doth this Sir Protheus, that we talke on,
 Often resort unto this Gentlewoman?
Ho. I tell you what Lance his man told me,
 He lov'd her out of all nicke.
Im. Where is Lance?
Ho. Gone to seeke his dog, which to morrow, by his Masters command, hee must carry for a present to his Lady.
Im. Peace, stand aside, the company parts.
Pro. Sir Thurio, feare not I will so pleade,
 That you shall say, my cunning drift excels.
Th. Where meete we?
Pro. At Saint Gregorius well.
Th. Farewell.
Pro. Madam: good ev'n to your Ladiship.
Sil. I thanke you for your Musicke (Gentlemen)
 Who is that that spake?
Pro. One (Lady) if you knew his pure hearts truth,
 You would quickly learne to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Protheus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Protheus (gentle Lady) and your Servant.
Sil. What's your will?
Pro. That I may compasse yours.
Sil. You have your wish: my will is ever this,
 That presently you hie you home to bed:
 Thou subtil, perjur'd, false, disloyall man:
 Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitelesse,
 To be seduced by thy flattery,
 That has't deceiv'd so many with thy vowes?
 Returne, returne, and make thy love amends:
 For me (by this pale queene of night I sweare)
 I am so farre from granting thy request,
 That I despise thee, for thy wrongfull suite;
 And by and by intend to chide my selfe,
 Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant (sweet love) that I did love a Lady,
 But she is dead.
Im. 'Twere false, if I should speake it;
 For I am sure she is not buried.
Sil. Say that she be: yet Valentine thy friend
 Survives; to whom (thy selfe art witnesse)
 I am betroth'd; and art thou not asham'd
 To wrong him, with thy importunacy?

Pro.

Pro. I likewise heare that Valentine is dead.

Sil. And so suppose am I; for in his grave
Assure thy selfe, my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet Lady, let me rake it from the earth.

Sil. Goe to thy Ladies grave and call hers thence,
Or at the least, in hers, sepulcher thine.

Int. He heard not that.

Pro. Madam: if your heart be so obdurate:
Vouchsafe me yet your Picture for my love,
The Picture that is hanging in your chamber:
To that Ile speake, to that Ile sigh and weepe:
For since the substance of your perfect selfe
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow, will I make true love.

Int. If 'twere a substance you would sure deceive it,
And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loath to be your Idoll Sir;
But, since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadowes, and adore false shapcs,
Send to me in the morning, and ile send it:
And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have ore-night
That wait for execution in the morne.

Int. Host, will you goe?

Ho. By my hallidome, I was fast asleepe.

Int. Pray you where lies Sir Prothens?

Ho. Marry, at my house:

Trust me, I thinke 'tis almost day.

Int. Not so: but it hath bin the longest night
That ere I watch'd, and the most heaviest.

Exeunt.

Vpon whose faith and honor, I repose.

Vrge not my fathers anger (Eglamore)

But thinke upon my grieffe (a Ladies grieffe)

And on the iustice of my flying hence,

To keepe me from a most unholy match,

Which heaven and fortune still rewards with plagues.

I doe desire thee, even from a heart

As full of sorrowes, as the Sea of sands;

To beare me company and goe with me:

If not, to hide what I have sayd to thee,

That I may venture to depart alone.

Eg. Madam, I pittie much your grievances,
Which, since I know they vertuouly are plac'd,

I give consent to goe along with you,

Wreaking a little what betideth me,

As much, I wish all good befortune you.

When will you goe?

Sil. This evening comming.

Eg. Where shall I meeete you?

Sil. At Frier Patrickes Cell,
Where I intend holy confession.

Eg. I will not faile your Ladship:

Good morrow (gentle Lady.)

Sil. Good morrow, kinde Sir Eglamore.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Launce, Prothens, Julia, Silvia.

Laun. When a mans servant shall play the Curre with him (looke you) it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy: one that I sav'd from drowning, when three or foure of his blinde brothers and sisters went to it: I have taught him (even as one would say precisely, thus I would teach a dog) I was sent to deliver him, as a present to Miltris Silvia, from my Master; and I came no sooner into the dyning-chamber, but he steps me to her Trencher, and steals her Capons-leg: O, 'tis a foule thing, when a Cur cannot keepe himselfe in all companies: I would have (as one should say) one that takes upon him to be a dog indeede, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit then he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I thinke verily he had bin hang'd for't: sure as I live he had suffer'd for't: you shall judge: He thrusts me himselfe into the company of three or foure gentleman-like-doggs, under the Dukes table: he had not bin there (blesse the marke) a pissing while, but all the chamber smelt him: out with the dog (saies one) what cur is that (saies another) whip him out (saies the third) hang him up (saies the Duke.) I having bin acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogges: friend (quoth I) you meane to whip the dog: I marry doe I (quoth he) you doe him the more wrong (quoth I) 'twas I did the thing you wot of: he makes me no more adoe, but whips me out of the chamber: how many Masters would doe this for his servant? nay, ile be sworne I have sat in the stockes for puddings he hath stolne, otherwise he had bin executed: I have stood on the Pillorie for Geese he hath kil'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for't: thou think'st not of this now: nay, I remember the trickes you serv'd me, when I tooke my leave of Madam Silvia: did

Scena Tertia.

Enter Eglamore, Silvia.

Eg. This is the houre that Madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her minde:
Ther's some great matter she'd employ me in:
Madam, Madam.

Sil. Who calls?

Eg. Your servant, and your friend;
One that attends your Ladships command.

Sil. Sir Eglamore, a thousand times good morrow.

Eg. As many (worthy Lady) to your selfe:
According to your Ladships impose,
I am thus early come, to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. Oh Eglamore, thou art a Gentleman:
Thinke not I flatter (for I sweare I doe not)
Valiant, wise, remorse-full, well accomplish'd.
Thou art not ignorant what deere good will
I beare unto the banish'd Valentine:
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vaine Thurio (whom my very soule abhor'd)
Thy selfe hast lov'd, and I have heard thee say
No grieffe did come so neere thy heart,
As when thy Lady, and thy true-love di'de,
Vpon whose Grave thou vow'dst pure chastitie:
Sir Eglamore: I would to Valentine
To Adamina, where I heare, he makes aboard;
And for the wayes are dangerous to passe,
I doe desire thy worthy company, not I bid thee still marke me, and doe as I do; when didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a Gentlewomans farthingale? didst thou ever see me doe such a trick?

Pro. Sebastian is thy name: I like thee well, And will imploy thee in some service presently.

In. In what you please, ile doe Sir what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt.

How now you whor-son pezant, Where have you bin these two dayes loytering?

La. Mary Sir, I carried Mistris Silvia the dogge you bade me.

Pro. And what sayes she to my little Jewell?

La. Marry she saies your dog was a cur, and tells you currissh thankes is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she receiv'd my dog?

La. No indeede did she not:

Here have I brought him backe againe.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?

La. I Sir, the other Squirrill was stolne from me By the hangmans boy in the market place, And then I offer'd her mine owne, who is a dog As big as ten of yours, & therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Goe, get thee hence, and finde my dog againe, Or nere returne againe into my sight.

Away, I say: stayest thou to vex me here; A slave, that still an end, turnes me to shame. Exit.

Sebastian, I have entertained thee, Partly that I have need of such a youth, That can with some discretion do my businesse:

For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish Lowt; But chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour,

Which (if my Augury deceive me not) Witnesse good bringing up, fortune, and truth:

Therefore know thou, for this I entertaine thee. Go presently and take this Ring with thee,

Deliver it to Madam Silvia;

She lov'd me well, deliver'd it to me.

In. It seemes you lov'd not her, to leave her token: She is dead belike?

Pro. Not so: I thinke she lives.

In. Alas.

Pro. Why do'st thou cry alas?

In. I cannot choose but pittie her.

Pro. Wherefore should'st thou pittie her?

In. Because, me thinkes that she lov'd you as well As you doe love your Lady Silvia:

She dreames on him, that has forgot her love;

You deate on her, that cares not for your love.

'Tis pittie Love should be so contrary:

And thinking on it, makes me cry alas.

Pro. Well: give her that Ring, and therewithall

This Letter: that's her chamber: Tell my Lady,

I claime the promise for her heavenly Picture:

Your message done, hye home unto my chamber,

Where thou shalt finde me sad, and solitarie. Exit.

In. How many women would doe such a message?

Alas poore Protheus, thou hast entertain'd

A Foxe, to be the Shepheard of thy Lambs;

Alas, poore foole, why doe I pittie him?

That with his very heart despiseth me?

Because he loves her, he despiseth me,

Because I love him, I must pittie him.

This Ring I gave him, when he parted from me,

To binde him to remember my good will:

And now am I (unhappy Messenger)

To plead for that, which I would not obtaine;

To carry that, which I would have refus'd;

To praise his faith which I would have disprais'd.

I am my Maisters true confirmed love,

But cannot be true servant to my Maister,

Vnlesse I prove false traitor to my selfe.

Yet will I wooe for him, but yet so coldly; Enter

As (heaven it knows) I would not have him speed. Silvia.

Gentlewoman, good day: I pray you be my meane

To bring me where to speake with Madam Silvia.

Sil. What would you with her, if that I be she?

In. If you be she, I doe intreat your patience

To heare me speake the message I am sent on.

Sil. From whom?

In. From my Master, Sir Protheus, Madam.

Sil. Oh: he sends you for a Picture?

In. I, Madam.

Sil. Viola, bring my Picture there,

Goe, give your Master this: tell him from me,

One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget,

Would better fit his Chamber, then this Shadow.

In. Madam, please you peruse this Letter;

Pardon me (Madam) I have unadvis'd

Deliver'd you a paper that I should not;

This is the Letter to your Ladiship.

Sil. I pray thee let me looke on that againe:

In. It may not be: good Madam pardon me.

Sil. There, hold:

I will not looke upon your Masters lines:

I know they are stuf't with protestations,

And full of new-found oathes, which he will breake

As easie as I do teare his paper.

In. Madam, he sends your Ladiship this Ring.

Si. The more shame for him, that he sends it me;

For I have heard him say a thousand times,

His Julia gave it him, at his departure:

Though his false finger have prophan'd the Ring,

Mine shall not doe his Julia so much wrong.

In. She thankes you.

Si. What sai'st thou?

In. I thanke you Madam, that you tender her:

Poore Gentlewoman, my Master wrongs her much.

Si. Do'st thou know her?

In. Almost as well as I doe know my selfe.

To thinke upon her woes, I do protest

That I have wept a hundred severall times.

Si. Belike she thinks that Protheus hath forsook her?

In. I thinke she doth: and that's her cause of sorrow.

Si. Is she not passing faire?

In. She hath bin fairer (Madam) then she is,

When she did thinke my Master lov'd her well;

She, in my judgement, was as faire as you.

But since she did neglect her looking glasse,

And threw her Sun-expelling Masque away,

The ayre hath starv'd the roses in her cheekes;

And pinch'd the lilly-tincture of her face,

That now she is become as blacke as I.

Sil. How tall was she?

In. About my stature: for at Pentecost,

When all our Pageants of delight were plaid,

Our youth got me to play the womans part,

And I was trim'd in Madam Julias gowne,

Which served me as fit, by all mens judgements,

As if the garment had bin made for me:

Therefore I know she is about my height;

And at that time I made her weepe a good,

For I did play a lamentable part.

(Madam) 'twas Ariadne, passioning
For Theseus periury, and unjust flight;
Which I so lively acted with my teares:
That my poore Mistris moved therewithall,
Wept bitterly: and would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow.

Sil. She is beholding to thee (gentle youth)
Alas, (poore Lady) desolate, and left;
I weepe my selfe to thinke upon thy words:
Here youth: there is a purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet Mistris sake, because thou lov'st her.
Farewell. Exit.

Int. And she shall thanke you for't, if ere you know
A vertuous gentlewoman, milde, and beautifull. (her.)
I hope my Maisters suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my Mistris love so much.
Alas, how love can trifle with it selfe:
Here is her Picture: let me see, I thinke
If I had such a Tyre, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the Painter flatter'd her a little,
Vnlesse I flatter with my selfe too much.
Her haire is Aburne, mine is perfect Yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
He get me such a colour'd Perriwig:
Her eyes are grey as grasse, and so are mine:
I, but her fore-head's low, and mine's as high:
What should it be that he respects in her,
But I can make respectiue in my selfe,
If this fond love, were not a blinded god?
Come shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For tis thy rivall: O thou sencelesse forme.
Thou shalt be worship'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And were there sence in his Idolatry,
My substance should be statue in thy stead.
He use thee kindly, for thy mistris sake
That us'd me so: or else by love, I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my Maister out of love with thee. Exit.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Eglamour, Silvia.

Egl. The Sun begins to guild the westerne skie,
And now it is about the very houre
That Silvia, at Fryer Patrickes Cell should meet me,
She will not faile; for Lovers breake not houres,
Vnlesse it be to come before their time,
So much they spur their expedition.
See where she comes: Lady a happy evening.

Sil. Amen, Amen: goe on (good Eglamour)
Out at the Posterne by the Abbey wall;
I feare I am attended by some Spies.

Egl. Feare not: the Forrest is not three leagues off,
If we recover that, we are sure enough. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Thurio, Proteus, Julia, Duke.

Th. Sir Proteus, what sayes Silvia to my suit?

Pro. Oh Sir, I finde her milder then she was,
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Th. What? that my leg is too long?

Pro. No, that it is too little. (der.)

Th. He weare a Boote, to make it somewhat roun-

Pro. But love will not be spurd to what it loathes.

Th. What sayes she to my face?

Pro. She saies it is a faire one.

Th. Nay then the wanton lyes: my face is blacke.

Pro. But Pearles are faire; and the old saying is,
Blacke men are Pearles, in beauteous Ladies eyes.

Th. 'Tis true, such Pearles as put out Ladies eyes.
For I had rather winke, then looke on them.

Th. How likes she my discourse?

Pro. Ill, when you talke of war.

Th. But well, when I discourse of love and peace.

Int. But better indeed, when you hold you peace.

Th. What sayes she to my valour?

Pro. Oh Sir, she makes no doubt of that.

Int. She needs not, when she knowes it cowardize.

Th. What sayes she to my birth?

Pro. That you are well deriv'd.

Int. True: from a Gentleman to a foole.

Th. Considers she my possessions?

Pro. Oh I: and pitties them.

Th. Wherefore?

Int. That such an Ass should owe them.

Pro. That they are out by Lease.

Int. Here comes the Duke.

Du. How now sir Proteus; how now Thurio?
Which of you say saw Sir Eglamour of late?

Th. Not I.

Pro. Nor I.

Du. Saw you my daughter?

Pro. Neyther.

Du. Why then

She's fled unto the pezzant, Valentine;

And Eglamour is in her companie:

'Tis true: for Frier Laurence met them both

As he, in pennance wander'd through the Forrest:

Him he knew well: and gueld that it was she,

But being mask'd, he was not sure of it.

Besides she did intend Confession

At Patrickes Cell this even, and there she was not.

These likelihoods confirme her flight from hence;

Therefore I pray you stand not to discourse,

But mount you presently, and meeete with me

Vpon the rising of the Mountaine foote

That leads toward Mantua, whither they are fled:

Dispatch (sweet Gentlemen) and follow me.

Th. Why this it is, to be a peevish Girle,

That flies her fortune where it followes her:

He after; more to be reveng'd on Eglamour,

Then for the love of reck-lesse Silvia.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love

Then hate of Eglamour that goes with her.

Int. And I will follow, more to crosse that love

Then hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Silvia, Out-laves.

Int. Out. Come, come be patient:

We must bring you to our Captaine.

Sil. A thousand more mischances then this one
Have learn'd me how to brooke this patiently.

2 Out. Come, bring her away.

1 Out. Where is the Gentleman that was with her.

3 Out. Being nimble footed, he hath out-run us.
But Moses and Valerius follow him :

Goe thou with her to the West end of the Wood,
There is our Captaine : wee'll follow him thats fled,
The thicket is beset, he cannot scape.

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our Captaines Cave.
Feare not : he beares an honourable mind,
And will not vse a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine : this I endure for thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentine, Proteus, Silvia, Julia, Duke, Thurio, Out-laws.

Val. How use doth breed a habite in a man ?
This shadowy Desart, unfrequented woods,
I better brooke then flourishing peopled townes :
Here can I sit alone, un-seene of any,
And to the Nightingales complaining Notes ;
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O thou that dost inhabit in my brest,
Leave not the Mansion so long Tenantlesse,
Lest growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was,
Repaire me with thy presence, Silvia :
Thou Gentle Nymph, cherish thy forlorne Swaine.
What hallowing, and what stirre is this to day ?
These are my mates, that make their wils their Law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chace ;
They love me well, yet I have much to doe
To keepe them from uncivill outrages.
Withdraw thee Valentine : who's this comes here ?

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you,
(Though you respect not ought your servant doth)
To hazzard life, and reskew you from him,
That would have forc'd your honour and your love,
Vouchsafe me for my meed, but one faire looke :
(A smaller boone than this, I cannot beg,
And lesse than this, I am sure you cannot give.)

Val. How like a dreame is this ? I see and heare :
Love, lend me patience to forbear a while.

Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am.

Pro. Vnhappy were you (Madam) ere I came :
But by my comming, I have made you happy.

Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.

Ju. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.

Sil. Had I beene seized by a hungry Lion,
I would have beene a breakfast to the Beast,
Rather than have false Proteus reskew me :
O heaven be judge how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soule,
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I doe detest false perjur'd Proteus :
Therefore be gone, solicit me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergoe for one calme looke :
Oh, tis the curse in Love, and still approv'd,

When women cannot love, where they're below'd.

Sil. When Proteus cannot love, where he's below'd :

Reade over Julia's heart, (thy first best Love)
For whose deare sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oathes ; and all those oathes,
Descended into perjury to deceive me,
Thou hast no faith left now, unlesse thou'dst two,
And that's farre worse than none : better have none
Then plurall faith, which is too much by one :
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend.

Pro. In love,
Who respects friend ?

Sil. All men but Proteus.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder forme ;
Ile move you like a Souldier, at armes end,
And love you 'gainst the nature of love : force ye.

Sil. Oh heaven.

Pro. Ile force thee yeeld to my desire.

Val. Ruffian, let goe that rude uncivill touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion.

Pro. Valentine !

Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love.

For such is a friend now : Thou treacherous man,
Thou hast beguil'd my hopes ; nought but mine eye
Could have perswaded me : now I dare not say
I have one friend alive ; thou wouldst disprove me :
Who should be trusted now, when ones right hand
Is perjured to the bosome ? Proteus

I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake :
The private wound is deepest : oh time, most accurst :
'Mongst all foes, that a friend should be the worst ?

Pro. My shame and guilt confounds me :
Forgive me Valentine : if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient Ransome for offence,
I tender't heere : I doe as truly suffer,
As ere I did commit.

Val. Then I am paid :
And once againe, I doe receive thee honest ;
Who by Repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth ; for these are pleas'd :
By Penitence th'Eternals wrath's appeas'd :
And that my love may appeare plaine and free,
All that was mine, in Silvia, I give thee.

Ju. Oh me unhappy.

Pro. Looke to the Boy.

Val. Why, Boy ?
Why Wag : how now ? what's the matter ? looke up : speak.

Ju. O good sir, my Master charg'd me to deliver a Ring to Madam Silvia : which (out of my neglect) was never

Pro. Where is that Ring ? Boy ? (done.)

Ju. Heere 'tis : this is it.

Pro. How ? let me see.

Why this is the Ring I gave to Julia.

Ju. Oh, cry you mercy sir, I have mistooke :

This is the Ring you sent to Silvia.

Pro. But how cam'st thou by this Ring ? at my depart
I gave this unto Julia.

Ju. And Julia her selfe did give it me,

And Julia her selfe hath brought it hither.

Pro. How ? Julia ?

Ju. Behold her that gave ayme to all thy oathes,
And entertain'd 'em deeply in her heart :

How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the roote ?

Oh Proteus, let this habit make thee blush.

D

Be thou asham'd that I have tooke upon me,
Such an immodest rayment ; if shame live
In a disguise of love?

It is the lesser blot modesty findes,
Women to change their shapes, than men their mindes.

Pro. Than men their minds? tis true, oh heauen, were Man but constant, he were perfect ; that one errour
Fills him with faults: makes him run through all th'sins;
Inconstancy fals off ere it begins:

What is in Silvia's face, but I may spie
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye?

Val. Come, come : a hand from either :
Let me be blest to make this happy close :
Twere pittie two such friends should belong foes:

Pro. Beare witnesse (heaven) I have my wish for ever.

Jul. And I mine.

Out-l. A prize, a prize, a prize.

Val. Forbeare, forbeare I say : It is my Lord the Duke.
Your Grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd,
Banished Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine?

Thu. Yonder is Silvia : and Silvia's mine.

Val. Thurio give backe; or else imbrace thy death :
Come not within the measure of my wrath :
Doe not name Silvia thine : if once againe,
Verona shall not hold thee : here she itands,
Take but possession of her, with a Touch :
I dare thee, but to breathe vpon my Love.

Thur. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I :
I hold him but a foole that will endanger
His body, for a Girle that loves him not :
I claime her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou
To make such meanes for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.

Now, by the honour of my Ancestry,
I doe applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And thinke thee worthy of an Empreffe love :
Know then, I here forget all former gricfes,
Cancell all grudge, repeale thee home againe,
Plead a new state in thy arrival'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe : Sir Valentine,
Thou art a Gentleman, and well deriv'd,
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserv'd her.

Val. I thanke your Grace, the gift hath made me hap-
I now beseech you (for your Daughters sake) (py :
To grant one Boone that I shall aske of you.

Duke. I grant it (for thine owne) whatere it be.

Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withall,
Are men endu'd with worthy qualities :
Forgive them what they have committed here
And let them be recall'd from their exile :
They are reform'd, civill, full of good,
And fit for great imployment (worthy Lord.)

Duke. Thou hast prevail'd, I pardon them and thee :
Dispose of them, as thou knowst their deserts.
Come, let us goe, we will include all jarres,
With Triumphes, Mirth, and all solemnity.

Val. And as we walke along, I dare be bold
With our discourse, to make your Grace to smile.
What thinke you of this Page (my Lord?)

Duke. I thinke the Boy hath grace in him, he blushes.

Val. I warrant you (my Lord) more grace then Boy.

Duke. What meane you by that saying?

Val. Please you, Ile tell you as we passe along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd :
Come Protheus, tis your pennance but to heare
The story of your Loves discovered.
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One feast, one house, one mutuall happinesse. Exeunt.

THE Merry VVives of VVindsor.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter Iustice Shallow, Slender, Sir Hugh Evans, Master Page, Falstaffe, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, Anne Page, Mistress Ford, Mistress Page, Simple, Shallow.

Sir Hugh, perswade me not : I will make a Star-Chamber matter of it, if hee were twenty Sir Iohn Falstaffe, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, Esquire. (Coram.

Slen. In the County of Glocester, Iustice of Peace and Shal. I (Cofen Slender) and Cust-alorum.

Slen. I, and Rato-lorum too ; and a Gentleman borne (Master Parson) who writes himselfe Armigero, in any Bill, Warrant, Quittance, or Obligation, Armigero.

Shal. I that I doe, and have done any time these three hundred yeeres.

Slen. All his successors (gone before him) hath don't : and all his Ancestors (that come after him) may : they may give the dozen white Luce in their Coat.

Shal. It is an old Coat.

Evans. The dozen white Lowfes doe become an old Coat well : it agrees well passant : It is a familiar beast to man, and signifies Love.

Shal. The Luce is the fresh-fish, the salt-fish, is an old Coat.

Slen. I may quarter (Coz.)

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marrying indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Evans. Yes per-lady : if he has a quarter of your Coat, there is but three skirts for your selfe, in my simple conjectures ; but that is all one : if Sir Iohn Falstaffe have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the Church and will be glad to doe my benevolence, to make attonements and compremises betweene you.

Shal. The Councell shall heare it, it is a Riot.

Evans. It is not meet the Councell heare of a Ryot : there is no feare of Got in a Ryot : The Councell (looke you) shall desire to heare the feare of Got, and not to heare a Riot : take you viza-ments in that.

Shal. Ha ; o' my life, if I were yong againe, the sword should end it.

Evans. It is petter that friends is the sword, and end it : and there is also another device in my praine, which peradventure prings good discretions with it. There is Anne-Page, which is daughter to Master Thomas Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slen. Mistress Anne Page ? she has browne haire, and speakes like a woman.

Evans. It is that ferry perfon for all the orld, as just as you will desire, and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, & silver, is her Grand-fire upon his deaths-bed, (Got deliver to a joyfull Resurrections) give, when she is able to overtake seventene yeeres old. It were a good motion, if we leave our pribbles and prabbles, and desire a marriage betweene Master Abraham, and Mistress Anne Page.

Slen. Did her Grand-fire leave her seven hundred pound ?

Evans. I, and her father is make her a petter penny.

Slen. I know the yong Gentlewoman, shee has good gifts.

Evans. Seven hundred pounds, and possibilitie is goot gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest Mr. Page : is Falstaffe there ?

Evans. Shal I tell you a lye ? I doe despise a lyer, as I doe despise one that is false, or as I despise one that is not true : the Knight Sir Iohn is there, and I beseech you bee ruled by your well-willers : I will peat the doore for Mr. Page. What hoa ? Got blesse your house here.

Mr. Page. Who's there ?

Evans. Here is got's plesing and your friend, and Iustice Shallow, and here's yong Master Slender : that peradventures shall tell you another tale, it matters grow to your likings.

Mr. Page. I am glad to see your Worships well : I thanke you for my Venison, Master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you : much good doe it your good heart : I wish'd your Venison better, it was ill kill'd : how doth good mistress Page ? and I thank you alwayes with my heart, la : with my heart.

Mr. Page. Sir, I thanke you.

Shal. Sir, I thanke you : by yea and no I doe.

Mr. Page. I am glad to see you good Master Slender.

Slen. How do's your fallow Greyhound, Sir, I heard say he was out-run on Cot-sale.

Mr. Pa. It could not be judg'd sir.

Slen. You'll not confesse, you'll not confesse.

Shal. That he will not, 'tis your fault, 'tis your fault : 'tis a good dogge.

Mr. Page. A Cur sir.

Shal. Sir, hee's a good Dog, and a faire Dog, can there be more said ? he is good, and faire. Is Sir Iohn Falstaffe here ?

Mr. Page. Sir, he is within : and I would I could doe a good office betweene you.

Evans. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speake.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me (Master Page.)

Mr. Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confesse it.

Shal. If it be confessed, it is not redressed; is not that so (M. Page)? he hath wrong'd me, indeed he hath, at a word he hath: beleeve me, Robert Shallow Esquire, faith he is wrong'd.

Ma. Pa. Here comes Sir John.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll complaine of mee to the King?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, kill'd my Deere, and broke open my Lodge.

Fal. But not kiss'd your Keepers Daughter?

Shal. Tut a pin: this shall be answer'd.

Fal. I will answer it strait, I have done all this: That is now answer'd.

Shal. The Councell shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if it were knowne in councell: you'll be laugh'd at.

Evans. Panca verba; (Sir John) good worts.

Fal. Good worts? good Cabidge; Slender, I broke your head: what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry sir, I have matter in my head against you, and against your Cony-catching Rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Bar. You Banbury Cheese.

Slen. I, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephistophilus?

Slen. I, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say; panca, panca: Slice, that's my humor.

Slen. Where's Simple my man? can you tell, Cofen?

Evans. Peace I pray you: now let us understand; there is three Vmpires in this matter, as I understand; that is, Master Page (fidelicet Master Page) and there is my selfe, (fidelicet my selfe) and the three party is (lastly, and finally) mine Host of the Gater.

M. Pa. We three to heare it, and end it between them.

Evans. Ferry goo't, I will make a priefe of it in my Note-booke, and we will afterwards orke upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol.

Pist. He heares with cares.

Evans. The Tevill and his Tam, what phrase is this, he heares with care? why it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you picke M. Slenders purse?

Slen. I, by these gloves did hee, or I would I might never come in mine owne great chamber againe else, of feaven groates in Mill-sixpences, and two Edward Shovel-boords, that cost me two shilling and twopence a peece, of Tead Miller: by these gloues.

Fal. Is this true Pistol?

Evans. No, it is false, if it is a pickepurse.

Pist. Ha, thou Mountaine Forreiner: Sir John, and Master mine, I combat challenge of this Latine Bilboe: word of denyall in thy labras here; word of deniall, froth, and scum thou lyest.

Slen. By these gloves, then 'twas he.

Nym. Be avis'd sir, and passe good humours: I will say marry trap with you, if you runne the nut-hookes' humour on me, that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this Hat, then he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunke, yet I am not altogether an Assle:

Fal. What say you Scarlet and John?

Bar. Why sir (for my part) I say the Gentleman had drunke himselfe out of his five sentences.

Evans. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is.

Bar. And being sap, sir, was (as they say) casheer'd: and so conclusions past the Car-eires.

Slen. I, you spake in Latine then to: but 'tis no matter; Ile nere be drunke whilst I live againe, but in honest, civill, godly company for this tricke: if I be drunke, Ile be drunke with those that have the feare of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Evans. So got-udge me, that is a vertuous mind.

Fal. You heare all these matters deny'd, Gentlemen you heare it.

M. Page. Nay daughter, carry the Wine in, wee'll drinke within.

Slen. Oh heaven: This is Mistris Anne Page.

M. Page. How now Mistris Ford?

Fal. Mistris Ford, by my troth you are very well met: by your leave good Mistris.

M. Page. Wife, bid these Gentlemen welcome: come, we have a hot Venison Pasty to dinner; Come gentlemen, I hope we shall drinke downe all unkindnesse.

Slen. I hadd rather then forty shillings I had my booke of Songs and Sonnets here: How now Simple, where have you beene? I must waite on my selfe, must I? you have not the booke of Riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Booke of Riddles, why did you not lend it to Alice Short-cake upon Alhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas.

Shal. Come Coz, come, Coz, we stay for you: a word with you Coz: marry this, Coz: there is as 'twere a tender, a kinde of tender, made a farre off by Sir Hugh here: doe you understand me?

Slen. I Sir, you shall finde me reasonable; if it be so, I shall doe that that is reason, Shal. Nay, but understand me.

Slen. So I doe Sir.

Evans. Give care to his motions; (M. Slender) I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will doe as my Cofen Shallow sayes: I pray you pardon me, he's a Iustice of Peace in his Country, simple though I stand here.

Evans. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. I, there's the point Sir.

Evans. Marry is it: the very point of it, to M. An. Page.

Slen. Why if it be so; I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

Eva. But can you affection the 'o-man, let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips: for divers Philosophers hold, that the lips is parcell of the mouth: therefore precisely, can you marry your good will to the maid?

Shal. Cofen Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Slen. I hope sir, I will doe as it shall become one that would doe reason.

Evans. Nay, got's Lords and his Ladies, you must speak possitable, if you can carry-her your desires towards her.

Shal. That you must:

Will you (vpon good dowry) marry her?

Slen. I will doe a greater thing then that, upon your request (Cofen) in any reason.

Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, (sweet Coz:) what I doe is to pleasure you (Coz) can you love the Maide?

Slen. I will marry her (Sir) at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet Heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are marryed, and have more occasion to know one another: I hope upon familiarity will grow more content: but if you say marry-her, I will marry her, that I am freely dissolved, and dissolutely.

Evans. It

Evans. It is a ferry discretion answer : save the fall is in the 'ord, dissolutely: the ort is (according to our meaning) resolutely : his meaning is good.

Sh. I, I thinke my Cosen meant well.

Sl. I, or else I would I might be hang' (11.)

Sh. Here comes faire Mistris Anne; would I were yong for your sake, Mistris Anne.

An. The dinner is on the Table, my Father desires your Worships company.

Sh. I will waite on him, (faire Mistris Anne.) (Grace.

Evans. Od's plessed will : I will not be absence at the

An. Will't please your Worship to come in, Sir?

Sl. No, I thanke you forfooth, heartily; I am very well.

An. The dinner attends you sir.

Sl. I am not a-hungry, I thanke you, forfooth: goe Sirrha, for all you are my man, goe wait upon my Cosen Shallow : a Iurice of Peace sometime may be beholding to his friend for a man; I keepe but three men and a Boy yet, till my Mother be dead: but what though, yet I live a poore Gentleman borne.

An. I may not goe in without your Worship: they will not sit till you come.

Sl. I'faith, Ile eate nothing: I thanke you as much as though I did.

An. I pray you sir walke in.

Sl. I had rather walke here (I thanke you) I brui'd my shin th'other day, with playing at Sword and Dagger with a Master of Fence (three venys for a dish of stew'd Prunes) and by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meate since. Why doe your dogs barke so? be there Beares itl' Towne?

An. I thinke there are, Sir, I heard them talk'd of.

Sl. I love the sport well, but I shal as soon quarrell at it, as any man in England: you are afraid if you see the Beare loose, are you not?

An. Indeed Sir.

Sl. That's meat and drinke to me now: I have seene Sackerson loose, twenty times, and have taken him by the Chaine: but (I warrant you) the women have so cride and shrekt at it, that it past: But women indeed cannot abide 'em, they are very ill-favour'd rough things.

Ma. Pa. Come gentle M. Slender, come: we stay for you.

Sl. Ile eat nothing, I thanke you sir.

Ma. Pa. By cocke and pye you shall not choose Sir: come, come.

Sl. Nay, pray you lead the way.

Ma. Pa. Come on Sir.

Sl. Mistris Anne, your selfe shall goe first.

An. Not I Sir, pray you keepe on.

Sl. Truly I will not goe first: truly-la: I will not doe you that wrong.

An. I pray you Sir.

Sl. Ile rather be unmannerly then troublesome: you doe your selfe wrong indeed-la. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Evans and Simple.

Evans. Goe your wayes and aske of Doctor Caius house, which is the way; and there dwels one Mistris Quickly, which is in the manner of his Nurse; or his dry-Nurse; or his Cooke; or his Laundry; his Washer, and his Ringer.

Sim. Well Sir.

Evans. Nay, it is petter yet: give her this letter; for it is a oman that altogether acquaintance with Mistris Anne Page; and the Letter is to desire, and require her to sollicit your Masters desires, to Mistris Anne Page: I pray you be gone: I will make an end of my dinner; there's Pippins and Cheefe to come. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, Host, Bardolfe, Nym, Pistol, Page.

Fal. Mine Host of the Garter?

Ho. What sayes my Bully Rooke? speake Schollerly, and wisely.

Fal. Truly mine Host; I must turne away some of my followers.

Ho. Discard, (Bully Hercules) casheere; let them wag; trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a weeke.

Ho. Thou'rt an Emperour (Cesar, Keisar and Phazar) I will entertaine Bardolfe: he will draw, he will tap, said I well (Bully Hector?)

Fa. Doe so (good mine Host.)

Ho. I have spoke, let him follow: let me see thee froth, and live: I am at a word: follow.

Fa. Bardolfe follow him, a Tapster is a good trade: an old Cloake makes a new Ierkin: a wither'd Servingman, a fresh Tapster, goe, adieu.

Ba. It is a lute that I have desir'd: I will thrive.

Pist. O bafe hungarian wight: wilt thou the Spigot weild.

Ni. He was gotten in drinke: is not the humor cōceited.

Fa. I am glad I am so acquit of this Tinderbox: his Thefts were too open: his hiching was like an unskilfull Singer, he kept not time.

Ni. The good humour is to steale at a minutes rest.

Pist. Convey, the wife it call: Steale? foh: a fico for the phrase.

Fa. Well sirs, I am almost out at heeles.

Pist. Why then let Kibes endue.

Fal. There is no remedy: I must conicatch, I must shift.

Pist. Yong Ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this Towne?

Pist. I ken the Wight, he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest Lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards and more.

Fal. No quips now Pistol: (Indeed I am in the Waste two yards about: but I am now about no waste: I am about thrift) briefly: I doe meane to make love to Fords wife: I spie entertainment in her: shee discourfes: she carves: she gives the leere of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar stile, and the hardest voice of her behavior (to be english'd rightly) is, I am sir Iohn Falstaffs.

Pist. He hath studied her will; and translated her will: out of honesty into English.

Ni. The Anchor is deepe: will that humour passe?

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husbands Purse: he hath a legend of Angels.

Pist. As many divels entertaine: and to her Boy say I.

Ni. The humor rises: it is good: humor me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Pages wife, who even now gave me good eyes too; examin'd my parts with most judicious illads: sometimes the beame of her view, guided my foot: sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the Sun on dung-hill shine.

Ni. I thanke thee for that humour.

Fal. O she did so course o're my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye, did seeme to scorch me up like a burning-glasse: here's another letter to her: She beares the Purle too: She is a Region in Guiana: all gold and bounty: I will bee Cheators to them both, and they shall be Exchequers to mee: they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both: Goe, beare thou this letter to Mistris Page; and thou this to Mistris Ford: wee will thrive (Lads) wee will thrive.

Pist. Shall I Sir Pandarus of Troy become, And by my side weare Steele? then Lucifer take all.

Ni. I will run no bafe humour: here take the humour-Letter; I will keepe the haviour of reputation.

Fal. Hold Sirrha, beare you these Letters rightly, Saile like my Pinnasse to these golden shores. Rogues, hence, avaint, vanish like haile-stones; goe, Trudge; plod away oth' hooft, seeke shelter, packe: Falstaffe will learne the honour of the age, French-thrift, you Rogues, my selfe, and skirted Page.

Pist. Let Vultures gripe thy guts; for gourd, and Fullam holds: & high and low beguiles the rich & poore, Tetter Ile have in Pouch when thou shalt lacke, Bafe Phrygian Turke.

Ni. I have operations, Which be humours of revenge.

Pist. Wilt thou revenge?

Ni. By Welkin, and her Starre.

Pist. With wit, or Steele?

Ni. With both the humours, I: I will discesse the humour of this Love to Ford.

Pist. And I to Page shall eke unfold How Falstaffe (Varlet vile) His Dove will prove; his gold will hold, And his soft couch defile.

Ni. My humour shall not coole: I will incense Ford to deale with poyson: I will possesse him with yellownesse, for the revolt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of Male-contentis: I second thee: troope on. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Mistris Quickly, Simple, John Rugby, Doctor Caius, Fenton.

Qu. What, John Rugby, I pray thee goe to the Caffe-ment, and see if you can see my Master, Master Doctor Caius comming: if he doe (I faith) and finde any body in the house; here will be an old abusing of Gods patience, and the Kings English.

Ru. Ile goe watch.

Qu. Goe, and we'll have a Posset for't soone at night, (in faith) at the latter end of a Sea-coale-fire: An honest, willing, kinde fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withall: and I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish that way: but no body but has his fault: but let that passe. Peter Simple, you say your name is,

Si. I, for fault of a better.

Qu. And Master Slender's your Master?

Si. I forsooth.

Qu. Doe's he not weare a great round Beard, like a Glovers pairing-knife?

Si. No forsooth: he hath but a little wee-face; with a litle yellow Beard: a Caine-colour'd Beard.

Qu. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?

Si. I forsooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is betwene this and his head: he hath fought with a Warrener.

Qu. How say you: oh, I should remember him: doe's he not hold up his head (as it were?) and strut in his gate?

Si. Yes indeed doe's he.

Qu. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worfe fortune: Tell Master Parson Evans, I will doe what I can for your Master: Anne is a good gile, and I wish—

Ru. Out alas: here comes my Master.

Qu. We shall all be shent: Run in here, good yong man: goe into this Clofset: he will not stay long: what John Rugby? John: what John I say? goe John, goe enquire for my Master, I doubt he be not well, that hee comes not home: (and downe, downe, adowne 'a, &c.)

Ca. Vat is you sing? I doe not like des-toyes: pray you goe and vetch me in my Clofset, unboyteene verd; a Box, a greene-a-Box: do intend vat I speake? a greene-a-Box.

Qu. I forsooth ile fetch it you: I am glad he went not in himselfe: if he had found the yong man, he would have beene horne mad.

Ca. Fa, fe, fe, fe, moi foi, il fais for ebando, le man voi a le Court la grand affaires.

Qu. Is it this Sir?

Ca. Ouy, mette le au mon pocket, de-peeck quickly: Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Qu. What John Rugby, John?

Ru. Here sir.

Ca. You are John Rugby, and you are Jacks Rugby: Come, take a-your Rapier, and come after my heele to the Court.

Ru. 'Tis ready sir, here in the Porch.

Ca. By my trot I tarry too long: od's-me: que ay ie oublie: dere is some Simples in my Clofset, dat I will not for the varld I shall leave behind.

Qu. Ay-me, he'll find the yong man there, and be mad.

Ca. O Diable, Diable: vat is in my Clofset? Villanie, La-roone: Rugby, my Rapier.

Qu. Good Master be content.

Ca. Wherefore should I be content-a?

Qu. The yong man is an honest man.

Ca. What shall de honest man do in my Clofset: dere is no honest man dat shall come in my clofset.

Qu. I beseech you be not so flegmaticke: heare the truth of it. He came of an errand to mee from Parson Hugh.

Ca. Vell.

Si. I forsooth, to desire her to—

Qu. Peace, I pray you.

Ca. Peace-a-your-tongue: speake-a-your Tale.

Si. To desire this honest Gentlewoman (your Maid) to speake a good word to Mistris Anne Page, for my Master in the way of marriage.

Qu. This is all indeed-la: but ile nere put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Ca. Sir Hugh send-a-you? Rugby, ballow mee some Paper: tarry you a littell-a-while.

Qu. I

Qui. I am glad he is so quiet : if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholly : but notwithstanding man ; Ile doe for your Master what good I can : and the very yea, and the no is, the French Doctor my Master, (I may call him my Master, looke you, for I keepe his house ; and I wash, ring, brew, bake, scowre, dresse meat and drinke, make the beds, and doe all my selfe.)

Sim. 'Tis a great charge to come under one bodies hand.

Qui. Are you a-vis'd o' that ? you shall find it a great charge : and to be up early, and downe late : but notwithstanding, (to tell you in your eare, I would have no words of it) my Master himselfe is in love with Mistris Anne Page : but notwithstanding that I know Ans mind, that's neither heere nor there.

Cai. You, Iack'Nape : givie-'a this Letter to Sir Hugh, by gar it is a challenge : I will cut his troat in de Parke, and I will teach a scurvy Iack-a-nape Priest to meddle, or make : — you may be gon : it is not good you tarry here : by gar I will cut all his two stones : by gar, hee shall not have a stone to throw at his dogge.

Qui. Alas : he speakes but for his friend.

Cai. It is no matter a ver dat : doe not you tell-a-me dat I shall have Anne Page for my selfe ? by gar, I will kill de Iack-Priest : and I have appointed mine Host of de Iarteer to measure our weapon : by gar, I will my selfe have Anne Page.

Qui. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well : We must give folkes leave to prate : what the good-jer.

Cai. Rugby, come to the Court with me : by gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turne your head out of my dore : follow my heeles, Rugby.

Qui. You shall have An-fooles head of your owne : No, I know Ans mind for that : never a woman in Windsor knowes more of Ans mind then I doe, nor can doe more then I doe with her, I thanke heaven.

Fenton. Who's within there, hoa ?

Qui. Who's there, I troa ? Come neere the house I pray you.

Fen. How now (good woman) how dost thou ?

Qui. The better that it pleases your good Worshop to aske ?

Fen. What newes ? how do's pretty Mistris Anne ?

Qui. In truth Sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle, and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way. I praise heaven for it.

Fen. Shall I do any good thinkst thou ? shall I not loose my suit ?

Qui. Troth Sir, all is in his hands above : but notwithstanding (Master Fenton) Ile be sworne on a booke shee loves you : have not your Worshop a wart above your eye ?

Fen. Yes marry have I, what of that ?

Qui. Well, thereby hangs a tale : good faith, it is such another Nan ; (but I detest) an honest maid as ever broke bread : we had an houres talke of that wart ; I shall never laugh but in that maids company : but (indeed) she is given too much to Allicholy and musing, but for you — well — goe to —

Fen. Well : I shall see her to day : hold, there's money for thee : Let me have thy voyce in my behalfe : if thou seest her before me, commend me. —

Qui. Will I ? I faith that we will : And I will tell your Worshop more of the Wart, the next time we have confidence, and of other woovers.

Fen. Well, farewell, I am in great haste now.

Qui. Farewell to your Worshop : truly an honest Gentleman : but Anne loves him not : for I know Ans minde as well as another do's : out upon't : what have I forgot ?

Mist. Page. What, have I scap'd Love-letters in the holly-day-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them ? let me see ?

Aske me no reason why I love you, for though love use reason for his precision, he admits him not for his Counsaillour : you are not yong, no more am I : goe to then, there's simpathy : you are merry, so am I : ha, ha, then there's more simpathy : you love Sacke, and so doe I : would your desire better simpathy ? Let it suffice thee (Mistris Page) at the least of the Love of Souldier can suffice, that I love thee ; I will not say pity me, 'tis not a Souldier-like phrase ; but I say, love me :

By me, thine owne true Knight, by day or night :

Or any kind of light, with all his might,

For thee to fight. John Falstaffe.

What a Herod of Iury is this ? O wicked, wicked world : One that is well-nye worne to peeces with age To show himselfe a yong Gallant ? What an unwayed Behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt (with The devills name) out of my conversation, that he dares In this manner assay me ? why, he hath not beene thrice In my Company : what should I say to him ? I was then Frugall of my mirth : (heaven forgive me :) why Ile Exhibit a Bill in the Parliament for the putting downe of men : how shall I be reveng'd on him ? for reveng'd I will be ? as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Mist. Ford. Mistris Page, trust me, I was going to your house.

Mist. Page. And trust me, I was comming to you : you looke very ill.

Mist. Ford. Nay, Ile nere beleeve that ; I have to shew to the contrary.

Mist. Page. Faith but you doe in my mind.

Mist. Ford. Well : I doe then : yet I say, I could shew you to the contrary : O Mistris Page, give me some counsaile.

Mist. Page. What's the matter, woman ?

Mist. Ford. O woman : if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honor.

Mist. Page. Hang the trifle (woman) take the honor : what is it ? dispencc with trifles : what is it ?

Mist. Ford. If I would but goe to hell, for an eternall moment, or so : I could be knighted.

Mist. Page. What thou liest ? Sir Alice Ford ? these Knights will hacke, and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy Gentry.

Mist. Ford. We burne day-light, heere, read, read : perceive how I might be knighted, I shall thinke the worfe of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of mens liking ; and yet hee would not sware : praise praise womens modesty : and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproofe to all uncomelineffe, that I would have sworne his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words : but they doe no more adhere and keepe place together, then the hundred Psalmes to the tune of Green-sheues : Whattempest (I troa) threw this Whale, (with so many Tuns of oyle in his belly) a shoare at Windsor ? How shall I be revenged on him ? I thinke the best way were to entertaine him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his owne greace : Did you ever heare the like ?

Mis. Page. Letter for letter ; but that the name of Page and Ford differs : to thy great comfort in this mystery of illoptions, heer's the twyn-brother of thy Letter : but let thine inherit first, for I protest mine never shall : I warrant he hath a thousand of these Letters, writ with blanke-space for different names (sue more :) and these are of the second edition : he will print them out of doubt : for he cares not what he puts into the presse, when he would put us two : I had rather be a Giant sic, and lye under Mount Pelion : Well, I will find you twenty lascivious Turtles ere one chaste man.

Mis. Ford. Why this is the very same : the very hand : the very words : what doth he thinke of us ?

Mis. Page. Nay I know not : it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine owne honesty : He entertaine my selfe like one that I am not acquainted withall : for sure unlesse he know some straine in me, that I know not my selfe, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mis. Ford. Boarding, call you it ? He be sure to keepe him above decke.

Mis. Page. So will I : if he come under my hatches, He never to Sea againe : Let's be reveng'd on him, let's appoint him a meeting : give him a show of comfort in his Suit, and lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses to mine Host of the Garter.

Mis. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not fully the charinesse of our honesty : oh that my husband saw this Letter : it would give eternall food to his jealousie,

Mis. Page. Why looke where he comes ; and my good man too : hee's as farre from jealousie, as I am from giving him cause, and that (I hope) is an unmeasurable distance.

Mis. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mis. Page. Let's consult together against this greasie Knight : Come hither.

Ford. Well : I hope, it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtall-dog in some affaires : Sir Iohn affects thy wife.

Ford. Why sir, my wife is not yong.

Pist. He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor, both yong and old, one with another (Ford) he loves thy Gally-mawfry (Ford) perpend.

Ford. Love my wife ?

Pist. With liver, burning hot : prevent : Or goe thou like Sir Aleone he, with Ring-wood at thy heeles : O, odious is the name.

Ford. What name Sir ?

Pist. The horne I say : Farewell : Take heed, have open eye, for theeves doe foot by night. Take heed, ere sommer comes, or Cuckoo-birds doe sing. Away sir Corporall Nim :

Beleeve it (Page) he speakes sence.

Ford. I will be patient : I will find out this.

Nim. And this is true : I like not the humor of lying : he hath wronged me in some humors : I should have borne the humour'd Letter to her : but I have a sword : and it shall bite upon my necessity : he loves your wife ; There's the short, and the long : My name is Corporall Nim : I speake, and I avouch ; 'tis true : my name is Nim : and Falstaff loves your wife : adieu, I love not the humour of bread and cheese : adieu.

Page. The humour of it (quoth'a ?) heer's a fellow frights English out of his wits.

Ford. I will seeke out Falstaff.

Page. I never heard such a drawling affecting rogue.

Ford. If I doe find it : well,

Page. I will not beleieve such a Cataian, though the Priest o'th' Towne commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow : well.

Page. How now Meg ?

Mis. Page. Whither goe you (George ?) harke you.

Mis. Ford. How now (sweet Franke) why art thou melancholy ?

Ford. I melancholy ? I am not melancholy :

Get you home, goe.

Mis. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crochets in thy head. Now : will you goe, Master Page ?

Mis. Page. Have with you : you'll come to dinner George ? Looke who comes yonder : she shall be our Messenger to this paltry Knight.

Mis. Ford. Truist me, I thought on her : shee'll fit it.

Mis. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne ?

Qui. I forsooth : and I pray how do's good Mistresse Anne ?

Mis. Page. Goe in with us and see : we have an houre's talk with you.

Page. How now Master Ford.

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not ?

Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me ?

Ford. Doe you thinke there is truth in them ?

Page. Hang 'em slaves : I doe not thinke the Knight would offer it, But these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men : very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men ?

Page. Marry were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that, Do's he lye at the Garter ?

Page. I marry do's hee : if hee should intend this voyage toward my wife, I would turne her loose to him ; and what he gets more of her, then sharpe words, let it lye on my head.

Ford. I doe not misdoubt my wife : but I would bee loath to turne them together : a man may be too confident : I would have nothing lye on my head : I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Looke where my ranting Host of the Garter comes : there is either liquor in his pate, or mony in his purse, when he lookes so merrily : How now mine Host ?

Host. How now Bully-Rooke : thou'rt a Gentleman Caveleiro Iustice, I say.

Shal. I follow, (mine Host) I follow : Good-even, and twenty (good Master Page.) Master Page, will you go with us ? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him Caveleiro-Iustice : tell him Bully-Rooke.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, betweene Sir Hugh the Welch Priest, and Casim the French Doctor.

Ford. Good

Ford. Good mine Host o'th' Garter : a word with you.

Host. What saist thou, my Bully-Rooke ?

Shal. Will you goe with us to behold it ? My merry Host hath had the measuring of their weapons ; and (I thinke) hath appointed them contrary places : for (beleeve me) I heare the Parson is no Iester : harke, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my Knight ? my guest-Cavaleire ?

Shal. None, I protest : but Ile give you a pottle of burn'd Sacke, to give me recourse to him, and tell him my name is Broome : onely for a jest.

Host. My hand, (Bully :) thou shalt have egress and regress, (said I well ?) and thy name shall be Broome. It is a merry Knight : will you goe An-heires ?

Shal. Have with you mine Host.

Page. I have heard the French-man hath good skill in his Rapier.

Shal. Tut sir : I could have told you more : In these times you stand on distance : your Passes, Stoccado's, and I know not what : 'tis the heart (Master Page) 'tis heere, 'tis heere : I have seene the time, with my long-sword, I would have made you foure tall fellowes skip like Rattes.

Host. Heere boyes, heere, heere : shall we wag ?

Page. Have with you : I had rather heare them scold, then fight.

Ford. Though Page be a secure foole, and stands so firmly on his wives frai'ty ; yet, I cannot put-off my opinion so easily : she was in his company at Page's house : and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will looke further into't, and I have a disguise, to sound Falstaff ; if I find her honest, I lose not my labour : if she be other-wife, 'tis labour well bestowed.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe, Pistoll, Robin, Quickly, Bardolffe, Ford.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why then the world's mine Oyster, which I, with sword will open.

Fal. Not a penny : I have beene content (Sir) you should lay my countenance to pawne : I have grated upon my good friends for three Repreeves for you, and your Coach-fellow Nim ; or else you had look'd through the grate, like a Geminy of Baboones : I am damn'd in hell, for swearing to Gentlemen my friends, you were good Souldiers, and tall-fellowes. And when Mistresse Briger lost the handle of her Fan, I took't upon mine honour thou hadst it not.

Pist. Didst not thou share ? hadst thou not fiftene pence ?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason : thinkst thou Ile endanger my soule, gratis ? at a word, hang no more about mee, I am no gibbet for you : goe, a short knife, and a throng, to your Mannor of Picks-batch : goe, you'll not beare a Letter for me you rogue ? you stand upon your honor : why, (thou unconfinable basenesse) it is as much as I can doe to keepe the terme of my honor precise : I, I, I my selfe sometimes, leaving the feare of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honor in my necessity, am faine to shuffle : to hedge, and to lurch, and yet, you Rogue, will en-sconce your raggs ; your Cat-a-Mountaine-lookes, your red-lattice phrases, and your bold-beating-oathes, under the shelter of your honor ? you will not doe it ? you ?

Pist. I doe relent : what would thou more of man ?

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speake with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Qui. Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good-wife.

Qui. Not so and't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid then.

Qui. Ile be sworne,

As my mother was the first houre I was borne.

Fal. I doe beleeve the swearer ; what with me ?

Qui. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word, or two ?

Fal. Two thousand (faire woman) and ile vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Qui. There is one Mistresse Ford, (Sir) I pray come a little neerer this wayes : I my selfe dwell with M. Doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on ; Mistresse Ford, you say.

Qui. Your worship sayes very true ; I pray your worship come a little neerer this wayes.

Fal. I warrant thee, no body heares : mine owne people, mine owne people.

Qui. Are they so ? heaven blesse them, and make them his servants :

Fal. Well ; Mistresse Ford, what of her ?

Qui. Why, Sir ; shee's a good creature ; lord, lord, your Worship's a wanton : well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray—

Fal. Mistresse Ford ; come, Mistresse Ford.

Qui. Marry this is the short, and the long of it : you have brought her into such a Canaries, as 'tis wonderfull : the best Courtier of them all (when the Court lay at Windsor) could never have brought her to such a Canary : yet there has beene Knights, and Lords, and Gentlemen, with their Coaches ; I warrant you Coach after Coach, letter after letter, gift after gift, smelling so sweetly ; all Muske ; and so rushling, I warrant you, in silke and gold, and in such alligant termes, and in such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have wonne any womans heart : and I warrant you, they could never get an eye-winke of her : I had my selfe twenty Angels given me this morning, but I desie all Angels (in any such sort, as they say) but in the way of honesty ; and I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sippe on a cup with the proudest of them all, and yet there has beene Earles : nay, (which is more) Pensioners, but I warrant you all is one with her.

Fal. But wht sayes she to me ? be briefe my good shee-Mercury.

Qui. Marry, she hath receiv'd your Letter : for the which she thanks you a thousand times ; and she gives you to notifie, that her husband will be absence from his house, betweene ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten, and eleven.

Qui. I, forsooth : and then you may come and see the picture (she sayes) that you wot of : Master Ford her husband will be from home : alas, the sweet woman leades an ill life with him : hee's a very jealousie-man ; she leades a very frampold life with him, (good hart.)

Fal. Ten, and eleven.

Woman

Woman, commend me to her, I will not faile her.

Qui. Why, you say well: But I have another messenger to your worship: Mistrisse Page hath her hearty commendations to you too: and let me tell you in your eare, shee's as fartuous a civill modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not misse you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who ere be the other: and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is feldome from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so doate upon a man; surely I thinke you have charmes, la: yes in truth.

Fal. Nor I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charmes.

Qui. Blessing on your heart for't.

Fal. But I pray thee tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Pages wife acquainted each other, how they love me?

Qui. That were a jest indeed: they have not so little grace I hope, that were a trick indeed: But Mistris Page would desire you to send her your little Page of all loves: her husband has a marvellous infection to the little Page: and truly Master Page is an honest man: never a wife in Windsor leads a better life then she do's: doe what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all. goe to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she wil: and truly she deserves it; for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one: you must send her your Page, no remedie.

Fal. Why, I will.

Qu. Nay, but doe so then, and looke you, he may come and goe betweene you both: and in any case have a nay-word, that you may know one anothers mind, and the Boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickednesse: old folkes you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee-well, commend me to them both: there's my purse, I am yet thy debtor: Boy, goe along with this woman, this newes distracts me.

Pist. This Puncke is one of Cupids Carriers, Clap on more sailes, pursue: up with your fights: Give fire: she is my prize, or Ocean whelme them all.

Fal. Saist thou so (old lacke) goe thy wayes: Ile make more of thy old body then I have done: will they yet looke after thee? wilt thou after the expence of so much money, be now a gainer? good body, I thanke thee: let them say 'tis grossly done, so it be fairely done, no matter.

Bar. Sir John, there's one Master Broome below would faine speake with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent you worship a mornings draught of Sacke.

Fal. Broome is his name?

Bar. I Sir.

Fal. Call him in: such Broomes are welcome to me, that ore' flowes such liquor: ah, ha, Mistrisse Ford and Mistrisse Page, have I encompassed you? goe to, via.

Ford. Blessé you sir.

Fal. And you sir: would you speake with me?

Ford. I make bold, to presse, with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You'r welcome, what's your will? give us leave Drawer.

Ford. Sir, I am a Gentleman that have spent much, my name is Broome.

Fal. Good Master Broome, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you, for I must let you understand, I thinke my selfe in better plight for a Lender, then you are: the which hath something emboldned me to this unseason'd intrusion: for they say, if money goe before, all wayes doe lye open.

Fal. Money is a good Souldier (Sir) and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money heere troubles me: if you will helpe to beare it (Sir John) take all, or halfe, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your Porter.

Ford. I will tell you sir, if you will give mee the hearing.

Fal. Speake (good Master Broome) I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I heare you are a Scholler: (I will be briefe with you) and you have beene a man long knowne to me, though I had never so good meanes as desire, to make my selfe acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine owne imperfection: but (good Sir John) as you have one eye upon my follies, as you heare them unfolded, turne another into the Register of your owne, that I may passe with a reproofe the easier, sith you your selfe know how easie it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well Sir, proceed.

Ford. There is a Gentlewoman in this Towne, her husbands name is Ford.

Fal. Well Sir.

Ford. I have long lov'd her, and I protest to you, bestowed much on her: followed her with a doating observance: Ingross'd opportunities to meete her: fee'd every slight occasion that could but nigardly give mee sight of her: not onely bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what shee would have given: briefly, I have pursu'd her, as Love hath pursued me, which hath beene on the wing of all occasions: but whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my meanes, meede I am sure I have received none, unlesse Experience be a Jewell, that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this.

"Love like a shadow flies, when substance Love pursues, Pursuing that that flies; and flying what pursues."

Fal. Have you receiv'd no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importun'd her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a faire house, built on another mans ground, so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place, where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all: Some say, that though she appeare honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so farre, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now (Sir John) here is the heart of my purpose: you are a Gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authenticke in your place and person, generally allow'd for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O Sir.

Ford. Believe it, for you know it: there is money, spend it, spend it, spend more; spend all I have, onely give give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife: use your Art of wooing; win her to consent to you: if any man may, you may as soone as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks you prescribe to your selfe very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift: she dwels so securely on the excellency of her honor, that the folly of my foule dares not present it selfe: she is too bright to be look'd against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand; my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattail'd against me: what say you too't, Sir John.

Fal. Master Broome, I will first make bold with your money: next, give me your hand: and last, as I am a Gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O good Sir.

Fal. I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money (Sir John) you shall want none.

Fal. Want no Mistresse Ford (Master Broome) you shall want none: I shall be with her (I may tell you) by her owne appointment, even as you came in to me, her assistant, or goe-betweene, parted from me: I say I shall be with her betweene ten and eleven: for at that time the jealous-rascally-knave her husband will be forth: come you to me at night, you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance: doe you know Ford Sir?

Fal. Hang him (poore Cuckoldly knave) I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poore: They say the jealous wittolly-knave hath masses of money, for the which his wife seemes to me well-favour'd. I will use her as the key of the Cuckold-rogues Coffer, and there's my harvest-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanicall-salt-butter rogue; I will stare him out of his wits: I will awe him with my cudgell: it shall hang like a Meteor o're the Cuckolds homes: Master Broome, thou shalt know, I will predominate over the pezzant, and thou shalt lye with his wife. Come to me soone at night: Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his stile: thou (Master Broome) shalt know him for knave, and Cuckold. Come to me soone at night. Exit.

Ford. What a damn'd Epicurian-Rascall is this? my heart is ready to cracke with impatience: who sayes this is improvident jealousy? my wife hath sent to him, the howre is fixt, the match is made: would any man have thought this? see the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abus'd, my Coffers ransack'd, my reputation gnaw'd at, and I shall not onely receive this villanous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable termes, and by him that does me this wrong: Termes, names: Amaimon sounds well: Lucifer, well: Barbasen, well: yet they are Divels additions, the names of fiends: But Cuckold, Wittoll, Cuckold? the Divell himselfe hath not such a name. Page is an Ass, a secure Ass; he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welsh-man with my Cheese, an Irish-man with my Aqua-vitæ-bottle, or a Theefe to walke my ambling gelding, than my wife with her selfe. Then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises: and what they thinke in their hearts they may effect; they will breake their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be prais'd for my jealousy: eleven o'clock the howre, I will prevent this, detect my wife, be reveng'd on Falstaffe, and laugh at Page. I will about it, better three houres too soone, then a mynute too late: fie, fie, fie: Cuckold, Cuckold, Cuckold.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Caius, Rugby, Shallow, Slender, Host.

Caius. Iacke Rugby.

Rug. Sir.

Caius. Vat is the clocke, Iacke.

Rug. 'Tis past the houre (Sir) that Sir Hugh promis'd to meet.

Cai. By gar, he has save his soule, dat he is no-come: he has pray his Pible well, dat he is no-come: by gar (Iacke Rugby) he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise Sir: he knew your worship would kill him if he came.

Cai. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I vill kill him: take your Rapier, (Iacke) I vill tell you how I vill kill him.

Rug. Alas sir, I cannot fence.

Cai. Villany, take your Rapier.

Rug. Forbeare: her's company.

Host. 'Blesse thee, bully-Doctor.

Shal. 'Save you M^r. Doctor Caius.

Page. Now good M^r. Doctor.

Slender. 'Give you good-morrow, sir.

Caius. Vat be all you one, two, tree, fowre, come for?

Host. To see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee heere, to see thee there, to see thee passe thy pun to, thy stocke, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant: Is he dead, my Ethiopian? Is he dead, my Francisco? ha Bully? what sayes my Esculapius? my Galen? my heart of Elder? ha? is he dead bully-Stale? is he dead?

Cai. By gar, he is de Coward-Iacke-Priest of de world: he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castalion-king-Vrinal: Hector of Greece (my Boy)

Cai. I pray you beare witnesse, that me have stay, fixe or seven, two tree howres for him, and he is no-come.

Shal. He is the wiser man (M^r. Doctor) he is a curer of foules, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you goe against the haire of your professions: is it not true, Master Page?

Page. Master Shallow; you have your selfe beene a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Body-kins M^r. Page, though I now be old, and of peace; if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one: though we are Iustices, and Doctors, and Churchmen (M^r. Page) we have somefalt of our youth in us, we are the sons of women (M^r. Page.)

Page. 'Tis true, M^r. Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, (M^r. Page) M^r. Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home: I am sworne of the peace: you have shew'd your selfe a wise Physician; and sir Hugh hath shown himselfe a wise and patient Churchman: you must goe with me, M^r. Doctor.

Host.

Hof. Pardon, Gueft-Inflice; a Mounfeur Mockewater.

Cai. Mocke-water? vat is dat?

Hof. Mocke-water, in our Englifh tongue, is Valour (Bully.)

Cai. By gar, then I have as much Mocke-vater as de Englifhman: fcuruy-Iack-dog-Prieft: by gar, me vill cut his cares.

Hof. He will Clapper-claw thee tightly (Bully.)

Cai. Clapper-de-claw? vat is dat?

Hof. That is, he will make thee amends.

Cai. By gar, me do looke he shall clapper-de-claw me, for by-gar, me vill have it.

Hof. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Cai. Me tanck you for dat.

Hof. And moreover, (Bully) but first, Mr. Gueft, and Mr. Page, and ecke Cavaleiro Slender, go you through the Towne to Frogmore.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Hof. He is there, fee what humor he is in: and I will bring the Doctor about by the Fields: will it do well?

Shal. We will doe it.

All. Adieu, good Mr. Doctor.

Cai. By gar, me vill kill de Prieft, for he speake for a Iacke-an-Ape to Anne Page.

Hof. Let him dye: sheath thy impatience: throw cold water on thy Choller: goe about the fields with me through Frogmore, I will bring thee where Miftris Anne Page is, at a Farme-houfe a Feasting: and thou shalt woo her: Cride-game, said I well?

Cai. By-gar, mee dancke you vor dat: by gar I love you: and I shall procure 'a you de good Gueft: de Earle, de Knight, de lords, de Gentlemen, my patients.

Hof. For the which, I will be thy adverfary toward Anne Page: said I well?

Cai. By-gar, 'tis good: vell said!

Hof. Let us wag then.

Cai. Come at my heeles, Iacke Rugby.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius, Scena Prima.

Enter Evans, Simple, Page, Shallow, Slender, Hof, Caius, Rugby.

Evans. I pray you now, good Master Slenders serving-man, and friend Simple by your name; which way have you look'd for Master Caius, that calls himfelfe Doctor of Phisicke.

Sim. Marry Sir, the pitty-wary, the Parke-ward; every way: old Windsor way, and every way but the Towne way.

Evans. I most fehemently desire you, you will also looke that way.

Sim. I will fir.

Evans. Plesse my foule: how full of Chollors I am, and tremping of mind: I shall be glad if he have deceived me: how melancholies I am? I will knog his Vrinalls about his knaves costard, when I have good opportunities for the orke: Plesse my foule: To shallow Rivers to whose falls: melodious Birds sing Madrigalls: There will we make our Peds of Roses: and a thousand fragrant posies. To shallow. 'Mercy on me, I have a great disposition to cry.

Melodious birds sing Madrigall: — When as I sat in Babylon: and a thousand vagrant Posies. To shallow, &c.

Sim. Yonder he is comming, this way, Sir Hugh.

Evans. Hee's welcome: To shallow Rivers, to whose falls: Heaven prosper the right: what weapons is he?

Sim. No weapons, Sir: there comes my Master, Mr. Shallow; and another Gentleman; from Frogmore, over the stile, this way.

Evans. Pray you give me my gowne, or else keepe it in your armes.

Enter All.

Shal. How now Master Parson? good morrow good Sir Hugh: keepe a Gameller from the dice, and a good Student from his booke, and it is wonderfull.

Slender. Ah sweet Anne Page.

Page. 'Save you, good Sir Hugh.

Evans. Plesse you from his mercy-sake, all of you.

Shal. What? the Sword, and the word?

Do you study them both, Mr. Parson?

Page. And youthfull still, in your doublet and hose, this raw-rumaticke day?

Evans. There is reasons, and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you: to doe a good office, Mr. Parson.

Evans. Fery-well: what is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverend Gentleman; who (be like) having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his owne gravity and patience, that ever you saw.

Shal. I have lived fourescore yeeeres, and upward: I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his owne respect.

Evans. What is he?

Page. I thinke you know him: Mr. Doctor Caius the renowned French Physitian.

Evans. Got's-will, and his passion of my heart: I had as lief you would tell me of a messe of porridge.

Page. Why?

Evans. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen, and he is a knave besides: a cowardly knave, as you would desire to be acquainted withall.

Page. I warrant you, hee's the man should fight with him.

Slender. O sweet Anne Page.

Enter Caius.

Shal. It appeares so by his weapons: keepe them a-funder: here comes Doctor Caius.

Page. Nay good Mr. Parson, keepe in your weapon.

Shal. So doe you, good Mr. Doctor.

Hof. Disarme them, and let them question: let them keepe their limbs whole, and hack our Englifh, Cai. I pray you let-a-mee speake a word with your care; wherefore vill you not meet-a me?

Evans. Pray you use your patience in good time.

Cai. By-gar, you are de Coward: de Iacke dog: Iohn Ape.

Evans. Pray you let us not be laughing-stockes to other mens humors: I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends: I will knog your Vrinall about your knaves Cogs-combe.

Cai. Diable, Iacke Rugby, mine Hof de Larteer, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not at de place I did appoint?

Evans. As I am a Christians-foule, now looke you: this is the place appointed, Ile be judgement by mine Hof of the Garter.

Hof. Peace, I say, Gallia, and Gaule, French, and Welch, Soule-Curer, and Body-Curer.

Cai.

Cai. I, dat is very good, excellant.

Hof. Peace, I say: heare mine Host of the Garter, Am I politicke? Am I subtle? Am I a Machivell? Shall I loofe my Doctor? No, he gives me the Potions and the Motions. Shall I loofe my Parson? my Priest? my Sir Hugh? No, he gives me the Proverbes, and the No-verbes. Give me thy hand (Celestiall) so: Boyes of Art, I have deceiv'd you both: I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burn'd Sacke be the issue: come, lay their swords to pawne: Follow me, Lad of peace, follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad Host: follow Gentlemen, follow.

Cai. Ha'do I perceive dat? Have you make-a-de-sot of us, ha, ha?

Evan. This is well, he has made us his vlowting-stog: I desire you that we may be friends: and let us knog our praines together to be revenge on this same scall scurvy-cogging-companion the Host of the Garter.

Cai. By gar, with all my heart: he promise to bring-me where is Anne Page: by gar he deceive me too.

Evan. Well, I will finite his noddles: pray you follow.

Scena Secunda.

Mist. Page, Robin, Ford, Page, Shallow, Slender, Hof.
Evans, Caius.

Mist. Page. Nay keepe your way (little Gallant) you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a Leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your masters heeles?

Rob. I had rather (forsooth) goe before you like a man, then follow him like a dwarfe. (Courtier.)

Mis. Pa. O you are a flattering boy, now I see you'll be a Ford. Well met Mistris Page, whither goe you.

Mis. Page. Truly Sir, to see your wife, is she at home?

Ford. I, and as idle as she may hang together for want of company: I thinke if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mis. Page. Be sure of that, two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cocke?

M. Pa. I cannot tel what (the dickens) his name is my husband had him of, what do you cal your Knights name

Rob. Sir Iohn Falstaffe. (sirrah?)

Ford. Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

M. Pa. He, he, I can never hit on's name; there is such a league betweene my goodman, and he: is your Wife at

Ford. Indeed she is. (home indeed?)

M. Pa. By your leave sir, I am sicke till I see her.

Ford. Has Page any braines? Hath he any eies? Hath he any thinking? Sure they sleepe, he hath no use of them: why this boy will carry a letter twenty mile as easie, as a Canon will shoot point-blanke twelve scoice: he peeces out his wives inclination: he gives her folly motion and advantage: and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaffes boy with her: A man may heare this showre ring in the wind; and Falstaffes boy with her: good plots, they are laid, and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well, I will take him, then torture my wife, plucke the borrowed vail of modesty from the so seeming Mist. Page, divulge Page himselfe for a secure and willfull Atheon, and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry ayme. The clocke gives me my Qu, and my assurance bids me search, there I shall find Falstaffe: I shall be rather praised for this, then mock'd, for it is as possitive, as the earth is firme, that Falstaffe is there: I will goe.

Shal. Page, &c. Well met Mr. Ford.

Ford. Trust me, a good knot: I have good cheere at home, and I pray you all goe with me.

Shal. I must excuse my selfe Mr. Ford.

Slou. And so must I Sir,

We have appointed to dine with Mistris Anne, And I would not breake with here for more mony Then Ile speake of.

Shal. We have linger'd about a match betweene Anne Page, and my cozen Slender, and this day wee shall have our answer.

Slou. I hope I have your good will father Page.

Page. You have Mr. Slender, I stand wholly for you, But my wife (Mr. Doctor) is for you altogether.

Cai. I be-gar, and de Maid is love-a-me: my nursh-Quickly tell me so much.

Hof. What say you to yong M. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth: he writes verses, bee speakes holliday, he smels Aprill and May, he will carry't he will carry't, 'tis in his buttons, he will carry't.

Page. Not by my consent I promise you. The Gentleman is of no having, he kept company with the wilde Prince, and Pointz: he is of too high a Region, he knows too much: no, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes; with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply: the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you heartily, some of you goe home with me to dinner: besides your cheere you shall have sport, I will shew you a monster: Mr. Doctor, you shall goe, so shall you Mr. Page, and you Sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well:

We shall have the fitter wooing at Mr. Pages.

Cai. Goe home Iohn Rugby, I come anon.

Hof. Farewell my hearts, I will to my honest Knight Falstaffe, and drinke Canary with him.

Ford. I thinke I shall drinke in Pipe-wine first with him, Ile make him dance. Will you goe, Gentles?

All. Have with you, to see this Monster. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Mistris Ford, Mistris Page, Servants, Robin, Falstaffe, Ford, Page, Caius, Evans.

Mis. Ford. What Iohn, what Robert.

Mis. Page. Quickly, quickly: Is the Buck-basket—

Mis. Ford. I warrant. What Robin I say,

Mis. Page. Come, come, come.

Mis. Ford. Heere, set it downe.

Mis. Pa. Give your men the charge, we must be brieve.

M. Ford. Marry as I told you before (Iohn and Robert) be ready here hard-by in the Brew-house, and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all hast, and carry it among the Whitsters in Dorches Mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch, close by the *T*hames side.

M. Page. You will doe it? (direction.)

M. Ford. I ha told them over and over, they lacke no

Be gone, and come when you are call'd.

Mis. Page. Here comes little Robin. (with you?)

Mis. Ford. How now my Eyas-Musket, what newes

Rob. My M. Sir John is come in at your backe doore (Mis. Ford.) and requests your company.

Mis. Pa. You little Iack-a-lent, have you bin true to us?

Rob. I, Ile be sworne: my Master knowes not of your being heere: and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it: for he sweares hee'l turne me away.

Mis. Page. Thou'rt a good boy: this secrecy of thine shall be a Tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. Ile goe hide me.

Mis. Ford. Doe so: goe tell thy Master, I am alone: Mistress Page, remember you your Qu.

Mis. Page. I warrant thee, if I doe not act it, hisse me.

Mis. Ford. Goe too then: we'l use this unwholsome humidity, this grosse-watry Pumpion; we'll teach him to know Turtles from Iayes. Enter Fal.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly Jewell? Why now let me dye, for I have liv'd long enough: This is the period of my ambition: O this blessed houre.

Mis. Ford. O sweet Sir John.

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate (Mistress Ford) now shall I sin in my wish; I would thy Husband were dead, Ile speake it before the best lord, I would make thee my Lady.

Mis. Ford. I your Lady Sir John! Alas, I should be a pittifull Lady.

Fal. Let the Court of France shew me such another: I see how thine eye would emulate the Diamond: Thou hast the right arch'd-beauty of the brow, that becomes the Ship-tyre, the Tyre-valiant, or any Tire of Venetian admittance.

Mis. Ford. A plaine Kerchiefe, Sir John:

My browes become nothing else, nor that well neither.

Fal. Thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute Courtier, and the firme fixure of thy foote, would give an excellent motion to thy gate, in a semi-circled Farthingale, I see what thou wert if Fortune thy foe were not, Nature thy friend: Come, thou canst not hide it.

Mis. Ford. Beleeve me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? Let that perswade thee. Ther's something extraordinary in thee: Come, I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a-many of these lisping-hauthorne buds, that come like women in mens apparell, and smell like Bucklers-berry in simple time: I cannot, but I love thee, none but thee; and thou deseru'st it.

Mis. Ford. Do not betray me sir, I feare you love M. Page.

Fal. Thou mightst as well say, I love to walke by the Counter-gate, which is as hatefull to me, as the reeke of a Lime-kill.

Mis. Ford. Well, heaven knowes how I love you, And you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keepe in that mind, Ile deserve it.

Mis. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you doe; Or else I could not be in that mind. Within.

Rob. Mistress Ford, Mistress Ford: here's Mistress Page at the doore, swearing, and blowing, and looking wildely, and would needs speake with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me, I will ensconce me behind the Arras.

M. Ford. Pray you doe so, she's a very tatling woman. Whats the matter? how now? Enter Mis. Page.

Mis. Page. O mistress Ford what have you done?

You'r sham'd, y'are overthrowne, y'are undone for ever.

M. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

M. Page. O weladay, mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion.

Mis. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

Mis. Page. What cause of suspicion? Out upon you: How am I mistooke in you?

Mis. Ford. Why (alas) what's the matter?

Mis. Page. Your husbands comming hither (woman) with all the Officers in Windsor, to search for a Gentleman, that he sayes is heere now in the house; by your consent to take an ill advantage of his absence: you are undone.

Mis. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

Mis. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man heere: but 'tis most certaine your husband's comming, with halfe Windsor at his heeles, to serch for such a one, I come before to tell you: If you know your selfe cleere, why I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amaz'd, call all your senses to you, defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mis. Ford. What shall I doe? There is a Gentleman my deere friend: and I feare not mine owne shame so much, as his perill. I had rather then a thousand pound he were out of the house.

Mis. Page. For shame, never stand (you had rather, and you had rather:) your husband's heere at hand, bethinke you of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him. Oh, how have you deceiv'd me? Looke, heere is a basket, if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creepe in heere, and throw foule linnen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: Or it is whitening time, send him by your two men to Datchet-Meade.

Mis. Ford. He's too big to goe in there: what shall I doe?

Fal. Let me see't, let me see't, O let me see't:

Ile in, Ile in: Follow your friends counsell, Ile in.

Mis. Page. What Sir John Falstaffe? Are these your Letters Knight?

Fal. I love thee, helpe me away: let me creepe in heere: ile never —

Mis. Page. Helpe to cover your master (boy:) Call your men (Mistress Ford) You dissembling Knight.

Mis. Ford. What John, Robert, John; Goe, take up these cloathes heere, quickly: Wher's the Cowle-staffe? Looke how you drumble? Carry them to the Landresse in Datchet-Meade: quickly, come.

Ford. Pray you come nere: if I suspect without cause, Why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest, I deserve it: How now? Whither beare you this?

Ser. To the Landresse forsooth?

Mis. Ford. Why, what have you to doe whither they beare it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck? I would I could wash my selfe of the Buck: bucke, bucke, bucke, I bucke: I warrant you Bucke, And of the season too; it shall appeare.

Gentlemen, I have dream'd to night, Ile tell you my dreame: heere, heere, be my keyes, ascend my Chambers, search, seeke, find out: Ile warrant wee'll unkennell the Fox. Let me stop this way first: so, now uncape.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented:

You wrong your selfe too much.

Ford. True (master Page) up Gentlemen.

You shall see sport anon:

Follow

Follow me Gentlemen.

Evan. This is fery fantasticali humors and jealousies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no-the fashion of France :
It is not jealous in France.—

Exeunt.

Page. Nay follow him (Gentlemen) see the yssue of his searck.

Mis. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

Mis. Ford. I know not which pleases me better,
That my husband is deceived, or Sir John.

Mis. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband askt who was in the basket?

Mis. Ford. I am halfe affraid he will have need of washing: so throwing him into the water, will doe him a benefit.

Mis. Page. Hang him dishonest rascall: I would all of the same straine, were in the same distresse.

Mis. Ford. I thinke my husband hath some speciall suspicion of Falstaffes being heere: I never saw him so grosse in his jealousie till now.

Mis. Page. I will lay a plot to try that, and we will yet have more trickes with Falstaffes: his dissolute disceale will scarce obey this medicine.

Mis. Ford. Shall we send that foolish Carion, Mist. Quickly to him, and excuse his throwing into the water, and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mis. Page. We will doe it: let him be sent for to morrow by eight a clocke to have amends. Enter All.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragg'd of that he could not compass.

Mis. Page. Heard you that?

Mis. Ford. You use me well, Mist. Ford? doe you?

Ford. I, I doe so.

Mis. Page. Heaven make you better then your thoughts Ford. Amen.

Mi. Pa. You doe your selfe mighty wrong (M. Ford)

Ford. I, I: I must beare it.

Ev. If there be any pody in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the pressies: heaven forgive my finnes.

Caius. Be gar, nor I too: there is no-bodies.

Page. Fy, fy, M. Ford, are you not asham'd? What spirit, what divell suggests this imagination? I would not ha your distemper in this kind, for the welth of Windsor castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault (M. Page) I suffer for it.

Evan. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest a o'mans, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Cai. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well, I promis'd you a dinner: come, come, walke in the Parke, I pray you pardon me: I will hereafter make knowne to you why I have done this— Come wife, come Mi. Page, I pray you pardon me. Pray hartly pardon me.

Page. Let's go in Gentlemen, but (trust me) we'll mocke him: I doe invite you to morrow morning to my house to breattfast: after we'll a Birding together, I have a fine Hawke for the bush. Shall it be so:

Ford. Anything.

Ev. If there is one, I shall make two in the Company.

Cai. If there be one, or two, I shall make a-theturd.

Ford. Pray you goe, M. Page.

Evan. I pray you now remembrance to morrow on the lowlie knave, mine Host.

Cai. Dat is good by gar, with all my heart.

Ev. A lowlie knave, to have his gibes, and his mockeries.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Fenton, Anne Page, Shallow, Slender, Quickly, Page, Mis. Page.

Fen. I see I cannot get thy fathers love,
Therefore no more turne me to him (sweet Nan.)

Anne. Alas, how then?

Fen. Why thou must be thy selfe.
He doth object, I am too great of birth,
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seeke to heale it onely by his wealth.

Besides these, other barres he layes before me,
My Riots past, my wilde Societies,
And tels me 'tis a thing impossible
I should love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be he tells you true.

Fen. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come,
Albeit I will confesse, thy fathers wealth
Was the first motive that I woo'd thee (Anne):
Yet wooing thee, I found thee of more vauew
Then stampes in Gold, or summes in sealed bagges:
And 'tis the very riches of thy selfe,
That now I layme at.

An. Gentle M. Fenton,
Yet seeke my fathers love, still seeke it fir,
If opportunity and humblest suite
Cannot attaine it, why then harke you hither.

Shal. Breake their talke Mist. Quickly,
My Kinsman shall speake for himselfe.

Slen. He make a shaft or a bolt ou'e, slid, tis but ventu-

Shal. Be not dismaid. (ring.)

Slen. No, she shall not dismay me:

I care not for that, but that I am affeard.

Qui. Hark ye, M. Slender would speake a word with you

An. I come to him. This is my fathers choyce:

O what a world of vilde ill-favour'd fales

Lookes handsome in three hundred pounds a yeere?

Qui. And how do's good Master Fenton?

Pray you a word with you.

Shal. Shee's comming: to her Coz.

O boy, thou hadst a father.

Slen. I had a father (M. An.) my uncle can tel you good jests of him: pray you Vncle, tel Mist. Anne the jest how my father stole two Geese out of a Pen, good Vnckle.

Shal. Mist. Anne, my Cozen loves you.

Slen. I thar I doe, as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintaine you like a Gentlewoman.

Slen. I thar I will, come cut and long-taile, under the degree of a Squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jo ynture.

Anne. Good Master Shallow let him wooe for himselfe.

Shal. Marry I thanke you for it: I thanke you for that good comfort: shee calls you (Coz) He leave you.

Anne. Now Master Slender.

Slen. Now good Mist. Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? Odd's-hart-lings, that's a pretty jest indeed: I ne're made my Will yet (I thanke Heaven) I am not such a sickely creature, I give Heaven praise.

E 2

a. Anne.

Anne. I meane (M. Slender) what would you with me?
Slen. Truly, for mine owne part, I would little or nothing with you: your father and my uncle hath made motions: if it be my lucke, so: if not, happy man be his dole, they can tell you how things goe, better then I can: you may aske your father, heere he comes.

Page. Now Master Slender; Love him daughter Anne. Why how now? What does Master Fenton heare? You wrong me Sir, thus still to haunt my house. I told you Sir, my daughter is disposd of.

Fen. Nay Master Page, be not impatient.

Mis. Page. Good Master Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fen. Sir, will you heare me?

Page. No, good Master Fenton.

Come Master Shallow: Come sonne Slender, in; Knowing my wind, you wrong me (Master Fenton).

Qui. Speake to Mistress Page.

Fen. Good Mistress Page, for that I love your daughter In such a righteous fashion as I doe, Perforce, against all checkes, rebukes, and manners, I must advance the colours of my love, And not retire. Let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, doe not marry me to yond foole.

Mis. Page. I meane it not, I seeke you a better husband.

Qui. That's my Master, Master Doctor.

Anne. Alas I had rather be fet quicke i'th earth, And bow'd to death with Turnips.

Mis. Page. Come, trouble not your selfe good Master Fenton, I will not be your friend, nor enemy: My daughter will I question how she loves you, And as I find her, so am I affected: Till then, farewell Sir, she must needs goe in, Her father will be angry.

Fen. Farewell gentle Mistress: farewell Nan.

Qui. This is my doing now; Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a Foole, and a Physitian: Looke on Master Fenton, this is my doing.

Fen. I thanke thee: and I pray thee once to night, Give my sweet Nan this Ring: there's for thy pains. Exit.

Qui. Now heaven send thee good fortune, a kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet, I would my Master had Mistress Anne, or I would Master Slender had her: or (in foorth) I would Master Fenton had her; I will do what I can for them all three, for so I have promis'd, and Ile be as good as my word, but speciously for Master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaffe from my two Mistresses: what a beast am I to slacke it. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Falstaffe, Bardolfe, Quickly, Ford.

Fal. Bardolfe I say.

Bar. Heere Sir.

Fal. Goe, fetch me a quart of Sacke, put a tost in't. Have I liv'd to be carryed in a Basket like a barrow of butchers Offall? and to be throwne in the Thames? Wel, if I be serv'd such another trick, Ile have my braines 'rane out and butter'd, and give them to a dogge for a New-yeares gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drown'd a blind bitches Puppies, fiftene i'th litter: and you may know by my fize, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking: if the bottome were as deepe as hell, I should downe. I had beene drown'd, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow: a death that I abhorre: for the water swelles a man; and what a thing should I have beene, when I had beene swel'd? I should have beene a Mountaine of Mummy.

Bar. Here's Mistress Quickly, Sir to speake with you.

Fal. Come, let me poure in some Sacke to the Thames water: for my bell's as cold as if I had swallow'd snow-balls, for pilles to coole the reins. Call her in.

Bar. Come in woman.

Enter Quickly.

Qui. By your leave: I cry you mercy? Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Take away these Chalicees:

Goe, brew me a pottle of Sacke finely.

Bard. With Egges, Sir?

Fal. Simple of it selfe: Ile go Pullet-Sperme in my brewage. How now?

Qui. Marry Sir, I come to your worship from Mi. Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford? I have had Ford enough: I was throwne into the Ford; I have my belly full of Ford.

Qui. Alas the day (good-heart) that was not her fault: she do's so take on with her men; they mistooke their correction. (promise.)

Fal. So did I mine, to build upen a foolish Womans

Qui. Well, she laments sir for it, that it would yerne your heart to see it: her husband goes this morning a birding; she desires you once more to come to her, betweene eight and nine: I must carry her word quickly, she'll make you amends I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her, tell her so; and bid her thinke what a man is: Let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Qui. I will tell her.

Fal. Doe so. Betweene nine and ten saist thou?

Qui. Eight and nine Sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not misse her.

Qui. Peace be with you sir.

Exit.

Fal. I marvaile I heare not of Master Broome: he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well. Oh, heere be comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Blesse you Sir.

Fal. Now Master Broome, you come to know What hath past betweene me, and Ford's wife.

Ford. That indeed (Sir John) is my businesse.

Fal. Master Broome I will not lye to you, I was at her house the houre she appointed me.

Ford. And sped you Sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly Master Broome.

Ford. How so sir, did she change htr determination?

Fal. No (M. Broome) but the peaking Cornuto her husband (M. Broome) dwelling in a continuall larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embrast, kist, protested, and (as it were) spoke the prologue of our Comedy: and at his heeles, a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and (forsooth) to ferch his house for his wives love.

Ford. What? While you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall heare. As good lucke would have it, comes in one Mistress Page, gives intelligence of Ford's approach: and in her invention, and Ford's wives distraction, they convey'd me into a bucke-basket!

Fal.

Ford. A Buck-basket?

Fal. Yea: a Buck-basket: ram'd me in with foule Shirts and Smockes, Socks, foule Stockings, greasie Napkins, that (Master Broome) there was the rankest compound of villanous smell, that ever offended nostrill.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall heare (Master Broome) what I have suffered, to bring this woman to evill, for your good: Being thus cram'd in the Basket, a couple of Fords Knaves, his hindes, were cald forth by their Mistris, to carry me in the name of foule Cloathes to Datchet-lane: they tooke me on their shoulders: met the jealous Knave their Master in the doore; who ask'd them once or twice what they had in their Basket? I quak'd for feare lest the Lunatique Knave would have search'd it: but Fate (ordaining he should be a Cuckold) held his hand: well, on went he, for a search, and away went I for foule Cloathes: But marke the sequell (Master Broome) I suffered the pangs of three severall deaths: First, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten Bell-weather: Next to be compass'd like a good Bilbo in the circumference of a Pecke, hilt to point, heele to head. And then to be stopt in like a strong distillation with stinking Cloathes, that fretted in their owne grease: thinke of that, a man of my Kidney; thinke of that that am as subject to heate as butter; a man of continuall dissolution, and thaw: it was a miracle to scape suffocation. And in the height of this Bath (when I was more then halfe stew'd in grease (like a Dutchdise) to be throwne into the Thames, and coold, glowing hot, in that serge like a Horseshoe; thinke of that: hissing hot, thinke of that (Master Broome.)

Ford. In good sadness Sir, I am sorry, that for my sake you have sufferd all this.
My suite then is desperate: You'll undertake her no more?

Fal. Master Broome: I will be throwne into Etna, as I have bene into Thames, ere I will leave her thus; her husband in this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another ambassie of meeting: 'twixt eight and nine is the houre (Master Broome.)

Ford. 'Tis past eight already Sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to my appointment: Come to me at your convenient leisure, & you shall know how I speed: and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: adieu, you shall have her (Master Broome) Master Broome, you shall cuckold Ford. Exit.

Ford. Hum: ha? is this a vision? is this a dream? doe I sleepe? Master Ford awake, awake Master Ford; there's a hole made in your best coate (Master Ford) this 'tis to be married; this 'tis to have Lynnen, and Buck-baskets: Well, I will proclaime my selfe what I am: I will now take the Leacher: hee is at my house: hee cannot scape me: 'tis impossible he should: hee cannot creepe into a halfe-penny purse, nor into a Pepper-boxe: But least the Divell that guides him, should aide him, I will search impossible places: though what I am, I cannot avoide; yet to be what I would not, shall not make me tame: If I have hornes, to make one mad, let the proverbe goe with me, He be hornemad.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Mistris Page, Quickly, William, Evans.

Mis. Page. Is he at M. Fords already think'it thou?

Qui. Sure he is by this; or will be presently; but truly he is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Mistris Ford desires you to come sodainely.

Mis. Page. He be with her by and by: He but bring my yong-man here to Schoole: looke where his Master comes; 'tis a playing day I see: how now Sir Hugh, no Schoole to day?

Eva. No: Master Slender is let the Boyes leave to play.

Qui. Blessing of his heart.

Mis. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband sayes my sonne profits nothing in the world at his booke: I pray you aske him some questions in his Accidence.

Eva. Come hither William; hold up your head; come.

Mis. Page. Come on sirha, hold up your head; answer your Master, be not afraid.

Evan. William, how many Numbers is in Nownes?

Will. Two.

Qui. Truly, I thought there had bene one Number more, because they say od's-Nownes.

Evan. Peace, your tatlings. What is (Faire) William?

Will. Pulcher.

Qui. Poulcats? there are fairer things then Poulcats, sure.

Evan. You are a very simplicity o'man: I pray you peace. What is (Lapis) William?

Will. A stone.

Evan. And what is a stone (William)?

Will. A Peeble.

Evan. No; it is Lapis: I pray you remember in your praine.

Will. Lapis.

Evan. That is a good William: what is he (William) that do's lend Articles.

Will. Articles are borrowed of the Pronoun; and be thus declined, Singulariter nominativo, hic, hac, hoc.

Eva. Nominativo hic, hac, hoc: pray you marke: genitivo huius: Well, what is your Accusativo-case?

Will. Accusativo hinc.

Evan. I pray you have your remembrance (child) Accusativo, hinc, hang, hog.

Qui. Hang-hog, is latten for Bacon, I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your prables (o'man) What is the Vocativo case (William)?

Will. O, Vocativo, O.

Evan. Remember William, Vocativo, is caret.

Qui. And that's a good roote,

Evan. O'man, forbear.

Mis. Page. Peace.

Evan. What is your Genitive case pray all (William)?

Will. Genitive case?

Evan. I.

Will. Genitive harum, harum, harum.

Qui. Vengeance of Ginyes case; fie on her: never name her (child) if she be a whore.

Eva. For shame o'man.

Qui. You doe ill to teach a bechild such words: hee teaches him to hic, and to hac; which they'll doe fast enough of themselves, and to call horum; fie upon you.

Evan. O man, art thou Lunatic? Hast thou no understandings for thy Cafes, and the numbers of the Genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures, as I would desires.

Mis. Page. Prethee hold thy peace.

Evan. Shew me now (William) some declensions of your Pronounes.

Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is Qui, que, quod; if you forget your Quies, your Ques, and your Quods, you must be preaches: Goe your wayes and play, go.

M. Pag. He is a better scholler then I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag-memory: Farewell M. Pa.

Mis. Page. Adieu good Sir Hugh.

Get you home boy, Come we stay too long. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe, Mis. Ford, Mis. Page, Servants, Ford, Page, Caius, Evans, Shallow.

Fal. Mistris Ford, Your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance; I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requitall to a haire's breadth, not onely Mistris Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it: but are you sure of your husband now?

Mis. Ford. He's a birding (sweet sir John.)

Mis. Page. What ho, gossip Ford: what ho.

Mis. Ford. Step into th' chamber, Sir John. Enter.

Mis. Page. How now (sweet heart) who's at home besides your selfe?

Mis. Ford. Why none but mine owne people.

Mis. Page. Indeed?

Mis. Ford. No certainly: speake louder.

Mis. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have no body here.

Mis. Ford. Why?

Mis. Page. Why woman, your husband is in his old lines againe: he so takes on yonder with my husband, so railes against all married mankind; so curses all Eues daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffetts himselfe on the forehead: crying peere-out, peere out, that any madnesse I ever yet beheld, seem'd but tame-nesse, civility, and patience to this his distemper he is in now: I am glad the fat Knight is not heere.

Mis. Ford. Why, do's he talke of him?

Mis. Page. Of none but him, and sweares he was carried out the last time he search'd for him, in a Basket: Protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawne him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion: But I am glad the Knight is not here; now he shall see his owne foolery.

Mis. Ford. How neere is he Mistris Page?

Mis. Pag. Hard by, at streets end; he will be here anon.

Mis. Ford. I am undone, the Knight is heere.

Mis. Page. Why then you are utterly sham'd, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you? Away with him, away with him: Better shame, then murder.

Mis. Ford. Which way should he goe? How should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket againe?

Fal. No, ile come no more i'th Basket: Enter. May I not goe out ere he come?

Mis. Page. Alas: three of Master Ford's brothers watch the doore with Pistols, that none shall issue out: otherwise you might slip away ere he came: But what make you heere?

Fal. What shall I doe? Ile creepe up into the chimney.

Mis. Ford. There they alwayes use to discharge their Birding-peeces: creepe into the Kill-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mis. Ford. He will seeke there on my word: Neither Presse, Coffe, Chest, Trunke, Well, Vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his Note: There is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. Ile goe out then.

Mis. Ford. If you goe out in your owne semblance, you dye Sir John, unlesse you goe out disguis'd. How might we disguise him?

Mis. Page. Alas the day I know not, there is no woman's gowne bigge enough for him: otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kercheife, and so escape.

Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather then a mischeife.

Mis. Ford. My Maids Aunt the fat woman of Brainford, has a gowne above.

Mis. Page. On my word it will serve him: she's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too: run up Sir John.

Mis. Ford. Goe, goe, sweet Sir John: Mistris Page and I will looke some linnen for your head.

Mis. Page. Quicke, quicke, we'll come dresse you straight: put on the gowne the while. Exit.

Mis. Ford. I would my husband would meete him in this shap: he cannot abide the old woman of Brainford; he sweares she's a witch, forbad her my house, and hath threatned to beate her.

Mis. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husbands cudgell: and the divell guide his cudgell afterwards.

Mis. Ford. But is my husband comming?

Mis. Page. I in good sadnesse is he, and talkes of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mis. Ford. We'll try that: for Ile appoint my men to carry the basket againe, to meete him at the doore with it, as they did last time.

Mis. Page. Nay, but hee'll be heere presently: let's go dresse him like the witch of Brainford.

Mis. Ford. Ile first direct my men, what they shall doe with the basket: Goe up, ile bring linnen for him straight.

Mis. Page. Hang him dishonest Varlet, We cannot misuse him enough: We'll leave a prooffe by that which we will doo, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We doe not act, that often, jest, and laugh, 'Tis old, but true, still Swine eates all the draugh.

Mis. Ford. Goe Sirs, take the basket againe on your shoulders: your Master is hard at doore: if he bid you set it downe, obey him: quickly, dispatch. Enter Ser.

1 Ser. Come, come, take it up.

2 Ser. Pray heaven it be not full of the Knight againe.

1 Ser. I hope not, I had as leife beare so much Lead.

Ford. I, but if it prove true (Master Page) have you any way then to unfoole me againe? Set downe the basket villaine: some body call my wife: Youth in a Basket: Oh you Panderly Rascals, there's a knot: a ging, a packe, a conspiracie against me: Now shall the divell be ashamed. What wife I say: Come, come forth: behold what honest nelt cloathes you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes M. Ford: you are not to goe loose any longer, you must be pinnion'd.

Evans. Why, this is Lunatickes: this is mad as a mad dog.

Shal. Indeed M. Ford, this is not well indeed.

Ford. So say I too sir, come hither Mistris Ford, Mistris Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the vertuous creature, that hath the jealous foole to her husband: I suspect without cause (Mistris) doe I?

Mist. Ford. Heaven be my witnesse you doe, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said brazen-face, hold it out: Come forth sirrah.

Page. This passes.

Mist. Ford. Are you not asham'd, let the cloathes alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Evans. 'Tis unreasonable, will you take up your wives cloathes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the basket I say.

M. Ford. Why man, why?

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one convey'd out of my house yesterday in this basket: why may not he be there againe? in my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true, my jealousy is reasonable, plucke mee out all the linnen.

Mist. Ford. If you finde a man there, he shall dye a Fleas death.

Page. Here's no man.

Shal. By my fidelity this is not well M. Ford: This wrongs you.

Evans. M. Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your owne heart: this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, hee's not here I seeke for.

Page. No, nor no where else but in your braine.

Ford. Helpe to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seeke, shew no colour for my extremity: Let me for ever be your Table-sport: Let them say of me as jealous as Ford, that search'd a hollow Wall-nut for his Wives Lemman. Satisfie me once more, once more search with me.

M. Ford. What hoa (Mistris Page) come you and the old Woman downe: my husband will come into the Chamber.

Ford. Old woman? what old woman's that?

Mist. Ford. Why it is my Maids Aunt of Brainford.

Ford. A Witch, a Queane, an old cozening Queanee: Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands do's she? We are simple men, we doe not know what's brought to passe under the profession of Fortune-telling. She workes by Charmes, by Spels, by th'Figure, and such dawbry as this is, beyond our Element: wee know nothing. Come downe you Witch, you Hagge you, come downe I say.

Mist. Ford. Nay, good sweet husband, good Gentlemen, let him not strike the old Woman. Enter Fal.

Mist. Page. Come Mother Prat, Come give me your hand.

Ford. Ile Prasher: Out of my doore you Witch, you Rag, you Baggage, you Poultar, you Runnion, out, out: Ile conjure you, Ile Fortune-tell you. Exit Fal.

Mist. Page. Are you not asham'd?

I thinke you have kil'd the poore woman.

Mist. Ford. Nay he will doe it, 'tis a goodly credite for you.

Ford. Hang her Witch.

Evans. By yea, and no, I thinke the o'man is a Witch indeed: I like not when a o'man has a great peard; I spie a great peard under his Muffler.

Ford. Will you follow Gentlemen, I beseech you follow: see but the issue of my jealousy: If I cry out thus upon no traile, never trust me when I open againe.

Page. Let's obey his humour a little further:

Come Gentlemen.

Exeunt.

Mist. Page. Trust me he beate him most pitifully.

M. Ford. Nay by th'Masse that hee did not: hee beate him most unpittifully, me thought.

Mist. Page. Ile have the cudgell hallow'd, and hung ore the Altar, it hath done meritorious service.

Mist. Ford. What thinke you? May we with the warrant of woman-hood, and the witnesse of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

M. Page. The spirit of wantonnesse is sure scar'd out of him, if the Divell have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I thinke, in the way of waste, attempt us againe.

Mist. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how wee have served him?

Mist. Page. Yes, by all meanes: if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husbands braines: if they can finde in their hearts, the poore unvertuous far Knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.

Mist. Ford. Ile warrant they'll have him publicly sham'd, and methinkes there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly sham'd.

Mist. Page. Come, to the Forge with it, then shape it: I would not have things coole: Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Host and Bardolfe.

Bar. Sir, the Germane desires to have three of your horses: the Duke himselfe will be to morrow at Court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What Duke should that be comes so secretly? I heare not of him in the Court: let me speake with the Gentlemen, they speake English?

Bar. I Sir? Ile call him to you.

Host. They shall have my horses, but Ile make them pay: Ile sawce them, they have had my houses a weeke at command: I have turn'd away my other guests, they must come off, Ile sawce them, come. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistris Page, Mistris Ford, Ford, and Evans.

Evans. 'Tis one of the best discretions of a o'man as ever I did looke upon.

Page. And did he send you both these Letters at an instant?

Mist. Page. Within a quarter of an houre.

Ford. Pardon me (wife) henceforth do what thou wilt: I rather will suspect the Sunne with gold, Then thee with wantonnesse; Now doth thy honor stand

(In

(In him that was of late an Hereticke)
As firme of faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well, no more:
Be not extreame in submission as in offence,
But let our plot goe forward: Let our wives
Yet once againe (to make us publike sport)
Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow,
Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way then that they spoke of.

Page. How? to send him word they'll meet him in the Parke at midnight? Fie, fie, he'll never come.

Evans. You say he hath been throwne into the River: and has been grievously peaten, as an old 'oman: me thinkes there should be terrours in him, that he should not come:
Methinkes his flesh is punish'd, hee shall have no desires.

Page. So thinke I too.

M. Ford. Devise but how you'll use him when he comes:
And let us two devise to bring him thither.

M. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Horne the Hunter (sometime a Keeper here in Windsor Forrest)
Doth all the Winter time at still of midnight
Walke round about an Oake, with great ragg'd hornes,
And there he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle,
And makes milch-kine yeeld blood, and shakes a chaine
In a most hideous and dreadfull manner:
You have heard of such a spirit, and well you know
The superstitious idle-headed-Eld
Receiv'd, and did deliver to our age
This tale of Horne the Hunter for a truth.

Page. Why yet there want not many that doe feare
In deepe of night to walke by this Hornes Oake:
But what of this?

Mis. Ford. Marry this is our devise,
That Falstaffe at that Oake shall meet with us.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
And in this shape when you have brought him thither,
What shall be done with him? What is your plot?

M. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and Nan Page (my daughter) and my little sonne, thus:
And three or foure more of their growth, wee'll dresse
Like Vrchins, Ouphes, and Fairies, greene and white,
With rounds of waxen Tapers on their heads,
And Rattles in their hands; upon a sodaine,
As Falstaffe, she, and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a Saw-pit rush at once
With some diffused song: Vpon their sight
We two, in great amazednesse will flye:
Then let them all encircle him about,
And Fairy-like to pinch the unclean Knight;
And aske him why that houre of Fairy Revell,
In their so-sacred pathes, he dares to tread
In shape prophane.

Ford. And till he tell the truth,
Let the surposed Fairies pinch him sound,
And burne him with their Tapers.

M. Pa. The truth being knowne,
We'll all present our selves; dis-horne the spirit,
And mocke him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must
Be practis'd well to this, or they'll nev'r doo't.

Evans. I will teach the children their behaviours: and I will be like a Jacke-an-Apes also, to burne the Knight with my Taber.

Ford. That will be excellent,
He goe buy them vizards.

Mis. Page. My Nan shall be the Queene of all the Fairies, finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That filke will I goe buy, and in that time
Shall M. Slender steale my Nan away,
And marry her at Eaton: goe, send to Falstaffe straight.

Ford. Nay, Ile to him againe in name of Brooms,
Hee'll tell me all his purpose: sure hee'll come.

Mi. Pa. Feare not you that: Goe get us properties
And tricking for your Fairies.

Evans. Let us about it,
It is admirable pleasures, and ferry honest knaveries.

Mis. Page. Goe Mis. Ford,
Send quickly to Sir John, to know his minde:
Ile to the Doctor, he hath my good will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page:
That Slender (though well landed) is an Ideot:
And he, my husband best of all affects:
The Doctor is well monyed, and his friends
Potent at Court: he, none but he shall have her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

Exit.

Scena quinta.

Enter Host, Simple, Falstaffe, Bardolfe, Evans, Caius, Quickly.

Host. What woulst thou have? (Boore) what? (thick skin) speake, breathe, discusse: brieft, short, quicke, snap.

Sim. Marry sir, I come to speake with Sir John Fal- staffe from M. Slender.

Host. There's his Chamber, his House, his Castle, his standing bed and truckle bed: 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigall, fresh and new: go, knock and call: hee'll speake like an Anthrophaginian unto thee: Knocke I say.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman gone up into his chamber: Ile be so bold as stay Sir till she come downe: I come to speake with her indeed.

Host. Ha? A fat woman? The Knight may be robb'd:
Ile call, Bully-Knight, Bully-Sir John: speake from thy Lungs Military: Art thou there? It is thine Host, thine Ephesian calls.

Fal. How now, mine Host?

Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar tarries the coming downe of thy fat woman: Let her descend (Bully) let her descend: my Chambers are honourable: Fie, privacy? Fie.

Fal. There was (mine Host) an old fat woman even now with me, but she's gone.

Sim. Pray you sir, was't not the wife woman of Brainford?

Fal. I marry was it (Mussel-shel) what would you with her?

Sim. My Master (Sir) my Master Slender, sent to her seeing her goe through the streets, to know (Sir) whether one Nim (Sir) that beguild him of a chaine, had the chaine, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what sayes she, I pray Sir?

Fal. Marry she sayes, that the very same man that be-guil'd Master Slender of his Chaine, cozen'd him of it.

Simp. I would I could have spoken with the woman her

her selfe, I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Hof. I, come: quicke.

Fal. I may not conceale them (sir.)

Hof. Conceale them, or thou di'st.

Sim. Why sir, they were nothing but about Mistris Anne Page, to know if it were my Masters fortune to have her or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What Sir,

Fal. To have her, or no: goe; say the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so sir?

Fal. I sir: like who more bold.

Sim. I thanke your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings.

Hof. Thou art clearkly: thou art clearkly (sir John) was there a wife woman with thee?

Fal. I, that there was (mine Hof) one that hath taught me more wit, then ever I learn'd before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bar. Out alas (sir) cozonage: meere cozonage.

Hof. Where be my horses? speake well of them varletto.

Bar. Run away with the cozoners: for so soone as I came beyond Eaton, they threw me off from behinde one of them in a flow of myre; and set spurres, and away; like three *Germane-Diuel*s; three Doctor Fau-stuffs.

Hof. They are gone but to meet the Duke (villaine) doe not say they be fied: Germanes are honest men.

Enter Evans.

Ev. Where is mine Hof?

Hof. What is the matter sir?

Evans. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to towne, tels me there is three Cozen-Iermans, that has cozend all the Hofs of Reading, of Maidenhead; of Colebrooke, of horses and money: I tell you for good will (looke you) you are wise, and full of gibes, and vouting-stockes: and 'tis not convenient you should be cozoned. Fare you well. Exit. Enter Caius.

Cai. Ver'is mine Hof de Lartiere?

Hof. Here (Master Doctor) in perplexity and doubtfull delemma.

Cai. I cannot tell vat is dat: but it is tell-a-me, dat you make grand preparation for a Duke de Lamany: by my trot: der is no Duke dat the Court is know, to come: I tell you for good will: adieu. Exit.

Hof. Huy and cry (villaine) goe: assist me Knight, I am undone: flye, run: hu and cry (villaine) I am undone. Exit.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozen'd, for I have beene cozened and beaten too: if it should come to the care of the Court, how I have beene transform'd; and how my transformation hath beene wash'd and cudgel'd, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor Fishermens boots with me: I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as creft-falne as a dri'd Peare: I never prosper'd, since I forswore my selfe at Primero: well, if my wind were but long enough; I would repent: Now? Whence come you?

Enter Quickly.

Qu. From the two parties forsooth.

Fal. The Divell take one party, and his Dam the other: and so they shall be both bestow'd; I have suffer'd more for their sakes; more than the villanous inconstancy of mans disposition is able to beare.

Qu. And have not they suffer'd? Yes, I warrant, speciously one of them; Mistris Ford (good heart) is beaten blacke and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou mee of blacke and blue? I was beaten my selfe into all the colours of the Rainebow: and I was like to be apprehended for the Witch of Brainford, but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old Woman deliver'd mee, the Knave Constable had set me ith' Stockes, ith' common Stockes for a Witch.

Qu. Sir, let me speake with you in your Chamber, you shall heare how things goe, and (I warrant) to your content: here is a letter will say somewhat: (good hearts) what a-doe here is to bring you together? Sure one of you de's not serve heaven well, that you are so cross'd.

Fal. Come into my Chamber.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Fenton, Hof.

Hof. Master Fenton, talke not to mee, my minde is heavy: I will give over all.

Fen. Yet heare me speake: assist me in my purpose, And (as I am a Gentleman) Ile give thee A hundred pound in gold, more then your losse.

Hof. I will heare you (Master Fenton) and I will (at the least) keepe your counsell.

Fen. From time to time, I have acquainted you With the deare love I beare to faire Anne Page, Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection, (So farre forth, as her selfe might be her chuser) Even to my wilh; I have a letter from her Of such contents, as you will wonder at; The mirth whereof, solarded with my matter, That neither singly can be manifested Without the shew of both: for Sir John Falstaff Hath a great Scene; the image of the jest Ile shew you here at large (harke good mine Hof;) To night at Hermes Oke, just 'twixt twelve and one, Must my sweet Nan present the Faery Queene: The purpose why, is here: in which disguise While other jests are something ranke on foot; Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton Immediately to marry: She hath consented: Now Sir; Her mother, (even strong against that match And firme for Doctor Caius) hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasking of their mindes, And at the Deanry, where a Priest attends Strait marry her: to this her Mothers plot She (seemingly obedient) likewise hath Made promise to the Doctor: Now, thus it rests, Her father meanes she shall be all in white; And in that habite, when Slender fees his time To take her by the hand, and bid her goe, She shall goe with him: her Mother hath intended (The better to devote her to the Doctor; For they must all be mask'd and vizarded)

That

That quaint in greene, she shall be loose enroab'd,
With Richards-pendant, flaming 'bout her head;
And when the Doctor spies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand, and on that token,
The maid hath given consent to goe with him.

Hof. Which means she to deceive? Father, or Mother?

Fen. Both (my good Hof) to goe along with me,
And here it rests, that you'll procure the Vicar
To stay for me at Church, 'twixt twelve and one,
And in the lawfull name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony.

Hof. Well, husband your device; Ile to the Vicar,
Bring you the Maid, you shall not lacke a Priest.

Fen. So shall I evermore be bound to thee;
Besides, Ile make a present recompence. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus, Scena Prima.

Enter Falstaffe, Quickly, and Ford.

Fal. Prethee no more prating: go, Ile hold, this is the third time: I hope good lucke lies in odde numbers, Away, goe, they say there is Divinity in odde numbers, either in Nativity, chance, or death: away.

Qui. Ile provide you a chaine, and Ile doe what I can to get you a paire of hornes.

Fal. Away I say, time weares, hold up your head and mince. How now M. Broome? Master Broome, the matter will be knowne to night, or never. Be you in the Parke about midnight, at Hernes-Oake, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday (Sir) as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her (Master Broome) as you see, like a poore-old-man, but I came from her (Master Broome) like a poore-old-woman; that same Knave (Ford her husband) hath the finest mad Divell of jealousy in him (Master Broome) that ever govern'd Frenzie. I will tell you, he beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman: (for in the shape of man (Master Broome) I feare not Goliath with a Weavers beame, (because I know also, life is a Shuttle) I am in haste, goe along with mee, Ile tell you all (Master Broome:) since I pluckt Geese, plaid Trewant and whipt Top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten, till lately. Follow me, Ile tell you strange things of this Knave Ford, on whom tonight I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow, strange things in hand (M. Broome) follow. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender.

Page. Come, come: wee'll couch i'th Castle-ditch, till we see the light of our Fairies. Remember sonne Slender, my daughter.

Slen. I forsooth, I have spoke with her, and wee have a nay-word how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry Mum; she cries Budget, and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too: but what needes either your Mum, or her Budget? The white will decipher her well enough. It hath strooke ten a'clocke.

Page. The night is darke, Light and Spirits will become it well: Heaven prosper our sport. No man meanes evill but the Divell, and we shall know him by his hornes. Lets away: follow me. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Mist. Page, Mist. Ford, Caius.

Mist. Page. Mr. Doctor, my daughter is in greene, when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the Deanry, and dispatch it quickly: goe before into the Parke: we two must goe together.

Cai. I know vat I have to do, adieu. Exit.

Mist. Page. Fare you well (sir): my husband will not rejoyce so much at the abuse of Falstaffe, as he will chafe at the Doctors marrying my daughter: But 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, then a great deale of heart-broke.

Mist. Ford. Where is Nan now? and her troope of Fairies? and the Welsh Divell Herne?

Mist. Page. They are all couch'd in a pit hard by Hernes Oake, with obscur'd Lights; which at the very instant of Falstaffes and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mist. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mist. Page. If he be not amaz'd he will be mock'd: If he be amaz'd, he will be mock'd.

Mist. Ford. Wee'll betray him finely.

Mi. Pa. Against such Lewdsters, and their Lechery, Those that betray them doe no treachery.

Mist. Ford. The houre drawes on: to the Oake, to the Oake. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Evans and Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, Fairies: Come, and remember your parts: be bold (I pray you) follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-ords: doe as I bid you: Come, come, trib, trib. Exeunt.

Scena quinta.

Enter Falstaffe, Mistresse Page, Mistris Ford, Evans, Anne Page, Fairies, Page, Ford, Quickly, Slender, Fenton, Caius, Pistol.

Fal. The Windsor Bell hath stroke twelve: the Minute drawes on: Now the hot-bloodied-gods assist mee: Remember Iove, thou wast a Bull for thy Europa, Love set on thy hornes. O powerfull Love, that in some respects makes a Beast a Man: in some other, a Man, a Beast. You were also (Iupiter) a Swan, for the love of Leda: O omnipoomnipotent Love, how nere the god drew to the complexion of a Goose: a fault done first in the forme of a Beast, (O Love, a beastly fault:) and then another fault, in the semblance of a Fowle, thinke on't (Love) a fowle-fault. When godshave hot backs, what shall poore men doe? For me, I am here a Windsor Stagge, and the fattest (I thinke) i'th Forrest. Send me a coole rut-time (Love) or who can blame me to pisse my Tallow? Who comes here? my Doe?

M. Ford. Sir John? Art thou there (my Deare?) My male-Deere?

Fal. My Doe with the blacke Scut? Let the skie raine Potatoes: let it thunder, to the tune of Greene-sleeves, haile-kissing Comfits, and snow Eringoes: Let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter mee here.

M. Ford. Mistris Page is come with me (Sweetheart.)

Fal. Divi'd me like a brib'd-Bucke, each a Haunch: I will keepe my fides to my selfe, my shoulders for the fellow of this walke; and my hornes I bequeathe your husbands. Am I a Woodman, ha? Speake I like Herne the Hunter? Why, now is Cupid a childe of Conscience, he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome.

M. Page Alas, what noyse?

M. Ford. Heaven forgive our sinnes.

Fal. What should this be?

M. Ford. M. Page. Away, away.

Fal. I thinke the Divell will not have me damn'd, Least the Oyle that's in me should set hell on fire; He would never else crosse me thus.

Enter Fairies.

Qui. Fairies, blacke, gray, greene, and white, You Moone-shine Revellers, and shades of night. You Orphan heires of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your quality. Crier Hob-goblin, make the Fairy Oyes.

Pist. Elves, list your names: Silence you ayry toyes. Cricket, to Windsor Chimneyes shalt thou leape: Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and Hearths unswept, There pinch the Maides as blue as Bilbery, Our radiant Queene hates Sluts and sluttary.

Fal. They are Fairies, he that speakes to them shall die. Ile winke and couch: No man their workes must eye.

Ev. Where's Bede? Go you, and where you find a Maid That ere she sleepe hath thrice her prayers said, Raife up the Organs of her fantasie, Sleepe she as sound as carelesse infancy, But those as sleepe and thinke not on their sinnes, Pinch them armes, legs, backs, shoulders, sides and shinnes.

Qu. About, about:

Search Windsor Castle (Elves) within, and out. Strew good lucke (Ouphes) on every sacred roome, That it may stand till the perpetuall doome, In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit, Worthy the Owner, and the Owner it. The severall Chaires of Order, looke you scowre With juyce of Balme; and every precious flowre, Each faire Instalment, Coat, and sev'ral Crest, With loyall Blazon evermore be blest.

And Nightly-meadow-Fairies, looke you sing Like to the Garters. Compasse in a Ring, Th'expressure that it beares: Greene let it be, More fertile-fresh then all the field to see:

And, Hony Soit Qui Mal-y-Pense, write In Emrold-tuffes, Flowres purple, blue, and white, Like Saphire-pearle, and rich Embroiderie, Buckled below faire Knight-hoods bending knee; Fairies use Flowers for their Characterie, Away, disperse: But till 'tis one a clocke, Our dance of custome round about the Oke Of Herne the Hunter, let us not forget.

Ev. Pray you locke hand in hand, your selves in order set: And twenty Glow-wormes shall our Lanthornes be To guide our Measure round about the tree. But stay, I smell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welsh Fairy, Least he transforme me to a peece of Cheese.

Pist. Vilde worme, thou wast ore-look'd even in thy birth.

Qu. With tryall-fire touch me his finger end; If he be chaste, the flame will backe descend And turne him to no paine: but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A triall, come.

Evans. Come, will this wood take fire?

Fal. Oh, oh, oh.

Qu. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire. About him (Fairies) sing a scornfull Rime, And as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

The Song.

Fie on sinfull phantasie: Fie on Lust and Luxurie:

Lust is but a bloody fire, kindled with unchaste desire,

Fed in heart whose flames aspire,

As thoughts doe blow them higher and higher.

Pinch him (Fairies) mutually: pinch him for his Villanie.

Pinch him, and burne him, and turne him about,

Till Candles, and Starlight, and Moone-shine be out.

Page. Nay doe not flye, I thinke we have watcht you now: Will none but Herne the Hunter serve your turne?

M. Page. I pray you come, hold up the jest no higher. Now (good Sir John) how like you Windsor Wives? See you these husbands? Doe not these faire Okes Become the Forrest better then the Towne?

Ford. Now Sir, who's a Cuckold now?

M. Broome, Falstaff's a Knave, a Cuckoldly Knave, Heere are his hornes Master Broome:

And Master Broome, he hath enjoyed nothing of Fords, but his Buck-basket, his Cudgell, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to M. Broome, his horses are arrested for it, M. Broome.

M. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill lucke: we could never meet: I will never take you for my Love againe, but I will alwayes count you my Deere.

Fal. I doe begin to perceive that I am made an Ass.

Ford. I, and an Oxe too: both the proofes are extant.

Fal. And these are not Fairies:

I was three or foure times in the thought they were not Fairies, and yet the guiltinesse of my minde, the sodaine surprize of my powers, drove the grossenesse of the foppery into a receiv'd believe, in despite of the teeth of all rime and reason, that they were Fairies. See now how wit may be made a lacke-a-Lent, when 'tis upon ill imployment.

Evans. Sir John Falstaffe, serve Got, and leave your desires, and Fairies will not pinse you.

Ford. Well said Fairy Hugh.

Evans. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife againe, till thou art able to wooe her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my braine in the Sunne and dri'd it, that it wants matter to prevent so grosse ore-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch Goattoo? Shall I have a Coxcombe of Frize? 'Tis time I were choak'd with a peece of toasted Cheefe.

Evans. Seefe is not good to give putter; your pelly is all putter.

Fal. Seefe and Putter? Have I liv'd to stand at the taunt of one that makes Fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of Lust and late-walking through the Realme.

Mist. Page. Why Sir Iohn, doe you thinke, though we would have thrust vertue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given our selves without scruple to Hell, that ever the Divell could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a Hodge-pudding? A bag of Flax?

Mist. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, wither'd, and of intollerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Sathan?

Page. And as poore as Iob.

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Evans. And given to Fornications, and to Tavernes, and Sacke, and Wine, and Metheglins, and to drinkings, and swearing, and staring? Pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your Theame: you have the start of me, I am dejected: I am not able to answer the Welch Flannell, Ignorance it selfe is a Plummert ore are, use me as you will.

Ford. Marry sir, wee'l bring you to Windsor to one M^r Broome, that you have cozon'd of money, to whom you should have beene a Pander: over and above that you have suffer'd, I thinke, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerefull Knight, thou shalt eat a Posset to night at my house, where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: Tell her M^r Slender hath married her daughter.

Mist. Page. Doctors doubt that;
If Anne Page be my daughter, she is (by this) Doctor Caius wife.

Enter Slender.

Slender. Whoa hoe, hoe, Father Page.

Page. Sonne? How now? How now sonne, Have you dispatch'd?

Slender. Dispatch'd? Ile make the best in Glostershire know on't: would I were hang'd la, else.

Page. Of what, sonne?

Slender. I came yonder at Eaton to marry Mistris Anne Page, and shee's a great lubberly Boy. If it had not beene i't Church, I would have swing'd him, or he should have swing'd mee. If I did not thinke it had beene Anne Page, would I might never stirre, and 'tis a Post-masters Boy.

Page. Vpon my life then, you tooke the wrong.

Slender. What need you tell me that? I thinke so, when I tooke a Boy for a Girl: If I had beene married to him, (for all he was in womans apparell) I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your owne folly, Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter By her garments?

Slender. I went to her in greene, and cryed Mum, and she cry'd Budget, as Anne and I had appointed, and yet it was not Anne, but a Post-masters Boy.

Mist. Page. Good George be not angry, I knew of your purpose: turn'd my daughter into white, and indeed shee is now with the Doctor at the Deanry, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Ver is Mistris Page: by gar I am cozon'd, I ha married one Garsoon, a Boe; oon Pefant, by gar. A Boy, it is not Anne Page, by gar, I am cozon'd.

M. Pa. Why? did you take her in white?

Caius. I be gar, and 'tis a Boy: be gar, Ile raise all Windsor.

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me, here comes M. Fenton.
How now M. Fenton?

An. Pardon good father, good my mother pardon.

Page. Now Mistris:

How chance you went not with M. Slender?

M. Pa. Why went you not with M^r. Doctor Maid?

Fen. You doe amaze her: heare the truth of it, You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love: The truth is, she and I (long since contracted) Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve us: Th'offence is holy that she hath committed, And this deceit loses the name of craft, Of disobedience, or undutious title, Since therein she doth evitate and shun A thousand irreligious cursed houres Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amaz'd, here is no remedy: In Love, the heavens themselves doe guide the state, Money buyes Lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have tane a speciall stand to strike at me, that your Arrow hath glanc'd.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy, what cannot be eschew'd, must be embrac'd.

Fal. When night-dogs runne, all sorts of Deere are chac'd.

M. Pa. Well, I will muse no further: M. Fenton, Heaven give you many, many merry dayes: Good husband, let us every one goe home, And laugh this sport ore by a countrey fire, Sir Iohn and all.

Ford. Let it be so (Sir Iohn):
To Master Broome, you yet shall hold your word,
For he, to night, shall lye with Mistris Ford. Exeunt.

MEASURE

For Measure.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords.

Duke.

Escalus.

My Lord.

Duke. Of government, the properties to unfold,
Would seeme in me t' affect speech and discourse.

Since I am put to know, that your owne Science
Exceedes (in that) the lists of all advice
My strength can give you : Then no more remaines
But that, to your iusticie, as your worth is able,
And let them worke : The nature of our people,
Our Cities institutions, and the Termes
For Common Iustice, y'are as pregnant in
As Art, and practise hath enriched any
That we remember : There is our Commission,
From which, we would not have you warpe ; call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo :
What figure of us thinke you, he will beare.
For you must know, we have with speciall soule
Elected him our absence to supply ;
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love,
And given his Deputation all the Organs
Of our owne power : what thinke you of it ?
Esc. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergoe such ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Looke where he comes.

Ang. Alwayes obedient to your graces will,
I come to know your Graces pleasure.

Duke. Angelo :

There is a kinde of Character in thy life,
That to th'observer, doth thy history
Fully vnfold : Thy selfe and thy belongings
Are not thine owne so proper, as to waste
Thy selfe upon thy vertues ; they on thee :
Heaven doth with us, as we with Torches doe,
Not light them for themselves : For if our vertues
Did not goe forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not : Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues : nor Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But like a thrifty goddesse, she determines
Her selfe the glory of a creditour,
Both thanks and use ; but I doe bend my speech

To one that can my part in him advertise ;

Hold therefore Angelo :

In our remove, be thou at full, our selfe :

Mortality and Mercy in Vienna

Live in thy tongue and heart : Old Escalus

Though first in question, is thy secondary.

Take thy Commission.

Ang. Now good my Lord

Let there be some more test, made of my mettle,

Before so noble and so great a figure

Be stamp't upon it.

Duke. No more evasion :

We have with a leaven'd, and prepared choyce

Proceeded to you ; therefore take your honours :

Our haste from hence is of so quicke condition,

That it prefers it selfe, and leaves unquestion'd

Matters of needfull value : We shall write to you

As time, and our concernings shall importune,

How it goes with us, and doe looke to know

What doth befall you here. So fare you well :

To th'hopefull execution doe I leave you,

Of your Commission.

Ang. Yet give leave (my Lord,)

That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it,

Nor need you (on mine honour) have to doe

With any scruple : your scope is as mine owne,

So to enforce, or qualifie the Lawes,

As to your soule seemes good : Give me your hand,

He privily away : I love the people,

But doe not like to stage me to their eyes :

Though it doe well, I doe not relish well

Their loud applause, and Aves vehement :

Nor doe I thinke the man of safe discretion

That do's affect it. Once more fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes.

Esc. Lead forth and bring you backe in happinesse.

Duke. I thanke you, fare you well.

Exit.

Esc. I shall desire you, Sir, to give me leave

To have free speech with you ; and it concernes me

To looke into the bottome of my plice :

A power I have, but of what strength and nature,

I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me : Let us with-draw together,

And we may soone our satisfaction have

Touching that point.

Esc. He wait upon you honour.

Exeunt.

Scena

Scena secunda.

Enter Lucio, and two other Gentlemen.

Luc. If the Duke, with the other Dukes, come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the Dukes fall upon the King.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungaries.

2 Gent. Amen.

Luc. Thou conclud'st like the Sanctimonious Pyrat, that went to Sea with the tenne Commandements; but scrap'd one out of the Table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steale?

Luc. I, that he raz'd.

1 Gent. Why? 'twas a Commandement to command the Capitaine and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steale: There's not a souldier of us all, that in the thanksgiving before meate, doe rallish the petition well that prayes for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any souldier dislike it.

Luc. I beleeve thee: for I thinke thou never wast where Grace was said.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What? in meeter?

Luc. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I thinke, or in any Religion.

Luc. I, why not? Grace, is Grace, despight of all controversie: as for example; Thou thy selfe art a wicked villaine, despight of all Grace

1 Gent. Well: there went but a paire of sheeres betweene us.

Luc. I grant: as there may betweene the Lists and the Velvet. Thou art the List.

1 Gent. And thou the Velvet; thou art good Velvet; thou'rt a three pil'd-peece I warrant thee: I had as lief be a Lyst of an English Kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French Velvet. Doe I speeke feelingly now?

Luc. I thinke thou dost: and indeed with most painefull feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine owne confession, learne to begin thy health; but whilst I live, forget to drinke after thee.

1 Gent. I thinke I have done my selfe wrong, have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast; whether thou art tainted, or free.

Enter Bawd.

Luc. Behold, behold, where Madam Misigation comes. I have purchas'd as many diseases under her Roofe, As come to—

2 Gent. To what I pray?

Luc. Iudge.

2 Gent. To three thousand Dollours a yeere?

1 Gent. I, and more.

Luc. A French crowne more.

1 Gent. Thou art alwayes figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error, I am sound.

Luc. Nay, not (as one would say) healthy: but so sound, as things that are hollow; thy bones are hollow; Impiety has made a feast of thee.

1 Gent. How now, which of your hips has the most profound Sciatica?

Bawd. Well, well: there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

2 Gent. Who's that I prethee?

Bawd. Marry sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison? 'tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested: saw him carried away: and which is more, within these three dayes his head to be chopt off.

Luc. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so: Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child.

Luc. Beleeve mee this may be: hee promis'd to meete me two howres since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides you know, it draws something neere to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all agreeing with the Proclamation.

Luc. Away, let's goe learne the truth of it. Exeunt.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war; what with the sweate, what with the gallowes, and what with poverty, I am custome-shrunke. How now? what's the newes with you?

Enter Clowne.

Clow. Yonder man is carryed to prison.

Baw. Well: what has he done?

Clow. A woman.

Baw. But what's his offence?

Clow. Groping for Trowts, in a peticular River.

Baw. What? is there a Maid with child by him?

Clow. No: but there's a woman with Maid by him: you have not heard of the Proclamation, have you?

Baw. What Proclamation, man?

Clow. All houses in the Suburbs of Vienna must bee pluck'd downe.

Baw. And what shall become of those in the Citie?

Clow. They shall stand for seed: they had gone downe too, but that a wise Burger put in for them.

Baw. But shall all our houses of resort in the Suburbs be pull'd downe?

Clow. To the ground Mistris.

Baw. Why here's a change indeed in the Commonwealth: what shall become of me?

Clow. Come: feare not you: good Counsellours lacke no Clients: though you change your place, you need not change your Trade: He be your Tapster still; courage, there will be pittie taken on you; you that have worne your eies almost out in the service, you will be considered.

Bawd. What's to doe here, Thomas Tapster? let's withdraw.

Clow. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the Provost to prison: and theres Madam Juliet. Exeunt.

Scena tertia.

Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, Officers, Lucio, and two Gent.

Clau. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to th' world? Beare me to prison, where I am committed.

Pro. I doe it not in evill disposition, But from Angelo by speciall charge.

Clau. Thus can the demy-god (Authority) Make us pay downe, for our offence, by waight The words of heaven; on whom it will, it will, On whom it will not (so) yet still tis just. (Straint.)

Luc. Why how new Claudio? whence comes this re-

Clau. From too-much liberty, (my Lucio) liberty, As surfet is the father of much fast, So every scope by the immoderate use Turnes to restraint: our Natures doe pursue

Like

Like Rats that ravin downe their proper Bane,
A thirstie evill, and when we drinke, we die.

Luc. If I could speake so wisely, under an arrest, I would fend for certaine of my Creditors: and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedome, as the mortality of imprisonment: what's thy offence, Claudio?

Cla. What (but to speake of) would offend againe.

Luc. What is't murder?

Cla. No.

Luc. Lechery?

Cla. Call it so.

Pro. Away, sir, you must goe.

Cla. One word, good friend:

Lucio, a word with you.

Luc. A hundred:

If they'd doe you any good: Is Lechery so look'd after?

Cla. Thus stands it with me: upon a true contract
I got possession of Julietta's bed,
You know the Lady, she is fast my wife,
Save that we doe the denunciation lacke
Of outward Order. This we came not to,
Onely for propagation of a Dowre
Remaining in the Coffer of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our Love
Till Time had made them for us. But it chanceth
The stealth of our most mutuall entertainment
With Character too grosse, is writ in Juliet.

Luc. With Childe, perhaps?

Cla. Vnhappily, even so.

And the new Deputy, now for the Duke,
Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newnesse,
Or whether that the body publique, be
A horse whereon the Governour doth ride,
Who newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command; lets it strait feele the spur:
Whether the tyranny be in his place,
Or in his eminence that fits it up
I stagger in: But this new Governour
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties
Which have (like unscow'd Armor) hung by th' wall
So long, that nineteene Zodiacks have gone round,
And none of them been worn; and for a name
Now puts the drowsie and neglected Act
Freshly on me: 'tis surely for a name.

Luc. I warrant it is: and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a Milke-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off: Send after the Duke and appeale to him.

Cla. I have done so, but he's not to be found.
I prethee (Lucio) doe me this kinde service:
This day, my sister should the Cloyster enter,
And there receive her approbation.
Acquaint her with the danger of my state,
Implore her, in my voyce, that she make friends
To the strict Deputy: bid her selfe assay him,
I have great hope in that: for in her youth
There is a prone and speechlesse Dialect,
Such as move men: beside she hath prosperous Art
When she will play with reason, and discourse,
And well she can perfwade.

Luc. I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand upon grievous imposition: as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost, at a game of Ticke-tacke:
He to her.

Cla. I thanke you good friend Lucio.

Luc. Within two houres.

Cla. Come Officer, away.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke No: holy Father, throw away that thought,
Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a compleat bolome: why, I desire thee
To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled, then the aimes and ends
Of burning youth.

Fri. May your Grace speake of it.

Duke My holy sir, none better knowes then you
How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd
And held in idle price, to haunt assemblies
Where youth and cost, and witlesse bravery keeps,
I have delivered to Lord Angelo
(A man of stricture and firme abstinence)
My absolute power, and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me travail'd to Poland,
(Far so I have strew'd it in the common care)
And so it is receiv'd: Now (pious sir)
You will demand of me, why I do this.

Fri. Gladly, my Lord.

Duke. We have strict Statutes, and most biting Lawes,
(The needfull bits and curbes for headstrong weeds,) which for this fourteene yeaes, we have let slip,
Even like an ore-growne Lyon in a Cave
That goes not out to prey: Now, as fond Fathers,
Having bound up the threatening twigs of Birch,
Onely to sticke it in their childrens sight,
For errour, not to use: in time the rod
More mock'd then fear'd: so our Decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,
And liberty plucks Iustice by the nose;
The Baby beates the Nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your Grace
To unloose this tyde-up Iustice, when you pleas'd:
And it in you more dreadfull would have seem'd
Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke. I doe feare, too dreadfull:
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'T would be my tyranny to strike & gall them,
For what I bid them doe: For we bid this be done
When evill deeds have their permissive passe,
And not the punishment: therefore indeed (my father)
I have on Angelo impos'd the office,
Who may in th'ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet, my nature never in the fight
To doe in slander: And to behold his sway.
I will, as 'twere a brother of your Order,
Visit both Prince and people: Therefore I prethee
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person beare
Like a true Friar: Moe reasons for this action
At your more leisure, shall I render you;
Onely this one: Lord Angelo is precise,
Stands at a guard with Envie: scarce confesses
That his blood flowes: or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see
If power change purpose: what our Seemers be. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Isabell, and Francisca a Nun.

Isa. And have you Nuns no farther priviledges?

Nun. Are not these large enough?

Isa. Yes truely; I speake not as desiring more,
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Vpon the Sisterhood, the Votarists of Saint Clare.

Lucio within.

Luc. Hoa? peace be in this place.

Isa. Who's that which calls?

Nun. It is a mans voyce, gentle Isabella,
Turne you the key, and know his businesse of him;
You may; I may not: you are yet unsworne:
When you have vow'd, you must not speake with men,
But in the presence of the Prioresse;
Then if you speake, you must not shew your face;
Or if you shew your face, you must not speake:
He calls againe: I pray you answer him.

Isa. Peace and prosperity: who is't that calls?

Luc. Haile Virgin, (if you be) as those cheekes-Roses
Proclaime you are nolesse: can you so steed me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the faire Sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isa. Why her unhappy brother? Let me aske,
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his Sister.

Luc. Gentle and faire: your brother kindly greets you;
Not to be weary with you; he's in prison.

Isa. Woe me; for what?

Luc. For that, which if my selfe might be his Iudge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks:
He hath got his friend with Childe.

Isa. Sir, make me not your story.

Luc. 'Tis true; I would not, though 'tis my familiar sin,
With Maids to seeme the Lapwing, and to jest
Tongue, farre from heart: play with all Virgins so:
I hold you as a thing en-skied and sainted,
By your renouncement, an immortall spirit
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a Saint.

Isa. You doe blaspheme the good, in mocking me.

Luc. Doe not beleeve it: fewnesse, and truth; tis thus,
Your brother and his Lover have imbrac'd;
As those that feed, grow full: as blossoming Time
That from the seednesse, the bare fallow brings
To reeming foyson: even so her plenteous wombe
Expreffeth his full Tilt and Husbandry.

Isa. Some one with child by him? my Cosen Juliet?

Luc. Is she your Cosen?

Isa. Adoptedly, as schoole-maids change their names
By vaine, though apt affection.

Luc. She it is.

Isa. Let him marry her.

Luc. This is the point.

The Duke is very strangely gone from hence;
Bore many Gentlemen (my selfe being one)
In hand, and hope of action: but we doe learne,
By those that know the very Nerves of State,
His giving-out, were of an Infinite distance
From his true meant designe: upon his place,

(And with full line of his authority)

Governes Lord Angelo; A man, whose blood
Is very snow-broth: one, who never feesles
The wanton stings, and motions of the sense;
But doth rebate, and blunt his naturall edge
With profits of the minde: Study, and fast.
He (to give feare to use, and liberty,
Which have, for long, run-by the hideous Law,
As Myce by Lions) hath pickt out an act,
Vnder whose heavy sense, your brothers life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it,
And follows close the rigour of the Statute
To make him an example: all hope is gone,
Vnlesse you have the grace, by your faire prayer
To soften Angelo: And that's my pith of businesse
'Twixt you, and your poore brother.

Isa. Doth he so,
Seeke his life?

Luc. Has censur'd him already,
And as I heare, the Provost hath a warrant
For's execution.

Isa. Alas: what poore
Abilitie's in me, to doe him good?

Luc. Assay the power you have.

Isa. My power? alas, I doubt.

Luc. Our doubts are traitors
And makes us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt: Goe to Lord Angelo,
And let him learne to know, when Maidens sue
Mend give like gods: but when they weepe and kneele,
All their petitions, are astruely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.

Isa. Ile see what I can doe.

Luc. But speedily.

Isa. I will about it strait;
No longer staying, but to give the Mother
Notice of my affaire: I humbly thanke you:
Commend me to my brother: soone at night
Ile send him certaine word of my successe.

Luc. I take my leave of you.

Isa. Good sir, adieu.

Exunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, and servants, Justice.

Ang. We must not make a scar-crow of the Law,
Setting it up to feare the Birds of prey,
And let it keepe one shape, till custome make it
Their Pearch, and not their terrour.

Ese. I, but yet

Let us be keene, and rather cut a little
Then fall, and bruise to death: alas, this Gentleman
Whom I would save, had a most noble father,
Let but your honour know
(Whom I beleeve to be most strait in vertue)
That in the working of your owne affections,
Had Time coheard with Place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of our blood
Could have attain'd th' effect of your owne purpose;
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Err'd in this point, which now you censure him,
And pull'd the Law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted (Escalus)

Another

Another thing to fall : I not deny
 The lury passing on the prisoners life
 May in the sworne-twelve have a theefe, or two Guiltier then him they try; what's open made to Iustice,
 That Iustice ceizes ; What knowes the Lawes
 That theeves doe passe on theeves? 'Tis very pregnant,
 The Iewell that we finde, we stoope, and take't,
 Because we see it ; but what we doe not see,
 We treade upon, and never thinke of it.
 You may not so extenuate his offence,
 For I have had such faults ; but rather tell me
 When I, that censure him, doe so offend,
 Let mine owne Iudgement patterne out my death,
 And nothing come in partiall. Sir, he must die.

Enter Provost.

Ese. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the Provost?

Pro. Here if it like your Honour.

Ang. See that Claudio

Be executed by nine to morrow morning,
 Bring him his Confessor, let him be prepar'd,
 For that's the utmost of his Pilgrimage.

Ese. Well : heaven forgive him ; and forgive us all :

Some rise by sinne, and some by vertue fall :

Some Run from brakes of Ice, and answer none,
 And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clowne, Officers.

Elb. Come, bring them away : if these be good people in a Common-weale, that doe nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law : bring them away.

Ang. How now sir, what's your name? And what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poore Dakes Constable, and my name is Elbow ; I doe leane upon Iustice sir, and doe bring in here before your good honour, two notorious Benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors? Well: What Benefactors are they?
 Are they not Malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are : But precise villaines they are, that I am sure of,
 and voyd of all prophanation in the world, that good Christians ought to have.

Ese. This comes off well: here's a wise Officer.

Ang. Go to : What quality are they of? Elbow is your name?

Why do'st thou not speake Elbow?

Cl. He cannot sir : he's out at Elbow.

Ang. What are you sir?

Elb. He sir, a Tapster sir : parcell Bawd : one that serves a bad woman : whose house sir was (as they say) pluckt downe in the Suburbs : and now she professes a hot-house ; which, I thinke is a very ill house too.

Ese. How know you that?

Elb. My wife Sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour.

Ese. How? thy wife?

Elb. I Sir : whom I thanke heaven is an honest woman.

Ese. Do'st thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say sir, I will detest my selfe also, as well as shee, that this house, if it be not a Bawds house, it is pittie of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Ese. How do'st thou know that, Constable?

Elb. Marry sir, by my wife, who, if she had been a woman Cardinally given, might have beene accus'd in fornication, adultery, and all uncleannesse there.

Ese. By the womans meanes?

Elb. I sir, by Mistris Over-dons meanes : but as she spit in his face, so she def'd him.

Cl. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these Varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

Ese. Doe you heare how he misplaces?

Cl. Sir, she came in great with childe : and longing (saying your honors reverence) for stew'd Prewynes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very instant time stood, as it were in a fruit dish (a dish of some three pence; your honors have seene such dishes) they are not China-dishes, but very good dishes.

Ese. Go too, goe too : no matter for the dish sir.

Cl. No indeed sir not of a pin ; you are therein in the right : but, to the point : as I say, this Mistris Elbow, being (as I say) with childe, and being great bellied, and longing
 (as I said) for Prewyns : and having no more in the dish
 (as I said) Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest (as I said) and (as I say) paying for them very honestly : for, as you know Master Froth, I could not give you three pence againe.

Fro. No indeed.

Cl. Very well : you being then (if you be remembred) cracking the stones of the foresaid Prewyns.

Fro. I, so I did indeed.

Cl. Why, very well : I telling you then (if you bee remembred) that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good dyet, as I told you.

Fro. All this is true.

Cl. Why very well then.

Ese. Come : you are a tedious foole : to the purpose :
 what was done to Elbowes wife, that he hath cause to complaine of? Come me to what was done to her.

Cl. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Ese. No sir, nor I meane it not.

Cl. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your Honours leave : And I beseech you, looke into Master Froth here sir, a man of foure-score pound a yeere ; whose Father dyed at Hallowmas : Was't not at Hallowmas Master Froth?

Fro. All-hallond-Eve.

Cl. Why very well : I hope here be truthe : he Sir, sitting (as I say) in a lower Chaire, Sir, 'twas in the bunch of Grapes, where indeed you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Fro. I have so, because it is an open roome, and good for Winter.

Cl. Why very well then : I hope here be truthe.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia,
 When nights are longest there : He take my leave,
 And leave you to the hearing of the cause ;
 Hoping you'll finde good cause to whip them all. Exit.

Ese. I thinke no lesse : good morrow to your Lordship. Now sir, come on : What was done to Elbowes wife, once more?

Cl. Once sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you sir, aske him what this man did to my wife.

Cl. I beseech your honour, aske me.

Ese. Well sir, what did this Gentleman to her?

Cl. I beseech you sir, looke in this Gentlemans face :
 good Master Froth looke upon his honour ; 'tis for a good purpose ; doth your honour marke his face?

Esc. I sir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you marke it well.

Esc. Well, I doe so.

Clo. Doth your honour see any harme in his face?

Esc. Why no.

Clo. Ile be suppos'd upon a booke, his face is the worst thing about him: good then: if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth doe the Constables wife any harme? I would know that of your honour.

Esc. He's in the right (Constable) what say you to it?

Elb. First, and it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his Mistris is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand sir, his wife is a more respected person then any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou lyest; thou lyest wicked Varlet: the time is yet to come that shee was ever respected with man, woman, or childe.

Clo. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Esc. Which is the wiser here; Justice, or Iniquitie? Is this true?

Elb. O thou Caytiffe: O thou Varlet: O thou wicked Hannibal; I respected with her, before I was married to her? If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your Worship thinke me the poore Dukes Officer: prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or Ile have mine action of battery on thee.

Esc. If he tooke you a box 'oth'care, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry I thanke your good worship for it: what is't your Worships pleasure I shall doe with this wicked Caytiffe?

Esc. Truly Officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover, if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

Elb. Marry I thanke your Worship for it: Thou seest thou wicked Varlet now, what's come upon thee. Thou art to continue now thou Varlet, thou art to continue.

Esc. Where were you borne, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, Sir.

Esc. Are you of fourescore pounds a yeere?

Froth. Yes, and 't please you sir.

Esc. So: what trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A Tapster, a poore Widdowes Tapster.

Esc. Your Mistris name?

Clo. Mistris Over-don.

Esc. Hath she had any more then one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir: Over-don by the last.

Esc. Nine? come hither to me, Master Froth; Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with Tapsters; they will draw you Master Froth, and you will hang them: get you gone, and let me heare no more of you.

Fro. I thanke your worship: for mine owne part, I never come into any reome in a Tap-house, but I am drawne in.

Esc. Well: no more of it Master Froth: farewell: Come you hither to me, M. Tapster: what's your name M. Tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Esc. What else?

Clo. Bum, Sir.

Esc. Troth, and your Bum is the greatest thing about you, so that in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the great; Pompey, you are partly a Bawd, Pompey; howsoever you colour it being a Tapster, are you not? come, tell me true, it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly sir, I am a poore fellow that would live.

Esc. How would you live Pompey? by being a Bawd? what doe you thinke of the Trade Pompey? is it a lawfull Trade?

Clo. If the Law would allow it, sir.

Esc. But the law will not allow it Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Do's your Worship meane to geld and splay all the youth in the Citie?

Esc. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truly Sir, in my poore opinion they will too't then: if your Worship will take order for the Drabs and Knaves, you need not to feare the Bawdes.

Esc. There are pretty orders beginning I can tell you: It is but heading and hanging.

Clo. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten yeare together; you'll be glad to give out a Commission for more heads: if this law hold in Vienna ten yeares, Ile rent the fairest house in it after three pence a Bay: if you live to see this come to passe, say Pompey told you so.

Esc. Thanke you good Pompey; and in requitall of your Prophecie, harke you: I advise you let me not finde you before me againe upon any complaint whatsoever: no, not for dwelling where you doe: if I doe Pompey, I shall beat you to your Tent, and prove a shrewd Cesar to you: in plaine dealing Pompey, I shall have you whipt; so for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Clo. I thanke your Worship for your good counsell; but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine. Whip me? no, no, let Carman whip his lade, The valiant heart's not whipt out of his Trade. Exit.

Esc. Come hither to me, Master Elbow: come hither Master Constable: how long have you been in this place of Constable?

Elb. Seven yeare and a halfe sir.

Esc. I thought by the readinesse in the office, you had continued in it some time: you say seaven yeeres together.

Elb. And a halfe sir.

Esc. Alas, it hath beene great paines to you: they doe you wrong to put you so oft upon't. Are there not men in your Ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I doe it for some peece of money, and goe through with all.

Esc. Looke you bring me in the names of some sixe or seven, the most sufficient of your Parish.

Elb. To your Worships house sir?

Esc. To my house: fare you well: what's a clocke, thinke you?

Iust. Eleven, sir.

Esc. I pray you goe home to dinner with me.

Iust. I humbly thanke you.

Esc. It grieves me for the death of Clandio, But there's no remedy.

Iust. Lord Angelo is severe.

Esc. It is but needfull.

Mercy is not it selfe, that oft lookes so, Pardon is still the nurse of second woe: But yet, poore Clandio; there is no remedy. Come Sir.

Exeunt.

Scena

Scena Secunda.

Enter Provost, Servant.

Ser. Hee's hearing of a Cause; he will come straight, I'll tell him of you.

Pro. Pray you doe; Ile know
His pleasure, may be he will relent; alas
He hath but as offended in a dreame,
All Sects, all Ages smacke of this vice, and he
To dye for't!

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter Provost?

Pro. Is it your will Claudio shall dye to morrow?

Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? hadst thou not order?
Why do'st thou aske againe?

Pro. Left I might be too rash:
Vnder your good correction, I have seene
When after execution, Iudgement hath Repented ore his doome.

Ang. Goe to: let that be mine,
Doe you your office, or give up your Place,
And you shall well be spar'd.

Pro. I crave your Honors pardon:
What shall be done sir, with the groaning Juliet?
Shee's very neere her houre.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place; and that with speed.
Ser. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd,
Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Pro. I my good Lord, a very vertuous maid,
And to be shortly of a Sister-hood,
If not already.

Ang. Well: let her be admitted,
See you the Fornicatresse be remov'd,
Let her have needfull, but not lavish meanes,
There shall be order for't.

Enter Lucio, and Isabella.

Pro. Save your Honor.

Ang. Stay a little while: y'are welcome: what's your Isab. I am a woefull Sutor to your Honor, (will?)

Please but your honor heare me.

Ang. Well: what's your suite?

Isab. There is a vice that most I doe abhorre,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice;
For which I would not plead, but that I must,
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At warre, twixt will, and will not.

Ang. Well: the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to dye;
I doe beseech you let it be his fault,
And not my brother.

Pro. Heaven give thee moving graces.

Ang. Condemne the fault, and not the actor of it,
Why every fault's condemn'd ere it be done:
Mine were the very Cipher of a Function
To fine the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let goe by the Actor.

Isab. Oh just, but severe law:

I had a brother then; heaven keepe your honor.

Luc. Give't not ore so: to him againe, entreat him,
Kneele downe before him, hang upon his gowne,
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,

You could not with more tame a tongue desire it:
To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs dye?

Ang. Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes: I doe thinke that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man grieve at the mercy.

Ang. I will not do't.

Isab. But can you if you would?

Ang. Looke what I will not, that I cannot doe:

Isab. But might you doe't and doe the world no wrong
If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse,
As mine is to him?

Ang. Hee's sentenc'd, tis too late.

Luc. You art too cold.

Isab. Too late? why no: I that doe speake a word,
May call it backe againe: well, beleve this
No ceremony that to great ones longs,
Nor the Kings Crowne; nor the deputed sword,
The Marshalls Truncheon, nor the Iudges Robe
Become them with one halfe so good a grace
As mercy does: If he had beene as you, and you as he,
You would have slipt like him, but he like you
Would not have beene so sterne.

Ang. Pray you be gone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabell: should it then be thus?
No: I would tell what 'twere to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

Luc. I touch him: there's the veine.

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the Law,
And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas, alas:

Why all the foules that were, were forfeit once,
And he that might the vantage best have tooke,
Found out the remedy: how would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgement, should
But judge you, as you are? Oh, thinke on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips
Like man new made.

Ang. Be you content, (faire Maid)

It is the Law, not I, condemne your brother,
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my sonne;
It should be thus with him: he must dye to morrow.

Isab. To morrow? oh, that's fodaine,
Spare him, spare him:

Hee's not prepar'd for death; even for our kitchenes
We kill the fowle of season: shall we serve heaven
With lesse respect then we doe minister
To our grosse-selves? good, good my Lord, bethinke you;
Who is it that hath di'd for this offence?
There's many have committed it.

Luc. I, well said.

Ang. The Law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:
Those many had not dar'd to doe that evill
If the first; that did th' Edict infringe
Had answer'd for his deed. Now 'tis awake,
Takes note of what is done, and like a Prophet
Lookes in a glasse that shewes what future evils
Either now, or by remission, new conceiv'd,
And so in progresse to be hatch'd, and borne,
Are now to have no successefull degrees,
But here they live to end.

Isab. Yet show some pitty.

Ang. I shew it most of all, when I show Iustice;
For then I pitty those I doe not know,
Which a dismiss'd offence, would after gaulle

And

And doe him right, that answering one foule wrong
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;

Your Brother dies to morrow; be content.

Isa. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he, that suffers: Oh, it is excellent
To have a Giants strength: but it is tyrannous
To use it like a Giant.

Luc. That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder
As love himselfe do's, love would nere be quiet,
For every pelting petty Officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder: Mercifull heaven,
Thou rather with thy sharpe and sulphurous bolt
Splitst the un-wedgable and gnarled Oke,
Then the soft Mertill: O But man! proud man!
Drest in a little bricte authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
(His glassie Essence) like an angry Ape
Plays such phantastique trickes before high heaven,
As makes the Angels weepe: who with our spleenes,
Would all themselves laugh mortall.

Luci. Oh, to him, to him wench: he will relent,
Hee's comming: I perceive't.

Pro. Pray heaven she winne him.

Isab. We cann ot weigh our brother with our selfe,
Great men may jest with Saints: tis wit in them,
But in the lesse foule prophanation.

Luc. Thou'rt it's right (Girle) more o'that.

Isab. That in the Captaine's but a chollericke word,
Which in the Souldier is flat blasphemy.

Luc. Art avil'd o'that? more on't.

Ang. Why doe you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because Authority, though it erre like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in it selfe
That skins the vice o'th top; goe to your bosome,
Knocke there, and aske your heart what it doth know
That's like my brothers fault: if it confesse
A naturall guiltinesse, such as is his,
Let it not found a thought upon you tongue
Against my brothers life.

Ang. Shee speakes, and 'tis such sence
That my sence breeds with it; fare you well.

Isab. Gentle my lord, turne backe.

Ang. I will bethinke me: come againe to morrow.

Isab. Harke, how Ile bribe you: good my lord turne

Ang. How? bribe me? (backe.)

Isa. I, with such gifts that heaven shall share with you.

Luc. You had mar'd all else.

Isab. Not with fond Sickles of the tested-gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich, or poore
As fancy values them: but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there
Ere Sunne rise: prayers from preserved soules,
From fasting Maides, whose mindes are dedicate
To nothing temporall.

Ang. Well: come to me to morrow.

Luc. Goe to: 'tis well; away.

Isab. Heaven keep your honor safe.

Ang. Amen.

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers crosse.

Isab. At what howre to marrow,
Shall I attend you lordship?

Ang. At any time 'fore-noone.

Isab. 'Save your Honor. Exeunt.

Ang. From thee: even from thy vertue.
What's this? What's this? is this her fault, or mine?
The Tempter, or the Tempted, who finnes most? ha?
Not she: nor doth she tempt: but it is I,
That, lying by the Violet in the Sunne,
Doe as the Carrion do's, not as the flowre,
Corrupt with vertuous season: Can it be,
That Modesty may more betray our sence
Then womans lightnesse? having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the Sanctuary
And pitch our evils there? oh fie, fie, fie:
What dost thou? or what art thou Angelo?
Dost thou desire her fowly, for those things
That make her good? oh, let her brother live:
Theeves for their robbery have authority,
When Iudges steale themselves: what! doe I love her,
That I desire to heare her speake againe?
And feast upon her eyes? what is't I dreame on?
Oh cunning enemy, that to catch a Saint,
With Saints dost bait thy hooke: most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sinne, in loving vertue: never could the Strumpet
With all her double vigor, Art, and Nature
Once stir my temper: but this vertuous Maid
Subdues me quite: Even till now
When men were fond, I simild, and wondred how. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke, and Provost.

Duk. Haile to you, Provost, so I thinke you are.

Pro. I am the Provost: what's your will, good Frier;

Duk. Bound by my charity, and my blest order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: doe me the common right
To let me see them: and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

Pro. I would do more then that, if more were needfull.

Enter Julius.

Looke here comes one: a Gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flawes of her owne youth,
Hath blisterd her report: She is with child,
And he that got it, sentenc'd: a yong man,
More fit to doe another such offence,
Then dye for this.

Duk. When must he dye?

Pro. As I doe thinke to morrow.

I have provided for you, stay a while
And you shall be conducted.

Duk. Repent you (faire one) of the sin you carry?

Jul. I doe; and beare the shame most patiently.

Duk. Ile teach you how you shall araign your conscience
And try your penitence, if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on.

Jul. Ile gladly learne.

Duk. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duk. So then it seemes your most offencefull act
Was mutually committed.

Jul. Mutually.

Duk. Then was your sinne of heavier kind than his.

Jul. I doe confesse it, and repent it (Father.)

Duk. 'Tis

Duk. 'Tis meet so (daughter) but leaft you doe repent
As that the finne hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is alwayes toward our felues, not heaven,
Showing we would not spare heaven, as we love it,
But as we stand in feare.

Int. I doe repent me, as it is an evill,
And take the shame with joy.

Duk. There rest:
Your partner (as I heare) must dye to morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him:
Grace goe with you, Benedicite.

Int. Must dye to morrow? oh injurious love
That respites me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror.

Pro. 'Tis pittie of him.

Exit.

Exeunt.

Scena quarta.

Enter Angelo.

An. When I would pray, and thinke, I thinke, and pray
To severall subjects: heaven hath my empty words,
Whilst my Invention, hearing not my Tongue,
Anchors on Isabell: heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but onely chew his name,
And in my heart the strong and swelling evill
Of my conception: the state whereon I studied
Is like a good thing, being often read
Grown feard, and tedious: yea, my Gravity
Wherein (let no man heare me) I take pride,
Could I, with boote, change for an idle plume
Which the ayre beats for vaine: oh place! oh forme!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit
Wrench awe from fooles; and tye the wiser soules
To thy false seeming? Blood, thou art blood,
Let's write good Angell on the Devils horne,
'Tis not the devills Crest: how now? who's there?

Enter Servant.

Ser. One Isabell, a sister, desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way: oh heavens
Why doe's my blood thus muster to my heart,
Making both it unable for it selfe,
And dispossessing all my other parts
Of necessary fitness?

So play the foolish throngs with one that swounds,
Come all to helpe him, and so stop the ayre
By which he should revivue: and even so
The generall subject to a wel-wisht King
Quit their owne part, and in obsequious fondnesse
Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love
Must needs appeare offence: how now faire Maid?

Enter Isabella.

Isa. I am come to know your pleasure.

An. That you might know it, would much better please
Then to demand what 'tis: your brother cannot live.

Isa. Even so: heaven keepe your Honor.

An. Yet may he live a while: and it may be
As long as you, or I: yet he must dye.

Isab. Under your Sentence?

Ang. Yea.

Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his Reprieve
(Longer, or shorter) he may be so fitted
That his soule sicken not.

Ang. Ha? sic, these filthy vices: It were as good

To pardon him, that hath from nature stolne
A man already made, as to remit
Their sawcy sweetnesse, that doe coyne heavens Image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easie,
Falsely to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in restrained meanes
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set downe so in heaven, but not in earth!

Ang. Say you so: then I shall poze you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the most just Law
Now tooke your brothers life, and to redeeme him
Give up your body to such sweet uncleannesse,
As she that he hath staine?

Isab. Sir, beleeve this,
I had rather give my body, then my soule.

Ang. I talke not of your soule: our compell'd finnes
Stand more for number, then for accompt.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay Ile not warrant that: for I can speake
Against the thing I say: Answer to this,
I (now the voyce of the recorded Law)
Pronounce a sentence on your brothers life,
Might there not be a charity in sinne,
To save this brothers life?

Isab. Please you to doe't,
Ile take it as a perill to my soule,
It is no sinne at all, but charity.

Ang. Pleas'd you to doe't, at perill of your soule
Were equall poize of sinne, and charity.

Isab. That I doe beg his life, if it be sinne
Heaven let me beare it: you granting of my suit,
If that be sinne, Ile make it my Morne-prayer,
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but heare me.
Your sence pursues not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or seeme so crafty; and that's not good.

Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appeare most bright,
When it doth taxe it selfe: As these blacke Masques
Proclaime an en-shield beauty ten times louder
Then beauty could displaied: But marke me,
To be received plaine, Ile speake more grosse:
Your brother is to dye.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appeares,
Accountant to the Law, upon that paine.

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the losse of question) that you, his Sister,
Finding your selfe desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the Iudge, or owne great place,
Could fetch your brother from the Manacles
Of the all-building-Law: and that there were
No earthly meane to save him, but that either
You must lay downe the treasures of your body,
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer;
What would you doe?

Isab. As much for my poore Brother, as my selfe;
That is: were I under the tearmes of death,
Th'impression of keene whips, I'd weare as Rubies,
And strip my selfe to death, as to a bed,
That longing have bene sicke for, ere I'd yeeld
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then

Ang. Then must your brother dye.

Isa. And 'twere the cheaper way :
Better it were a brother di'd at once,
Then that a sister, by redeeming him
Should dye for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruell as the Sentence,
That you have slander'd so ?

Isa. Ignominy in ransome, and free pardon
Are of two houses : lawfull mercy,
Is nothing kin to foule redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the Law a tirant,
And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother
A merriment, then a vice.

Isa. Oh pardon me my lord, it oft fals out
To have, what we would have,
We speake not what we meane ;
I something doe excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all fraile.

Isa. Else let my brother dye,
If not a feodary but onely he
Owe, and succeed thy weakenesse.

Ang. Nay, women are fraile too.

Isa. I, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easie broke as they make formes :
Women ? Helpe heaven ; men their creation marre
In profiting by them : Nay, call us ten times fraile,
For we are soft, as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I thinke it well :

And from this testimony of your owne sex
(Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger
Then faults may shake our frames) let me be bold ;
I doe arrest your words. Be that you are,
That is, a woman ; if you be more, you'r none.
If you be one (as you are well exprest
By all externall warrants) shew it now,
By putting on the destin'd Livery.

Isa. I have no tongue but one ; gentle my lord,
Let me entreate you speake the former language.

Ang. Plainly conceive I love you.

Isa. My brother did love Iuliet.
And you tell me that he shall dye for't.

Ang. He shall not Isabell if you give me love.

Isa. I know your vertue hath a licence in't,
Which seemes a little fouler then it is,
To plucke on others.

Ang. Beleeve me on mine Honor,
My word expresse my purpose.

Isa. Ha ? Little honor, to be much beleev'd,
And most pernicious purpose : Seeming, seeming.
I will proclaime thee Angelo, looke for't.
Signe me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an out-stretcht throat Ile tell the world aloud
What man thou art.

Ang. Who will beleeve thee Isabell ?
My unsoild name, th' austere nesse of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place i'th State,
Will so your accusation over-weigh,
That you shall stiffe in your owne report,
And smell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my sensuall race, the reine,
Fit thy consent to my sharpe appetite,
Lay by all nicety, and polixious blushes
Thar banish what they sue for : Redeeme thy brother,
By yeelding up thy body to my will,

Or else he must not onely dye the death,
But thy unkindnesse shall his death draw out
To lingring sufferance : Answer me to morrow,
Or by the affection that now guides me most,
Ile prove a Tirant to him. As for you,
Say what you can ; my false, ore-weighs your true. Exit.

Isa. To whom should I complaine ? Did I tell this,
Who would beleeve me ? O perilous mouthes
That beare in them, one and the selfsame tongue,
Either of condemnation, or approofe,
Bidding the Law make curtisie to their will,
Hooking both right and wrong to th' appetite,
To follow as it drawes. Ile to my brother,
Though he hath false by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mind of Honor,
That had he twenty heads to tender downe
On twenty bloody blockes, hee'd yeeld them up,
Before his sister should her body floope
To such abhord pollution.

Then Isabell live chaste, and brother dye ;
"More then our Brother, is our Chastity.

Ile tell him yet of Angelo's request,
And fit his mind to death, for his soules rest. Exit.

Actus Tertius, Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Provost.

Duk. So then you hope of pardon from lord Angelo ?

Claudio. The miserable have no other medicine
But onely hope : I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to dye.

Duke. Be absolute for death : either death or life
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life :
If I doe loose thee, I doe loose a thing
That none but fooles would keepe : a breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyie-influences,
That dost this habitation where thou keepst
Hourely afflict : Meerely, thou art deaths foole,
For him thou labourst by thy flight to shun,
And yet runst toward him still. Thou art not noble,
For all th' accommodations that thou bearest,
Are nurs'd by basenesse : Thou'rt by no means valiant,
For thou dost feare the soft and tender forke
Of a poore worme : thy best of rest is sleepe,
And that thou oft provoakst, yet grossely fearst
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thy selfe,
For thou exists on many a thousand graines
That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not,
For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get,
And what thou hast, forgetst. Thou art not certaine,
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the Moone : if thou art rich, thou'rt poore,
For like an Asse, whose backe with Ingots bowes ;
Thou bearest thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee ; Friend hast thou none.
For thine owne bowels which doe call thee, fire
The meere effusion of thy proper loynes,
Doe curse the Gout, Sarpego, and the Rheume
For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth, nor age
But as it were an after-dinners sleepe
Dreaming on both, for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth begger the almes
Of palsied-Eld : and when thou art old, and rich

Thou

Thou hast neither heate, affection, limbe, nor beauty
To make thy riches pleasant : what's yet in this
That beares the name of life ? Yet in this life
Lye hid moethousand deaths ; yet death we feare
That makes these oddes, all even.

Cla. I humbly thanke you.
To sue to live, I find I seeke to dye,
And seeking death, find life : Let it come on.

Enter Isabell.

Isab. What hoa ? Peace heere ; Grace, and good company.

Pro. Who's there ? Come in, the wish deserves a welcome.

Duk. Deere sir, ere long Ile visit you againe.

Cla. Most holy sir, I thanke you.

Isa. My businesse is a word or two with Claudio.

Pro. And very welcome : looke Signior, here's your sister.

Duk. Provost, a word with you.

Pro. As many as you please.

Duk. Bring them to speake, where I may be conceal'd, yet heare them. Exeunt.

Cla. Now sister, what's the comfort ?

Isa. Why,
As all comforts are : most good, most good indeed,
Lord Angelo having affaires to heaven
Intends you for his swift Ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting Leiger ;
Therefore your best appointment make with speed,
To Morrow you set on.

Cla. Is there no remedy ?

Isa. None but such remedy, as to save a head
To cleave a heart in twaine :

Cla. But is there any ?

Isa. Yes brother, you may live ;
There is a divellish mercy in the Iudge,
If you'l implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter you till death.

Cla. Perpetuall durance !

Isa. I jult, perpetuall durance, a restraint
Through all the worlds vastidity you had
To a determin'd scope.

Cla. But in what nature ?

Isa. In such a one, as you consenting too't,
Would barke your honor from that trunk you beare,
And leave you naked.

Cla. Let me know the point.

Isa. Oh, I doe feare thee Claudio, and I quake,
Least thou a feavorous life shouldst entertaine,
And sixe or seven winters more respect
Then a perpetuall honor. Dar'st thou dye ?
The fence of death is most in apprehension,
And the poore Beetle that we tread upon
In corporall sufferance, finds a pang as great,
As when a Giant dyes.

Cla. Why give you me this shame ?
Thinke you I can a resolution fetch
From flowry tendernesse ? If I must dye,
I will encounter darknesse as a bride,
And hugge it in mine armes.

Isa. There spake my brother : there my fathers grave
Did utter forth a voyce. Yes, thou must dye :
Thou art too noble, to conserve a life
In base appliances. This outward fainted Deputy,
Whose setled visage, and deliberate word
Nips youth i'th head, and follies doth emmew

As Falcon doth the fowle, is yet a divell :
His filth within being cast, he would appeare
A pond, as deepe as hell.

Cla. The Princely, Angelo ?

Isa. Oh 'tis the cunning Livery of hell,
The damndest body to invest, and cover
In Princely gardes ; dost thou thinke Claudio,
If I would yeeld him my virginity
Thou might'st be freed ?

Cla. Oh heavens, it cannot be.

Isa. Yes, he would giv't thee ; from this ranke offence
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should doe what I abhorre to name,
Or else thou diest to morrow.

Cla. Thou shalt not do't.

Isa. O, were it but my life,
I'de throw it downe for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

Cla. Thankes deere Isabell.

Isa. Be ready Claudio, for your death to morrow.

Cla. Yes. Has he affections in him.
That thus can make him bite the Law by th' nose,
When he would force it ? Sure it is no sinne,
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isa. Which is the least ?

Cla. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fin'de ? Oh Isabell.

Isa. What sayes my brother ?

Cla. Death is a fearefull thing.

Isa. And shamed life, a hatefull.

Cla. I, but to dye, and goe we know not where.
To lye in cold obstruction, and to rot,
This sensible warme motion, to become
A kneaded clod ; and the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thick-ribbed Ice,
To be imprison'd in the viewlesse windes
And blowne with restless violence round about
The pendant world : or to be worse then worst
Of those, that lawlesse and incertaine thought,
Imagine howling, 'tis too horrible.
The weariest, and most loathed worldly life
That Age, Ache, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a Paradise
To what we feare of death.

Isa. Alas, alas.

Cla. Sweet Sister, let me live.

What sinne you doe, to save a brothers life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so farre,
That it becomes a vertue.

Isa. Oh you beast !

Oh faithlesse Coward ! oh dishonest wretch,
Wilt thou be made a man, out of my vice ?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine owne sisters shame ? What should I thinke, Heaven shield : my Mother plaid my Father faire :
For such a warped slip of wildernesse
Nere issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance,
Dye, perish : Might but my bending downe
Repreeve thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
Ile pray a thousand prayers for thy death ;
No word to save thee.

Cla. Nay heare me Isabell.

Isa. Oh, fie, fie, fie.

Thy sinn's not accidentall, but a Trade ;

Mercy

Mercy to thee would prove it selfe a Bawd,
'Tis best that thou diest quickly.

Cl. Oh heare me Isabella.

Duke Steps in.

Duk. Vouchsafe a word, yong sister, but one word.

Isa. What is your Will.

Duk. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your owne benefit.

Isa. I have no superfluous leisure, my stay must be stolen out of other affaires: but I will attend you a while.

Duk. Son, I have over-heard what hath past betweene you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; onely he hath made an assay of her vertue, to practise his judgement with the disposition of natures. She (having the truth of honor in her) hath made him that gracious deniall, which he is most glad to receive: I am Confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true, therefore prepare your selfe to death: doe not satisfie your resolution with hopes that are fallible, to morrow you must dye, goe to your knees, and make ready.

Cl. Let me aske my sister pardon, I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Exit.

Duk. Hold you there: farewell: Provoist, a word with you.

Pro. What's your will (father?)

Duk. That now you are come, you will be gone: leave me a while with the Maid, my mind promises with my habit, no losse shall touch her by my company.

Pro. In good time.

Exit.

Duk. The hand that hath made you faire, hath made you good: the goodnesse that is cheape in beauty, makes beauty briefe in goodnesse; but grace being the soule of your complexion, shall keepe the body of it ever faire; the assault that Angelo hath made to you, Fortune hath convoid to my understanding; and but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo: how will you doe to content this Substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him: I had rather my brother dye by the Law, then my soule should be unlawfully borne. But (oh) how much is the good Duke deceiv'd in Angelo: if ever he returne, and I can speake to him, I will open my lips in vaine, or discover his government.

Duk. That shall not be much amisse: yet as the matter now stands, he will avoyd your accusation: he made triall of you onely. Therefore fasten your eare on my advising, to the love I have in doing good; a remedy presents it selfe. I doe make my selfe beleve that you may most uprightly doe a poore wronged Lady a merited benefit; redeeme your brother from the angry Law; doe no staine to your owne gracious person, and much please the absent Duke, if peradventure he shall ever returne to have hearing of this businesse.

Isab. Let me heare you speake farther; I have spirit to doe any thing that appeares not foule in the truth of my spirit.

Duk. Vertue is bold, and goodnesse never fearefull: Have you not heard speake of Mariana the sister of Fredericke the great Souldier, who miscarried at Sea?

Isab. I have heard of the Lady, and good words went with her name.

Duk. She should this Angelo have married: was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Fredericke was wrackt at Sea, having in that perished vessel, the dowry of his sister: but marke how heavily this befall to the poore Gentlewoman, there she left a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her, ever most kind and naturall: with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage dowry: with both, her combynate-husband, this well seeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? did Angelo so leave her?

Duk. Left her in her teares, and dried not one of them with his comfort: swallowed his vowes whole, pretending in her, discoveries of dishonor: in few, bestow'd her on her owne lamentation, which she yet weares for his sake: and he, a marble to her cares, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poore maid from the world? what corruption in this life, that it will let this man live? But how out of this can she availle?

Duk. It is a rupture that you may easily heale: and the cure of it not onely saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonor in doing it.

Isab. Shew me how (good father.)

Duk. This forenamed Maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindnesse (that in all reason should have quenched her love) hath (like an impediment in the Current) made it more violent and unruly: Goe you to Angelo, answer his requiring with a plausible obedience, agree with his demands to the point: onely referre your selfe to this advantage; first, that your stay with him may not be long: that the time may have all shadow, and silence in it: and the place answer to convenience: this being granted in course, and now followes all: we shall advise this wronged maid to steed up your appointment, goe in your place: if the encounter acknowledge it selfe hereafter, it may compell him to her recompence; and heere, by this is your brother saved, your honor untainted, the poore Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt Deputy scaled. The Maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempt: if you thinke well to carry this as you may, the doublenesse of the benefit defends the deceit from reproofe. What thinke you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already, and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duk. It lyes much in your holding up: haste you speedily to Angelo, if for this night he intreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction: I will presently to Sr. Lukes, there at the moated-Grange resides this dejected Mariana; at that place call upon me, and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isa. I thanke you for this comfort: fare you well good father.

Exit.

Enter Elbow, Clowne, Officers.

El. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drinke browne and white bastard.

Duk. Oh heavens, what stutfe is heere?

Clow. Twas never merry world since of two vsuries the merriest was put downe, and the worser allow'd by order of Law; a fur'd gowne to keepe him warme; and fur'd with Foxe and Lamb-skins too, to signifie, that craft being richer then innocency, stands for the facing.

Elbow. Come your way Sir: blesse you good father Frier.

Duk. And you good brother father; what offence hath this man made you, Sir?

Elb. Marry

Elb. Marry sir, he hath offended the Law; and Sir, we take him to be a Theefe too sir: for we have found upon him Sir, a strange Pick-locke, which we have sent to the Deputy.

Duk. Fye, firrah, a Bawd, a wicked bawd, The evill that thou caus'est to be done, That is thy meanes to live. Doe thou but thinke What 'tis to cram a maw, or cloath a backe From such a filthy vice: say to thy selfe, From their abhominable and beaustly touches I drinke, I eat away my selfe, and live: Canst thou beleve thy living is a life, So stinkingly depending? Goe mend, goe mend.

Clo. Indeed, it do's stinke in some sort, Sir: But yet Sir I would prove —

Duk. Nay, if the divell have given thee proofes for sin Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison Officer; Correction, and instruction must both worke Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the Deputy Sir, he ha's given him warning: the Deputy cannot abide a Whore-master: if he be a Whore-monger, and comes before him, he were as good goe a mile on his errand.

Duk. That we were all, as some would seeme to be Free from our faults, as faults from seeming free.

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His necke will come to your waist, a Cord sir.
Clo. I spy comfort, I cry baile: Here's a Gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Luc. How now noble Pompey? What, at the wheels of Cesar? Art thou led in triumph? What is there none of Pigmaliions Images newly made woman to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocker, and extracting clutch'd? What reply? Ha? What saist thou to this Tune, Matter, and Method? Is't not drown'd i'th last raine? Ha? What saist thou Trot? Is the world as it was Man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? Or how? The tricke of it?

Duk. Still thus, and thus: still worfe?

Luc. How doth my deere Morfell, thy Mistris? Procures she still? Ha?

Clo. Troth sir, she hath eaten up all her Beefe, and she is her selfe in the tub.

Luc. Why 'tis good: It is the right of it: it must be so. Ever your fresh Whore, and your powder'd Baud, an unshun'd consequence, it must be so. Art going to prison Pompey?

Clo. Yes faith sir.

Luc. Why 'tis not amisse Pompey: farewell: goe say I sent thee thither: for debt Pompey? Or how?

Elb. For being a baud, for being a baud.

Luc. Well, then imprison him: If imprisonment be the due of a baud, why 'tis his right. Baud is he doubtlesse, and of antiquity too: Baud borne. Farewell good Pompey: Commend me to the prison Pompey, you will turne good husband now Pompey, you will keepe the house.

Clo. I hope Sir, your good Worship will be my baile?

Luc. No indeed will I not Pompey, it is not the wear: I will pray (Pompey) to encrease your bondage if you take it not patiently: Why, your mettle is the more: Adieu trusty Pompey.

Blesse you Friar.

Duk. And you.

Luc. Do's Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha?

Elb. Come your wayes sir, come.

Clo. You will not baile me then Sir?

Luc. Then Pompey, nor now: what newes abroad Fryer? What newes?

Elb. Come your wayes sir, come.

Luc. Goe to kennell (Pompey) goe: Exeunt. What newes Fryer of the Duke?

Duk. I know none: can you tell me of any?

Luc. Some say he is with the Emperour of Russia: other some, he is in Rome: but where is he thinke you?

Duk. I know not where: but wherefoever, I wish him well.

Luc. It was a mad fantasticall tricke of him to steale from the State, and usurpe the beggery he was never borne to: Lord Angelo Dukes it well in his absence: hee puts transgression too't.

Duk. He do's well in't.

Luc. A little more lenitie to Lechery would doe no harme in him: Something too crabbed that way, Fryer.

Duk. It is too generall a vice, and severity must cure it.

Luc. Yes in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied, but it is impossible to extirpe it quite, Friar, till eating and drinking be put downe. They say this Angelo was not made by Man and Woman, after this downe-right way of Creation: is it true, thinke you?

Duk. How should he be made then?

Luc. Some report, a Sea-maid spawn'd him. Some, that he was begot betweene two Stock-fishes. But it is certaine, that when he makes water, his Urine is congeal'd ice, that I know to be true: and he is a motion generative, that's infallible.

Duk. You are pleasant sir, and speake apace.

Luc. Why, what a ruthlesse thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a Cod-peece, to take away the life of a man? Would the Duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred Bastards, he would have paid for the Nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport, he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duk. I never heard the absent Duke much detected for Women, he was not inclin'd that way.

Luc. Oh Sir, you are decciv'd.

Duk. 'Tis not possible.

Luc. Whe, not the Duke? Yes, your beggar of fifty: and his use was, to put a ducket in her Clack-dish; the Duke had Crochets in him. He would be drunke too, that let me informe you.

Duk. You doe him wrong, surely.

Luc. Sir, I was an inward of his: a shy fellow was the Duke, and I beleve I know the cause of his with-drawing.

Duk. What (I prethee) might be the cause?

Luc. No, pardon: 'Tis a secret must be lockt within the teeth and the lipes: but this I can let you understand, the greater file of the subject held the Duke to be wife.

Duk. Wife? Why no question but he was.

Luc. A very superficiall, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duk. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: The very streame of his life, and the businesse he hath helmed, must upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his owne bringings forth, and he shall appeare to the envious, a Scholler, a Statesman, and a Souldier: therefore you speake unskilfully: or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkned in your malice.

G

Luc.

Luc. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duk. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with deare love.

Luc. Come Sir, I know what I know.

Duk. I can hardly beleieve that, since you know not what you speake. But if ever the Duke returne (as our prayers are he may) let me desire you to make your answer before him: if it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintaine it; I am bound to call upon you, and I pray you your name?

Luc. Sir my name is Lucio, well knowne to the Duke.

Duk. He shall know you better Sir, if I may live to report you.

Luc. I feare you not.

Duk. O, you hope the Duke will returne no more: or you imagine me too unhurtfull an opposite: but indeed I can doe you little harme: You'll for-sweare this againe?

Luc. Ile be hang'd first: Thou art deceiv'd in mee Friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio dye to morrow, or no?

Duk. Why should he dye Sir?

Luc. Why? For filling a bottle with a Tunnish: I would the Duke we talke of were return'd againe: this ungenitur'd Agent wil un-people the Province with Continency. Sparrowes must not build in his house-eeves, because they are lecherous: The Duke yet would have darke deeds darkely answered, he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd. Marry this Claudio is condemned for untrussing. Farewell good Friar, I prethee pray for me: The Duke (I say to thee againe) would eate Mutton on Fridayes. He's now past it, yet (and I say to thee) he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt browne-bread and Garlick: say that I said so: Farewell.

Exit.

Duk. No might, nor greatnesse in mortality Can censure scape: Back-wounding calumny The whitest vertue strikes. What King so strong, Can tye the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here?

Enter Escalus, Provost, and Baud.

Ese. Goe, away with her to prison.

Baud. Good my lord be good to me, your Honor is accounted a mercifull man: good my Lord.

Ese. Double, and trebble admonition, and still forfeite in the same kind? This would make mercy sweare and play the Tyrant.

Pro. A Baud of eleven yeares continuance, may it please your Honor.

Baud. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me, Mistress Kate Keepe-downe was with child by him in the Dukes time, hee promis'd her marriage: his Child is a yeere and a quarter old come Philip and Jacob: I have kept it my selfe; and see how he goes about to abuse me.

Ese. That fellow is a fellow of much License: Let him be call'd before us. Away with her to prison: Goe to, no more words. Provost, my Brother Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio must dye to morrow: Let him be furnish'd with Divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Pro. So please you, this Friar hath beene with him, and advis'd him for th'entertainment of death.

Ese. Good even, good father.

Duk. Blisse, and goodnesse on you.

Ese. Of whence are you?

Duk. Not of this Country, though my chance is now To use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious Order, late come from the Sea, In special business from his Holinesse.

Ese. What newes abroad i'th World?

Duk. None, but that there is so great a Feavor on goodnesse, that the dissolution of it must cure it. Novelty is onely in request, and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is vertuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make Societies secure, but Security enough to make Fellowships accurst. Much upon this riddle runnes the wisdom of the world: This newes is old enough, yet it is every dayes newes. I pray you Sir, of what disposition was the Duke?

Ese. One, that above all other strifes, Contended especially to know himselfe, Duk. What pleasure was he given to?

Ese. Rather rejoycing to see another merry, then merry at any thing which profess to make him rejoyce. A Gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know, how you find Claudio prepar'd? I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

Duk. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his Iudge, but most willingly humbles himselfe to the determination of Iustice: yet had he framed to himselfe (by the instruction of his frailty) many deceiving promises of life, which I (by my good leisure) have discredited to him, and now is he resolv'd to dye.

Ese. You have paid the heavens your Function, and the prisoner the very debt of your Calling. I have labour'd for the poore Gentleman, to the extremest shore of my modesty, but my brother-justice have I found so severe, that he hath forc'd me to tell him, he is indeed justice.

Duk. If his owne life, Answer the straitnesse of his proceeding, It shall become him well: wherein if he chance to faile, he hath sentenc'd himselfe.

Ese. I am going to visit the prisoner, Fare you wel. Exit.

Duk. Peace be with you.

He who the sword of Heaven will beare, Should be as holy, as severe: Patterne in himselfe to know, Grace to stand, and Vertue goe: More, nor lesse to others paying, Then by selfe-offences weighing. Shame to him, whose cruell striking, Kils for faults of his owne liking: Twice trebble shame on Angelo, To weede my vice, and let his grow. Oh, what may Man within him hide, Though Angell on the outward side? How may likeness made in crimes, Making practise on the Times, To draw with idle Spiders strings Most ponderous and substantiall things? Craft against vice, I must apply. With Angelo to night shall lye His old betroathed (but despised:) So disguise shall by th'disguited Pay with falshood, false exacting, And performe an old contracting.

Exit.
Alm.

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter Mariana, and Boy singing.

Song. Take, oh take those lips away, that so sweetly were forsworne,
 And those eyes: the breakers of day lights that doe mislead the Morne;
 But my kisses bring againe, bring againe,
 Seales of love, but seal'd in vaines, seal'd in vaine.

Enter Duke.

Mari. Breake off thy song, and haste thee quick away,
 Here comes a man of comfort, whose advise
 Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.
 I cry you mercy, Sir, and well could wish
 You had not found me here so musically.

Let me excuse me, and beleve me so,
 My mirth it much displeat'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duk. 'Tis good: though Musicke oft hath such a charme
 To make bad, good; and good provoke to harme.
 I pray you tell me, hath any body enquir'd for me here to day? much upon this time have I promis'd heere to meete.

Mari. You have not beene enquir'd after: I have sat here all day.

Enter Isabell.

Duk. I doe constantly beleve you: the time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little, may be
 I will call upon you anone for some advantage to your selfe.

Mari. I am alwayes bound to you. Exit.

Duk. Very well met, and well come:
 What is the newes from this good Deputy?

Isa. He hath a Garden circummur'd with Bricke,
 Whose westerne side is with a Vineyard back't;
 And to that Vineyard is a planced gate,
 That makes his opening with this bigger Key:
 This other doth command a little doore,
 Which from the Vineyard to the Garden leades,
 There have I made my promise, upon the Heavy middle of the night, to call upon him.

Duk. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isa. I have tane a due and wary note upon't,
 With whispering, and most guilty diligence,
 In action all of precept, he did show me
 The way twice ore.

Duk. Are there no other tokens
 Betweene you'greed, concerning her observance?

Isa. No: none but onely a repaire ith' darke,
 And that I have possesst him, my most stay
 Can be but brieft: for I have made him know,
 I have a Servant comes with me along:
 That staves upon me; whose perswasion is,
 I come about my brother.

Duk. 'Tis well borne up.
 I have not yet made knowne to Mariana

Enter Mariana.

A word of this: what hoa, within; come forth,
 I pray you be acquainted with this Maid,
 She comes to doe you good.

Isa. I doe desire the like.

Duk. Doe you perswade your selfe that I respect you?

Mari. Good Frier, I know you doe, and have found it.

Duk. Take then this your companion by the hand
 Who hath a story ready for your care:
 I shall attend your lecture, but make haste
 The vaporous night approaches.

Mari. Wilt please you walke aside? Exit.

Duk. Oh Place, and greatnes: millions of false eyes
 Are stucke upon thee: volumes of report
 Runne with these false, and most contrarious Quests
 Vpon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit
 Make thee the father of their idle dreame,
 And racke thee in their fancies. Welcome, how agreed?

Enter Mariana, and Isabell.

Isa. She'll take the enterprize upon her, father,
 If you advise it.

Duk. It is not my consent,
 But my entreaty too.

Isa. Little have you to say
 When you depart from him, but soft and low;
 Remember now my brother.

Mari. Feare me not.

Duk. Nor gentle daughter, feare you not at all:
 He is your husband on a pre-contract:
 To bring you thus together 'tis no sinne,
 Sith that the Iustice of your title to him
 Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us goe,
 Our Corne's to reape, for yet our Tithes to sow. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Provost, and Clowne.

Pro. Come hither sirha; can you cut off a mans head?

Clo. If the man be a Bachelor Sir, I can:
 But if he be a married man, he's his wives head,
 And I can never cut off a womans head.

Pro. Come sir, leave me your snatches, and yeeld mee a direct answer. To morrow morning are to dye Claudio, and Barnardine: here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper, if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeeme you from your Gyves: if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpittied whipping;
 for you have beene a notorious baud.

Clo. Sir, I have beene an unlawfull baud, time out of mind, but yet I will be content to be a lawfull hangman:
 I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Pro. What hoa, Abhorson: where's Abhorson there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abbo. Doe you call sir?

Pro. Sirha, here's a fellow will helpe you to morrow in your execution: if you thinke it meet, compound with him by the yeere, and let him abide here with you, if not, use him for the present, and dismisse him, he cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath beene a Bawd.

Abbo. A Bawd Sir? fie upon him, he will discredit our mystery.

Pro. Goe too Sir, you waigh equally: a feather will turne the Scale. Exit.

Clo. Pray sir, by your good favour: for surely sir, a good favor you have, but that you have a hanging looke:
 Doe you call sir, your occupation a Mystery?

G 2

Abbo. I,

Abbo. I Sir, a Mistry.

Clo. Painting Sir, I have heard say, is a Mistry : and your Whores sir, being members of my occupation, v-fing painting, doe prove my Occupation, a Mistry : but what Mistry there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abbo. Sir, it is a Mistry.

Clo. Prooffe.

Abbo. Every true mans apparell fits your Theefe.

Clo. If it be too little for your theefe, your true man thinks it bigge enough. If it be too big for your Theefe, your Theefe thinks it little enough : So every true mans apparell fits your Theefe.

Enter Provost.

Pro. Are you agreed ?

Clo. Sir, I will serve him : For I doe find your Hang-man is a more penitent Trade then you Baud : he doth oftner aske forgiveness.

Pro. You sirrah, provide your blocke and your Axe to morrow, foure a clocke.

Abbo. Come on (Baud) I will instruct thee in my Trade : follow.

Clo. I doe desire to learne sir : and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your owne turne, you shall find me y'are. For truly sir, for your kindnesse, I owe you a good turne. Exit.

Pro. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio : Th'one has my pitty ; not a jot the other, Being a Murtherer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Looke, here's the Warrant Claudio, for thy death, 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to morrow Thou must be made immortall. Where's Barnardine ?

Cla. As fast lock'd up in sleepe, as guiltlesse labour, When it lyes starkely in the Travellers bones. He will not wake.

Pro. Who can doe good on him ? Well, goe, prepare your selfe. But harke, what noise ? Heaven give your spirits comfort : by, and by, I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve For the most gentle Claudio. Welcome father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. The best, and wholsomst spirits of the night, Invellop you, good Provost : who call'd heere of late ?

Pro. Now since the Curphew rung.

Duke. Not Isabell.

Pro. No.

Duke. They will then er't be long.

Pro. What comfort is for Claudio ?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Pro. It is a bitter Deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so : his life is paralel'd Even with the stroke and line of his great Iustice : He doth with holy abstinence subdue That in himselfe, which he spurs on his powre To qualifie in others : were he meal'd with that Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous, But this being so, he's just. Now are they come. This is a gentle Provost, sildome when The steeld Gaoler is the friend of men : How now ? what noise ? That spirit's posselt with haste, That wounds th'unsting Posterne with these strokes.

Pro. There he must stay untill the Officer Arise to let him in : he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet ?

But he must dye to morrow ?

Pro. None Sir, none.

Duke. As neere the dawning Provost, as it is, You shall heare more ere Morning.

Pro. Happely

You something know : yet I beleeve there comes No countermand : no such example have we : Besides, upon the very siege of iustice, Lord Angelo hath to the publike care Profest the contrary.

Enter a Messenger,

Duke. This is his lords man.

Pro. And heere comes Claudio's pardon.

Mess. My lord hath sent you this note, And by me this further charge : That you swerve not from the smallest Article of it, Neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow : for as I take it, it is almost day.

Pro. I shall obey him.

Duke. This is his Pardon purchas'd by such sinne, For which the Pardoner himselfe is in : Hence hath offence his quicke celerity, When it is borne in high Authority. When Vice makes Mercy ; Mercy's so extended, That for the faults love, is th'offender friended. Now Sir, what newes ?

Pro. I told you :

Lord Angelo (be-like) thinking me remisse In mine Office, awakens me With this unwonted putting on, methinkes strangely : For he hath not us'd it before.

Duke. Pray you let's heare.

The Letter.

Whatsoever you may heare to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by foure of the clocke, and in the afternoone Barnardine : For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudios head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed with a thought that more depends on it, then we must yet deliver. Thus faile not to doe your office, as you will answer it at your perill.

What say you to this Sir ?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who isto be executed in th'afternoone ?

Pro. A Bohemian borne : But here nurs't up and bred, One that is a prisoner nine yeeres old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him ? I have heard it was ever his manner to doe so.

Pro. His friends still wrought Repreeves for him : And indeed his fact till now in the government of lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtfull prooffe.

Duke. It is now apparent ?

Pro. Most manifest, and not denied by himselfe.

Duke. Hath he borne himselfe penitently in prison ? How seemes he to be touch'd ?

Pro. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleepe, carelesse, wreakelesse, and fearelesse of what's past, present, or to come : insensible of mortality, and desperately mortall.

Duke. He wants advice.

Pro. He will heare none : he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison : give him leave to escape hence, hee would not. Drunke many times a day, if not many dayes entirely drunke. We have very oft awak'd him, as if to carry him to execution, and shew'd him a seeming warrant for it, it hath not moved him at all.

Duke.

Duk. More of him anon: There is written in your brow Provost, honesty and constancy; if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me: but in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay my selfe in hazard: Claudio, whom heere you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the Law, than Angelo who hath sentenc'd him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but foure dayes respite: for the which, you are to doe me both a present, and a dangerous courtelie.

Pro. Pray Sir, in what?

Duk. In the delaying death.

Pro. Alacke, how may I doe it? Having the houre limited, and an expresse command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to crosse this in the smallest.

Duk. By the vow of mine Order, I warrant you, If my instructions may be your guide, Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, And his head borne to Angelo.

Pro. Angelo hath seen them both, And will discover the favour.

Duk. Oh, death's a great disguiser, and you may adde to it; Shave the head, and tye the beard, and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bar'd before his death: you know the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more then thanks and good fortune, by the Saint whom I professe, I will plead against it with my life.

Pro. Pardon me, good father, it is against my oath.

Duk. Were you tworne to the Duke, or to the Deputy?

Pro. To him, and to his Substitutes.

Duk. You will thinke you have made no offence, if the Duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Pro. But what likelihood is in that?

Duk. Not a resemblance, but a certainty; yet since I see you fearefull, that neither my coate, integrity, nor perswasion, can with ease attempt you, I will goe further then I meant, to plucke all feares out of you. Looke you Sir, here is the hand and Seale of the Duke: you know the Character I doubt not, and the Signet is not strange to you?

Pro. I know them both.

Duk. The Contents of this, is the returne of the Duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure: where you shall find within these two dayes, he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not, for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor, perchance of the Dukes death, perchance entering into some Monastery, but by chance nothing of what is writ. Looke, th' unfolding Starre calles up the Shepheard; put not your selfe into amazement, how these things should be; all difficulties are but easie when they are knowne. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shrift, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amaz'd, but this shall absolutely resolve you: Come away, it is almost cleere dawne. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clowne.

Clow. I am as well acquainted heere, as I was in our house of profession: one would thinke it were Mistris

Over-donsowne house, for heere bee many of her old Customers. First, here's yong Mr. Rash, he's in for a commodity of browne paper, and old Ginger, ninescore and seventene pounds, of which he made five Markes ready money: marry then, Ginger was not much in request, for the old Women were all dead. Then is there heere one Mr. Caper, at the suite of Master Three-Pile the Mercer, for some foure suites of Peach-colour'd Satten, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here, yong Dizy, and yong Mr. Deepe-vow, and Mr. Copperspore, and Master Starve-Lackey the Rapier and dagger man, and yong Drop-beere that kild lusty Pudding, and Mr. Forthlight the Tilter, and brave Mr. Shoory the great Traveller, and wilde Halfe-Canne that stabb'd Pots, and I thinke forty more, all great doers in our Trade, and are now for the lords sake.

Enter Abhorson.

Abbo. Sirah, bring Barnardine hither.

Clow. Master Barnardine, you must rise and be hang'd, Master Barnardine.

Abb. What hoa Barnardine.

Barnardine within.

Bar. A pox o' your throats: who makes that noyse there? What are you?

Clow. Your friends Sir, the Hangman:

You must be so good Sir to rise, and be put to death.

Bar. Away you Rogue, away, I am sleepey.

Abb. Tell him he must awake, And that quickly too.

Clow. Pray Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleepe afterwards.

Abb. Goe in to him, and fetch him out.

Clow. He is coming Sir, he is coming: I heare his Straw rusle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abb. Is the Axe upon the blocke, sirah?

Clow. Very ready Sir.

Bar. How now Abhorson?

What's the newes with you?

Abb. Truly Sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers: for looke you, the Warrant's come.

Bar. You Rogue, I have beene drinking all night, I am not fitt for't.

Clow. Oh, the better Sir: for he that drinkes all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleepe the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abb. Looke you Sir, here comes your ghostly father: doe we jest now thinke you?

Duke. Sir, induc'd by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, Comfort you, and pray with you.

Bar. Friar, not I: I have beene drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my braines with billets: I will not consent to dye this day, that's certaine.

Duk. Oh sir, you must: and therefore I beseech you Looke forward on the journey you shall goe.

Bar. I sweare I will not dye to day for any mans perswasion.

Duk. But heave you:

Bar. Not a word: if you have any thing to say to me, come to my Ward: for thence will not I to day. Exit.

Enter Provost.

Duk. Vnfit to live, or dye: oh gravell heart.

After him (Fellowes) bring him to the blocke.

Pro. Now Sir, how doe you find the prisoner?

Duk. A creature unpre-par'd, unmeet for death,
And to transport him in the minde he is,
Were damnable.

Pro. Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruell Feaver,
One Ragozine, a most notorious Pirate,
A man of Clandio's yeares: his beard, and head
Iust of colour. What if we doe omit
This Reprobate, till he were well enclin'd,
And satisfie the Deputy with the visage
Of Ragozine, more like to Clandio?

Duk. Oh, 'tis an accident that heaven provides:
Dispatch it presently, the houre drawes on Prefixt by Angelo: See this be done,
And sent according to command, whiles I
Perfwade this rude wretch willingly to dye.

Pro. This shall be done (good father) presently:
But Barnardine must dye this afternoone,
And how shall we continue Clandio,
To save me from the danger that might come,
If he were knowne alive?

Duk. Let this be done.
Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Clandio,
Ere twice the Sun hath made his journall greeting
To yond generation, you shall find
Your safetie manifested.

Pro. I am your free dependant.

Exit.

Duk. Quicke, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo.
Now will I write Letters to Angelo,
(The Provost he shall beare them) whose contents
Shall witnesse to him I am neere at home:
And that by great injunctions I am bound
To enter publickely: him ile desire
To meet me at the consecrated Fount,
A League below the Citty: and from thence,
By cold gradation, and weale-ballanc'd forme.
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Enter Provost.

Pro. Heere is the head, Ile carry it my selfe.

Duk. Convenient is it: Make a swift returne,
For I would commune with you of such things,
That want no care but yours,

Pro. Ile make all speed.

Exit.

Isabell within.

Isa. Peace hoa, be heere.

Duk. The tongue of Isabell. She's come to know,
If yet her brothers pardon be come hither:
But I will keepe her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despaire,
When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.

Isa. Hoa, by your leave.

Duk. Good morning to you, faire, and gracious daughter.

Isa. The better given me be so holy a man,
Hath yet the Deputy sent my brothers pardon?

Duk. He hath releas'd him, Isabell, from the world,
His head is off, and sent to Angelo.

Isa. Nay, but it is not so.

Duk. It is no other.

Shew your wisdome daughter in your close patience.

Isa. Oh, I will to him, and plucke out his eyes.

Duk. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isa. Unhappy Clandio, wretched Isabell.

Injurious world, most damned Angelo.

Duk. This nor hurts him, nor profits you a jot.
Forbeare it therefore, give your cause to heaven,
Marke what I say, which you shall find
By every syllable a faithfull verity.
The Duke comes home to morrow: nay dry your eyes,
One of our Covent, and his Confessor
Gives me this instance: Already he hath carried
Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who doe prepare to meete him at the gates, (dome,
There to give up their powre: if you can pace your wif-
In that good path that I would wish it goe,
And you shall have your bosome on this wretch,
Grace of the Duke, revenges to your heart,
And generall Honor.

Isa. I am directed by you.

Duk. This Letter then to Friar Peter give,
'Tis that he sent me of the Dukes returne:
Say, by this token, I desire his company
At Mariana's house to night. Her cause, and yours
Ile perfect him withall, and he shall bring you
Before the Duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home and home. For my poore selfe,
I am combined by a sacred Vow,
And shall be absent. Wend you with this Letter:
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart; trust not my holy Order
If I pervert your course: who's heere?

Enter Luci.

Luc. Good even;
Friar, where's the Provest?

Duk. Not within Sir,

Luc. Oh pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient; I am faine to dine and sup with water and bran: I dare not for my head fill my belly. One fruitfull Meale would set mee too't: but they say the Duke will be heere to Morrow.
By my troth Isabell I lov'd thy brother, if the old fanta-sticall Duke of darke corners had beene at home, he had lived.

Duk. Sir, the Duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports, but the best is, he lives not in them.

Luc. Friar, thou knowest not the Duke so well as I doe: he's a better woodman then thou tak'st him for.

Duk. Well: you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Luc. Nay tarry, Ile goe along with thee.
I can tell thee pretty tales of the Duke.

Duk. You have told me too many of him already sir if they be true: if not true, none were enough.

Luc. I was once before him for getting a Wench with child.

Duk. Did you such a thing?

Luc. Yes marry did I; but I was faine to forswear it,
They would else have married me to the rotten Medler.

Duk. Sir your company is fairer then honest, rest you well.

Luc. By my troth Ile goe with thee to the lanes end:
if bandy talke offend you, we'll have very little of: nay
Friar I am a kind of a Burre, I shall sticke. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Angelo, and Escalus.

Ese. Every Letter he hath writ, hath disvouch'd other.
Ang.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner, his actions shew much like to madnesse, pray heaven his wife-dome be not tainted: and why meet him at the gates and deliver our authorities there?

Efc. I ghesse not.

Ang. And why should we proclaime it in an houre before his entring, that if any crave redresse of injustice, they should exhibite their petitions in the street?

Efc. He shewes his reason for that: to have a dispatch of Complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against vs.

Ang. Well: I beseech you let it be proclaim'd be-times i th, morne, Ile call you at your houle: give notice to such men of fort and suit as are to meet him.

Efc. I shall sir: fare you well.

Exit.

Ang. Good night.

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant
And dull to all proceedings. A deflowred Maide,
And by an eminent Body, that enforc'd
The Law against it? But that her tender shame
Will not proclaime against her Maiden losse,
How might she tongue me? yet reason dares her no,
For my Authority beares of a credent bulke,
That no particular scandall once can touch
But it confounds the breather. He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'ne revenge
By so receiving a dishonour'd life,
With ranfome of such shame: would yet he had liv'd.
Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right, we would, and we would not. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Duke and Fryer Peter.

Duk. These Letters at fit time deliver me.
The Provost knowes our purpose and our plot,
The matter being a foote, keepe your instruction
And hold you ever to our speciall drift,
Though sometimes you doe blench from this to that
As cause doth minister: Goe call at Flavia's house,
And tell him where I stay: give the like notice
To Valencius, Rowland, and to Craffus,
And bid them bring the Trumpets to the gate:
But send me Flavius first.

Peter. It shall be speeded well.

Enter Varrinus.

Duke. I thanke thee Varrinus, thou hast made good hast,
Come, we will walke: There's other of our friends
Will greet us heere anon: my gentle Varrinus. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speake so indirectly I am loath,
I would say the truth, but to accuse him so
That is your part, yet I am advis'd to doe it,
He sayes, to vaile full purpose.

Mar. Be rul'd by him.

Isa. Besides, he tels me, that if peradventure
He speake against me on the adverse side,
I should not thinke it strange, for 'tis a Physicke
That's bitter, to sweet end.

Enter Peter.

Mar. I would Fryer Peter.—

Isab. Oh peace, the Fryer is come.

Peter. Come I have found you out a stand most fit,
Where you may have such vantage on the Duke
He shall not passe you:
Twice have the Trumpets sounded.
The generous and gravest Citizens
Have hent the gates, and very neere upon
The Duke is entring:
Therefore hence away. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Varrinus, Lords, Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Citizens at severall doores.

Duke. My very worthy Cosen, fairely met,
Our old and faithfull friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. Efc. Happy returne be to your Royall Grace.

Duke. Many and hearty thankings be to you both:
We have made enquiry of you, and we heare
Such goodnesse of your Iustice, that our soule
Cannot but yeeld you forth to publike thanks
Foreunning more requitall.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Du. Oh your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To locke it in the wards of covert bosome
When it deserves with Characters of Brasse
A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time,
And rasure of oblivion: Give we your hand
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward curtesies would faine proclaime
Favours that keepe within: Come Escalus,
You must walke by us on our other hand:
And good supporters are you.

Enter Peter and Isabella.

Peter. Now is your time
Speake loud, and kneele before him.

Isab. Iustice, O Royall Duke, vaile your regard Vpon a wrong'd (I would faine have said a Maid)
Oh worthy Prince dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object,
Till you have heard me, in my true complaint,
And given me Iustice, Iustice, Iustice, Iustice.

Duke. Relate your wrongs;
In what, by whom? be brieve:
Here is Lord Angelo shall give you Iustice,
Reveale your selfe to him.

Isab. Oh worthy Duke,
You bid me seeke redemption of the Divell,
Heare me your selfe: for that which I must speake
Must either punish me, not being beleeu'd,
Or wring redresse from you:
Heare me: oh heare me, heere.

Ang. My Lord, her wits, I feare me, are not firme:
She hath been a suitor to me, for her brother
Cut off by course of Iustice.

Isab. By course of Iustice!

Ang. And she will speake most bitterly.

Isab. Most.

Isab. Most strange : but yet most truly will I speake,
That Angelo's forsworne, is it not strange ?
That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange ?
That Angelo is an adulterous theefe,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator,
Is it not strange ? and strange ?

Du. Nay it is ten times strange ?

Isa. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Than this is all as true, as it is strange ;
Nay, it is tentimes true, for truth is truth
To th' end of reckning.

Du. Away with her : poore soule
She speakes this, in th' infirmity of sense.

Isab. Oh Prince, I conjure thee, as thou beleev'st
There is another comfort, than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madnesse : make not impossible
That which but seemes unlike, 'tis not impossible
But one, the wickedst Caitiffe on the ground
May seeme as shie, as grave, as just, as absolute :
As Angelo, even so may Angelo
In all his dressings, caracks, titles, formes,
Be an arch-villaine : Beleeve it, royall Prince
If he be lesse, he's nothing, but he's more,
Had I more name for badnesse.

Du. By mine honesty
If she be mad, as I beleeve no other,
Her madnesse hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependancy of thing on thing,
As ere I heard in madnesse.

Isab. Oh gracious Duke
Harpe not on that ; nor doe not banish reason
For inequality, but let your reason serve
To make the truth appeare, where it seemes hid,
And hide the false seemes true.

Duke. Many that are not mad
Have sure more lacke of reason :
What would you say ?

Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of Fornication
To lose his head, condemn'd by Angelo :
I, (in probation of a Sisterhood)
Was sent to by my brother ; one Lucio
As then the Messenger.

Luc. That's I, and 't like your Grace :
I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her,
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo :
For her poore brothers pardon.

Isab. That's he indeed.

Du. You were not bid to speake.

Luc. No, my good Lord,
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Du. I with you now then,
Pray you take note of it : and when you have
A businesse for your selfe : pray heaven you then
Be perfect.

Luc. I warrant your honour.

Du. The warrant's for your selfe : take heed to't.

Isab. This Gentleman told something of my Tale.

Luc. Right.

Du. It may be right, but you are i'th wrong
To speake before your time, proceed.

Isab. I went

To this pernicious Caytiffe Deputy.

Du. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it,

The phrase is to the matter.

Du. Mended againe : the matter : proceed.

Isab. In brieft, to set the needlesse by :
How I perswaded, how I praid, and kneel'd,
How he refeld me, and how I replide
(For this was of much length) the vilde conclusion
I now begin with griefe and shame to utter.
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust
Release my brother ; and after much debatement,
My sisterly remorse, confutes mine honour,
And I did yeeld to him : But the next morne betimes,
His purpose surfering, he sends a warrant
For my poore brothers head.

Du. This is most likely.

Isab. Oh that it were as like as it is true. (speak'st,

Du. By heaven (fond wretch) I know'st not what thou
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hatefull practise : first his Integrity
Stands without blemish : next it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himselfe : if he had so offended
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himselfe,
And not have cut him off : some one hath set you on :
Confesse the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam'st here to complaine.

Isab. And is this all ?

Then oh you blessed Ministers above,
Keepe me in patience, and with ripened time
Vntold the evill which is here wrapt up
In countenance : heaven shield your Grace from woe,
As I thus wrong'd, hence unbeleeved goe.

Du. I know you'd faile be gone : An Officer :
To prison with her : Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall,
On him to neere us ? This needs must be a practise ;
Who knew of your intent and coming hither ?

Isab. One that I would were here, Fryer Lodowicke.

Du. A ghostly Father belike :
Who knowes that Lodowicke ?

Luc. My Lord, I know him, 'tis a meddling Fryer,
I doe not like the man : had he beene Lay, my Lord,
For certaine words he spake against your Grace
In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly.

Du. Words against me ? this a good Fryer belike
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our Substitute : Let this Fryer be found.

Luc. But yesternight my Lord, she and that Fryer
I saw them at the prison : a sawcy Fryer,
A very scurvy fellow.

Peter. Blessed be your Royall Grace :
I have stood by my Lord, and I have heard
Your Royall eare abus'd : first hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your Substitute,
Who is as free from touch, or soyle with her
As she from one ungot.

Du. We did beleeve no lesse.
Know you that Fryer Lodowicke which she speakes of ?

Peter. I know him for a man Divine and holy,
Not scurvy, nor a temporary medler
As he's reported by this Gentleman :
And on my trust, a man that never yet
Did (as he vouches) misreport your Grace.

Luc. My Lord, most villanously, beleeve it.

Peter. Well : he in time may come to cleare himselfe ;
But at this instant he is sicke, my Lord :

Of a strange Fever : upon his meere request
Being come to knowledge, that there was complaint
Intended against Lord Angelo, came I hither
To speake as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true and false : and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full cleare
Whensoever he's convented : First, for this woman,
To justifie this worthy Nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accus'd,
Her shall you heare disproved to her eyes,
Till she herselfe confesse it.

Duke. Good Fryer let's heare it :
Doe you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
Oh heaven, the vanity of wretched fooles,
Give vs some seates, Come Cosen Angelo,
In this Ile be impartiall : be you judge
Of your owne Cause : Is this the Witnesse Fryer ?

Enter Mariana.

First, let her shew her face, and after speake.

Mar. Pardon my Lord, I will not shew my face
Vntill my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married ?

Mar. No my Lord.

Duke. Are you a Maid ?

Mar. No my Lord,

Duke. A Widdow then ?

Mar. Neither my Lord.

Duke. Why are you nothing then : neither Maid, Widdow, nor Wife ?

Luc. My Lord, she may be a Punke : for many of them, are neither Maid, Widdow, nor Wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow : I would he had some cause to prattle for himselfe.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Mar. My Lord, I doe confesse I nere was married,
And I confesse besides, I am no Maid,
I have knowne my husband, yet my husband
Knowes not that ever he knew me.

Luc. He was drunke then, my Lord, it can be no better.

Du. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert so to.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Du. This is no witnesse for Lord Angelo.

Mar. Now I come to't, my Lord.

Since that accuses him of Fornication,
In selfe-same manner doth accuse my husband,
And charges him, my Lord, with such a time,
When Ile depose I had him in mine Armes
With all th'effect of Love.

Ang. Charges she mee then me ?

Mar. Not that I know.

Du. No ? you say your husband.

Mar. Why just my Lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinkes he knowes, that he nere knew my body;
But knowes, he thinkes, that he knowes Isabell.

Ang. This is a strange abuse : Let's see thy face.

Mar. My husband bids me, now I will unmaske.

This is that face, thou cruell Angelo
Which once thou sworst, was worth the looking on:
This is the hand, which with a vow'd contract
Was fast belockt in thine : This is the body
That tooke away the match from Isabell,
And did supply thee at thy Garden-house
In her imagin'd person.

Du. Know you this woman ?

Luc. Carnally she sayes.

Du. Sirr ha, no more.

Luc. Enough my Lord.

Ang. My Lord, I must confesse, I know this woman,
And five yeares since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt my selfe and her : which was broke off,
Partly for that her promis'd proportions
Came short of Composition : but in chiefe
For that her reputation was dis-valued
In levity : Since which time of five yeeres
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her
Vpon my faith and honour.

Mar. Noble Prince,
As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath
As there is sence in truth, and truth in vertue,
I am affianced this mans wife, as strongly
As words could make up Vowes : And my good Lord,
But Tuesday night last gone, in's Garden house,
He knew me as a wife. As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees,
Or else for ever be confix'd here
A Marble Monument.

Ang. I did but smile till now,
Now, good my Lord, give me the scope of Iustice,
My patience here is touch'd : I doe perceive
These poore informall women, are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member
That sets them on. Let me have way, my Lord,
To finde this practise out.

Duke. I, with my heart,
And punish them to your height of pleasure.
Thou foolish Fryer, and thou pernicious woman
Compact with her that's gone : think 't thou thy oathes,
Though they would sweare downe each particular Saint,
Were testimonies gainst his worth, and credit
That's seald in approbation ? you, Lord Escalus,
Sir with my Cozen, lend him your kinde paines
To finde out this abuse, whence 'tis deriv'd.
There is another Fryer that set them on,
Let him be sent for.

Peter. Would he were here, my Lord, for he indeed
Hath set the women on to this complaint ;
Your Provost knowes the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

Duke. Goe, doe it instantly :
And you my Noble and well-warranted Cosen
Whom it concernes to heare this matter forth,
Doe with your injuries as seemes you best
In any chastisement ; I for a while
Will leave you ; but stirre not you till you have Well determin'd upon these Slanderers. Exit.

Ese. My Lord, wee'll doe it throughly : Signior Lucio, did not you say, you knew that Fryer Lodowicke to bee a dishonest person ?

Luc. Cucullus non facit Monachum, honest in nothing but in his Cloathes, and one that hath spoke most villanous speeches of the Duke.

Ese. We shall intreat you to abide here till he come, and inforce them against him : wee shall finde this Fryer a notable fellow.

Luc. As any in Vienna on my word.

Ese. Call that same Isabell here once againe, I would speake with her : pray you, my Lord, give mee leave to question, you shall see how Ile handle her.

Luc. Not better then he, by her owne report.

Ese. Say you ?

Luc. Marry sir, I thinke, if you handled her privately

She

she should sooner confesse, perchance publikely she'll bee alham'd.

Enter Duke, Provost, Isabella.

Ese. I will goe darkely to worke with her.

Luc. That's the way: for women are light at midnight.

Ese. Come on Mistris, here's a Gentlewoman Denies all that you have said.

Luc. My Lord, here comes the Rascall I spoke of, Here with the Provost.

Ese. In very good time: speake not you to him, till we call upon you.

Luc. Mum.

Ese. Come sir, did you set these women on to slander Lord Angelo? they have contes'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.

Ese. How? know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place; and let the Divell Be sometime honour'd, for his burning throne.

Where is the Duke? 'tis he should heare me speake.

Ese. The Duke's in us: and we will heare you speake, Looke you speake justly.

Duke. Boldly at least. But oh poore soules, Come you to seeke the Lambe here of the Fox? Good night to your redresse: is the Duke gone? Then is your cause gone too: The Duke's unjust, Thus to retort your manifest appeale, And put your tryall in the villaines mouth, Which here you come to accuse.

Luc. This is the Rascall: this is he I spoke of.

Ese. Why thou unreverend and unhallowed Fryer: Is't not enough thou hast suborn'd these women, To accuse this worthy man? but in fowle mouth, And in the witnesse of his proper eare, To call him villaine; and then to glance from him, To th' Duke himselfe, to taxe him with Injustice? Take him hence; to th' racke with him: we'll towze you Ioynt by joynt, but we will know his purpose: What? unjust?

Duke. Be not so hot: the Duke dare No more stretch this finger of mine, then he Dare racke his owne: his Subject am I not, Nor here Provincial: My businesse in this State Made me a looker on here in Vienna, Where I have seene corruption boyle and bubble, Till it ore-runne the Stew: Lawes for all faults, But faults so countenanc'd, that the strong Statutes Stand like the forfeits in a Barbers shop, As much in mocke, as marke.

Ese. Slander to th' State: Away with him to prison.

Ang. What can you vouch against him Signior Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell us of?

Luc. 'Tis he, my Lord: come hither goodman baldpate, doe you know me?

Duke. I remember you sir by the sound of your voyce, I met you at the prison in the absence of the Duke.

Luc. Oh, did you so? and doe you remember what you said of the Duke?

Duke. Most notably sir.

Luc. Doe you so sir: And was the Duke a flesh-monger, a foole, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must (sir) change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you indeed spoke so of him, and much more, much worse.

Luc. Oh thou damnable fellow: did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest, I love the Duke as I love my selfe.

Ang. Harke how the villaine would crole now, after his traitonable abuses.

Ese. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withall: Away with him to prison: Where is the Provost? away with him to prison: lay bolts enough upon him: let him speake no more: away with those Giglets too, and with the other confederate companion.

Duke. Stay sir, stay a while.

Ang. What, resists he? helpe him Lucio.

Luc. Come sir, come sir, come sir: foh sir, why you baldpated lying Rascall: you must be hooded must you? show your knaves vilage with a poxe to you: show your sheepe-biting face, and bee hang'd an houre: will't not off?

Duke. Thou art the first knave that ere mad'st a Duke. First Provost, let me bayle these gentle three: Sneake not away sir, for the Fryer and you, Must have a word anon: lay hold on him.

Luc. This may prove worse then hanging.

Duke. What you have spoke, I pardon: sit you downe, We'll borrow place of him; Sir, by your leave: Ha'st thou or word or wit, or impudence, That yet can doe thee office? If thou ha'st, Rely upon it, till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out.

Ang. Oh my dread Lord, I should be guiltier then my guiltinesse, To thinke I can be undiscernable, When I perceive your Grace, like power Divine, Hath look'd upon my paffes. Then good Prince, No longer Session hold vpon my shame, But let my triall be mine owne Confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither Mariana, Say: was't thou ever contracted to this woman?

Ang. I was my Lord.

Duke. Goe take her hence, and marry her instantly. Doe you the office (Fryer) which consummate, Returne him here againe: goe with him Provost. Exit.

Ese. My Lord I am more amaz'd at his dishonour, Then at the strangenesse of it.

Duke. Come hither Isabel, Your Fryer is now your Prince: As I was then Advertising, and holy to your businesse, (Not changing heart with habit) I am still, Atturnd at your service.

Isab. Oh give me pardon That I, your vassall, have imploy'd and pain'd, Your unknowne Sovereignty.

Duke. You are pardon'd Isabel: And now deare Maide, be you as free to us. Your brothers death, I know, sits at your heart: And you may marveile, why I obscur'd my selfe, Labouring to save his life; and would not rather Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power, Then let him so be lost: Oh most kinde Maide, 't was the swift celerity of his death, Which I did thinke with slower foote came on, That brain'd my purpose: but peace be with him, That life is better life past fearing death, Then that which lives to feare: make it your comfort,

So happy is your Brother.

Enter Angelo, Maria, Peter, Provost.

Isa. I doe my Lord.

Duke For this new-married man, approaching here,
Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd
Your well defended honour; you must pardon
For Mariana's sake: But as he adjudg'd your Brother,
Being criminal, in double violation
Of sacred chastitie, and of promise-breach,
Thereon dependant for your brothers life,
The very mercy of the Law cries out
Most audible, even from his proper tongue,
An Angelo for Claudio, death for death:
Haste still payes haste, and leasure answers leasure;
Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure:
Then Angelo thy fault's thus manifested:
Which though thou wouldst deny, denies thee vantage.
We doe condemne thee to the very Blocke
Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste
Away with him.

Mar. Oh my most gracious Lord,
I hope you will not mocke me with a husband?

Duke It is your husband mock'd you with a husband,
Consenting to the safe-guard of your honour,
I thought your marriage fit: else Imputation,
For that he knew you, might reproch your life.
And choake your good to come: for his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours;
We doe enstate, and widdow you withall,
To buy you a better husband.

Mar. Oh my deere Lord;
I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Never crave him, we are definitive.

Mar. Gentle my Liege,

Duke. You doe but lose your labour.

Away with him to death: Now sir, to you.

Mar. Oh my good Lord, sweet Isabel, take my part,
Lend me your knees, and all my life to come,
Ile lend you all my life to doe you service.

Duke. Against all sense you doe importune her,
Should shee kneele downe, in mercy of this fact,
Her brothers ghost his paved bed would breake,
And take her hence in horror.

Mar. Isabel:

Sweet Isabel, doe yet but kneele by me,
Hold up your hands, say nothing: I'll speake all.
They say best men are moulded out of faults,
And for the most, become much more the better
For being a little bad: So may my husband.

Oh Isabel: will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He dyes for Claudio's death.

Isab. Most bounteous Sir.

Looke, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother liv'd: I partly thinke,
A due sincerity governed his deeds,
Till he did looke on me: Since it is so,
Let him not dye: my brother had but Iustice,
In that he did the thing for which he di'd.
For Angelo, his act did not ore-take his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent
That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subjects
Intents, but meerely thoughts.

Mar. Meerely my Lord.

Duke. Your suite's unprofitable: stand up I say:
I have bethought me of another fault.

Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded

At an unusuall houre?

Pro. It was commanded so.

Duk. Had you a speciall warrant for the deed?

Pro. No my good Lord, it was by private message.

Duke. For which I doe discharge you of your office,
Give up your keyes.

Pro. Pardon me, Noble Lord.

I thought it was a fault, but knew it not,
Yet did repent me after more advice,
For testimony whereof, one in the prison
That should by private order else have dy'd;
I have reserv'd alive.

Duke. What's he?

Pro. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I wouldst thou hadst done so by Claudio:
Goe fetch him hither, let me looke upon him.

Esc. I am sorry, one so learned, and so wise
As you, Lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood
And lacke of temper'd judgement afterward.

Ang. I am sorry, that such sorrow I procure;
And so deepe sticks it in my penitent heart,
That I crave death more willingly then mercy,
'Tis my deserving, and I doe intreat it.

Enter Barnardine and Provost, Claudio, Julietta.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Pro. This my Lord.

Duke. There was a Fryer told me of this man.
Sirrha, thou art said to have a stubborne soule
That apprehends no further then this world,
And squar'st thy life according: Thou'rt condemn'd,
But for those earthly faults, I quit them all,
I pray thee take this mercy to provide
For better times to come: Fryer, advise him,
I leave him to your hand. What muffled fellow's that?

Pro. This is another prisoner that I sav'd,
Who should have dy'd when Claudio lost his head,
Aslike almost to Claudio, as himselfe.

Duke. If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardon'd, and for your lovely sake
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine;
He is my brother too: But fitter time for that:
By this Lord Angelo perceives hee's safe,
Me thinks I see a quickning in his eye:
Well Angelo, your evill quits you well.
Looke that you love your wife: her worth, worth yours.
I finde an apt remission in my selfe:
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon;
You sirrha, that knew me for a foole, a Coward,
One all of Luxurie, an Ass, a mad man:
Wherein have I so deserv'd of you
That you extoll me thus?

Luc. Faith my Lord, I spoke it but according to the tricke: if you will hang me for it, you may: but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipt.

Duke. Whipt first sir, and hang'd after.
Proclaime it Provost round about the City;
If any woman wrong'd by this lew'd fellow
(As I have heard him sweare himselfe there's one Whom he begot with childe) let her appeare,
And he shall marry her: the nuptiall finish'd;
Let him be whipt and hang'd.

Luc. I beseech your Highnesse doe not marry mee to a Whore: your Highnesse said even now, I made you a Duke, good my Lord doe not recompence me, in making me a Cuckold.

Duke. Vpon

Duke. Vpon mine honor thou shalt marry her,
Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithall
Remit thy other forfeits : take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Luc. Marrying a punke my lord, is pressing to death,
Whipping and hanging.

Duk. Slandering a Prince deserves it.
She Claudio that you wrong'd, looke you restore.

Ioy to you Mariana, love her Angelo :

I have confes'd her, and I know her vertue.

Thankes good friend, Escalus, for thy much goodnesse,

There's more behind that is more gratefull,
Thankes Provoft for thy care, and secrecy,
We shall imploy thee in a worthier place.
Forgive him Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozins for Claudio's,
Th'offence pardons it selfe. Deere Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good,
Whereto if you'll a willing eare incline ;
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
So bring us to our Pallace, where wee'll show
What's yet behind, thats meete you all should know.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter the Duke of Ephesus, with the Merchant of Syracuse,
Iaylor, and other attendants.

Merchant.

Roceed Salinus to procure my fall,
And by the doome of death end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracusa, plead no more.
I am not partiall to infringe our Lawes;
The enmitie and discord which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your Duke,
To merchants our well-dealing Countermen,
Who wanting gilders to redeeme their lives,
Have seal'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,
Excludes all pittie from our threatening looks:
For since the mortall and intestine iarres
Twixt thy seditious Countermen and us,
It hath in solemne Synodes beene decreed,
Both by the Syracusians and our selves,
T'admit no trafficke to our aduersé townes:
Nay more, if any borne at Ephesus
Be seene at any Syracusan Marts and Faires:
Again, if any Syracusan borne
Come to the Bay of Ephesus, he dies:
His goods confiscate to the Dukes dispose,
Vnlesse a thousand markes be levied
To quit the penalty, and ransom him:
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred Markes,
Therefore by Law thou art condemn'd to die.

Mer. Yet this my comfort, when your words are done,
My woes end likewise with the evening Sunne.

Duke. Well Syracusan; say in briebe the cause
Why thou departe dost from thy native home?
And for what cause thou cam'st to Ephesus?

Mer. A heavier taske could not have beene impos'd,
Then I to speake my grieve unspeakeable:
Yet that the world may witnesse, that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,
He utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracusa was I borne, and wedde
Vnto a woman, happy but for me;
And by me too, had not our hap beene bad:
With her I liv'd in joy, our wealth increast
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidaurium, till my factors death:
And he great store of goods at randone leaving,
Drew me from kinde embracements of my spouse;
From whom my absence was not sixe moneths olde,
Before her selfe (almost at fainting under

The pleasing punishment that women beare)
Had made provision for her following me,
And soone, and safe arriv'd where I was:
There had she not beene long, but she became
A joyfull mother of two goodly sonnes:
And, which was strange, the one so like the other,
As could not be distinguish'd but by names.
That very howre, and in the selfesame Inne,
A poore meane woman was delivered
Of such a burthen, Maletwins both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poore,
I bought, and brought up to attend my sonnes.
My wife, not meanelly proud of two such boyes,
Made daily motions for our home returne:
Vnwillling I agreed, alas, too soone we came aboard:
A league from Epidaurium had we sayld
Before the alwaies winde-obeying deepe
Gave any tragicke Instance of our harme:
But longer did we not retaine much hope;
For what obscured light the heavens did grant,
Did but convey unto our fearefull mindes
A doubtfull warrant of immediate death;
Which though my selfe would gladly have imbrac'd,
Yet the incessant weeping of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And pitteous playnings of the pretty babes
That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to feare,
Forst me to seeke delayes for them and me,
And this it was: (for other meanes was none)
The Sailors sought for safety by our boate,
And left the ship then sinking-ripe to us.
My wife, more carefull for the latter borne,
Had fastened him unto a small spare Mast,
Such as sea-faring men provide for stormes:
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whil'st I had beene like heedfull of the other.
The children thus dispo'd, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fixt,
Fastned our selves at eyther end the mast,
And floating straight, obedient to the streame,
Was carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the Sunne gazing upon the earth,
Disperst those vapours that offended us,
And by the benefit of his wish'd light
The seas waxe calme, and we discovered
Two shippes from farre, making amaine to us:
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurum this;
But ere they came, oh let me say no more,
Gather the sequell by that went before.

Duke. Nay forward old man, doe not breake off so,

H

For

For we may pitty, though not pardon thee.

Merch. Oh had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily tearm'd them mercilesse to us :
For ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encountred by a mighty rocke,
Which being violently borne up upon,
Our helpfull ship was splitted in the midst ;
So that in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike,
What to delight in, what to sorrow for,
Her part, poore soule, seeming as burdened,
With lesse waight, but not with lesse woe,
Was carried with more speed before the winde,
And in our sight they three were taken up
By Fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length another ship had seiz'd on us,
And knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave helpfull welcome to their ship-wrackt guests,
And would have rest the Fishers of their prey,
Had not their barke beene very slow of saile ;
And therefore homeward did they bend their course.
Thus have you heard me sever'd from my blisse,
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,
To tell sad stories of my owne mishaps.

Duke. And for the sakes of them thou sorrowest for,
Doe me the favour to dilate at full,
What hath befallne of them and thee till now.

Merch. My yongest boy, and yet my eldest care,
Ateightene yeares became inquisitive
After his brother ; and importun'd me
That his attendant, (for his case was like,
Rest of his brother, but retain'd his name,)
Might beare him company in the quest of him :
Whom whil'st I laboured of a love to see,
I hazarded the losse of whom I lov'd.
Five Sommers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roming cleane through the bounds of Asia,
And coasting homeward, came to Ephesus :
Hopelesse to finde, yet loath to leave unsought
Or that, or any place that harbours men :
But heere must end the story of my life,
And happy were I in my timely death,
Could all my travells warrant me they live.

Duke. Haplesse Egeon whom the fates have markt
To beare th' extremite of dire mishap :
Now trust me, were it not against our Lawes,
Against my Crowne, my oath, my dignity,
Which Princes would, they may not disanull,
My soule should sue as advocate for thee :
But though thou art adjudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recal'd
But to our honours great disparagement :
Yet will I favour thee in what I can,
Therefore Marchant, Ile limit thee this day
To seeke thy helpe by beneficiall helpe,
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus,
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the summe,
And live : if no, then thou art doom'd to die :
Iaylor take him to thy custodie.

Iaylor. I will my Lord.

Merch. Hopelesse and helpelesse doth Egeon wend,
But to procrastinate his livelesse end.

Exeunt.

Enter Antipholis, Erastes, a Merchant, and Dromio.

Mer. Therefore give out you are of Epidamium,
Lest that your goods too soone be confiscate :

This very day a Syracusan Merchant
Is apprehended for arrivall here,
And not being able to buy out his life,
According to the statute of the towne,
Dies ere the weary Sunne set in the West :
There is your monie that I had to keepe.

Ant. Goe beare it to the Centaure, where we host,
And stay there Dromio, tell I come to thee ;
Till that Ile view the manners of the towne,
Within this houre it will be dinner time :
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then returne and sleepe within mine Inne,
For with long travaile I am stiffe and wearie.
Get thee away.

Dro. Many a man would take you at your word,
And goe indeede, having so good a meanes.

Exit Dromio.

Ant. A trustie villaine sir, that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholly,
Lightens my humor with his merry jests :
What, will you walke with me about the towne,
And then goe to the Inne and dine with me ?

E. Mer. I am invited sir to certaine Merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit :
I crave your pardon, soone at five a clocke,
Please you, Ile meete with you upon the Mart,
And afterward comfort you till bed time :
My present businesse calls me from you now.

Ant. Farewell till then : I will goe loose my life,
And wander up and downe to view the Citie.

E. Mer. Sir I commend you to your owne content.

Exeunt.

Ant. He that commends me to my owne content,
Commends me to the thing I cannot get :
I to the world am like a drop of water,
That in the Ocean seekes another drop,
Who falling there to finde his fellow forth,
(Vnscene, inquisitive) confounds himselfe,
So I, to finde a Mother and a Brother,
In quest of him (unhappie) loose my selfe.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanacke of my true date :
What now ? How chance thou art return'd so soone.

E. Dro. Return'd so soone, rather approacht too late :
The Capon burnes, the Pig fals from the spit ;
The clocke hath stricken twelue upon the bell :
My Mistris made it one upon my cheek :
She is so hot because the meate is colde :
The meate is cold because you come not home ;
You come not home, because you have no stomacke :
You have no stomacke, having broke your fast :
But we that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for your default to day.

Ant. Stop in your winde sir, tell me this I pray,
Where have you left the mony that I gave you ?

E. Dro. Oh ! fixe pence that I had a wensday last,
To pay the Sadler for my Mistris crupper :
The Sadler had it Sir, I kept it not.

Ant. I am not in a sportive humor now :
Tell me, and dally not, where is the monie ?
We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine owne custodie.

E. Dro. I pray you jest sir as you sit at dinner :
I from my Mistris come to you in post :
If I returne I shall be post indeede.

For

For she will scouré your fault upon my pate :
Methinks your maw, like mine, should be you cooke,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. Come Dromio, come, these jests are out of season.
Referue them till a merrier houre then this :
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee ?

E. Dro. To me sir? why you gave no gold to me?

Ant. Come on sir knave, have done your foolishnes,
And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

E. Dro. My charge was but to fetch you from the Mart
Hometo your house, (the Phoenix sir) to dinner;
My Mistris and her sister staies for you.

Ant. Now as I am a Christian answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow'd my monie :
Or I shall breake that merrie sconce of yours
That stands on trickes, when I am undispos'd :
Where is the thousand Markes thou hadst of me ?

E. Dro. I have some markes of yours upon my pate:
Some of my Mistris markes upon my shoulders :
But not a thousand markes betweene you both.
If I should pay your worship those againe,
Perchance your will not beare them patiently.

Ant. Thy Mistris markes? what mistris slave hast thou?

E. Dro. Your worships wife, my Mistris at the Phoenix;
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner :
And prayes that you will hie you home to dinnner.

Ant. What wilt thou flout me thus unto my face
Being forbid? There take you that sir knave.

E. Dro. What meane you sir, for God sake hold your Nay, and you will not sir, Ile take my heeles. (hands:

Exit Dromio Ep.

Ant. Vpon my life by some device or other,
The villaine is ore-wrought of all my mony.
They say this towne is full of cosenage :
As nimble Iuglers that deceive the eye :
Darke-working Sorcerers that change the minde :
Soule-killing Witches, that deforme the body :
Disguised Cheaters, prating Mountebankes;
And many such like liberties of sinne :
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner :
Ile to the Centaure to goe seeke this slave,
I greatly feare my monie is not safe.

Exit.

Actus Secunda.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus Sereptus, with Luciana her Sister.

Adr. Neither my husband nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seeke his Master?
Sure Luciana it is two a clocke.

Luc. Perhaps some Merchans hath invited him,
And from the Mart he's somewhere gone to dinner :
Good Sister Let us dine, and never fret ;
A man is Master of his libertie ;
Time is their Master, and when they see time,
They'll goe or come ; if so, be patient Sister.

Adr. Why should their libertie then ours be more?

Luc. Because their businesse still lyes out adore.

Adr. Looke when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. Oh, know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is last with woe :
There's nothing situate under heavens eye,
But hath his bound in earth, in sea, in skie.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowles
Are their males subjects, and at their controules :
Man more divine, the Master of all these,
Lord of the wide world, and wide watry seas;
Indued with intellectuall fence and soule,
Of more preheminance then fish and fowle.
Are masters to their females, and their Lords :
Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adri. This servitude makes you to keepe unwed.

Luci. Not this, but troubles of the marriage bed.

Adr. But were you wedded, you wold beare some sway

Luc. Ere I learne love, Ile practise to obey.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home againe, I wold forbear.

Adr. Patience unmov'd, no marvel though she pause,
They can be meeke, that have no other cause :

A wretched soule bruis'd with adversitie,
We bid be quiet when we heare it crie.

But were we burnd with like waight of paine,
As much, or more, we should our selves complaine :

So thou that hast no unkinde mate to greeve thee,
With urging helpelesse patience wold releeve me ;

But if thou live to see like right bereft,
This foole-beg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luci. Well, I will marry one day but to trie :
Heere comes your man, now is your husband nie.

Enter Dromio Eph.

Adr. Say, is your tardie master now at hand ?

E. Dro. Nay, hee's at two hands with mee, and that my two eares can witnesse.

Adr. Say, didst thou speake with him? knowst thou his minde?

E. Dro. I, I, he told his minde upon mine eare, Besheew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feele his meaning.

E. Dro. Nay, hee strooke so plainly, I could too well feeel his blowes; and withall so doubtfully, that I could scarce understand them.

Adri. But say, I prethee, is he comming home ?
It seemes he hath great care to please his wife.

E. Dro. Why Mistrisse, sure my Master is horne mad.

Adri. Horne mad, thou villaine ?

E. Dro. I meane not Cuckold-mad,
But sure he is starke mad:

When I desir'd him to come home to dinner;

He ask'd me for a 1000. markes in gold:

'Tis dinner time quoth I : my gold, quoth he :

Your meat doth burne, quoth I : my gold quoth he :

Will you come, quoth I ; my gold quoth he ;

Where is the thousand markes I gave thee villaine?

The Pigge quoth I, is burn'd : my gold quoth he :

My mistrisse, sir, quoth I : hang up thy mistrisse :

I know not thy mistrisse, out on my mistrisse.

Luc. Quoth who?

E. Dr. Quoth my Master, I know quoth he, no house no wife, no mistrisse : so that my arrant due unto my tongue, I thanke him, I bare home upon thy shoulders:
for in conclusioe, he did beate me there.

Adr. Go backe againe thou slave, & fetch him home.

Dro. Goe backe againe, and be new beaten home ?

For Gods sake send some other messenger.

H 2

Adri. Backe

Adri. Backe slave, or I will breake thy pate acrossie.

Dro. And he will blesse that crosse with other beating:
Betweene you, I shall have a holy head.

Adri. Hence prating peasant, fetch thy master home.

Dro. Am I forround with you, as you with me,
That like a foot-ball you doe spurne me thus:
You spurne me hence, and he will spurne me hither,
If I last in this service, you must case me in leather. Exit.

Luci. Fie how impatience lowreth in your face:

Adri. His company must do his minions grace,
Whil't I at home starve for a merrie looke:
Hath homely age th'alluring beauty tooke
From my poore cheekes? then he hath wasted it.

Are my discourtes dull? Barren my wit,
If voluble and sharpe discourse be mar'd,
Vnkindnesse blots it more then marble hard.
Doe their gay vestments his affections baite?

That's not my fault, he's master of my state.
What ruins are in me that can be found,
By him not ruin'd? Then is he the ground
Of my defeatures. My decayed faire,

A funnie looke of his, would soone repaire.
But, (too unruly Deere,) he breakes the pale,
And feedes from home; poore I am but his stale.

Luci. Selfe-harming Icalousie; fie beat it hence:

Adi. Vnfeeling fools can with such wrongs dispence:

I know his eye doth homage other-where,
Or else, what lets it but he would be here?
Sister, you know he promis'd me a chaine,
Would that alone, alone he would detaine,
So he would keepe faire quarter with his bed:
I see the lewell best enamaled

Will lose his beautie: yet the gold bides still
That others touch, and often touching will:
Since that my beautie cannot please his eie,
He weepe (what's left) away and weeping die.

Luci. How manie fond foolcs serve mad Icalousie?

Exeunt.

Enter Antipolis Erotas.

Ant. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid up
Safe at the Centaur, and the heedfull slave
Is wandred forth in care to seeke me out
By computation and mine host's report.
I could not speake with Dromio, since at first
I sent him from the Mart: see here he comes.

Enter Dromio Siracusan.

How now sir, is your merrie humor alter'd?
As you love strokes, so jest with me againe:
You know no Centaur? you receiv'd no gold?
Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner?
My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad,
That thus so madlie thou didst answer me?

S. Dro. What answer sir? when spake I such a word?

E. Ant. Even now, even here, not halfe an houre since.

S. Dro. I did not see you since you sent me hence
Home to the Centaur with the gold you gave me?

Ant. Villaine, thou didst denie the gold's receipt,
And toldst me of a Mistress, and a dinner.
For which I hope thou felft I was displeas'd.

S. Dro. I am glad to see you in this merrie veine,
What meanes this jest, I pray you Master tell me?

Ant. Yea, do'st thou jeere and flowt me in the teeth?
Thinkst thou I jest? hold, take thou that, and that. Beats Dro.

S. Dr. Hold fir, for Gods sake, now your jest is earnest,

Vpon what bargain doe you give it me?

Antiph. Because that I familiarie sometimes
Doe use you for my foole, and chat with you,
Your sawcinesse will jest upou my love,
And make a Common of my serious houres:
When the Sunne shines, let foolish gnats make sport,
But creepe in crannies, when he hides his beames:
If you will jest with me, know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanor to my lookes,
Or I will beat this method in your sconce.

S. Dro. Scoone call you it? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head, and you use these blows long, I must get a sconce for my head, and In sconce it too, or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders, but I pray fir, why am I beaten?

Ant. Dost thou not know?

S. Dro. Nothing fir, but that I am beaten.

Ant. Shall I tell you why?

S. Dro. I fir, and wherefore; for they say, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. Why first for flouting me, and then wherefore, for urging it the second time to me.

S. Dro. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season, when in the why and the wherefore, is neither time nor reason. Well fir, I thanke you.

Ant. Thanke me fir, for what?

S. Dro. Marry fir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. He make you amends next, to give you nothing for something. But say fir, is it dinner time?

S. Dro. No fir, I thinke the meat wants that I have.

Ant. In good time fir, what's that?

S. Dro. Basting.

Ant. Well fir, then 'twill be drie.

S. Dro. If it be fir, I pray you eate not of it.

Ant. Your reason?

S. Dro. Left it make you chollericke, and purchase me another drie basting.

Ant. Well fir, learne to jest in good time, there's a time for all things.

S. Dro. I durst have denied that before you were so chollericke.

Ant. By what rule fir?

S. Dro. Marry fir, by a rule as plaine as the plaine bald pate of Father time himselfe.

Ant. Let's heare it.

S. Dro. There's no time for a man to recover his haire that growes bald by nature.

Ant. May he not doe it by fine and recoverie?

S. Dro. Yes, to pay a fine for a perewig, and recover the lost haire of another man.

Ant. Why, is Time such a niggard of haire, being (as it is) so plentifull an excrement?

S. Dro. Because it is a blessing that hee bestowes on beasts, and what he hath scanted them in haire, he hath given them in wit.

Ant. Why, but there's many a man hath more haire then wit.

S. Dro. Not a man of those but he hath the wit to lose his haire.

Ant. Why thou didst conclude hairie men plaine dealers without wit.

S. Dro. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost; yet he looseth it in a kinde of jollitie.

Ant. For what reason?

S. Dro. For two, and sound ones too.

Ant. Nay

An. Nay not found ones I pray you.

S. Dro. Sure ones then.

An. Nay, not sure in a thing falsing.

S. Dro. Certaine ones then.

An. Name them.

S. Dro. The one to save the money that he spends in trying : the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porrage.

An. You would all this time have prov'd, there is no time for all things.

S. Dro. Marry and did sir : namely, no time to recover haire lost by Nature.

An. But your reason was not substantiall, why there is no time to recover.

S. Dro. Thus I mend it : Time himselfe is bald, and therefore to the worlds end, will have bald followers.

An. I knew 'twould bee a bald conclusion : but soft, who waits us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adri. I, I, Antipholus, looke strange and frowne,
Some other Mistresse hath some sweet aspects :
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.
The time was once, when thou un-urg'd wouldst vow,
That never words were musicke to thine eare,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand ;
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste ;
Vnlesse I spake, or look'd, or touch'd or carv'd to thee.
How comes it now, (my Husband) oh how comes it,
That thou art then estranged from thy selfe ?
Thy selfe I call it, being strange to me :
That undividable incorporate
Am better than thy deere selves better part.
Ah doe not teare away thy selfe from me ;
For know my love : as easie maist thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulfes,
And take unmingled thence that drop againe
Without addition or diminishing,
As take from me thy selfe, and not me too.
How dearly would it touch thee to the quicke,
Shouldst thou heare I were licentious ?
And that this body consecrate to thee,
By Ruffian Lust should be contaminate ?
Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurne at me,
And hurle the name of husband in my face,
And teare the stain'd skin of my Harlot brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
And breake it with a deepe-divorcing vow ?
I know thou canst, and therefore see thou do it.
I am posselt with an adulterate blot,
My bloud is mingled with the crime of lust :
For if we two be one, and thou play false,
I doe digest the poyson of my flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion.
Keepe then faire league and truce with thy true bed,
I live distain'd, thou undishonoured.

Antip. Plead you to me faire dame? I know you not :
In Ephesus I am but two houres old,
As strange unto your towne, as to your talke,
Who every word by all my wit being scan'd,
Wants wit in all, one word to understand.

Luci. Fie brother, how the world is chang'd with you :
When were you wont to use my sister thus ?
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner,

Ant. By Dromio?

Drom. By me.

Adri. By thee, and thus thou didst returne from him.
That he did buffet thee, and in his blowes,
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Ant. Did you conversie sir with this gentlewoman?
What is the course and drift of your compact ?

S. Dro. I sir? I never saw her till this time.

Ant. Villaine thou liest, for even her very words,
Didst thou deliver to me on the Mart.

S. Dro. I never spake with her in all my life.

Ant. How can she thus then call us by our names?
Vnlesse it be by inspiration.

Adri. How ill agrees it with you gravitie,
To counterfeit thus grosely with your slave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my moode ;
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come I will fasten on this sleeve of thine :

Thou art an Elme my husband, I a Vine :
Whose weaknesse married to thy stranger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate :
If ought possesse thee from me, it is drosse,
Vsurping Ivie, Brier, or idle Mosse,
Who all for want of pruning, with intrusion,
Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion,

Ant. To me she speaks, shee moves mee for her theame ;

What, was I married to her in my dreame ?
Or sleepe I now, and thinke I heare all this?
What error drives our eyes and eares amisse?
Vntill I know this sure uncertaintie,
Ile entertaine the free'd fallacie.

Luc. Dromio, goe bid the servants spred for dinner.

S. Dro. Oh for my beads, I crosse me for a sinner.
This is the faire land, oh spite of spights,
We talke with Goblins, Owles and Elves Sprights;
If we obey them not, this will insue :
They'l sucke our breath, or pinch us blacke and blew.

Luc. Why prat'st thou to thy selfe,
Dromio, thou Dromio, snail, thou slug, thou set.

S. Dro. I am transformed Master, am I not?

Ant. I thinke thou art in minde, and so am I.

S. Dro. Nay Master, both in minde, and in my shape

Ant. Thou hast thine owne forme.

S. Dro. No, I am an Ape.

Luc. If thou art chang'd to ought, 'tisto an Asse.

S. Dro. 'Tis true she rides me, and I long for grasse.
'Tis so, I am an Asse, else it could never be,
But I should know her as well as she knowes me.

Adri. Come, come, no longer will I be a foole,
To put the finger in thy eye and weepe ;
Whil'st man and master laughs my woes to scorne :
Come sir to dinner, Dromio keepe the gate :
Husband Ile dine above with you to day,
And shrive you of a thousand idle pranks :
Sirra, if any aske you for your Master,
Say he dines forth, and let no creature enter :
Come sister, Dromio play the Porter well.

Ant. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking, mad or well advise :
Knowne unto thele, and to my selfe disguise !
Ile say as they say, and persevere so :

And in this mist at all adventures go.

S. Dro. Master, shall I be Porter at the gate?

Adri. I, and let none enter, least I breake your pate.

Luci. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, his man Dromio, Angelo the Goldsmith, and Balthazar the Merchant

E. Ant. Good signior Angelo you must excuse us all,
My wife is shrewish when I keepe not howres;
Say that I lingerd with you at your shop
To see the making of her Carkanet,
And that to morrow you will bring it home.

But here's a villaine that would face me downe
He met me on the Mart, and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand markes in gold,
And that I did denie my wife and house;
Thou drunkard thou, what didst thou meane by this?

E. Dro. Say what you will sir, but I know what I know,
That you beat me at the Mart I have your hand to show;
If the skin were parchmēt, & blows you gave were ink,
Your hand-writing would tell you what I thinke.

E. Ant. I thinke thou art an asse.

E. Dro. Marry so it doth appeare
By the wrongs I suffer, and the blowes I beare:
I should kicke being kickt, and being at that passe,
You would keepe from my heeles, and beware of an asse.

E. Ant. Yare sad signior Balthazar, pray God our cheer
May answer my good will, and your good welcom here.

Bal. I hold your dainties cheap sir, & your welcom deer.

E. Ant. Oh signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish:
A table full of welcome, makes scarce one daintie dish.

Bal. Good meat firis comon that every churle affords.

Ant. And welcome more common, for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheere and great welcome, makes a merrie feast.

Ant. I, to a niggardly Host, and more sparing guest:
But though my cates be meane, take them in good part,
Better cheere may you have, but not with better hart.
But soft, my doore is lockt; goe bid them let us in.

E. Dro. Maud, Briget, Marian, Cissy, Gillian, Ginn.

S. Dro. Mome, Malt-horse, Capon, Coxcombe, Idiot, Patch,

Either get thee from the dore; or sit downe at the hatch:
Doit thou conjure for wenches, that calst for such store,
When one is one too many, goe get thee from the dore.

E. Dro. What patch is made our porter? my Master stays in the street.

S. Dro. Let him walke from whence he came, lest he catch cold on's feet.

E. Ant. Who talks within there? ho, open the dore.

S. Dro. Right sir, Ile tell you when, and you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant. Wherefore? for my dinner: I have not din'd to day.

S. Dro. Nor to day here you must not come againe when you may.

Ant. What art thou that keep'st mee out from the house I owe?

S. Dro. The Porter for this time Sir, and my name is Dromio.

E. Dro. O villaine, thou hast stolne both mine office and my name,

The one ne're got me credit, the other mickle blame:
If thou hadst bid Dromio to day in my place,

Thou wouldst have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an asse.

Enter Luce.

Luc. What a coile is there Dromio? who are those at the gate?

E. Dro. Let my master in Luce.

Luc. Faith no, hee comes too late, and so tell your Master.

E. Dro. O Lord I must laugh, have at you with a Pro-verbe.

Shall I set in my staffe.

Luc. Have at you with another, that's when? can you tell?

S. Dro. If thy name be called Luce, Luce thou hast an-swer'd him, well.

Ant. Doe you heare you minion, you'll let us in I hope?

Luce. I thought to have askt you.

S. Dro. And you said no.

E. Dro. So come helpe, well strooke, there was blow for blow.

Ant. Thou baggage let me in.

Luce. Can you tell for whose sake?

E. Dro. Master, knocke the doore hard.

Luc. Let him knocke till it ake.

Ant. You'll crie for this minion, if I beate the doore downe.

Luc. What needs all that, and a paire of stocks in the towne?

Enter Adriana.

Adr. Who is that at the doore y keeps all this noise?

S. Dro. By my troth your towne is troubled with unruly boyes.

Ant. Are you there Wife? you might have come before.

Adr. Your wife sir knave? go get you from the dore.

E. Dro. If you went in paine Master, this knave wold goe sore.

Angelo. Heere is neither cheere sir, nor welcome, we would faine have either.

Balth. In debating which was best, wee shall part with neither.

E. Dro. They stand at the doore, Master, bid them welcome hither.

Ant. There is something in the winde, that we cannot get in.

E. Dro. You would say so Master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake here is warme within: you stand heere in the cold.

It would make a man as mad as a Bucke to be so bought and sold.

Ant. Go fetch me something, Ile breake ope the gate.

S. Dro. Breake any breaking here, and Ile breake your knaves pate.

E. Dro. A man may breake a word with you sir, and words are but winde:

I and breake it in your face, so he breake it not behinde.

S. Dro. It seemes thou want'st breaking, out upon thee hinde.

E. Dro. Heer's too much, out upon thee, I pray thee let me in.

S. Dro. I, when fowles have no feathers and fish have no fin.

Ant. Well, Ile breake in: goe borrow me a crow.

E. Dro. A crow without feather, Master meane you so;

For

For a fish without a fin, ther's a fowle without a feather,
If a crow help us in firra, we'll plucke a crow together.

Ant. Go, get thee gon, fetch me an iron Crow.

Balsh. Have patience fir, oh let it not be so,
Heerein you warre against your reputation,
And draw within the compasse of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife.
Once this your long experience of your wisdom,
Her sober vertue, yeares and modestie,
Plead on your part some cause to you unknowne;
And doubt not fir, but she will well excuse
Why at this time the dores are made against you,
Be rul'd by me, depart in patience,
And let us to the Tyger all to dinner,
And about evening come your selfe alone,
To know the reason of this strange restraint:
If by strong hand you offer to breake in
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that supposed by the common rowt
Against your yet ungalled estimation.
That may with foule intrusion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead;
For slander lives upon succession;
For ever hows'd, where it once gets possession.

Ant. You have prevail'd, I will depart in quiet,
And in despite of mirth meane to be merrie:
I know a wench of excellent discourse,
Prettie and wittie; wilde, and yet too gentle;
There will we dine: this woman that I meane
My wife (but I protest without desert)
Hath oftentimes upbraided me withall:
To her will we to dinner, get you home
And fetch the chaine, by this I know 'tis made;
Bring it I pray you to the Porpentine,
For there's the house: That chaine I will bestow
(Be it for nothing but to spight my wife)
Vpon my hostesse there, good fir make haste:
Since mine owne doores refuse to entertaine me,
Ile knocke else-where, to see if they'll disdaine me.

Ang. Ile meet you at that place some houre fir hence.

Ant. Do so, this jest shall cost me some expenco.

Exeunt.

Enter Luciana, with Antipholus of Siracusa.

Julia. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husbands office? shall Antipholus
Even in the spring of Love, thy Love-springs rot?
Shall love in buildings grow so ruinate?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then for her wealths-sake use her with more kindnesse:
Or if you like else-where, doe it by stealth,
Muffle your false love with some shew of blindness:
Let not my sister reade it in your eye:
Be not thy tongue thy owne shames Orator:
Looke sweet, speake faire, become disloyaltie:
Apparell vice like vertues harbenger:
Beare a faire presence, though your heart be tainted,
Teach sinne the carriage of a holy Saint,
Be secret false: what need she be acquainted?
What simple thiefe brags of his owne attaine?
'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her reade it in thy looks at boord:
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed,
Ill deeds are doubled with an evill word:
Alas poore women, make us not beleewe
(Being compact of credit) that you love us,

Though others have the arme, shew us the sleeve:
We in your motion turne, and you may move us.
Then gentle brother get you in againe;
Comfort my sister, cheere her, call her wife;
'Tis holy sport to be a little vaine,
When the sweet breath of flatterie conquers strife.

S. Ant. Sweet Mistris: what your name is else I know not;

Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine:
Lesse in your knowledge, and your grace you show not,
Then our earths wonder, more then earth divine.
Teach me deere creature how to thinke and speake:
Lay open to my earthy grosse conceit:
Smothered in errors, feeble, shaddow, weake,
The foulded meaning of your words deccit;
Against my soules pure truth, why labour you,
To make it wander in an unknowne field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transforme me then, and to your powre Ile yeeld.
But if that I am I, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed a homage doe I owe:
Farre more, farre more, to you doe I decline:
Oh traine me not sweet Mermaide with thy note
To drowne me in thy sisters flood of teares:
Sing Siren for thy selfe, and I will dote:
Spred ore the silver waves thy golden haire;
And as a bed Ile take thee, and there lie:
And in that glorious supposition thinke,
He gaine by death, that hath such meanes to die:
Let Love, being light, be drowned if she sinke.

Luc. What are you mad, that you do reason so?

Ant. Not mad, but mated, how I do not know.

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eie.

Ant. For gazing on your beames, faire sun being by.

Luc. Gaze when you should, and that will cleere your sight.

Ant. As good to winke sweet love, as looke on night.

Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.

Ant. Thy sisters sister.

Luc. That's my sister.

Dnt. No: it is thy selfe, mine owne selves better part:
Mine eies cleere eie, my deere hearts dearer heart,
My foode, my fortune, and my sweet hopes aime;
My sole earths heaven, and my heavens claime.

Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.

Ant. Call thy selfe sister sweet, for I am thee:
Thee will I love, and with thee leade my life;
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife;
Give me thy hand.

Luc. Oh soft fir, hold you still:
Ile fetch my sister to get her good will.

Enter Dromio, Siracusa.

Ant. Why how now Dromio, where run'st thou so fast?

S. Dro. Doe you know me fir? Am I Dromio? Am I your man? Am I my selfe?

Ant. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thy selfe.

Dro. I am an asse, I am a womans man, and besides my selfe.

Ant. What womans man? and how besides thy selfe?

Dro. Marrie fir, besides my selfe, I am due to a woman:
One that claimes me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. What

Ant. What claime laies she to thee?

Dro. Marry sir, such claime as you would lay to your horie, and she would have me as a beast; not that I being a beast she would have me, but that she being a verie beasty creature layes claime to me.

Ant. What is she?

Dro. A very reverent body: I such a one, as a man may not speake of, without he say sir reverence: I have but leane lucke in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.

Ant. How dost thou meane a fat marriage?

Dro. Marry sir, she's the Kitchin wench, and all greafe, and I know not what use to put her too, but to make a Lampe of her, and run from her by her owne light. I warrant, her ragges and the Tallow in them, will burne a Poland Winter: If she lives till doomesday, she'll burne a weeke longer then the whole World.

Ant. What complexion is she of?

Dro. Swart like my shooe, but her face nothing like so cleane kept: for why? she sweates a man may goe over-shoos in the grime of it.

Ant. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. No sir, 'tis in graine, Neabs flood could not do it.

Ant. What's her name?

Dro. Nell Sir: but her name is three quarters, that's an Ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. Then she beares some bredth?

Dro. No longer from head to foot, then from hippe to hippe: she is sphericall like a globe: I could find out Countries in her.

Ant. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. Marry sir in her buttockes, I found it out by the bogges.

Ant. Where Scotland?

Dro. I found it by the barrenesse, hard in the palme of the hand.

Ant. Where France?

Dro. In her forehead, arm'd and reverted, making warre against her haire.

Ant. Where England?

Dro. I look'd for the chalky Cliffes, but I could find no whitenesse in them. But I guesse, it stood in her chin by the salt rheume that ranne betweene France, and it.

Ant. Where Spaine?

Dro. Faith I saw it not: but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. Oh sir, upon her nose, all ore embellished with Rubies, Carbuncles, Saphires, declining their rich Aspect to the hot breath of Spaine, who sent whole Armadoes of Carraets to be ballast at her nose.

Ant. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. Oh sir, I did not looke so low. To conclude, this drudge or Diviner layd claime to mee, call'd mee Dromio, I swore I was assur'd to her, told me what privie markes I had about mee, as the markes of my shoulder, the Mole in my necke, the great Wart on my left arme, that I amaz'd ranne from her as a witch. And I thinke, if my brest had not beene made of faith, and my heart of Steele, she had transform'd me to a Curtall dog, & made me turne i'th wheele.

Ant. Go hie thee presently, post to the rode, And if the winde blow any way from shore, I will not harbour in this towne to night, If any Barke put forth, come to the Mart,

Where I will walke till thou returne to me:

If everie one knowes us, and we know none, 'Tis time I thinke to trudge, packe, and be gone.

Dro. As from a Beare a man would run for life, So flie I from her that would be my wife. Exit.

Ant. There's none but witches do inhabite heere, And therefore 'tis hie time that I were hence: She that doth call me husband, even my soule Doth for a wife abhorre. But her faire sister Posselt with such a gentle soveraigne grace, Of such enchanting presence and discourse, Hath almost made me Traitor to my selfe: But least my selfe be guilty to selfe wrong, Ile stop mine eares against the Mermaides song.

Enter Angela with the Chains.

Ang. M. Antipholus.

Ant. I that's my name,

Ang. I know it well sir, loe here's the chaine, I thought to have tane you at the Perpetine, The chaine unfinish'd made me stay thus long.

Ant. What is your will that I shall do with this?

Ang. What please your selfe sir: I have made it for you.

Ant. Made it for me sir! I bespoke it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twentie times you have:

Go home with it, and please your Wife withall, And soone at supper time Ile visit you, And then receive my mony for the chaine.

Ant. I pray you sir receive the monie now, For feare you ne're see chaine, nor mony more.

Ang. You are a merry man sir, fare you well. Exit.

Dro. What I should thinke of this, I cannot tell: But this I thinke, there's no man is so vaine, That would refuse so faire an offer'd Chaine. I see a man heere needs not live by shifts, When in the streets he meetes such Golden gifts: Ile to the Mart, and there for Dromio stay, If any ship put out, then strait away. Exit.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter a Merchant, Goldsmith, and an Officer.

Mer. You know since Pentecost the sum is due, And since I have not much importun'd you, Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want Gilders for my voyage: Therefore make present satisfaction, Or Ile attach you by this Officer.

Gold. Even just the sum that I do owe to you, Is growing to me by Antipholus, And in the instant that I met with you, He had of me a Chaine: at five a clocke I shall receive the money for the same: Pleaseth you walke with me downe to his house, I will discharge my bond, and thanke yoo too.

Enter Antipholus Ephes. Dromio from the Courtizans.

Off. That labour may you save: See where he comes.

Ant. While I go to the Goldsmiths house, goe thou And

And buy a ropes end, that will I bestow
Among my wife, and their confederates,
For locking me out of my doores by day :
But soft I see the Goldsmith; get thee gone,
Buy thou a rope and bring it home to me.

Dro. I buy a thousand pound a yeare, I buy a rope.

Exit Dromio

Eph. Ant. A man is well holpe up that trusts to you,
I promised your preface, and the Chaine,
But neither Chaine nor Goldsmith came to me :
Belike you thought our love would last too long
If it were chain'd together : and therefore came not.

Gold. Saving your merry humor, here's the note
How much your Chaine weighs to the utmost Raccat,
The fineness of the Gold, and chargefull fashion,
Which doth amount to three odde Duckets more
Then I stand debted to this Gentleman,
I pray you see him presently discharg'd,
For he is bound to Sea, and stayes but for it.

Ant. I am not furnisht'd with the present mony:
Besides I have some businesse in the towne,
Good Signior take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the Chaine, and bid my wife
Disburse the summe, on the receipt thereof,
Perchance I will be there as soone as you.

Gold. Then you will bring the Chaine to her your selfe.

Ant. No beare it with you, least I come not time enough.

Gold. Well sir, I will? Have you the Chaine about you?

Ant. And if I have not sir, I hope you have :
Or else you may returne without your money.

Gold. Nay come I pray you sir, give me the Chaine :
Both winde and tide stayes for the Gentleman,
And I too blame have held him here too long.

Ant. Good Lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise to the Porpentine,
I should have chid you for not bringing it,
But like a shrew you first begin to brawle.

Mer. The houre steales on, I pray you sir dispatch.

Gold. You heare how he importunes me, the Chaine:

Ant. Why give it to my wife, and fetch your mony.

Gold. Come, come, you know I gave it you even now.
Either send the Chaine, or send me by some token.

Ant. Fie, now you run this humor out of breath,
Come where's the Chaine, I pray you let me see it.

Mer. My businesse cannot brooke this dalliance,
Good sir say, whe'r you'll answer me, or no :
If not, Ile leave him to the Officer.

Ant. I answer you? Why should I answer you?

Gold. The monie that you owe me for the Chaine.

Ant. I owe you none till I receive the Chaine.

Gold. You know I gave it you halfe an houre since.

Ant. You gave me none, you wrong mee much to say so.

Gold. You wrong me sir in denying it:
Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well Officer, arrest him at my suite,

Off. I doe, and charge you in the Dukes name to obey me.

Gold. This touches me in reputation.
Either consent to pay the sum for me,
Or I attach you by this Officer.

Ant. Consent to pay that I never had :
Arrest me foolish fellow if thou dar'st.

Gold. Heere is thy fee, arrest him, Officer.
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorne me so apparantly.

Off. I do arrest you sir, you heare the suite.

Ant. I do obey thee, till I give thee baile.
But firrah you shall buy this sport as deere,
As all the mettall in your shop will answer.

Gold. Sir, sir, I shall have Law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio Sira. from the Bay.

Dro. Master, there's a Barke of Epidamium,
That stayes but till her Owner comes aboard,
Then sir she beares away. Our saughtage sir,
I have convey'd aboard, and I have brought
The Oyle, the Balsammum, and Aqua-vitæ.
The ship is in her trim, the merrie winde
Blowes faire from land : they stay for nought at all,
But for their Owner, Master, and your selfe.

Ant. How now! a Madman! Why thou peevish sheep
What ship of Epidamium stayes for me?

S. Dro. A ship you sent me to, to hier waftage.

Ant. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope,
And told thee to what purpose and what end.

S. Dro. You sent me for a ropes end as soone,
You sent me to the Bay sir, for a Barke.

Ant. I will debate this matter at more leisure
And teach your eares to list me with more heed:
To Adriana Villaine hie thee straight :
Give her this key, and tell her in the Deske
That's cover'd o're with Turkish Tapistrie,
There is a purse of Duckets; let her send it :
Tell her, I am arrested in the streete,
And that shall baile me: hie thee slave, be gone,
On Officer to prison, till it come. Exeunt.

S. Dro. To Adriana, that is where we din'd,
Where Dowlabell did claime me for her husband,
She is too bigge I hope for me to compass,
Thither I must, although against my will :
For servants must their Masters mindes fulfill. Exit.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah Luciana, did he tempt thee so,
Might'st thou perceive austereely in his eye,
That he did plead in earnest, yea or no :
Look'd he or red or pale, or sad or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case?
Of his hearts Meteors tilting in his face?

Luc. First he denide you had in him no right.

Adr. He meant he did me none: the more my spight.

Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger heere.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworne he were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Adr. And what said he?

Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.

Adr. With what perswasion did he tempt thy love?

Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.
First, he did prayse my beautie, then my speech.

Adr. Did'st speake him faire?

Luc. Have patience I beseech.

Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still,
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old and sere,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapelesse every where :
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkinde,

Stigma-

Stigmaticall in making, worfe the minde.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of fuch a one?
No evill loft is wail'd, when it is goged.

Adr. Ah but I thinke him better then I fay:
And yet would herein others eyes were worfe:
Farre from her nelt the Lapwing cries away;
My heart prayes for him, though my tongue doe curfe.

Enter S. Dromio.

Dro. Here, goe: the deske, the purse, sweet now make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

S. Dro. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy Master Dromio? Is he well?

S. Dro. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worfe then hell:
A divell in an everlasting garment hath him;
One whose hard heart is button'd up with Steele:
A Feind, a fairie, pittileffe and ruffe:
A Wolfe, nay worfe, a fellow all in buffe,
A back friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermaids
The passages of allies, creekes, and narrow lands:
A hound that runs Counter, and yet draws drifoot well,
One that before the Iudgmet carries poore soules to hel.

Adr. Why man, what is the matter?

S. Dro. I doe not know the matter, he is rested on the case.

Adr. What is he arrested? tell me at whose suite?

S. Dro. I know not at whose suite he is arrested, well;
but is in a suite of buffe which rested him, that can I tell:
Will you send him Mistris redemption, the monie in his deske?

Adr. Go fetch it Sister: this I wonder at.

Exit Luciana.

That he unknowne to me should be in debt:

Tell me, was he arested on a band?

S. Dro. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing:
A chaine, a chaine, doe you not here it ring?

Adria. What, the chaine?

S. Dro. No, no, the bell, 'tis time that I were gone:
It was two ere I left him, and now the clocke strikes one.

Adr. The houres come backe! that did I never heare.

S. Dro. Oh yes, if any houre meete a Serjeant, a turnes backe for very feare.

Adri. As if time were in debt: how fondly do'st thou reason?

S. Dro. Time is a very bankrout, and owes more then he's worth to season.

Nay, he's a theefe too: have you not heard men say,
That time comes stealing on by night and day?

If I be in debt and theft, and a Serjeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turne backe an houre in a day?

Enter Luciana.

Adr. Go Dromio, there's the mony, beare it straight,
And bring thy Master home immediately.
Come sister, I am preft downe with conceit:
Conceit, my comfort and my injurie.

Exit.

Enter Antipholus Siracusan.

An. S. There's not a man I meete but doth salute me
As if I were their well acquainted friend,
And everie one doth call me by my name:
Some tender monie to me, some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindneses;
Some offer me Commodities to buy.
Even now a tailor cal'd me in his shop,

And show'd me Silkes that he had bought for me,
And therewithall tooke measure of my body.
Sure these are but imaginarie wiles,
And Lapland Sorcerers inhabite here.

Enter Dromio. Sir.

S. Dro. Master, here's the gold you sent me for: what have you got the picture of old Adam new apparell'd?

Ant. What gold is this? What Adam do'st thou meane?

S. Dro. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise: but that Adam that keepes the prison; hee that goes in the calves-skin, that was kil'd for the Prodigall: hee that came behinde you sir, like an evill angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. I understand thee not.

S. Dro. No? why 'tis a plaine case: he that went like a Base Viole in a case of leather; the man sir, that when gentlemen are tired gives them a tob, and rests them:
he sir, that takes pittie on decayed men, and gives them suites of durance: he that sets up his rest to doe more exploits with his Mace, then a Moris Pike.

Ant. What! thou mean'st an officer?

S. Dro. I sir, the Serjeant of the Band: he that brings any man to answer it that breakes his Band: one that thinkes a man alwayes going to bed, and saith, God give you good rest.

Ant. Well sir, there rest in your foolerie:

Is there any ship puts forth to night? may we be gone?

S. Dro. Why sir, I brought you word an houre since, that the Barke Expedition put forth to night, and then were you hindred by the Serjeant to tarry for the Hoy Delay: Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.

Ant. The fellow is distraet and so am I,
And here we wander in illusions:
Some blessed power deliver us from hence.

Enter a Curtizan.

Cur. Well met; well met, Master Antipholus:
I see sir you have found the Gold-smith now:
Is that the chaine you promis'd me to day?

Ant. Sathan avoide, I charge thee tempt me not.

S. Dro. Master, is this Mistris Sathan?

Ant. It is the divell.

S. Dro. Nay, she is worfe, she is the divels dam:
And here she comes in the habit of a light wench, and thereof comes that the wenches say God dam me, That's as much to say, God make me a light wench: It is written, they appeare to men like angels of light; light is an effect of fire, and fire will burne: ergo, light wenches will burne, come not neere her.

Cur. Your man and you are marvellous merry sir.
Will you goe with me, wee'll mend our dinner here?

S. Dro. Master, if you doe, expect spoon-meate, or bespeake a long spoone.

Ant. Why Dromio?

S. Dro. Marrie he must have a long spoone that must eate with the divell.

Ant. Avoid then fiend, what tel'st thou me of sup-
Thou art, (as you are all) a forcereffe: (ping?)
I conjure thee to leave me, and be gon.

Cur. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or for my Diamond the chaine you promis'd,
And Ile be gone sir, and not trouble you.

S. Dro. Some divels aske but the parings of ones naile, a rush, a haire, a drop of blood, a pin, a nut, a cherrie-stone: but she more covetous, would have a chaine: Master bewife, and if you give it her, the divell will shak her Chaine, and fright us with it.

Cur. I pray you fir my Ring, or else the Chaine, I hope you do not meane to cheate me so?

Ant. Avant thou witch: Come Dromio let us go.

S. Dro. Flie pride sayes the Pea-cocke, Mistris that you know. Exeunt.

Cur. Now out of doubt Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demeane himselfe, A Ring he hath of mine worth fortie Duckets, And for the same he promis'd me a Chaine, Both one and other he denies me now: The reason that I gather he is mad, (Besides this present instance of his rage,) Is a mad tale he told to day at dinner, Of his owne doores being shut against his entrance, Belike his wife acquainted with his fits, On purpose shut the doores against his way. My way is now to hie home to his house, And tell his wife that being Lunaticke, He rush'd into my house, and tooke perforce My Ring away. This course I fittest choose, For fortie Duckets is too much to loose.

Exit.

Enter Antipholus Ephes. with a Sailor.

Ant. Feare me not man, I will not breake away, He give thee ere I leave thee so much money To warrant thee as I am rested for. My wife is in a wayward moode to day, And will not lightly trust the Messenger, That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you 'twill sound harshly in her eares.

Enter Dromio Eph. with a ropes end.

Heere comes my Man, I thinke he brings the monie. How now fir? Have you that I sent you for?

E. Dro. Here's that I warrant you will pay them all.

Ant. But where's the Money?

E. Dro. Why fir, I gave the Monie for the Rope:

Ant. Five hundred Duckets villaine for a rope?

E. Dro. He serve you fir five hundred at the rate.

Ant. To what end did I bid thee high thee home?

E. Dro. To a ropes end fir, and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. And to that end fir, I will welcome you.

Off. Good fir be patient.

E. Dro. Nay 'tis for me to be patient, I am in advertisement.

Off. Good now hold thy tongue.

E. Dro. Nay, rather perswade him to hold his hands.

Ant. Thou whoreson fen'lesse Villaine.

E. Dro. I would I were fen'lesse fir, that I might not feel your blowes.

Ant. Thou art sensible in nothing but blowes, and so is an Ass.

E. Dro. I am an Ass indeede, you may proove it by my long eares. I have served him from the houre of my Nativitie to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service but blowes. When I am cold, he heates me with beating: when I am warme, he cooles me with beating: I am wak'd with it when I sleepe, rais'd with it when I sit, driven out of doores with it when I goe from home, welcom'd home with it when I returne, nay

I beare it on my shoulders, as a begger woont her brat and I thinke when he hath lam'd me, I shall begge with it from doore to doore.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezian, and a School-master, called Pinch.

Ant. Come goe along, my wife is comming yonder.

E. Dro. Mistris respice finem, respect your end, or rather the prophesie like the Parrot, beware the ropes end.

Ant. Wilt thou still talke?

Beats Dro.

Cur. How say you now? Is not your husband mad?

Adri. His incivility confirms no lesse:

Good Doctor Pinch, you are a Conjurer, Establish him in his true sence againe, And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas how fiery and how sharpe he lookes,

Cur. Marke, how he trembles in his extasie.

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let mee feele your pulse.

Ant. There is my hand, and let it feele your care.

Pinch. I charge thee Sathan, hous'd within this man To yeeld possession to my holie praiers, And to thy state of darkenette hie thee straight, I conjure thee by all the Saints in heaven.

Ant. Peace doring wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adri. Oh that thou wer't not, poore distressed soule.

Ant. You Minion you, are these your Customers? Did this companion with the fassion face Revell and feast it at my house to day, Whil't upon me the guiltie doores were shut, And I denied to enter in my house.

Adri. O husband, God doth know you din'd at home Where would you had remaind untill this time, Free from these slanders, and this open shame.

Ant. Din'd at home? Thou Villaine, what sayest thou?

Dro. Sir sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. Were not my doores lockt up, and I shut out?

Dro. Perdie, your doores were lockt, and you shut out.

Ant. And did not she her selfe revile me there?

Dro. Sans Fable, she her selfe revild you there.

Ant. Did not her Kitchen maide raile, taunt, and scorne me?

Dro. Certis she did; the kitchin veltall scorn'd you:

Ant. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. In veritie you did, my bones beare witnesse, That since have felt the vigor of his rage.

Adri. Is't good to smooth him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is no shame, the fellow finds his veine, And yeelding to him, humors well his frensie,

Ant. Thou hast subordnd the Goldsmith to arrest me.

Adri. Alas, I sent you Monie to redeeme you, By Dromio heere, who came in haft for it.

Dro. Monie by me? Heart and good will you might, But surely Master not a ragge of Monie.

Ant. Wentst not thou to her for a purse of Duckets?

Adri. He came to me and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witnesse with her that she did:

Dro. God and the Rope-maker beare me witnesse, That I was sent for nothing but a rope.

Pinch. Mistris, both Man and Master is posselt, I know it by their pale and deadly lookes.

They

They must be bound and laide in some darke roome.

Ant. Say wherefore didst thou locke me forth to day,
And why dost thou denie the bagge of gold?

Adr. I did not gentle husband loeke thee forth.

Dro. And gentle M. I receiv'd no gold:

But I confesse sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling Villain, thou speak'st false in both.

Ant. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all,
And are confederate with a damned packe,
To make a loathsome abject scorne of me:
But with these nailes Ile plucke out these false eyes,
That would behold in me this shamefull sport.

Enter three or foure, and offer to binde him:

He strives.

Adr. Oh binde him, binde him, let him not come neere me.

Pinch. More company, the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Aye me poore man, how pale and wan he looks.

Ant. What, wilt thou murther me, thou Iailor thou?
I am thy prisoner, wilt thou suffer them to make a rescue?

Off. Masters let him goe: he is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go binde this man, for he is franticke too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?
Hast thou delight to see a wretched man
Do outrage and displeasure to himselfe?

Off. He is my prisoner, if I let him go,
The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee ere I goe from thee,
Beare me forthwith unto his Creditor,
And knowing how the debt growes I will pay it.
Good Master Doctor see him safe convey'd
Home to my house, oh most unhappy day.

Ant. Oh most unhappy strumpet.

Dro. Master, I am heere entred in bond for you.

Ant. Out on thee Villaine wherefore dost thou mad
mee?

Dro. Will you be bound for nothing, be mad good master, cry the divell.

Luc. God helpe poore soules, how idly do they talke.

Adr. Goe beare him hence, sister go you with me:
Say now, whose suite is he arrested at?

Exeunt. Maier Offic. Adri. Luci. Courizan.

Off. One Angelo a Goldsmith, do you know him?

Adr. I know the man: what is the summe he owes?

Off. Two hundred Duckets.

Adr. Say, how growes it due.

Off. Due for a Chaine your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeake a chaine for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband all in rage to day
Came to my house, and tooke away my Ring,
The Ring I saw upon his finger now,
Straight after did I meete him with a Chaine,

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it.

Come Iailor, bring me where the Goldsmith is,
I long to know the truth heereof at large.

Enter Antipholus Siracusan with his Rapier drawne, and Dromio Sirac.

Luc. God for thy mercy, they are loose againe.

Adr. And come with naked swords,
Let's call more helpe to have them bound againe.

Runne all out.

Off. Away, they'll kill us

Exeunt omnes, as fast as may be, frighted.

S. Ant. I see these Witches are affraid of swords.

S. Dro. She that would be your wife, now ran from you.

Ant. Come to the Centaure, fetch our stuffe from thence:

I long that we were safe and sound aboard.

Dro. Faith stay heere this night, they will surely do us no harme: you saw they spake us faire, give us gold:
me thinkes they are such a gentle Nation, that but for the Mountaine of mad flesh that claimes marriage of me,
I could finde in my heart to stay heere still, and turne
Witch.

Ant. I will not stay to night for all the towne,
Therefore away, to get our stuffe aboard. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Merchant and the Goldsmith.

Gold. I am sorry Sir that I have hindred you,
But I protest he had the Chaine of me,
Though most dishonestly he did denie it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd heere in the Citie?

Gold. Of very reverent reputation sir,
Of credit infinite, highly belov'd.
Second to none that lives here in the Citie:
His word might beare my wealth at any time.

Mer. Speake softly, yonder as I thinke he walkes.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio againe.

Gold. 'Tis so: and that selfe chaine about his necke,
Which he forswore (most monstrously) to have.
Good sir draw neere to me, Ile speake to him:
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much

That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And not without some scandall to your selfe,
With circumstance and oathes, so to denie
This chaine, which now you weare so openly.
Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend,
Who but for staying on our Controversie,
Had hoisted saile, and put to sea to day:
This chaine you had of me, can you denie it?

Ant. I thinke I had, I never did deny it.

Mer. Yes that you did sir, and forswore it too:

Ant. Who heard me to denie it or forswear it?

Mer. These eares of mine thou knowst did hear thee:
Fie on thee wretch, 'tis pittie that thou liv'st
To walke where any honest men resort.

Ant. Thou art a Villaine to impeach me thus,
Ile prove mine honor, and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand:

Mer. I dare and do defie thee for a villaine.

They draw. Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezan, & others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not for God sake, he is mad,
Some get within him, take his sword away:
Binde Dromio too, and beare them to my house.

S. Dro. Runne master run, for Gods sake take a house,
This is some Priorie, in, or we are spoyld.

Exeunt to the Priorie.

Enter

Enter Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet people, wherefore throng you hither?

Adr. To fetch my poore distracted husband hence,
Let us come in, that we may binde him fast,
And beare him home for his recovery.

Gold. I knew he was not in his perfect wits.

Mer. I am sorry now that I did draw on him.

Ab. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adr. This weeke he hath bene heavy, fower, sad,
And much much different from the man he was:
But till this afternoone his passion
Ne're brake into extremity of rage.

Ab. Hath he not lost much wealth by wracke at Sea,
Buried some deare friend, hath not else his eye
Strai'd his affection in unlawfull love,
A sinne prevailing much in youthfull men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing,
Which of these forrowes is he subject too?

Adr. To none of these except it be the last,
Namely, some love that drew him oft from home.

Ab. You should for that have reprehended him.

Ad. Why so I did.

Ab. I, but not rough enough.

Ad. As roughly as my modesty would let me.

Ab. Haply in private.

Ad. And in assemblies too.

Ab. I, but not enough.

Ad. It was the copie of our conference.

In bed he slept not for my urging it,
At boord he fed not for my urging it:
Alone, it was the subject of my Theame:
In company I often glanced it:
Still did I tell him, it was wilde and bad.

Ab. And thereof came it that the man was mad.
The venome clamours of a jealous woman,
Poysons more deadly then a mad dogs tooth.
It seemes his sleepes were hindred by thy rayling,
And thereof comes it that his head is light.
Thou sai'st his meate was sawe'd with thy upbraidings,
Vnquiet meales makes ill digestion,
Thereof the raging fire of feaver bred,
And what's a Feaver but a fit of Madnesse?
Thy sayest his sports were hindred by thy brawles:
Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue
But muddy and dull melancholly,
Kinsman to grim and comfortlesse despaire,
And at her heeles a huge infectious troope
Of pale distemperatures, and foes to life?
In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest
To be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast:
The consequence is then, thy jealous fits
Have scar'd thy husband from the use of wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,
When he demean'd himselfe rough, rude, and wildely.
Why beare you these rebukes, and answer not?

Ad. She did betray me to my owne reproofe,
Good people enter and lay hold on him.

Ab. No, not a creature enters in my house.

Ad. Then let your servants bring my husband forth.

Ab. Neither: he tooke this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wits againe,
Or lose my labour in assaying it.

Ad. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,

Diet his sicknesse, for it is my Office,
And will have no Atturney but my selfe,
And therefore let me have him home with me.

Ab. Be patient, for I will not let him stirre,
Till I have us'd the approved meanes I have,
With wholsome sirrups, drugges, and holy prayers
To make of him a formall man againe:
It is a branch and parcell of mine oath,
A charitable dutie of my order,
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Ad. I will not hence, and leave my husband heere:
And ill it doth beleeve your holinesse
To separate the husband and the wife.

Ab. Be quiet and depart, thou shalt not have him.

Luc. Complaine unto the Duke of this indignity.

Ad. Come goe, I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise untill my teares and prayers
Have won his Grace to come in person hither,
And take perforce my husband from the Abbess. Exeunt.

Enter Merchant and Goldsmith.

Mer. By this I thinke the Dyall points at five:
Anon I'me sure the Duke himselfe in person
Comes this way to the Melancholly vale;
The place of depth, and forry execution,
Behinde the ditches of the Abbey here.

Gold. Vpon what cause?

Mer. To see a reverent Siracusan Merchant,
Who put unluckily into this Bay
Against the Lawes and Statutes of this Towne,
Beheded publicly for his offence.

Gold. See where they come, we will behold his death.

Enter Adriana and Lucio.

Luc. Kneele to the Duke before he passe the Abbey.

Enter the Duke of Ephesus, and the Merchant of Siracuse, bareheaded, with the Headf-man, and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once againe proclaime it publicly,
If any friend will pay the summe for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Enter Adriana.

Adr. In fice most sacred Duke against the Abbess.

Duke. She is a vertuous and a reverend Lady,
It cannot be that she hath done thee wrong.

Ad. May it please your Grace, Antipholus my husband,
Whom I made Lord of me, and all I had,
(At your impotent Letters) this ill day,
A most outrageous fit of madnesse tooke him,
That desp'rately he hurried through the street,
With him his bondman, ali as mad as he,
Doing displeasure to the Citizens,
By rushing in their houses: bearing thence Rings, Jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home,
Whil'st to take order for the wrongs I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.
Anon, I wot not, by what strong escape
He broke from those that had the guard of him,
And with his mad attendant and himselfe,
Each one with irefull passion, with drawne Swords
Met us againe, and madly bent on us,
Chac'd us away: till raising of more aide,
We came againe to binde them: then they fled
Into this Abbey, whither we pursu'd them,
And here the Abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may beare him hence.

I

Therefore

Therefore most gracious Duke with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for helpe.

Duke. Long since thy husband serv'd me in my Warres,
And I to thee ingag'd a Princes word,
When thou didst make him master of thy bed,
To doe him all the grace and good I could.
Goe some of you knocke at the Abbey gate,
And bid the Lady Abbesse come to me :
I will determine this before I stirre.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. O Mistresse, Mistris, shift and save your selfe,
My Master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the Maides a-row, and bound the Doctor,
Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pailles of pudled myre to quench the haire ;
My M^r. preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with Scissors nicks him like a foole :
And sure (unlesse you send some other present helpe)
Betweene them they will kill the Conjuror.

Ad. Peace foole, thy Master and his man are here,
And that is false thou dost report of us.

Mess. Mistris, upon my life I tell you true,
I have not breath'd almost since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vowes if he can take you,
To scorch your face, and to disfigure you :

Cry within.

Harke, harke, I heare him Mistris : flie, be gone.

Duke. Come, stand by me, feare nothing : guard with Halberds.

Ad. Ayme, it is my husband : witnesse you,
That he is borne about invisible,
Even now we hous'd him in the Abbey here,
And now hee's there, past thought of humane reason.

Enter Antipholus, and E. Dromio of Ephesus.

E. Ant. Iustice most gracious Duke, on grant me Iustice,
Even for the service that long since I did thee,
When I bestrid thee in the warres, and tooke
Deepe skarres to save thy life ; even for the blood
That then I lost for thee, now grant me Iustice.

Mr. Far. Vnlesse the feare of death doth make mee dote, I see my sonne Antipholus and Dromio.

E. Ant. Iustice (sweet Prince) against that woman
She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife ; (there :
That hath abused and dishonoured me,
Even in the strength and height of injury :
Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath shamelesse throwne on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt finde me just.

E. Ant. This day (great Duke) she shut the doores upon me.

Whilst she with Harlots feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault : say woman didst thou so ?

Ad. No, my good Lord. My selfe, he, and my Sister,
To day did dine together : so befall my soule,
As this is false he burthens me withall.

Luc. Ne're may I looke on day, nor sleepe on night,
But she tels to your Highnesse simple truth.

Gold. O perjur'd woman ! They are both forsworne,
In this the Mad man justly chargeth them.

E. Ant. My Liege, I am advis'd what I say ;
Neither disturbed with the effect of Wine,
Nor heady-rash provok'd with raging ire,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner ;
That Goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witnesse it : for he was with me then,
Who parted with me to goe fetch a Chaine,
Promising to bring it to the Porpentine,
Where Balthazar and I did dine together.
Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seeke him. In the street I met him,
And in his company that Gentleman.
There did this perjur'd Goldsmith sweare me downe,
That I this day from him receiv'd the Chaine,
Which God he knowes, I saw not. For the which,
He did arrest me with an Officer.
I did obey, and sent my Pefant home
For certaine Duckets : he with none return'd.
Then fairely I bespoke the Officer
To goe in person with me to my house.
By th' way, we met my wife, her sister, and a rabble more
Of wilde Confederates : Along with them
They brought one Pinch, a hungry leane-fac'd Villaine ;
A meere Anatomy, a Monntebanke,
A thred-bare Iugler, and a Fortune-teller,
A needy-hollow-ey'd-sharpe-looking-wretch ;
A living dead man. This pernicious slave,
Forsooth tooke on him as a Conjuror :
And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no-face (as t'were) out-facing me,
Cryes out, I was posselt. Then altogether
They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a darke and dankish vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together,
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom ; and immediately
Ran hither to your Grace, whom I beseech
To give me ample satisfaction
For these deepe shames, and great indignities.

Gold. My Lord, in truth, thus farre I witnesse with him :
That he din'd not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a Chaine of thee, or no ?

Gold. He had my Lord, and when he ran in here,
These people saw the Chaine about his necke.

Mer. Besides, I will be sworne these eares of mine,
Heard you confesse you had the Chaine of him,
After you first forswore it on the Marr,
And thereupon I drew my sword on you :
And then you fled into this Abbey here,
From whence I thinke you are come by miracle.

E. Ant. I never came within these Abbey wals,
Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me :
I never saw the Chaine, so helpe me heaven :
And this is false you burthen me withall.

Duke. Why what an intricate impeach is this ?
I thinke you all have drunke of Circes Cup :
If here you hous'd him, here he would have been.
If he were mad he would not pleade so coldly :
You say he din'd at home, the Goldsmith here
Denies that saying. Sirra, what say you ?

E. Dro. Sir hee din'd with her there, at the Porpentine.

Curr. He did, and from my finger snatcht that Ring.

E. Ant. Tis true (my Liege) this Ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the Abbey heere ?

Curr. As sure (my Leige) as I doe see your Grace.

Duke. Why this is strange : Goe call the Abbesse hither.

I thinke you are all mated, or starke made,

Exit.

Exit one to the Abbess.

Fa. Most mighty Duke, vouchsafe me speake a word:
Haply I see a friend will save my life,
And pay the summe that may deliver me.

Duke. Speake freely Syracusan what thou wilt.

Fath. Is not your name fir call'd Antipholus?
And is not that your bondman Dromio?

E.Dro. Within this houre I was his bondman fir,
But he I thanke him gnaw'd in two my cords,
Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.

Fath. I am sure both of you remember me.

Dro. Our selves we doe remember fir by you:
For lately we were bound as you are now.
You are not Pinches Patient, are you fir?

Father. Why looke you strange on me? you know me well.

E, Ant. I never saw you in my life till now.

Fa. Oh! grieve hath chang'd me since you saw me last,
And carefull houres with times deformed hand,
Have written strange defeatures in my face:
But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voyce?

Ant. Neither.

Fat. Dromio, nor thou.

Dro. No trust me fir, nor I.

Fat. I am sure thou dost?

E, Dromio. I fir, but I am sure I doe not, and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to beleve him.

Fat. Not know my voyce! oh times extremity,
Hast thou so crack'd and splitt'd my poore tongue
In seven short yeares, that here my onely sonne
Knowes not my feeble key of untun'd cares?
Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming Winters drizled snow,
And all the Conduits of my blood froze up:
Yet hath my night of life some memorie:
My wasting lampes some fading glimmer left;
My dull deafe eares a little use to heare:
All these old witnessses, I cannot erre.
Tell me, thou art my sonne Antipholus.

Ant. I never saw my Father in my life.

Fa. But seven yeares since, in Syracusa Boy,
Thou know'st we parted, but perhaps my sonne,
Thou sham'st to acknowledge me in misery.

Ant. The Duke, and all that know me in the City,
Can witnessse with me that it is not so.
I ne're saw Syracusa in my life.

Duke. I tell thee Syracusan, twenty yeares
Have I been Patron to Antipholus,
During which time he ne're saw Syracusa:
I see thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter the Abbess with Antipholus Syracusan, and Dromio Sir.

Abbess. Most mighty Duke, behold a man much wrong'd.

All gather to see them.

Adr. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is genius to the other:
And so of these, which is the naturall man,
And which the spirit? Who decipher's them?

S. Dromio. I Sir am Dromio, command him away.

E. Dro. I Sir am Dromio, pray let me stay.

S. Ant. Egeon art thou not? or else his ghost.

S. Drom. Oh my old Master, who hath bound him heere?

Abb. Who ever bound him, I will loose his bonds,
And gaine a husband by his liberty:
Speake old Egeon, if thou bee'st the man
That had'st a wife once call'd Emilia,
That bore thee at a burthen two faire sonnes?
Oh if thou bee'st the same Egeon, speake:
And speake unto the same Emilia.

Duke. Why heere begins his Morning story right:
These two Antipholus, these two so like,
And those two Dromio's, one in semblance:
Besides her urging of her wracke at sea,
These are the Parents to these children,
Which accidentally are met together.

Fat. If I dreame not, thou art Emilia,
If thou art she, tell me, where is that sonne
That floated with thee on the fatal rafte.

Abb. By men of Epidamium, he, and I,
And the twin Dromio, all were taken up;
But by and by, rude Fishermen of Corinth
By force tooke Dromio, and my sonne from them,
And me they left with those of Epidamium.
What then became of them, I cannot tell:
I, to this fortune that you see me in.

Duke. Antipholus thou cam'st from Corinth first.

S. Ant. No fir, not I, I came from Syracusa.

Duke. Stay, stand apart, I know not which is which.

E. Ant. I came from Corinth my most gracious Lord.

E. Dro. And I with him.

E. Ant. Brought to this Towne by that most famous Warriour,
Duke Menaphon, your most renowned Vncl.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to day?

S. Ant. I, gentle Mistress.

Adr. And are not you my husband?

E. Ant. No, I say nay to that.

S. Ant. And so doe I, yet did she call me so:
And this faire Gentlewoman here
Did call me brother. What I told you then,
I hope I shall have leisure to make good,
If this be not a dreame I see and heare.

Goldsmith. That is the Chaîne fir, which you had of mee.

S. Ant. I thinke it be fir, I deny it not.

E. Ant. And you fir for this Chaîne arrested me.

Gold. I thinke I did fir, I deny it not.

Adr. I sent you money fir to be your baile
By Dromio, but I thinke he brought it not.

E. Dro. No, none by me.

S. Ant. This purse of Duckets I receiv'd from you,
And Dromio my man did bring them me:
I see wee still did meet each others man,
And I was tane for him, and he for me,
And thereupon these errors are arose.

E. Ant. These Duckets pawne I for my Father bere.

Duke. It shall not need, thy father hath his life.

Cur. Sir I must have that Diamond from you.

E. Ant. There take it, and much thanks for my good cheere.

Abb. Renowned Duke, vouchsafe to take the paines
To goe with us into the Abbey here,
And heare at large discours'd all our fortunes,
And all that are assembled in this place:
That by this sympathized one dayes error,
Have suffered wrong. Goe, keepe us company.

And we shall make full satisfaction.
 Thirty three yeares have I bene gone in travell
 Of you my fornes, and till this present houre
 My heavy burthens are delivered :
 The Duke my husband, and my child ren both,
 And you the Kalenders of their Nativity,
 Goe to a Gossips feast, and goe with me,
 After so long grieffe such Nativity.
Duke. With all my heart, lle Gossip at this feast.

Exeunt omnes. Manet the two Dromio's and two Brothers.

S.Dro. Ma st. shall I fetch your stufte from shipboord?
E. An. Dromio, what stufte of mine hast thou imbar' d.
S.Dro. Your goods that lay at host fir in the Centaur.
S. Ant. He speakes to me, I am your Master Dromio.

Come, goe with us, we'll looke to that anon,
 Embrace thy brother there, rejoyce with him. Exit.

S.Dro. There is a fat friend at your Masters house,
 That kitchin'd me for you to day at dinner :
 She now shall be my sifter, not my wife.

E.D. Me thinkes you are my glasse, and not my bro-
 I see by you, I am a sweet fac'd youth, (ther :
 Will you walke in to see their Gossipping ?

S.Dro. Not I sir, you are my Elder.

E.Dro. That's a question, how shall I try it.

S.Dro. Wee'll draw Cuts for the Signior, till then, leade thou first.

E.Dro. Nay then thus :

We came into the world like brother and brother :
 And now let's goe hand in hand, not one before another.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

Much adoe about Nothing.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter Leonato Governour of Messina, Innogen his wife, Hero his daughter, and Beatrice his Neece, with a Messenger.

Leonato.

earne in this Letter, that Don Peter of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. He is very neere by this : he was not three Leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many Gentlemen have you lost in this action ?

Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice it selfe, when the atchiever brings home full numbers : I find heere, that Don Peter hath bestowed much honour on a yong Florentine, called Claudio.

Mess. Much deserv'd on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro, he hath borne himselfe beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a Lambe, the feates of a Lyon, he hath indeed better bettred expectation, than you mult expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an Vnckle here in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Mess. I have already delivered him Letters, and there appeares much joy in him, even so much that joy could not shew it selfe modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he breake out into teares ?

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kinde overflow of kindenesse : there are no faeces truer, then those that are so wash'd, how much better is it to weepe at joy, then to joy at weeping ?

Bea. I pray you, is Signior Mountanto return'd from the warres, or no ?

Mess. I know none of that name, Lady, there was none such in the Army of any fort.

Leon. What is he that you aske for Neece ?

Hero. My Cousin meanes Signior Benedicke of Padua.

Mess. O he's return'd, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Bea. He set up his bills heere in Messina, and challeng'd Cupid at the Flight : and my Vncles foole reading the Challenge, subscrib'd for Cupid, and challeng'd him at the Burbolt. I pray you, how many hath hee kill'd and eaten in these warres ? But how many hath he kill'd ? for indeed, I promis'd to eate all of his killing.

Leon. Faith Neece, you taxe Signior Benedicke too much, but hee'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service Lady in those wars.

Mess. You had musty victuall, and hee hath holpe to eate it : hee's a very valiant Trencher-man, hee hath an excellent stomacke.

Mess. And a good souldier too Lady.

Bea. And a good souldier to a Lady. But what is he to a Lord ?

Mess. A Lord to a Lord, a Man to a Man, stufte with all honourable vertues.

Bea. It is so indeed, he is no lesse then a stufte man : but for the stuffing well, we are all mortall.

Leon. You must not (sir) mistake my Neece, there is a kinde of merry War betwixt Signior Benedicke and her : they never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit betweene them.

Bea. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, foure of his five wits went haking off, and now is the whole man govern'd with one : so that if hee have wit enough to keepe himselfe warme, let him beare it for a difference betweene himselfe and his horse. For it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be knowne a reasonable creature. Who is his Companion now ? He hath every month a new sworne brother.

Mess. I'st possible ?

Bea. Very easly possible : he weares his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next blocke.

Mess. I see (Lady) the Gentleman is not in your bookes.

Bea. No, and he were, I would burne my study. But I pray you who is his companion ? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the Devil ?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Bea. O Lord, he will hang upon him like a disease : he is sooner caught then the Pestilence, and the taker runnes presently madde. God helpe the noble Claudio, if he have caught the Benedicke, it will cost him a thousand pound ere it be cur'd.

Mess. I will hold friends with you Lady.

Bea. Doe good friend.

Leon. You'll ne're run mad Neece.

Bea. No, not till a hot January.

Mess. Don Pedro is approach'd.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedicke, Balhazar, and John the bastard.

Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meete your trouble : the fashion of the world is to avoyd cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your Grace : for trouble being gone, comfort should remaine : but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happinesse takes his leave.

Pedro. You imbrace your charge more willingly: I thinke this is your daughter.

Leo. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Ben. Were you in doubt that you askt her?

Leo. Signior Benedicke, no; for then were you a childe.

Pedro. You have it full Benedicke, wee may ghesse by this, what you are, being a man, truly the Lady fathers her selfe: be happy Lady, for you are like an honourable father.

Ben. If Signior Leonato be her Father, shee would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Beat. I wonder that you will still be talking, Signior Benedicke, no body markes you.

Ben. What my deare Lady Disdaine! are you yet living?

Beat. Is it possible Disdaine should die, while shee hath such meet food to feed it, as Signior Benedicke? Courtesie it selfe must convert to Disdaine, if you come in her presence.

Ben. Then is Courtesie a turne-coat, but it is certaine I am loved of all Ladies, onely you excepted: and I would I could finde in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for truly I love none.

Beat. A deere happinesse to women, they would else have bene troubled with a pernicious Sutor, I thanke God and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that, I had rather heare my Dog barke at a Crow, then a man sweare he loves me.

Ben. God keepe your Ladiship still in that minde, so some Gentleman or other shall scape a Predestinate scratcht face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, and 'twere such a face as yours were.

Ben. Well, you are a rare Parrat-teacher.

Beat. A Bird of my tongue, is better then a beast of yours.

Ben. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer, but keepe your way a Gods name, I have done.

Beat. You alwayes end with a Iades tricke, I know you of old.

Pedro. This is the summe of all: Leonato, Signior Claudio, and Signior Benedicke; my deare friend Leonato, hath invited you all, I tell him we shall stay here, at the least a moneth, and he heartily prayes some occasion may detain us longer: I dare sweare hee is no hypocrite, but prayes from his heart.

Leon. If you sweare, my Lord, you shall not bee forsworne, let me bid you welcome, my Lord, being reconciled to the Prince your brother: I owe you all dutie.

John. I thanke you, I am not of many words, but I thanke you.

Leon. Please it your Grace leade on?

Pedro. Your hand Leonato, we will goe together.

Exeunt. Manet Benedicke and Claudio.

Claudio. Benedicke, didst thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

Ben. I noted her not, but I lookt on her.

Claudio. Is she not a modest yong Ladie?

Ben. Doe you question me as an honest man should doe, for my simple true judgement? or would you have me speake after my custome, as being a professed tyrant to their sexe?

Claudio. No, I prethee speake in sober judgement.

Ben. Why yfaith me thinkes shee's too low for a hie praise, too browne for a faire praise, and too little for a great praise, onely this commendation I can afford her, that were she other than she is, shee were unhandsome, and being no other but as she is, I doe not like her.

Claudio. Thou think'st I am in sport, I pray thee tell mee truly how thou lik'st her.

Ben. Would you buy her, that you enquier after her?

Claudio. Can the world buy such a Jewell?

Ben. Yea, and a case to put it into, but speake you this with a sad brow? Or doe you play the slowting Iacke, to tell us Cupid is a good Hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare Carpenter: Come, in what Key shall a man take you to goe in the song?

Claudio. In mine eye, she is the sweetest Ladie that ever I lookt on.

Ben. I can see yet without Spectacles, and I see no such matter: there's her Cousin, and she were not posselt with a fury, exceeds her as much in beautie, as the first of May doth the last of December: but I hope you have no intent to turne husband, have you?

Claudio. I would scarce truit my selfe, though I had sworne the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Ben. Ist come to this? in faith hath not the world one man but he will weare his cap with suspition? shall I never see a Batchellor of threescore againe? goe to yfaith, and thou wilt needes thrust thy necke into a yoke, weare the print of it, and sigh away sundayes: looke Don Pedro is returned to seeke you.

Enter Don Pedro, John the Bastard.

Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonatos?

Bened. I would your Grace would constrain mee to tell.

Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Ben. You heare, Count Claudio, I can be secret as a dumbe man, I would have you thinke so (but on my allegiance, marke you this, on my allegiance) hee is in love, With whom? now that is your Graces part: marke how short his answer is, with Hero, Leonatos short daughter.

Claudio. If this were so, so were it uttered.

Ben. Like the old Tale, my Lord, it is not so, nor 'twas not so: but indeed, God forbid it should be so.

Claudio. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

Pedro. Amen, if you love her, for the Lady is very well worthy.

Claudio. You speake this to fetch me in, my Lord.

Pedro. By my troth I speake my thought.

Claudio. And in faith, my Lord, I spoke mine.

Ben. And by my two faiths and troths, my Lord, I speake mine.

Claudio. That I love her, I feele:

Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Ben. That I neither feele how shee should bee loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me, I will die in it at the stake.

Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate Heretique in the despight of Beauty.

Claudio. And never could maintaine his part, but in the force of his will.

Ben. That

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thanke her : that she brought me up, I likewise giue her most humble thanks : but that I will haue a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldricke, all women shall pardon me : because I will not doe them the wrong to mistrust any, I will doe my selfe the right to trust none : and the fine is, (for the which I may goe the finer) I will liue a Batchellor.

Pedro. I shall see thee ere I dye, looke pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sicknesse, or with hunger, my lord, not with love : prove that ever I loose more blood with love, then I will get againe with drinking, picke out mine eyes with a Ballet-makers penne, and hang me up at the doore of a brothel-houise for the signe of blind Cupid.

Pedro. Well, if ever thou doost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a Cat, and shoot at me, and he that hit's me, let him be clapt on the shoulder, and call'd Adam.

Pedro. Well, as time shall try : In time the savage Bull doth beare the yoke.

Bene. The savage bull may, but if ever the sensible Benedicke beare it, plucke off the bulles hornes, and set them in my forehead, and let me be vildely painted, and in such great Letters as they write, heere is good horse to hire : let them signifie under my signe, here you may see Benedicke the married man.

Clau. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst bee horne mad.

Pedro. Nay, if Cupid haue not spent all his Quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I looke for an earth quake too then.

Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the houres, in the meane time, good Signior Benedicke, repaire to Leonatos, commend me to him, and tell him I will not faile him at supper, for indeed he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I haue almost matter enough in me for such an Embassage, and so I commit you.

Clau. To the tuition of God. From my house, if I had it.

Pedro. The sixt of Iuly. Your loving friend, Benedicke.

Bene. Nay mocke not, mocke not ; the body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guardes are but slightly basted on neither, ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience, and so I leave you. Exit.

Clau. My Leige, your Highnesse now may doe mee good.

Pedro. My love is thine to teach, teach it but how, And thou shalt see how apt it is to learne Any hard Lesson that may doe thee good.

Clau. Hath Leonato any sonne my lord ?

Pedro. No child but Hero, she's his onely heire. Dost thou affect her Claudio ?

Clau. O my lord, When you went onward on this ended action, I look'd upon her with a fouldiers eye, That lik'd, but had a rougher taske in hand, Than to drive liking to the name of love : But now I am return'd, and that warre-thoughts Have left their places vacant : in their roomes, Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how faire yong Hero is, Saying I lik'd her ere I went to warres.

Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently, And tire the hearer with a booke of words : If thou dost love faire Hero, cherish it, And I will breake with her : wait not to this end, That thou beganst to twist so fine a story ?

Clau. How sweetly doe you minister to love, That know loves griefe by his complexion ! But lest my liking might too sodaine seeme, I would haue salu'd it with a longer treatise.

Pedro. What need the bridge much broder then the The fairest grant is the necessity : (Hood)

Looke what will serue, is fit : tis once, thou lovest,

And I will fit thee with the remedy,

I know we shall haue revelling to night,

I will assume thy part in some disguise,

And tell faire Hero I am Claudio,

And in her bosome Ile unclaspe my heart,

And take her hearing prisoner with the force

And strong incounter of my amorous tale :

Then after, to her father will I breake,

And the conclusion is, she shall be thine,

In practise let us put it presently. Exeunt.

Enter Leonato and an old man, brother to Leonato.

Leo. How now brother, where is my cosen your son : hath he provided this musicke ?

Old. He is very busie about it, but brother, I can tell you newes that you yet dreamt not of.

Leo. Are they good ?

Old. As the event stampes them, but they haue a good cover : they shew well outward : the Prince and Count Claudio walking in a thicke pleached alley in my orchard, were thus over-heard by a man of mine : the Prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my neece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance, and if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly breake with you of it.

Leo. Hath the fellow any wit that told you this ?

Old. A good sharpe fellow, I will send for him, and question him your selfe.

Leo. No, no : we will hold it as a dreame, till it appeare it selfe : but I will acquaint my daughter withall, that she may be the better prepared for answer, if peradventure this be true : goe you and tell her of it : cosins, you know what you haue to doe, O I cry you mercy friend, goe you with me and I will use your skill, good cosin haue a care this busie time. Exeunt.

Enter Sir Iohn the Bastard, and Conrade his companion.

Con. What the good yeere my Lord, why are you thus out of measure sad ?

Iohn. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds, therefore the sadnesse is without limit.

Con. You should heare reason.

Iohn. And when I haue heard it, what blessing bringeth it ?

Con. If not a present remedy, yet a patient sufferance.

Iohn. I wonder that thou (being as thou saist thou art, borne under Saturne) goest about to apply a mortall medicine, to a mortifying mischeife : I cannot hide what I am : I must be sad when I haue cause, and smile at no mans jests ; eate when I haue stomacke, and wait for no mans leisure : sleepe when I am drowsie, and tend on no mans businesse ; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this till you may doe it without controullment, you haue of late late stood out against your brother, and he hath tane you newly into his grace, where it is impossible you should take root, but by the faire weather that you make your selfe, it is needfull that you frame the season for your owne harvest.

John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, then a rose in his grace, and it better fits my bloud to be disdain'd of all, then to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this (though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man) it must not be denyed but I am a plaine dealing villaine, I am trusted with a muffell, and enfranchis'd with a clog, therefore I have decreed, not to sing in my cage: if I had my mouth, I would bite: if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the meane time, let me be that I am, and seeke not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

John. I will make all use of it, for I use it openly. Who comes heere? what newes Borachio.

Enter Borachio.

Bor. I came yonder from a great supper, the Prince your brother is royally entertained by Leonato, and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

John. Will it serve for any Modell to build mischeife on? What is he for a foole that betrothes himselfe to unquietnesse?

Bor. Marry it is your brothers right hand.

John. Who, the most exquisite Claudio?

Bor. Even he.

John. A proper squier, and who, and who, which way lookes he?

Bor. Marry on Hero, the daughter and Heire of Leonato.

John. A very forward March-chicke, how come you to this?

Bor. Being entertain'd for a perfumer, as I was smoaking a musty roome, comes me the Prince and Claudio, hand in hand in sad conference: I whipt behind the Arras, and there heard it agreed upon, that the Prince should wooe Hero for himselfe, and having obtained'd her, give her to Count Claudio.

John. Come, come, let us thither, this may prove food to my displeasure, that young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow: if I can crosse him any way, I blesse my selfe every way; you are both sure, and will assist me?

Conr. To the death my Lord.

John. Let us to the great supper, their cheere is the greater that I am subdued, would the Cooke were of my mind: shall we goe prove what's to be done?

Bor. We'll wait upon your lordship.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Leonato, his brother, his wife, Hero his daughter, and Beatrice his neece, and a kinsman.

Leon. Was not Count John here at supper?

Brot. I saw him not.

Beat. How tartly that Gentleman lookes, I never can see him, but I am heart-burn'd an houre after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He were an excellent man that were made just in the mid-way betweepe him and Benedicke, the one is too like an image and sayes nothing, and the other too like my Ladies eldest sonne, evermore tatling.

Leon. Then halfe Signior Benedicke's tongue in Count John's mouth, and halfe Count John's melancholy in Signior Benedicke's face.

Beat. With a good legge, and a good foot unckle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would winne any woman in the world, if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth Neece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Brot. In faith she's too curst.

Beat. Too curst is more then curst, I shall lessen Gods sending that way: for it is said, God sends a curst Cow short hornes, but to a Cow too curst he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curst, God will send you no hornes.

Beat. Iust, if he send me no husband, for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening: Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face, I had rather lye in the woollen.

Leon. You may light upon a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I doe with him? dresse him in my apparell; and make him my waiting gentlewoman? he that hath a beard, is more then a youth: and he that hath no beard, is lesse then a man: and he that is more then a youth, is not for me: and he that is lesse then a man, I am not for him: therefore I will even take sixepence in earnest of the Berrord, and leade his Apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, goe you into hell.

Beat. No, but to the gate, and there will the Devill meete me like an old Cuckold with hornes on his head, and say, get you to heaven Beatrice, get you to heaven, heere's no place for you maids, so deliver I up my Apes, and away to Saint Peter: for the heavens, he shewes me where the Batchellers sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Brot. Well neece, I trust you will be rul'd by your father.

Beat. Yes faith, it is my cosens duty to make curtsie, and say, as it please you: but yet for all that cosin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make an other curtsie, and say, father, as it pleases me.

Leon. Well neece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other mettall then earth, would it not grieve a woman to be overmastered with a peece of valiant dust? to make account of her life to a clod of wayward marle? no uncle, ile none: Adams sonnes are my brethren, and truly I hold it a sinne to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you, if the Prince doe solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the musicke cosin, if you be not wood in good time: if the Prince be too important, tell him there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer, for heare me Hero, wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jigge, a measure, and a cinquepace: the first suite is hot and hasty like a Scotch jigge (and full as fantastickall) the wedding mannerly modest, (as a measure) full of stare and aunchentry, and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinquepace faster and faster, till he sinkes into his grave.

Leon.

Leonatus. Cofin you apprehend paffing fhrewdly.

Beatrice. I have a good eye unckle, I can fee a Church by daylight.

Leon. The revellers are entring brother, make good room.

Enter Prince, Pedro, Claudio, and Benedicke, and Balthazar, or dumbe Iohn, Maskers with a drum.

Pedro. Lady, will you walke about with your friend?

Hero. So you walke foftly, and looke sweetly, and fay nothing, I am yours for the walke, and efpecially when I walke away.

Pedro. With me in your company.

Hero. I may fay fo when I please.

Pedro. And when please you to fay fo?

Hero. When I like your favour, for God defend the Lute fhould be like the cafe.

Pedro. My vifor is Poilemons rooffe, within the houfe is love.

Hero. Why then your vifor fhould be thatcht.

Pedro. Speake low if you fpeake Love.

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Mar. So would not I for your owne fake, for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Mar. I fay my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better, the hearers may cry Amen.

Mar. God match me with a good dancer.

Balt. Amen.

Mar. And God keepe him out of my fight when the dance is done: answer Clarke.

Balt. No more words, the Clarke is answered.

Vrfula. I know you well enough, you are Signior Anthonyo.

Anth. At a word, I am not.

Vrfula. I know you by the wagling of your head.

Anth. To tell you true, I counterfet him.

Vrfula. You could never doe him fo ill well, unleffe you were the very man: here's his dry hand up and downe, you are he, you are he.

Antho. At a word I am not.

Vrfula. Come, come, doe you thinke I doe not know you by your excellent wit? can vertue hide it felfe? goe to, mumme, you are he, graces will appeare, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me whotold you fo?

Bene. No, you fhall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was difdainefull, and that I had my good wit out of the hundred merry tales: well, this was Signior Benedicke that faid fo.

Bene. What's he?

I am fure you know him well enough.

Beat. Not I, beleve me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you what is he?

Beat. Why he is the Princes jeafter, a very dull foole, onely his gift is, in devising impoffible flanders, none but Libertines delight in him, and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany, for hee both pleafeth men and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him; I am fure he is in the Fleet, I would he had boarded me.

Bene. When I know the Gentleman, Ile tell him what you fay.

Beat. Doe, doe, hee'l but breake a comparifon or two on me, which peradventure (not markt, or not laugh'd at) ftrikes him into melancholly, and then there's a Partridge wing faved, for the foole will eate no fupper that night. We muft follow the Leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they leade to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

Exeunt.

Muficke for the dance.

Iohn. Sure my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawne her father to breake with him about it: the Ladies follow her, and but one vifor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio, I know him by his bearing.

Iohn. Are not you signior Benedicke?

Clau. You know me well, I am he.

Iohn. Signior, you are very neere my brother in his love, he is enamor'd on Hero, I pray you difswade him from her, fhe is no equall for his birth: you may doe the part of an honeft man in it.

Clau. How know you he loves her?

Iohn. I heard him fwear his affection.

Bora. So did I too, and he fwore he would marry her to night.

Iohn. Come, let us to the banquet. Exit. maxet. Clau.

Clau. Thus answer I in name of Benedicke,

But heare thefe ill newes with the eares of Claudio:

'Tis certaine fo, the Prince wooes for himfelfe:

Friendfhip is conftant in all other things,

Save in the Office and affaires of love:

Therefore all hearts in love ufe their owne tongues,

Let every eye negotiate for it felfe,

And truft no Agent: for beauty is a witch,

Againft whole charmes, faith melteth into blood:

This is an accident of houely prooffe,

Which I miftrufte not. Farewell therefore Hero.

Enter Benedicke.

Bene. Count Claudio.

Clau. Yea the fame.

Bene. Come, will you goe with me?

Clau. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next Willow, about your owne bufineffe, Count. What fafhion will you weare the Garland off? About your necke, like an Vfurers chaine? Or under your arme, like a Lieutenants fcarfe? You muft weare it one way, for the Prince hath got your Hero.

Clau. I wifh him joy of her.

Bene. Why that's fpoken like an honeft Drovier, fo they fell Bullockes: but did you thinke the Prince would have ferved you thus?

Clau. I pray you leave me.

Bene. Ho no I you ftrike like the blindman, 'twas the boy that stole your meate, and you'll beat the poft.

Clau. If it will not be, Ile leave you.

Exit.

Bene. Alas poore hurt foule, now will he creepe into fedges: but that my Lady Beatrice fhould know me, and not know mee: the Princes foole! Ha? It may be I goe under that title, becaufe I am merry: you but fo I am apt to doe my felfe wrong: I am not fo reputed, it is the bafe (though bitter) difpofition of Beatrice, that put's the world into her perfon, and fo gives me out: well, Ile be revenged as I may.

Enter the Prince.

Pedro. Now Signior, where's the Count, did you fee him?

Bene.

Bene. Troth my Lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame, I found him heere as melancholly as a Lodge in a Warren, I told him, and I thinke, told him true, that your grace had got the will of this young Lady, and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

Pedro. To be whipt, what's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a Schoole-boy, who being over-joyed with finding a birds nest, shewes it his companion, and he steales it.

Pedro. Wilt thou make a trust, a transgression? the transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet it had not beene amisse the rod had beene made, and the garland too, for the garland he might have worne himselfe, and the rod he might have bestowed on yop, who (as I take it) have stolne his birds nest.

Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith you say honestly.

Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrell to you, the Gentleman that danst with her, told her she is much wrong'd by you.

Bene. O she misfide me past the indurance of a blocke: an oake but with one greene leafe on it, would have answered her: my very visor began to assume life, and scold with her: she told mee, not thinking I had beene my selfe, that I was the Princes Iester, and that I was duller then a great thaw, hudling jest upon jest; with such impossible conveyance upon me, that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me: she speakes poynyards, and every word stabbes: if her breath were as terrible as terminations, there were no living neere her, she would infect to the north starre: I would not marry her, though she were indowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed, she would have made Hercules have turnd spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too: come, talke not of her, you shall find her the infernall Ate in good apparell. I would to God some scholler would conjure her, for certainly while she is heere, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary, and people sinne upon purpose, because they would goe whither, so indeed all disquiet, horror, and perturbation followes her.

Enter Claudio, and Beatrice, Leonato, Hero.

Pedro. Looke heere she comes.

Bene. Will your Grace command me any service to the worlds end? I will goe on the slightest errand now to the Antypodes that you can devise to send me on: I will fetch you a tooth-picker now from the furthest inch of Asia: bring you the length of Prefter Johns foot: fetch you a haire off the great Chams beard: doe you any embassage to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words conference, with this Harpy: you have no employment for me?

Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God sir, heeres a dish I love not, I cannot indure this Ladys tongue.

Exit.

Pedro. Come Lady, come, you have lost the heart of Signior Benedicke.

Beat. Indeed my lord, he lent it me a while, and I gave him use for it, a double heart for a single one, marry once before he wonne it of me, with false dice, therefore your Grace may well say I have lost it.

Pedro. You have put him downe Lady, you have put him downe.

Beat. So I would not he should doe me, my lord, lest I should proove the mother of fooles: I have brought Count Claudio, whom you sent me to seeke.

Pedro. Why how now Count, wherefore are you sad?

Claudio. Not sad my lord.

Pedro. How then? sicke?

Claudio. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The Count is neither sad, nor sicke, nor merry, nor well: but civill Count, civill as an Orange, and something of a jealous complexion.

Pedro. Ifaith Lady, I thinke your blazon to be true, though I be sworne, if he bee so, his conceit is false: heere Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and faire Hero is won, I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy.

Leona. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say, Amen to it.

Beat. Speake Count, tis your Qu.

Claudio. Silence is the perfectest Herauld of joy, I were but little happy if I could say, how much? Lady, as you are mine, I am yours, I give away my selfe for you, and doat upon the exchange.

Beat. Speake cosin, or (if you cannot) stop his mouth with a kisse, and let not him speake neither.

Pedro. Infaith Lady you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea my lord I thanke it, poore foole it keepes on the windy side of care, my cosin tells him in his care that he is in my heart.

Claudio. And so she doth cosin.

Beat. Good lord for alliance: thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sun-burn'd, I may sit in a corner and cry, heigh ho for a husband.

Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your fathers getting: hath your Grace ne're a brother like you? your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

Prince. Will you have me? Lady.

Beat. No, my lord, unlesse I might have another for working-dayes, your Grace is too costly to weare every day: but I beseech your Grace pardon me, I was borne to speake all mirth, and no matter.

Prince. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry, best becomes you, for out of question, you were borne in a merry houre.

Beat. No sure my lord, my mother cryed, but then there was a starre danst, and under that was I borne: cosins God give you joy.

Leona. Necce, will you looke to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy Vncle, by your Graces pardon.

Exit Beatrice.

Prince. By my troth a pleasant spirited Lady.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her my lord, she is never sad, but when she sleepest, and not ever sad then: for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamt of unhappinesse, and wakt her selfe with laughing.

Pedro. Shee cannot indure to heare tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no meanes, she mockes all her wooers out of suite.

Prince. She were an excellent wife for Benedicke.

Leona. O lord, my lord, if they were but a weeke married, married, they would talke themselves mad.

Prince. Count Claudio, when meane you to goe to Church?

Clau. To morrow my Lord, Time goes on crutches, till Love have all his rites.

Leona. Not till monday, my deare sonne, which is hence a iust seven night, and a time too brieft too, to have all things answer mind.

Prince. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing, but I warrant thee Claudio, the time shall not goe dally by us, I will in the interim, undertake one of Hercules labours, which is, to bring Signior Benedicke and the Lady Beatrice into a mountaine of affection, th'one with th'other, I would faine have it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leona. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights watchings.

Clau. And I my lord.

Prin. And you too gentle Hero?

Hero. I will doe any modest office, my lord, to helpe my cofin to a good husband.

Prin. And Benedicke is not the unhopefullest husband that I know: thus farre can I praise him, he is of a noble straine, of approved valour, and confirm'd honesty. I will reach you how to humour your cofin, that she shall fall in love with Benedicke, and I, with your two helpes, will so practise on Benedicke, that in despite of his quicke wit, and his queasie stomacke, he shall fall in love with Beatrice: if we can doe this, Cupid is no longer an Archer, his glory shall be ours, for we are the onely love-gods, goe in with me, and I will tell you my drift. Exeunt.

Enter John and Borachio.

John. It is so, the Count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea my lord, but I can crosse it.

John. Any barre, any crosse, any impediment, will be medicinable to me, I am sicke in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes athwart his affection, ranges evenly with mine, how canst thou crosse this marriage?

Bor. Not honestly my lord, but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me,

John. Shew me briefly how.

Bor. I thinke I told your lordship a yeere since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting gentlewoman to Hero.

John. I remember.

Bor. I can at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to looke out at her Ladies chamber window.

John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bor. The poyson of that lyes in you to temper; goe you to the Prince your brother, spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his Honor in marrying the renowned Claudio, whose estimation doe you mightily hold up, to a contaminated stale, such a one as Hero.

John. What prooffe shall I make of that?

Bor. Prooffe enough, to misuse the Prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato, looke you for any other issue?

John. Onely to despight them, I will endeavour any thing.

Bor. Goe then, find me a meete house, to draw on Pedro and the Count Claudio alone, tell them that you know that Hero loves me, intend a kind of zeale both to the Prince and Claudio (as in a love of your brothers honor who hath made this match) and his friends reputation, who is thus like to be cofen'd with the semblance of a maid, that you have discover'd thus: they will scarcely beleeeve this without triall: offer them instances which shall beare no lesse likelyhood, than to see me at her chamber window, heare me call Margaret, Hero; heare Margaret terme me Claudio, and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding, for in the meane time, I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appeare such seeming truths of Heroes disloyalty, that jealousie shall be call'd assurance, and all the preparation ouerthrowne.

John. Grow this to what adveise it can, I will put it in practise: be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducates.

Bor. Be thou constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

John. I will presently goe learne their day of marriage. Exit.

Enter Benedicke alone.

Bene. Boy.

Boy. Signior.

Bor. In my chamber window lies a booke, bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am heere already sir.

Exit.

Bene. I know that, but I would have thee hence, and heere againe, I doe much wonder, that one man seeing how much another man is a foole, when he dedicates his behaviours to love; will after he hath laught at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his owne scorne, by falling in love; and such a man is Claudio, I have knowne when there was no musicke with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather heare the taber and the pipe: I have knowne when he would have walkt ten mile a foot, to see a good armor, and now will he lye ten nights awake carving the fashion of a new dublet: he was wont to speake plaine, and to the purpose (like an honest man and a souldier) and now is he turn'd orthography, his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes: may I be so converted, and see with these eyes? I cannot tell, I thinke not: I will not bee sworne, but love may transforme me to an oyster, but Ile take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a foole: one woman is faire, yet I am well: another is wise, yet I am well: another vertuous, yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace: rich she shall be, that's certaine: wife, or Ile none; vertuous, or Ile neuer cheapen her: faire, or Ile never looke on her: milde, or come not neere me: Noble, or not for an Angell: of good discourse: an excellent Musitian, and her haire shall be of what colour it please God, hah! the Prince and Monsieur Love, I will hide me in the Arbor.

Enter Prince, Leonato, Claudio, and Iacke Wilson.

Prin. Come, shall we heare this musicke?

Clau. Yea my good lord: how still the evening is, As hush on purpose to grace harmony.

Prin. See you where Benedicke hath hid himselfe?

Clau. O very well my lord: the musicke ended, We'll fit the kid-foxe with a penny worth.

Prin. Come Balthazar, we'll heare that song againe.

Balth. O good my lord, taxe not so bad a voyce, To flatter musicke any more then once.

Prince.

Prince. It is the witnesse still of excellency,
To put a strange face on his owne perfection,
I pray thee sing, and let me wooe no more.

Balth. Because you talke of wooing, I will sing,
Since many a wooer doth commence his suit,
To her he thinks not worthy, yet he wooes,
Yet will he sweare he loves.

Prince. Nay pray thee come,
Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Doe it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes,
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

Prince. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks,
Note notes forsooth, and nothing.

Bene. Now divine ayre, now is his soule ravisht, is it not strange that sheepes guts should hale soules out of mens bodies? well, a horne for my money when all's done.

The Song.

*Sigh no more Ladies, sigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever,
One foot in Sea, and one on shore,
To nothing constant never:
Then sigh not so, but let them goe,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sorrows of woe,
Into hey nonny, nonny.*

*Sing no more ditties, sing no more,
Of dumps so dull and heavy,
The fraud of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leavy,
Then sigh not so, &c.*

Prince. By my troth a good song.

Balth. And an ill finger, my lord.

Prince. Ha, no, no, faith, thou singst well enough for a shift.

Bene. And he had beene a dog that should have howl'd thus, they would have hang'd him, and I pray God his bad voyce bode no mischief, I had as leife have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

Prince. Yea marry, dost thou heare Balthazar? I pray thee get us some excellent musick: for to morrow night we would have it at the Lady Heroes chamber window.

Balth. The best I can my lord. Exit Balthazar.

Prince. Doe so, farewell. Come hither Leonato, what was it you told me of to day, that your Niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedicke?

Claud. O I, stalker on, stalker on, the foule sits. I did never thinke that Lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither, but most wonderfull, that she should so dote on Signior Benedicke, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhorre.

Bene. Is't possible? sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth my lord, I cannot tell what to thinke of it, but that she loves him with an enraged affection, it is past the infinite of thought.

Prince. May be she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. Faith like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit? there was never counterfeit of passion, came so neere the life of passion as she discovers it.

Prince. Why what effects of passion shewes she?

Claud. Bait the hooke well, the fish will bite.

Leon. What effects my lord? she will fit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did indeed.

Prin. How, how I pray you? you amaze me, I would have thought her spirit had beene invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leo. I would have sworne it had, my lord, especially against Benedicke.

Bene. I should thinke this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speakes it: knavery cannot sure hide himselfe in such reverence.

Claud. He hath tane th' infection, hold it up.

Prince. Hath she made her affection knowne to Benedicke?

Leonato. No, and sweares she never will, that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true indeed, so your daughter sayes: shall
I, sayes she, that have so oft encountred him with scorne, write to him that I love him?

Leo. This sayes shee now when she is beginning to write to him, for shee'll be up twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her smocke, till she have writ a sheet of paper: my daughter tells us all.

Cla. Now you talke of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O when she had writ it, and was reading it ever, she found Benedicke and Beatrice betwene the sheete.

Claud. That.

Leon. O she tore the letter into a thousand halpence, raild at her selfe, that she should be so immodest to write, to one that she knew would flout her: I measure him, sayes she, by my owne spirit, for I should flout him if he writ to me, yea though I love him, I should.

Claud. Then downe upon her knees she falls, weepes, sobs, beats her heart, teares her hayre, prayes, curies, O
sweet Benedicke, God give me patience.

Leon. She doth indeed, my daughter sayes so, and the extasie hath so much overborne her, that my daughter is sometime afraid she will doe a desperate out-rage to her selfe, it is very true.

Prin. It were good that Benedicke knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? he would but make a sport of it, and torment the poore Lady worse.

Prin. And he should, it were an almes to hang him, she's an excellent sweet Lady, and (out of all suspicion,)
she is vertuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

Prin. In every thing, but in loving Benedicke.

Leon. O my lord, wisdom and bloud combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofes to one, that bloud hath the victory, I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her Vncle, and her Guardian.

Prince. I would she had bestowed this dotage on me,
I would have daft all other respects, and made her halfe my selfe: I pray you tell Benedicke of it, and heare what he will say.

Leon. Were it good thinke you?

Cla. Hero thinks surely she will dye, for she sayes she will dye, if he love her not, and she will dye ere shee make her love knowne, and she will dye if he wooe her, rather than she will bate one breath of her accustomed crossenesse.

Prin. She doth well, if she should make tender of her love,

loue, 'tis very possible hee'l scorne it, for the man (as you know all) hath a contemptible spirit.

Claudio. He is a very proper man.

Prin. He hath indeed a good outward happines.

Claudio. 'Fore God, and in my minde very wise.

Prin. He doth indeed shew some sparkes that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

Prin. As Hector, I assure you, and in the managing of quarrels you may see he is wise, for either hee auoydes them with great discretion, or vndertakes them with a Christian-like feare.

Leon. If hee doe feare God, a must necessarily keepe peace, if hee breake the peace, hee ought to enter into a quarrell with feare and trembling.

Prin. And so will hee doe, for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seemes not in him, by some large icasts he will make: well, I am sorry for your niece, shall we go see Benedicke, and tell him of her loue?

Claudio. Neuer tell him, my Lord, let her weare it out with good counsell.

Leon. Nay that's impossible, she may weare her heart out first.

Prin. Well, we will heare further of it by your daughter, let it coole the while. I loue Benedicke well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himselfe, to see how much he is vnworthy to haue so good a Lady.

Leon. My Lord, will you walke? dinner is ready.

Claudio. If he do not doat on her vpon this, I will never trust my expectation.

Prin. Let there be the same Net spread for her, and that must your daughter and her gentlewoman carry: the sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of anothers dotage, and no such matter, that's the Scene that I would see, which will be meereley a dumbe shew: let vs send her to call him into dinner. Exeunt.

Bene. This can be no trick, the conference was sadly borne, they haue the truth of this from Hero, they seeme to pittie the Lady: it seemes her affections haue the full bent: loue me? why it must be requited: I heare how I am censur'd, they say I will beare my selfe proudly, if I perceiue the love come from her: they say too, that she will rather die than giue any signe of affection: I did neuer thinke to marry, I must not seeme proud, happy are they that heare their detractions, and can put them to mending: they say the Lady is faire, 'tis a truth, I can beare them witnesse: and vertuous, 'tis so, I cannot reprocue it, and wise, but for louing me, by my troth it is no addition to her witte, nor no great argument of her folly; for I will be horribly in love with her, I may chance haue some odde quirkes and remaines of witte broken on me, because I haue rail'd so long against marriage: but doth not the appetite alter? a man loves the meat in his youth, that he cannot indure in his age. Shall quips and sentences, and these paper bullets of the braine awe a man from the careere of his humour? No, the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should liue till I were married: here comes Beatrice: by this day, shee's a faire Lady, I doe spie some markes of loue in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Faire Beatrice, I thanke you for your paines.

Beat. I tooke no more paines for those thanks, then you take paines to thanke me, if it had beene painefull; I would not haue come.

Bene. You take pleasure then in the message.

Beat. Yea just so much as you may take upon a knives point, and choake a daw withall: you haue no stomacke signior, fare you well. Exit.

Bene. Ha, against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner: there's a double meaning in that: I tooke no more paines for those thanks, then you tooke paines to thanke me, that's as much as to say, any paines that I take for you is as easie as thanks: if I do not take pittie of her I am a villaine, if I do not love her I am a lew, I will go get her picture. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Hero and two Gentlemen, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret runne thee to the parlour, There shalt thou finde my Cosin Beatrice, Proposing with the Prince and Claudio, Whisper her care, and tell her I and Ursula Walke in the Orchard, and our whole discourse Is all of her, say that thou over-heardst vs, And bid her steale into the pleached bower, Where Hony-suckles ripened by the sunne, Forbid the sunne to enter: like fauourites, Made proud by Princes, that aduance their pride, Against that power that bred it, there will she hide her, To listen to our purpose, this is thy office, Beare thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. Ile make her come I warrant presently. Exit.

Hero. Now Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and downe, Our talke must onely be of Benedicke, When I do name him, let it bethy part, To praise him more then euer Man did merit, My talke to thee must be how Benedicke Is sicke in love with Beatrice: of this matter, Is little Cupid's crafty arrow made, That onely wounds by heare-say: now begin,

Enter Beatrice.

For looke where Beatrice like a Lapwing runs Close by the ground, to heare our conference.

Urs. The pleasant 'st angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden ores the siluer streame, And greedily deuoure the treacherous baite: So angle we for Beatrice, who euen now, Is couched in the wood-bine coverture; Feare you not my part of the Dialogue.

Her. Then go we neare her that her care lose nothing, Of the false sweete baite that we lay for it: No truely Ursula, she is too disdainfull, I know her spirits are as coy and wiide, As Haggards of the rocke.

Ursula. But are you sure, That Benedicke loves Beatrice so intirely?

Her. So saies the Prince, and my new trothed Lord.

Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it, Madam?

Her. They did intreate me to acquaint her of it, But I perswaded them, if they lou'd Benedicke,

To wish him wrastle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Vrsula. Why did you so, doth not the Gentleman
Deserve as full as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?

Hero. O God of love! I know he doth deserve,
As much as may be yeilded to a man:
But nature never fram'd a womans heart,
Of prowder stuffe then that of Beatrice:
Disdaine and Scorne ride sparkling in her eye,
Mis-prizing what they looke on, and her wit
Values it selfe so highly, that to her
All matter else seemes weake: she cannot love,
Nor take no shape nor proiect of affection,
Shée is so selfe indeared.

Vrsula. Sure I thinke so,
And therefore certainly it were not good
She knew his loue, lest she make sport at it.

Hero. Why you speake truth, I never yet saw man,
How wise; how noble, yong, how rarely featur'd,
But she would spell him backward: if faire fac'd,
She would sweare the gentleman should be her sister:
If blacke, why Nature drawing of an anticke,
Made a foule blot: if tall, a launce ill-headed:
If low, an agot very vildlie cut:
If speaking, why a vane blowne with all windes,
If silent, why a blocke moved with none.
So turnes she every man the wrong side out,
And never gives to Truth and Vertue, that
Which simpleness and merit purchaseth.

Vrsu. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

Hero. No, not to be so odde, and from all fashions,
As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable,
But who dare tell her so? if I should speake,
She would mocke me into ayre, O she would laugh me
Out of my selfe, presse me to death with wit.
Therefore let Benedicke like couered fire,
Consume away in sighes, waste inwardly:
It were a bitter death, to die with mockes,
Which is as bad as die with tickling.

Vrsu. Yet tell her of it; heare what she will say.

Hero. No, rather I will goe to Benedicke,
And counsaile him to fight against his passion,
And truly Ile devise some honest slanders,
To staine my cosin with, one doth not know,
How much an ill word may impositon liking.

Vrsu. O doe not do your cosin such a wrong,
She cannot be so much without true judgement,
Having so swift and excellent a wit
As she is priske to have, as to refuse
So rare a Gentleman as signior Benedicke.

Hero. He is the onely man of Italy,
Alwaies excepted, my deare Claudio.

Vrsu. I pray you be not angry with me, Madame,
Speaking my fancy: Signior Benedicke,
For shape, for bearing argument and valour,
Goes formost in report through Italy.

Hero. Indeed he hath an excellent good name.

Vrsu. His excellence did earne it ere he had it:
When are you married Madame?

Hero. Why every day to morrow, come goe in,
Ile shew thee some attires, and have thy counsell,
Which is the best to furnish me to morrow.

Vrsu. Shée's tane I warrant you,
We have caught her Madame?

Hero. If it prove so, then loving goes by haps,

Some Cupid kills with arrowes, some with traps. Exit.

Beat. What fire is in mine cares? can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorne so much?
Contempt, farewell, and maiden pride, adew,
No glory lives behinde the backe of such.
And Benedicke, love on, I will requite thee,
Taming my wilde heart to thy loving hand:
If thou dost love, my kindenesse shall incite thee
To binde our loves up in a holy band.
For others say thou dost deserve, and I
Beleeve it better then reportingly. Exit.

Enter Prince, Claudio, Benedicke, and Leonato.

Prince. I do but stay till your marriage be consummate, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claudio. Ile bring you thither my Lord, if you'l vouchsafe me;

Prince. Nay, that would be as great a soyle in the new glosse of your marriage, as to shew a childe his new coat and forbid him to weare it, I will onely bee bold with Benedicke for his companie; for from the crowne of his head, to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth, he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hang-man dare not shoot at him, he hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinkes, his tongue speakes.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have bin.

Leo. So say I; methinkes you are sadder.

Claudio. I hope he be in love.

Prince. Hang him truant, there's no true drop of bloud in him to be truly toucht with love, if he be sad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the tooth-ach:

Prince. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it.

Claudio. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

Prince. What? sigh for the tooth-ach.

Leon. Where is but a humour or a worne.

Bene. Well, every one cannot maister a griefe, but hee that has it.

Claudio. Yet say I, he is in love.

Prince. There is no appearance of fancie in him, unlesse it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises, as to bee a Dutchman to day, a Frenchman to morrow: unlesse hee have a fancy to this foolery, as it appeares hee hath, hee is no foole for fancy, as you would have it to appeare he his.

Claudio. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no beleeving old signes, a brushes his hat a mornings;
What should that bode?

Prince. Hath any man seene him at the Barbers?

Claudio. No, but the Barbers man hath beene seene with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath alreadie stufte tennis balls.

Leon. Indeed he looks yonger than he did, by the losse of a beard.

Prince. Nay a rubs himselfe with Cinuit, can you smell him out by that?

Claudio. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in love.

Prince. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claudio. And when was he wont to wash his face?

Prince. Yea, or to paint himselfe? for the which I heare what they say of him.

Claudio. Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lute-string, and now govern'd by stops.

Prince.

Prin. Indeed that tels a heavy tale for him: conclude, he is in love.

Clau. Nay, but I know who loves him.

Prin. That would I know too, I warrāt one that knows him not.

Clau. Yes, and his ill conditions, and in despite of all, dies for him.

Prin. Shee shall be buried with her face upwards.

Bene. Yet is this no charme for the tooth-ake, old signior, walke aside with mee, I have studied eight or nine wise words to speake to you, which these hobby-horses must not heare.

Prin. For my life to breake with him about Beatrice.

Clau. 'Tis even so, Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two Beares will not bite one another when they meete.

Enter John the Bastard.

Bast. My Lord and brother, God save you.

Prin. Good den brother.

Bast. If your leisure serv'd, I would speake with you.

Prin. In priuate?

Bast. If it please you, yet Count Claudio may heare, for what I would speake of, concernes him.

Prin. What's the matter?

Bast. Meanes your Lordship to be married to morrow?

Prin. You know he does.

Bast. I know not that when he knowes what I know.

Clau. If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.

Bast. You may thinke I love you not, let that appeare hereafter, & ayme better at me by that I now will manifest, for my brother (I thinke, he holds you well, and in deareness of heart) hath holpe to effect your ensuing marriage: surely sute ill spent, and labour ill bestowed.

Prin. Why, what's the matter?

Bast. I came hither to tell you, and circumstances shorned, (for she hath bene too long a talking of) the Lady is disloyall.

Clau. Who! Hero?

Bast. Even shee, Leonatos Hero, your Hero, every mans Hero.

Clau. Disloyall?

Bast. The word is too good to paint out her wickednesse, I could say she were worse, thinke you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it: wonder not till further warrant: goe but with mee to night, you shall see her chamber window entred, even the night before her wedding day, if you love her, then to morrow wed her: but it would better fit your honour to change your minde.

Clau. May this be so?

Prin. I will not thinke it.

Bast. If you dare not trust that you see, confesse not that you know: if you will follow mee, I will shew you enough, and when you have scene more, & heard more, proceed accordingly.

Clau. If I see any thing to night, why I should not marry her to morrow in the congregation, where I shold wedde, there will I shame her.

Prin. And as I wooed for thee to obtaine her, I will joyne with thee to disgrace her.

Bast. I will disparage her no farther, till you are my witnesses, beare it coldly but till night, and let the issue shew it selfe.

Prin. O day untowardly turned?

Clau. O mischief strangely thwarting!

Bast. O plague right well prevented! so will you say, when have scene the sequels.

Exeunt.

Enter Dogberry and his compartner with the watch.

Dog. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Yea, or else it were pittie but they should suffer saluation body and soule.

Dog. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the Princes watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dog. First, who thinke you the most defartlesse man to be Constable?

Watch. 1. Hugh Ot-cake sir, or George Sea-coale, for they can write and reade.

Dog. Come hither neighbour Sea-coale, God hath blest you with a good name: to be a wel-favoured man, is the gift of fortune, but to write and reade, comes by Nature.

Watch. 2. Both which Master Constable

Dog. You have: I knew it would bee your answer: well, for your favour sir, why give God thankes, & make no boast of it, and for your writing and reading, let that appeare when there is no neede of such vanity, you are thought heere to be the most senslesse and fit man for the Constable of the watch: therefore beare you the lanthorne: this is your charge: You shall comprehend all vagrom men, you are to bid any man stand in the Princes name.

Watch. 2. How if a will not stand?

Dog. Why then take no note of him, but let him go, and presently call the rest of the Watch together, and thanke God you are ridde of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, hee is none of the Princes subiects.

Dog. True, and they are to meddle with none but the Princes subjects: you shall also make no noise in the streetes: for, for the Watch to babble and talke, is most tollerable, and not to be indured.

Watch. We will rather sleepe than talke; wee know what belongs to a Watch.

Dog. Why you speake like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should offend: only have a care that your bills be not stolne: well, you are to call at all the Alehouses, and bid them that are drunke get them to bed.

Watch. How if they will not?

Dog. Why then let them alone till they are sober, if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you tooke them for.

Watch. Well sir,

Dog. If you meet a theefe, you may suspect him, by vertue of your office, to be no true man: and for such kinde of men, the lesse you meddle or make with them, why the more is for your honesty.

Watch. If wee know him to be a thiefe, shall wee not lay hands on him?

Dog. Truly by your office you may, but I thinke they that touch pitch will be defil'd: the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a theefe, is, to let him shew himselfe what he is, and steale out of your company.

Verg. You have bin alwaies cal'd a mercifull mā partner.

Dog. Truly I would not hang a dog by my will, much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verges. If you heare a child crie in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

Watch. How if the nurse be asleepe and will not heare us?

Dog. Why then depart in peace, and let the childe wake her with crying, for the ewe that will not heare her Lambe when it baes, will never answer a calfe when he bleates.

Verges. 'Tis very true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge: you constable are to present the Princes owne person, if you meete the Prince in the night, you may staie him.

Verges. Nay birlady that I thinke a cannot.

Dog. Five shillings to one on't with any man that knowes the Statutes, he may staie him, marry not without the prince be willing, for indeed the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verges. Birlady I thinke it be so.

Dog. Ha, ah ha, well maisters good night, and there be any matter of weight chances, call up me, keepe your fellowes counsailes, and your owne, and good night, come neighbour.

Watch. Well maisters, we heare our charge, let us go sitt here upon the Church bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honest neighbors. I pray you watch about signior Leonatoes doore, for the wedding being there to morrow, there is a great coile to night, adieu, be vigilant I beseech you. Exant.

Enter borachio and Conrade.

Bor. What, Conrade?

Watch. Peace, stir not.

Bor. Conrade I say.

Con. Here man, I am at thy elbow.

Bor. Mas and my elbow itcht, I thought there would a scabbe follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that, and now forward with thy tale.

Bor. Stand thee close then under this penthouse, for it driffels raine, and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. Some treason maisters, yet stand close.

Bor. Therefore know, I have earned of Don Iohn a thousand Ducates.

Con. Is it possible that any villanie should be so deare?

Bor. Thou should'st rather aske if it were possible any villanie should bee so rich? for when rich villains have neede of poore ones, poore ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bor. That shewest thou art unconfirm'd, thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloake, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparell.

Bor. I meane the fashion.

Con. Yes the fashion is the fashion.

Bor. Tush, I may as well say the foole's the foole, but feest thou not what a deformed theefe this fashion is?

Watch. I know that deformed, a has bin a vile theefe, this vii. yeares, a goes up and downe like a gentle-man: I remember his name.

Bor. Did'st thou not heare some body?

Con. No, 'twas the vane on the house.

Bor. Seest thou not (I say) what a deformed thiefe this fashion is; how giddily a turnes about all the Hot-bloods, betweene fourteene & fve & thirty, sometimes fashioning them like Pharaoses souldiours in the rechie painting, sometime lik god Bels priests in the old Church window, sometime like the shaven Hercules in the smircht worm-eaten tapestrie, where his cod-peece seemes as massie as his club.

Con. All this I see, and see that the fashion weares out more apparell then the man; but art not thou thy selfe giddie with the fashion too that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bor. Not so neither, but know that I have to night wooed Margaret the Lady Herres gentle-woman, by the name of Hero, she leanes me out at her mistris chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good night: I tell this tale vildly. I should first tell thee how the Prince Claudio and my Maister planted, and placed, and possessed by my Maister Don Iohn, saw a far off in the Orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought thy Margaret was Hero?

Bor. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio, but the divell my Maister knew she was Margaret, and partly by his oathes, which first posselt them, partly by the darke night which did deceive them, but chiefly, by my villanie, which did confirme any slander that Don Iohn had made, away went Claudio enraged, swore hee would meete her as he was apointed next morning at the Temple, and there, before the whole congregation shame her with what he saw o're night, and send her home againe without a husband.

Watch. 1. We charge you in the Princes name stand.

Watch. 2. Call up the right maister Constable, we have here recouered the most dangerous peece of lechery, that ever was knowne in the Common-wealth.

Watch. 1. And one Deformed is one of them, I know him, a weares a locke.

Con. Maisters, maisters.

Watch. 2. Youle be made bring deformed forth I warrant you,

Con. Maisters, never speake, we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bor. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these mens bills.

Con. A commodity in question I warrant you, come weeke obey you. Exant.

Enter Hero, and Margarets, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula wake my cosin Beaurice, and desire her to rise.

Ursu. I will Lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well.

Mar. Troth I thinke your other rebato were better.

Bero. No pray thee good Meg, Ile weare this.

Mar. By my troth's not so good, and I warrant your cosin will say so.

Bero. My cosin's a foole, and thou art another, ile weare none but this.

Mar. I like the new tirc within excellently, if the haire were a thought browner: and your gown's a most rare fashion yfaith, I saw the Dutchesse of Milaines gowne that they praise so.

Bero. O that exceeds they say,

Mar. By my troth's but a night-gowne in respect of yours, cloth a gold and cuts, and lac'd with silver, set with pearles, downe sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts, round underborn with a blewish tinsel, but for a fine quaint gracefull and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Bero. God

Hero. God give mee joy to weare it, for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marga. 'Twill be heavier soone, by the waight of a man.

Hero. Fie upon thee, art not asham'd?

Marga. Of what Lady? of speaking honourably? is not marriage honourable in a beggar? is not your Lord honourable without marriage? I thinke you would have me say, saving your reverence a husband: and bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, Ile offend no body, is there any harme in the heavier for a husband? none I thinke, and it be the right husband, and the right wife, otherwise 'tis light and not heavy, aske my Lady Beatrice else, here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good marrow Coze.

Beat. Good morrow sweet Hero.

Hero. Why how now? do you speake in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, me thinkes.

Mar. Claps into Light a love, (that goes without a burden,) do you sing it and Ile dance it.

Beat. Ye light alove with your heeles, then if your husband have itables enough, you'll looke he shall lacke no barnes.

Mar. O illegitimate construction! I scorne that with my heeles.

Beat. 'Tis almost five a clocke cosin, 'tis time you were ready, by my troth I am exceeding ill, hey ho.

Mar. For a hauke, a horse, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.

Mar. Well, and you be not turn'd Turke, there's no more sailing by the starre.

Beat. What meanes the foole trow?

Mar. Nothing I, but God send every one their hearts desire.

Hero. These gloves the Count sent mee, they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stufte cosin, I cannot smell.

Mar. A maid and stufte! there's goodly catching of colde.

Beat. O God helpe me, God helpe me, how long have you profest apprehension?

Mar. Ever since you left it, doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not scene enough, you should weare it in your cap, by my troth I am sicke.

Mar. Get you some of this distill'd carduus benedictus and lay it to your heart, it is the onely thing for a qualm.

Hero. There thou prickst her with a thissell.

Beat. Benedictus, why benedictus? you have some morall in this benedictus.

Mar. Morall? no by my troth, I have no morall meaning, I meant plaine holy thissell, you may thinke perchance that I thinke you are in love, nay birlady I am not such a foole to thinke what I list, nor I list not to thinke what I can, nor indeed I cannot thinke, if I would thinke my hart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love: yet Benedicke was such another, and now is he become a man, he swore hee would never marry, and yet now in despite of his heart he eates his meat without grudging, and how you may be converted I know not, but me thinkes you looke with your eyes as other women do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps.

Mar. Not a false gallop.

Enter Vrsula.

Vrsu. Madam, with draw, the Prince, the Count, signior Benedicke, Don Iohn, and all the gallants of the towne are come to fetch you to Church.

Hero. Helpe to dresse me good coze, good Meg, good Vrsula.

Enter Leonato, and the Constable, and the Headborough.

Leonato. What would you with me, honest neighbour?

Const. Dog. Mary sir I would have some confidence with you, that decernes you nearly.

Leon. Briefe I pray you, for you see it is a busie time with me.

Const. Dog. Mary this it is sir.

Headb. Yes in truth it is sir.

Leon. What is it my good friends?

Con. Dog. Goodman Verges sir speakes a little of the matter, an old man sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as God helpe I would desire they were, but infaieth honest as the skin betweene his browes.

Head. Yes I thanke God, I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no honeste then I.

Con. Dog. Comparifons are odorous, palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Con. Dog. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poore Dukes Officers, but truly for mine owne part, if I were as tedious as a King, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousnesse on me, ah?

Con. Dog. Yea, and 'twere a thousand times more than 'tis, for I heare as good exclamation on your Worship as of any man in the City, and though I be but a poore man, I am glad to heare it.

Head. And so am I.

Leon. I would faine know what you have to say.

Head. Marry sir our watch to night, excepting your worships preface, have tane a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

Con. Dog. A good old man sir, he will be talking as they say, when the age is in the wit is out, God helpe us, it is a world to see: well said yfaith neighbour Verges, well, God's a good man, and two men ride of horse, one must ride behind, an honest soule yfaith sir, by my troth he is, as ever broke bread, but God is to be worship, all men are not alike, alas good neighbour.

Leon. Indeed neighbour he comes too short of you.

Con. Dog. Gifts that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Con. Dog. One word sir, our watch sir have indeed comprehended two aspitious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination your selfe, and bring it me, I am now in great haste, as may appeare unto you.

Const. It shall be suffigance.

(Exit.)

Leon. Drinke some wine ere you goe: fare you well.

Mess. My Lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. Ile wait upon them, I am ready.

Dogh. Goe good partner, goe get you to Francis Seacoale, bid him bring his pen and inkehome to the Gaole: we are now to examine those men.

Verges. And we must doe it wisely.

Dogh. Wee will spare for no witte I warrant you: heere.

heere's that shall driue some of them to a non-come, on-ly get the learned writer to set downe our excommuni-cation, and meet me at the Iaile.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Prince, Bassard, Leonato, Frier, Claudio, Benedicke, Hero, and Beatrice.

Leo. Come Frier Francis, be brife, onely to the plaine forme of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Fran. You come hither, my Lord, to marry this Lady.

Claudio. No.

Leo. To be married to her, Frier, you come to marrie her.

Frier. Lady, you come hither to be married to this Count.

Hero. I doe.

Frier. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoyned, I charge you on your soules to utter it.

Claudio. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None my Lord.

Frier. Know you any, Count?

Leonato. I dare make his answer, None.

Claudio. O what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do!

Benedicke. How now! interjections? why then, some be of laughing, as ha, ha, he.

Claudio. Stand thee by Frier, father, by your leave, Will you with free and vnconstrained soule Give me this maid your daughter?

Leonato. As freely sonne as God did give her me.

Claudio. And what have I to give you back, whose worth May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

Prince. Nothing, unless you render her againe.

Claudio. Sweet Prince, you learne me noble thankfulness: There Leonato, take her backe againe, Give not this rotten Orenge to your friend, Shee's but the signe and semblance of her honour: Behold how like a maid she blushes heere! O what authority and shew of truth Can cunning sinne cover it selfe withall! Comes not that bloud, as modest evidence, To witnesse simple Vertue? would you not sweare All you that see her, that she were a maide, By these exterior shewes? But she is none: She knowes the heat of a luxurious bed: Her blush is guiltinesse, not modestie.

Leonato. What do you meane, my Lord?

Claudio. Nor to be married, Not knit my soule to an approved wanton.

Leonato. Deere my Lord, if you in your owne prooffe, Have vanquish't the resistance of her youth, And made defeat of her virginity.

(her,

Claudio. I know what you would say: if I have knowne You will say, she did imbrace me as a husband, And so extenuate the forehead sinne: No Leonato, I never tempted her with word too large, But as a brother to his sister, shewed Bashfull sincerity and comely loue.

Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?

Claudio. Out on thee seeming, I will write against it, You seeme to me as Diane in her Orbe, As chaste as is the budde ere it be blowne: But you are more intemperate in your blood, Than Venus, or those pampred animals, That rage in savage sensuality.

Hero. Is my Lord well, that he doth speake so wide?

Leonato. Sweete Prince, why speake not you?

Prince. What should I speake?

I stand dishonour'd that have gone about, To linke my deare friend to a common stale.

Leonato. Are these things spoken, or do I but dreame?

Bassard. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Benedicke. This lookes not like a nuptiall.

Hero. True, O God!

Claudio. Leonato, stand I here?

Is this the Prince? is this the Princes brother?

Is this face Hero's? are our eyes our owne?

Leonato. All this is so, but what of this my Lord?

Claudio. Let me but move one question to your daughter, And by that fatherly and kindly power, That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Leonato. I charge thee do so as thou art my childe.

Hero. O God defend me, how am I beset,

What kinde of catechizing call you this?

Leo. To make you answer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? who can blot that name With any iust reproach?

Claudio. Marry that can Hero,

Hero it selfe can blot out Hero's vertue.

What man was he, talkt with you yesternight, Out at your window betwixt twelve and one? Now if you are a maid answer to this.

Hero. I talkt with no man at that howre my Lord.

Prince. Why then you are no maiden. Leonato, I am sorry you must heare: upon mine honor, My selfe, my brother, and this grieved Count Did see her, heare her, at that howre last night, Talke with a rusliar at her chamber window, Who hath indeed most like a liberrall villaine, Confest the vile encounters they have had A thousand times in secret.

John. Fie, fie, they are not to be named my Lord, Not to be spoken of, There is not chastity enough in language, Without offence to utter them: thus pretty Lady I am sorry for thy much misgovernement.

Claudio. O Hero! what a Hero hadst thou beene. If halfe thy outward graces had beene placed About thy thoughts and counsailes of thy heart? But fare thee well, most foule, most faire, farewell Thou pure impiety, and impious purity, For thee Ie locke up all the gates of Love, And on my eie-lids shall Conjecture hang, To turne all beauty into thoughts of harne, And never shall it more be gracious.

Leo. Hath no mans dagger here a point for me?

Beat. Why how now cousin, wherefore sink you down? Bassard. Come, let vs go: these things come thus to light, Smother her spirits up.

Benedicke. How doth the Lady?

Beat. Dead I thinke, helpe vncle,

Hero, why Hero, Vncle, Signor Benedicke, Frier.

Leo. O Fate! take not away thy heavy hand, Death is the fairest cover for her shame That may be wisht for.

Beat. How

Beat. How now cosin Hero?

Fri. Have comfort Lady.

Leo. Dost thou looke up?

Fri. Yea, wherefore should she not?

Leo. Wherefore? Why doth not every earthly thing
Cry shame upon her? Could she heere denie
The storie that is printed in her blood?
Do not live Hero, do not ope thine eyes:
For did I thinke thou wouldst not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger then thy shames,
My selfe would on the reareward of reproaches
Strike at thy life. Griev'd I, I had but one?
Chid I, for that at frugall Natures frame?
One too much by thee: why had I one?
Why ever was't thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not with charitable hand
Tooke up a beggars issue at my gates,
Who smiered thus, and mir'd with infamie,
I might have said, no part of it is mine:
This shame derives it selfe from unknowne loines,
But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd,
And mine that I was proud on, mine so much,
That I my selfe, was to my selfe not mine:
Valewing of her, why she, O she is false
Into a pit of Inke, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her cleane againe,
And salt too little, which may season give
To her foule tainted flesh.

Beat. Sir, sir, be patient: for my part, I am so attired in wonder, I know not what to say.

Beat. O on my soule my cosin is belied.

Beat. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

Beat. No truly: not, although vntill last night,
I have this twelvemonth bin her bedfellow.

Leon. Confirm'd, confirm'd, O that is stronger made
Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron.
Would the Prince lie, and Claudio would he lie
Who lov'd her so, that speaking of her foulness, Wash'd it with teares? Hence from her, let her die.

Fri. Heare me a little, for I have onely bene silent so long, and given way vnto this course of fortune, by noting of the Lady, I have markt
A thousand blushing apparitions,
To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames,
In Angel whitnesse beare away those blushes,
And in her eie there hath appear'd a fire
To burne the errors that these Princes hold
Against her maiden truth. Call me a foole,
Trust not my reading, nor my obseruations,
Which with experimental teale doth warrant
The tenure of my booke: trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor diuinity,
If this sweet Lady lye not guiltlesse heere,
Vnder some biting error.

Leo. Friar, it cannot be:
Thou seest that all the Grace that she hath left,
Is, that she will not adde to her damnation
A sinne of perjury, she not denies it:
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse,
That which appears in proper nakednesse?

Fri. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of?

Hero. They know that do accuse me, I know none:
If I know more of any man alive
Then that which maiden modestie doth warrant,
Let all my sinnes lacke mercy. O my Father,
Prove you that any man with me convers'd,

At houres unmeet, or that I yesternight
Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death.

Fri. There is some strange misprision in the Prince.

Beat. Two of them have the very bent of honor,
And if their wisdomes be misst in this:
The practise of it lives in John the ballard,
Whose spirits toile in frame of villanies.

Leo. I know not: if they speake but truth of her,
These hands shall teare her: if they wrong her honour,
The proudest of them shall well heare of it.
Time hath not yet so oried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eate up my invention,
Nor Fortune made such havoeke of my meanes,
Nor my bad life rest me so much of friends,
But they shall finde, awak'd in such a kinde,
Both strength of limbe, and policie of minde,
Ability in meanes, and choise of friends,
To quit me of them throughly.

Fri. Pause awhile,

And let my counsell sway you in this case,
Your daughter heere the Princess (left for dead)
Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it, that she is dead indeed:
Maintaine a mourning ostentation,
And on your Families old monument,
Hang mournfull Epitaphes, and do all rites,
That appertaine vnto a buriall.

Leo. What shall become of this? What will this do?

Fri. Marry this well carried, shall on her behalfe,
Change slander to remorse, that is some good,
But not for that dreame I on this strange course,
But on this traile looke for greater birth:
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Vpon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be lamented, pittied, and excus'd
Of every hearer: for it so falls out,
That what we have, we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lack'd and lost,
Why then we racke the value, then we finde
The vertue that possession would not shew us
Whiles it was ours, so will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall heare she dyed upon his words,
Th' Idea of her life shall sweetly creepe
Into his study of imagination.

And every lovely Organ of her life,
Shall come apparel'd in more precious habite:
More moving, delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soule
Than when she liv'd indeed: then shall he mourne,
If ever Love had interest in his Liver,
And wish he had not so accus'd her:
No, though he thought his accusation true:
Let this be so, and doubt not but successe
Will fashion the event in better shape,
Then I can lay it downe in likelihood.
But if all ayme but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the Ladies death,
Will quench the wonder of her infamy.
And if it fort not well, you may conceale her,
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some reclusive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, mindes and injuries:

Beat. Signior Leonato, let the Friar advise you,
And though you know my inwardnesse and love
Is very much vnto the Prince and Claudio,

Yet, by mine honor, I will deale in this,
As secretly and justly, as your soule
Should with your body.

Leo. Being that I flow in greefe,
The smallest twine may leade me.

Fruer. 'Tis well consented, presently away,
For to strange fores, strangely they straine the cure,
Come Lady, die to live, this wedding day
Perhaps is but prolong'd, have patience & endure. Exit.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?

Beat. Yea, and I will weepe a while longer.

Bene. I will not desire that.

Beat. You have no reason, I doe it freely.

Bene. Surely I do beleewe your fair cofin is wrong'd.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of mee that would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to shew such friendship?

Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.

Bene. May a man doe it?

Beat. It is a mans office, but not yours.

Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you, is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not, it were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you, but beleewe me not, and yet I lie not, I confesse nothing, nor
I deny nothing, I am sorry for my cousin.

Bene. By my sword Beatrice thou lov'st me.

Beat. Do not sweare by it and eat it.

Bene. I will sweare by it that you love mee, and I will make him eat it that sayes I love not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Bene. With no sawce that can be devised to it, I protest I love thee.

Beat. Why then God forgive me.

Bene. What offence sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have stayed me in a happy howre, I was about to protest I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart.

Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.

Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. Ha, not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to denie, farewell.

Bene. Tarry sweet Beatrice.

Beat. I am gone, though I am heere, there is no love in you, nay I pray you let me go.

Bene. Beatrice.

Beat. Infaith I will go.

Bene. Wee'll be friends first.

Beat. You dare easier be friends with mee, than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?

Beat. Is a not approved in the height a villaine, that hath slandered, scorned, dishonoured my kinswoman? O that I were a man! what, beare her in hand untill they come to take hands, and then with publike accusation uncovered slander, unmittigated rancour? O God that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Heare me Beatrice.

Beat. Talke with a man out at a window, a proper saying.

Bene. Nay but Beatrice.

Beat. Sweet Hero, she is wrong'd, shee is slandered, she is vndone.

Bene. Bet?

Beat. Princes and Counties I surely a Princely testimony, a goodly Count - Comfect, a sweet Gallant surely, O that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into curtsies, valour into complement, and men are onely turned into tongue, and trim ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that onely tels a lie, and swears it:
I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

Bene. Tarry good Beatrice, by this hand I love thee.

Beat. Vse it for my love some other way then swearing by it.

Bened. Thinke you in your soule the Count Claudio hath wrong'd Hero?

Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soule.

Bene. Enough, I am engagde, I will challenge him; I will kisse your hand, and so leave you: by this hand Clandio shall render me deere account: as you heare of me, so thinke of me: go comfort your coosin, I must say she is dead, and so farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter the Constables, Borachio, and the Towne Clerke in gownes.

Keeper. Is our whole dissembly appeard?

Cowley. O a stoole and cushion for the Sexton.

Sexton. Which be the malefactors?

Andrew. Marry that am I, and my partner.

Cowley. Nay that's certaine, wee have the exhibition to examine.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined, let them come before master Constable.

Kemp. Yea marry, let them come before mee, what is your name friend?

Bor. Borachio.

Kemp. Pray write downe Borachio. Yours sirra.

Con. I am a Gentleman sir, and my name is Conrade.

Kee. Write downe Master gentleman Conrade: maisters, do you serve God: maisters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves, and it will go neere to be thought so shortly, how answer you for your selves?

Con. Marry sir, we say we are none.

Kemp. A marvellous witty fellow I assure you, but I will go about with him: come you hither sirra, a word in your eare sir, I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Bor. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

Kemp. Well, stand aside, fore God they are both in a tale: have you writ drowne that they are none?

Sext. Maister Constable, you go not the way to examine, you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Kemp. Yea marry, that's the esteest way, let the watch come forth: maisters, I charge you in the Princes name, accuse these men.

Watch 1. This man said sir, that Don Iohn the Princes brother was a villaine.

Kemp. Write down, Prince Iohn a villaine: why this is flat perjurie, to call a Princes brother villaine.

Bor. Maister Constable.

Kemp. Pray thee fellow peace, I do not like thy looke, I promise thee.

Sexton. What heard you him say else?

Watch 2. Marry that he had received a thousand Dukates of Don Iohn, for accusing the Lady Hero wrongfully.

Kemp.

Kemp. Flat Burglarie as ever was committed.

Const. Yea by th' masse that it is.

Sexton. What else fellow?

Watch. 1. And that Count Claudio did meane upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Kemp. O villaine! thou wilt be condemn'd into everlasting redemption for this.

Sexton. Whas else?

Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more maisters then you can deny, Prince John is this morning secretly stolne away: Hero was in this manner accus'd, in this very manner refus'd, and upon the griefe of this sodainly died: Maister Constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato, I will goe before, and shew him their examination.

Const. Come, let them be opinion'd.

Sex. Let them be in the hands of Coxcombe.

Kem. Gods my life, where's the Sexton? let him write downe the Princes Officer Coxcombe: come, binde them thou naughty varlet.

Conley. Away, you are an asse, you are an asse.

Kemp. Dost thou not suspect my place? dost thou not suspect my yeeres? O that hee were heere to write mee downe an asse! but maisters, remember that I am an asse: though it be not written down, yet forget not y I am an asse: No thou villaine, y art full of piety as shall be prov'd upon thee by good witnesse, I am a wise fellow, and which is more, an officer, and which is more, a houshoulder, and which is more, as pretty a peece of flesh as any in Messina, and one that knowes the Law, goe to, and a rich fellow enough, go to, and a fellow that hath had losses, and one that hath two gowned, and every thing handsome about him: bring him away; O that I had been writ downe an asse!

Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Leonato and his brother.

Brother. If you goe on thus, you will kill your selfe, And 'tis not wisdom thus to second griefe, Against your selfe.

Leon. I pray thee cease thy counsaile, Which falls into mine eares as profitlesse, As water in a sieve: give not me counsaile, Nor let no comfort els delight mine eare, But such a one whose wrongs doth sute with mine. Bring me a father that so lov'd his childe, Whose joy of her is over-whelmed like mine. And bid him speake of patience, Measure his woe the length and bredth of mine, And let it answere every straine for straine, As thus for thus, and such a griefe for such, In every lincament, branch, shape, and forme: If such a one will smile and stroke his beard, And sorrow, wagge, crie hem, when he should grone, Patch griefe with proverbs, make misfortune drunke, With-candle-wasters: bring him yet to me, And I of him will gather patience: But there is no such man, for brother, men Can counsaile, and speake comfort to that griefe, Which they themselves not feelee, but tasting it, Their counsaile turnes to passion, which before,

Would give preceptiall medicine to rage, Fetter strong madnesse in a silken thred, Charme ache with ayre, and agony with words. No, no, 'tis all mens office, to speake patience To those that wring vnder the load of sorrow:

But no mans vertue nor sufficiencie

To be so morall, when he shall endure

The like himselfe: therefore give me no counsaile,

My griefs cry lowder then advertisement.

Broth. Therein do men from children nothing differ.

Leo. I pray thee peace, I will be flesh and bloud,

For there was never yet Philosopher,

That could endure the tooth-ake patiently,

How ever they have writ the stile of gods,

And made a push at chance and sufferance.

Broth. Yet bend not all the harme upon your selfe,

Make those that doe offend you, suffer too.

Leon. There thou speak'st reason, nay I will doe so,

My foule doth tell me, Hero is belied,

And that shall Claudio know, so shall the Prince,

And all of them that thus dishonour her.

Enter Prince and Claudio.

Broth. Here comes the Prince and Claudio hastily.

Prin. Good den, good den.

Clau. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Heare you my Lords?

Prin. We have some haste Leonato.

Leo. Some haste my Lord! well, fare you well my Lord, Are you so hasty now? well, all is one.

Prin. Nay, do not quarrell with us, good old man.

Broth. If he could right himselfe with quarrelling, Some of us would ly low.

Clau. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry thou dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou: Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword, I feare thee not.

Clau. Marry beshrew my hand, If it should give your age such cause of feare, Infaith my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leo. Tush, tush, man, never feere and jest at me,

I speake not like a dotard, nor a foole,

As under priviledge of age to bragge,

What I have done being yong, or what would doe,

Were I not old, know Claudio to thy head,

Thou hast so wrong'd my innocent childe and me,

That I am forc'd to lay my reverence by,

And with grey haire and bruise of many daies,

Doe challenge thee to triall of a man,

I say thou hast belied mine innocent childe.

Thy slander hath gonethrough and through her heart;

And she lies buried with her ancestors:

O in a tombe where never scandall slept,

Save this of hers, fram'd by thy villanie.

Clau. My villany?

Leon. Thine Claudio, thine I say.

Prin. You say not right old man.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord,

He prove it on his body if he dare,

Despight his nice fence, and his active practise,

His Maie of youth, and bloome of lustihood.

Clau. Away, I will not have to do with you.

Leo. Canst thou so daffe me? thou hast kild my child, If thou kilst me boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Bro. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed, But that's no matter, let him kill one first:

Win

Win me and weare me, let him answere me,
Come follow me boy, come sir boy, come follow me
Sir boy, ile whip you from your foyning fence,
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother.

Bro. Content your selfe, God knows I lov'd my neete;
And she is dead, slander'd to death by villaines,
That dare as well answer a man indeed,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue.
Boyes, apes, braggarts, lackes, milke-sops.

Leon. Brother Anthony.

Eroi. Hold you content, what man? I know them, yea
And what they weigh, even to the vtmost scruple,
Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mongring boyes,
That lye, and cog, and flout, deprave, and slander,
Goe antiquely and show outward hidiousnesse,
And speake of halfe a dozen dang'rous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst.
And this is all.

Leon. But brother Anthony.

Ant. Come, 'tis no matter,

Do not you meddle, let me deale in this.

Pri. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience,
My heart is fory for your daughters death:
But on my honour she was charg'd with nothing
But was true, and very full of prooffe.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord.

Prin. I will not heare you.

Enter Benedicke.

Leo. No! come brother, away, I will be heard.

Exeunt ambo.

Bro. And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

Prin. See, see, here comes the man we went to seeke.

Clau. Now signior, what newes?

Ben. Good day my Lord:

Prin. Welcome signior; you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Clau. Wee had like to have had our two noses snap off with two old men without teeth.

Prin. Leonato and his brother, what think'st thou? had wee fought, I doubt we should have beene too yong for them.

Ben. In a false quarrell there is no true valour, I came to seeke you both.

Clau. We have beene up and downe to seeke thee, for we are high prooffe melancholly, and would faine have it beaten away, wilt thou use thy wit?

Ben. It is in my scabberd, shall I draw it?

Prin. Doe'st thou weare thy wit by thy side?

Clau. Never any did so, though very many have beene beside their wit, I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels, draw to pleasure us.

Prin. As I am an honest man he lookes pale, art thou sicke, or angry?

Clau. What! courage man: what though care kil'd a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Ben. Sir, I shall meete your wit in the careere, and you charge it against me, I pray you chuse another subject.

Clau. Nay then give him another staffe, this last was broke crosse.

Prin. By this light, he changes more and more, I think he be angry indeed.

Clau. If he be, he knowes how to turne his girdle.

Ben. Shall I speake a word in your care?

Clau. God blesse me from a challenge.

Ben. You are a villaine, I jest not, I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare:
do me right, or I will protest your cowardise: you have kill'd a sweete Lady; and her death shall fall heavy on you, let me heare from you.

Clau. Well, I will meete you, so I may have good cheare.

Prin. What, a feast?

Clau. I faith I thanke him, he hath bid me to a calves head and a Capon, the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught, shall I not finde a woodcocke too?

Ben. Sir, your wit ambles well, it goes easily.

Prin. Ile tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit the other day: I said thou hadst a fine wit: true saies she, a fine little one: no said I, a great wit: right saies shee, a great grosse one: nay said I, a good wit: just said she, it hurts no body: nay said I, the gentleman is wise: certain said she, a wise gentleman: nay said I, he hath the tongues; that I beleve said shee, for hee swore a thing to me on munday night, which he forswore on tuesday morning:
there's a double touge; there's two tongues: thus did shee an howre together trans-shape thy particular ver-tues, yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.

Clau. For the which she wept heartily, and said shee car'd not.

Prin. Yea that she did, but yet for all that, and if shee did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly, the old mans daughter told us all.

Clau. All, all, and moreover, God saw him when hee was hid in the garden.

Prin. But when shall we set the savage Bulls hornes on the sensible Benedicke's head?

Clau. Yea and text vnder-neath, heere dwells Benedicke the married man.

Ben. Fare you well, Boy, you know my minde, I will leave you now to your gossip-like humor, you breake jests as braggards do their blades, which God be thanked hurt not: my Lord, for your many courtesies I thank you, I must discontinue your company, your brother the Bastard is fled from Messina: you have among you, kill'd a sweete and innocent Lady: for my Lord Lacke-beard there, he and I shall meete, and till then peace be with him.

Prin. He is in earnest.

Clau. In most profound earnest, and Ile warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

Prin. And hath challeng'd thee.

Clau. Most sincerely.

Prin. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit.

Enter Constable, Conrade, and Borachio.

Clau. He is then a Giant to an Ape, but then is an Ape a Doctor to such a man.

Prin. But soft you, let me see, plucke up my heart, and be sad, did he not say my brother was fled?

Const. Come you sir, if justice cannot tame you, shee shall ne're weigh more reasons in her ballance, nay, and you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be lookt to.

Prin. How now, two of my brothers men bound? Bo-rachio one,

Clau. Harken after their offence my Lord.

Prin. Officers, what offence have these men done:

Con. Martie

Const. Marrie fir, they have committed false report, moreover they have spoken untruths, secondarily they are slanders, sixt and lastly, they have belyed a Ladie, thirdly, they have verified unjust things, and to conclude they are lying knaves.

Prin. First I aske thee what they have done, thirdly I aske thee what's their offence, sixt and lastly why they are committed, and to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

Claus. Rightly reasoned, and in his owne division, and by my troth there's one meaning well suted.

Prin. Whom have you offended maisters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned Constable is too cunning to be vnderstood, what's your offence?

Bor. Sweete Prince, let me go no farther to mine answer: do you heare me, and let this Count kill mee: I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wisdomes could not discover, these shallow fooles have brought to light, who in the night overheard me confessing to this man, how Don Iohn your brother incensed me to slander the Lady Hero, how you were brought into the Orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Heroes garments, how you disgrac'd her when you should marrie her: my villanie they have upon record, which I had rather seale with my death, then repeate over to my shame: the Lady is dead upon mine and my maisters false accusation: and briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villaine.

Prin. Runs not this speech like yron through your bloud?

Claus. I have drunke poison whiles he vtter'd it.

Prin. But did my Brother set thee on to this?

Bor. Yea, and paid me rich for the practise of it.

Prin. He is compos'd and fram'd of treachery.

And fled he is upon this villany.

Claus. Sweet Hero, now thy image doth appeare In the rare semblance that I lov'd it first.

Const. Come, bring away the plaintiffes, by this time our Sexton hath reformed Signior Leonato of the matter: and maisters, do not forget to specifie when time & place shall serve, that I am an Assie.

Con. 2. Here, here comes maister Signior Leonato, and the Sexton too.

Enter Leonato.

Leon. Which is the villaine? let me see his eyes, That when I note another man like him, I may avoide him: which of these is he?

Bor. If you woul know your wronger, looke on me.

Leon. Art thou art thou the slave that with thy breath hast kild mine innocent childe?

Bor. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so villaine, thou beliefst thy selfe, Here stand a paire of honourable men, A third is fled that had a hand in it: I thanke you Princes for my daughters death, Record it with your high and worthy deedes, 'Twas bravely done; if you bethinke you of it.

Claus. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speake, choose your revenge your selfe, Impose me to what penance your invention Can lay upon my sinne, yet sinn'd I not; But in mistaking.

Prin. By my soule nor I, And yet to satisfie this good old man,

I would bend vnder any heavy waight, That heele enjoyne me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you daughter live, That were impossible, but I praie you both, Possesse the people in Messina here, How innocent she died, and if your love Can labour aught in sad invention, Hang her an epitaph upon her toomb, And sing it to her bones, sing it to night: To morrow morning come you to my house, And since you could not be my sonne in law, Be yet my Nephew: my brother hath a daughter, Almost the copie of my childe that's dead, And she alone is heire to both of us, Give her the right you should have giv'n her cofin, And so dies my revenge.

Claus. O noble fir! Your overkindnesse doth wring teares from me, I do embrace your offer, and dispose For henceforth of poore Claudio.

Leon. To morrow then I will expect your comming, To night I take my leave: this naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret, Who I beleewe was packt in all this wrong, Hired to it by your brother.

Bor. No by my soule she was not, Nor knew not what she did when she spoke to me, But alwaies hath bin just and vertuous, In any thing that I do know by her.

Const. Moroever fir, which indeed is not under white and blacke, this plaintiffe here, the offendour did call mee assie, I beseech you let it be remembered in his punishment, and also the watch heard them talke of one Deformed, they say he weares a key in his eare and a lock hanging by it, and borrowes mony in Gods name, the which he hath us'd so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-harted and will lend nothing for Gods sake: praie you examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thanke thee for thy care and honest paines.

Const. Your worship speakes like a most thankfull & reverend youth, and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy paines.

Const. God save the foundation.

Leon. Goe, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thanke thee.

Const. I leave an arrant knave with your worship, which I beseech your worship to correct your selfe, for the example of others: God keepe your worshippe, I wish your worship well, God restore you to health, I humbly give you leave to depart, and if a merrie meeting may bee wisht, God prohibite it: come neighbour.

Leon. Vntill to morrow morning, Lords, farewell.

Exeunt.

Bor. Farewell my Lords, wee looke for you to morrow.

Prin. We will not faile.

Claus. To night ile mourne with Hero.

Leon. Bring you these fellows on, wee'l talke with Margaret, how her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow.

Exeunt.

Enter Benedicke and Margaret.

Ben. Pray thee sweete Mistris Margaret, deserve well at my hands, by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Mar. Will

Mar. Will you then writte me a Sonnet in praise of my beautie?

Bene. In so high a stile Margaret, that no man living shall come over it, for in most comely truth thou deseruest it.

Mar. To have no man come over me, why; shall I alwaies keepe below staires?

Bene. Thy wit is as quicke as the grey-hounds mouth, it catches.

Mar. And yours, as blunt as the Fencers foiles, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit Margaret, it will not hurt a woman: and so I pray thee call Beatrice, I giue thee the bucklers.

Mar. Give us the swords, wee have bucklers of our owne.

Bene. If you use them Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice, and they are dangerous weapons for Maides.

Mar. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I thinke hath legges.

Exit Margaret.

Bene. And therefore will come. The god of love that sits above, and knowes me, and knowes me, how pittifull I deserue. I meane in singeing, but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first imployer of pandars, and a whole booke full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose name yet runne smoothly in the even rode of a bianke verse, why they were never so truly turned over as my poore selfe in love: marry I cannot shew it rime, I have tried, I can finde out no rime to Ladie but badie an innocents rime: for scorne, horne, a hard rime: for schoole foole, a babbling rime: very ominous endings, no, I was not borne vnder a riming Plannet, for I cannot woode in festiual tearmes:

Enter Beatrice.

Sweete Beatrice would'st thou come when I cal'd thee?

Beat. Yea Signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O stay but till then.

Beat. Then, is spoken: fare you well now, and yet ere I go, let me go with that I came, which is, with knowing what hath past betweene you and Claudio:

Bene. Onely foule words, and thereupon I will kisse thee.

Beat. Foule words is but foule wind, and foule winde is but foule breath, and foule breath is noisome, therefore I will depart unkist.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right fence, so forcible is thy wit, but I must tell thee plainly, Claudio vndergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly heare from him, or I will subscribe him a coward, and I pray thee now tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together, which maintain'd so politique a state of euill, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them: but for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithite, I do suffer love indeede, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spight of your heart I thinke, alas poore heart, if you spight it for my sake, I will spight it for yours, for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bened. Thou and I are too wise to wooe peaceably.

Beat. It appeares not in this confession, there's not one wife man among twenty that will praise himselfe.

Bene. An old, an old instance Beatrice, that liv'd in the time of good neighbours, if a man doe not erect in this age his owne tombe ere he dies, hee shall live no longer in monuments, then the Bels ring, and the Widow weepes.

Beat. And how long is that thinke you?

Bene. Question, why an hower in clamour and a quarter in rhewme, therefore is it most expedient for the wife, if Don worne (his conscience) finde no impediment to the contrary, to be the trumpet of his owne vertues, as I am to my selfe so much for praising my selfe, who I my selfe will beare witness is praise worthy, and now tell me how doth your cosin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Enter Versula.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend, there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your Vncle, yonders old coile at home, it is proved my Lady Hero hath bin falsely accus'd, the Prince and Claudio mightily abus'd, and Don Iohn is the author of all, who is fled and gone: will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go heare this newes Signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes: and moreover, I will goe with thee to thy Vncles.

Exeunt.

Enter Claudio, Prince, and three or foure with Tapers.

Claudio. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Lord. It is my Lord. Epitaph.

Done to death by slanderous tongues,

Was the Hero that here lies:

Death in gnerdon of her wrongs,

Gives her fame which never dies:

So the life that died with shame,

Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tombe,

Praising her when I am done.

Claudio. Now musick sound and sing your solemne hymne.

Song.

Pardon goddess of the night,

Those that slew thy virgin knight,

For the which with songs of woe,

Round about her tombe they go:

Midnight assist our moane, helpe vs to sigh and grone.

Heauily, heauily.

Graves yawne and yeelde your dead,

Till death be vntered,

Heavenly, heavenly.

(this right.

Lo. Now unto thy bones good night, yeerely will I do

Prin. Good morrow maisters, put your Torches out, The wolves have preied, and looke, the gentle day Before the wheelles of Phæbus, round about Dapples the drowfie East with spots of grey: Thanks to you all, and leave us, fare you well.

Claudio. Good morrow maisters, each his severall way.

Prin. Come let us hence, and put on other weedes, And then to Leonatoes we will goe.

Claudio. And Hymen now with luckier issue speed;

Then

Then this for whom we rendred up this woe. Exeunt.

Enter Leonato, Bene. Marg. Ursula, old man, Frier, Hero.

Frier. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leo. So are the Prince and Claudio who accus'd her,
Vpon the errour that you heard debated.
But Margaret was in some fault for this;
Although against her will as it appeares,
In the true course of all the question.

Old. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Ben. And so am I, being else by faith entorc'd,
To call yong Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leo. Well daughter, and yong Gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a Chamber by your selves,
And when I send for you, come hither mask'd:
The Prince and Claudio promis'd by this houre
To visit me, you know your office Brother,
You must be father to your Brothers daughter,
And give her to yong Claudio. Exeunt Ladies.

Old. Which I will doe with confirm'd countenance.

Ben. Frier, I must intreat your paines, I thinke.

Frier. To doe what Signior?

Ben. To binde me, or undoe me, one of them:
Signior Leonato, truth it is good Signior,
Your Neece regards me with an eye of favour.

Old. That eye my daughter lent her, 'tis most true.

Ben. And I doe with an eye of love requite her.

Leo. The sight whereof I thinke you had from me,
From Claudio and the Prince, but what's your will?

Ben. Your answer sir is Enigmaticall,
But for my will, my will is, your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoyn'd,
I'th state of honourable marriage,
In which good Frier I shall desire your helpe.

Leo. My heart is with your liking.

Frier. And my helpe.

Enter Prince and Claudio with attendants.

Prin. Good morrow to this faire assembly.

Leo. Good morrow Prince, good morrow Claudio,
We here attend you, are you yet determin'd,
Today to marry with my brothers daughter?

Cla. He hold my minde were she an Ethiop.

Leo. Call her forth brother, heres the Frier ready.

Prin. Good morrow Benedicke, why what's the matter?
That you have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storme, and ciowdiness.

Cla. I thinke he thinkes upon the savage bull:
Tush, feare not man, we'll tip thy hornes with gold,
And all Europa shall reioyce at thee,
As once Europa did at lusty Iove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.

Ben. Bull Iove sir, had an amiable low,
And some such strange bull leapt your fathers Cow,
A got a Calfe in that same noble feat,
Much like to you, for you have just his bleat.

Enter brother, Hero, Beatrice, Margaret, Ursula.

Cla. For this I owe you: here comes other recknings.
Which is the Lady I must seize upon?

Leo. This same is she, and I doe give you her.

Cla. Why then she's mine, sweet let me see your face.

Leon. No that you shall not, till you take her hand,
Before this Frier, and sweare to marry her.

Cla. Give me your hand before this holy Frier,
I am your husband if you like of me.

Hero. And when I liv'd I was your other wife,
And when you lov'd, you were my other husband.

Cla. Another Hero?

Hero. Nothing certainer.

One Hero died, but I doe live,
And surely as I live, I am a maid.

Prin. The former Hero, Hero that is dead.

Leon. Shee died my Lord, but whiles her slander liu'd.

Frier. All this amazement can I qualifie,
When after that the holy rites are ended,
He tell you largely of faire Hero's death:
Meane time let wonder seeme to mi tar,
And to the chappell let us presently.

Ben. Soft and faire Frier, which is Beatrice?

Beat. I answer to that name, what is your will?

Ben. Doe not you love me?

Beat. Why no, no more then reason.

Ben. Why then your Vncle, and the Prince, & Claudio, have beene deceived, they swore you did.

Beat. Doe not you love me?

Ben. Troth no, no more then reason.

Beat. Why then my Cousin Margaret and Ursula
Are much deceiu'd, for they did sweare you did.

Ben. They swore you were almost sicke for me.

Beat. They swore you were wel-nye dead for me.

Ben. 'Tis no matter, then you doe not love me?

Beat. No truly, but in friendly recompence.

Leon. Come Colin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

Cla. And he be sworne upon't that he loves her,
For heres a paper writen in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his owne pure braine,
Fashioned to Beatrice.

Hero. And heeres another,
Writ in my cosins hand, stolne from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedicke.

Ben. A miracle, here's our owne hands against our hearts: come I will have thee, but by this light I take thee for pittie.

Beat. I would not denie you, but by this good day, I yeeld upon great perswasion, and partly to save your life, for I was told, you were in a consumption.

Leon. Peace I will stop your mouth.

Prin. How dost thou Benedicke the married man?

Ben. He tell thee what Prince: a Colledge of wittecrackers cannot flout mee out of my humour, dost thou thinke I care for a Satyre or an Epigram? no, if a man will be beaten with braines, a shall weare nothing handsome about him: in briefe, since I do purpose to marry, I will thinke nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it: and therefore never flout at me, for I have said against it: for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion: for thy part Claudio, I did thinke to have beaten thee, but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live un-bruis'd, and love my cosin.

Cla. I had well hop'd I wouldst have denied Beatrice, &
I might have cudgel'd thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer, which out of question thou wilt be, if my Cousin do not looke exceeding narrowly to thee.

Ben. Come, come, we are friends, let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives heeles.

Leon. Wee'll have dancing afterwards.

Ben. First, of my word, therefore play musicke. Prince, thou art sad, get thee a wife, get thee a wife, there is no staffe more reverend then one tipst with horn. Enter Mes.

Messen. My Lord, your brother Iohn is tane in flight,
And brought with armed men backe to Messina.

Ben. Thinke not on him till to morrow, he devise thee brave punishments for him: strike up Pipers. Dance.

FINIS.

Loves Labour's lost.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter Ferdinand King of Navarre, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaine.

Ferdinand.

Et Fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live registred upon our brazen Tombes,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death :
When spight of cormorant devouring Time,
Th'endevour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall bate his Sythes keene edge,
And make us heires of all eternitie.
Therefore brave Conquerors (for so you are)
That warre against your owne affections,
And the huge Army of the worlds desires ;
Our late Edict shall strongly stand in force,
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world.
Our Court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living Art.
You three, Biron, Dumaine, and Longaville,
Have sworne for three yeeres terme to live with me,
My fellow Schollers, and to keepe those statutes
That are recorded in this scedule here.
Your oathes are past, and now subscribe your names :
That his owne hand may strike his honour downe,
That violates the smallest branch herein :
If you are arm'd to doe, as sworne to doe,
Subscribe to your deepe oathes, and keepe them to.

Long. I am resolv'd, 'tis but a three yeeres fast :
The minde shall banquet, though the body pine,
Fat paunches have leane pates : and dainty bits,
Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits.

Dumaine. My loving Lord, Dumaine is mortified,
The grosser manner of these worlds delights,
He throwes upon the grosse worlds baser slaves :
To love, to wealth, to pompe, I pine and die,
With all these living in Philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over,
So much (deare Liege) I have already sworne,
That is, to live and study here three yeeres.
But there are other strict observances :
As not to see a woman in that terme,
Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
And one day in a weeke to touch no foode :
And but one meale on every day beside :
The which I hope is not enrolled there.
And then to sleepe but three houres in the night,
And not be seene to winke of all the day.
When I was wont to thinke no harme all night,
And make a darke night too of halfe the day :

Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
O, these are barren taskes, too hard to keepe,
Not to see Ladies, study, fast, not sleepe.

Ferd. Your oath is past to passe away from these.

Biron. Let me say no my Liege, and if you please,
I onely swore to study with your Grace,
And stay here in your Court for three yeeres space.

Long. You swore to that Biron, and to the rest.

Bir. By yea and nay sir, then I swore in jest.

What is the end of study, let me know ?

Ferd. Why that to know which else wee should not know. (sense.)

Bir. Things hid and bard (you meane) from common

Ferd. I, that is studies god-like recompence.

Bir. Come on then, I will sweare to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know :
As thus, to study where I well may dine,
When I to fast expressly am forbid.

Or study where to meet some Mistresse fine,
When Mistresses from common sense are hid.
Or having sworne too hard a keeping oath,
Study to breake it, and not breake my troth.
If studies gaine be thus, and this be so,
Study knowes that which yet it doth not know,
Sweare me to this, and I will ne're say no.

Ferd. These be the stops that hinder study quite,
And traîne our intellects to vaine delight.

Bir. Why ? all delights are vaine, and that most vaine,
Which with paine purchas'd, doth inherit paine,
As painfully to pore upon a booke,
To seeke the light of truth, while truth the while
Doth falsly blinde the eye-sight of his looke :
Light seeking light, doth light beguile :
So ere you find where light in darknesse lies,
Your light growes darke by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye,
Who dazling so, that eye shall be his heed,
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study is like the heavens glorious Sunne,
That will not be deepe search'd with sawcy looks :
Small have continuall plodders ever wonne,
Save base authoritie from others Bookes.
These earthly Godfathers of heavens lights,
That give a name to every fixed starre,
Have no more profit of their shining nights,
Then those that walke, and wot not what they are,
Too much to know, is to know nought but fame :
And every Godfather can give a name.

Ferd. How well hee's read, to reason against reading.

Dum.

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding.

Lon. He weedes the Corne, and still lets grow the weeding.

Bir. The Spring is neare when Greene Geese are a breeding.

Dum. How followest that ?

Bir. Fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

Bir. Something then in rime.

Ferd. Biron is like an envious sneaping Frost,
That bites the first borne Infants of the Spring.

Bir. Well, say I am, why should proud Summer boast,
Before the Birds have any cause to sing ?
Why should I joy in any abortive birth ?

At Christmas I no more desire a Rose,
Than with a Snow in Mayes new fangled shewes :
But like of each thing that in season growes.

So you to study now it is too late,
That were to clymbe ore the house to unlocke the gate.

Fer. Well, sit you out : goe home Biron : adue.

Bir. No my good Lord, I have sworn to stay with you.
And though I have for barbarisme spoke more,

Then for that Angell knowledge you can say,
Yet confident Ile keepe what I have swore,
And bide the pennance of each three yeeres day.

Give me the Paper let me reade the same,
And to the strict't decrees Ile write my name.

Fer. How well this yeelding rescues thee from shame.

Bir. Item. That no woman shall come within a mile of my Court.

Hath this been proclaimed ?

Long. Foure dayes agoe.

Bir. Let's see the penalty.
On paine of loosing her tongue.
Who devis'd this penalty ?

Lon. Marry that did I.

Bir. Sweet Lord, and why ?

Lon. To fright them hence with that dread penalty,
A dangerous Law against gentility.

Item, If any man be seene to talke with a woman within the tearme of three yeares, hee shall endure such publique shame as the rest of the Court shall possibly devise.

Bir. This Article my Liege your selfe must breake,
For well you know here comes in Embassie
The French Kings daughter, with your selfe to speake :

A Maide of Grace and compleat Majesty,
About surrender up of Aquitaine :

To her decrepit, sicke, and bed-rid Father.

Therefore this Article is made in vaine,
Or vainely comes the admired Princeesse hither.

Fer. What say you Lords ?

Why, this was quite forgot.

Bir. So study evermore is overshot,
While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to doe the thing it should :

And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won as Townes with fire, so won, so lost.

Fer. We must of force dispence with this Decree;
She must lie here on meere necessity.

Bir. Necessity will make us all forsworne
Three thousand times within this three yeares space :

For every man with his affects is borne,
Not by might mastered, but by speciall grace.

If I breake faith, this word shall breake for me,
I am forsworne on meere necessity.

So to the Lawes at large I write my name,
And he that breakes them in the least degree,
Stands in attainer of eternall shame.

Suggestions are to others as to me :

But I beleeve although I seeme so loth,
I am the last that will last keepe his oath.

But is there no quicke recreation granted ?

Fer. I that there is, our Court you know is haunted

With a conceited Travailer of Spaine,

A man in all the world new fashion planted,

That hath a mint of phrases in his braine :

One, whom the musicke of his owne vaine tongue,

Doth ravish like enchanting harmony :

A man of complements, whom right and wrong

Have chose as vmpire of their mutinie.

This childe of fancie that Armado hight,

For interim to our studies shall relate,

In high-borne words the worth of many a Knight ;

From tawny Spaine lost in the worlds debate.

How you delight my Lords, I know not I,

But I protest I love to heare him lie,

And I will use him for my Minstrelsie.

Bir. Armado is a most illustrious wight,

A man of fire, new words, Fashions owne Knight.

Lon. Costard the swaine and he shall be our sport,
And so to studie, three yeeres is but short.

Enter a Constable with Costard with a Letter.

Const. Which is the Dukes owne person.

Bir. This fellow, What would'st ?

Con. I my selfe reprehend his owne person, for I am his Graces Tharborough : But I would see his owne person in flesh and bloud.

Bir. This is he.

Con. Signior Arme, Arme commends you :

There's villany abroad, this letter will tell you more.

Clew. Sir, the Contempts thereof are as touching
mee.

Fer. A Letter from the magnificent Armado.

Bir. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Lon. A high hope for a low heaven, God grant us patience.

Bir. To heare, or forbear hearing.

Lon. To heare meekely sir, and to laugh moderately, or to forbear both.

Bir. Well sir, be it as the stile shall give us cause to clime in the merrinesse.

Clew. The matter is to me sir, as concerning Jaquessita.
The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Bir. In what manner ?

Clew. In manner and forme following sir all those three.
I was seene with her in the Mannor house, sitting with her upon the Forme, and taken following her into the Parke : which put together, is in manner and forme following. Now sir for the Manner ; Is the manner of a man to speake to a Woman, for the Forme in some forme.

Bir. For the following sir.

Clew. As it shall follow in my correction, and God defend the right.

Fer. Will you heare this Letter with attention ?

Bir. As we would heare an Oracle.

Clew. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.

Ferdinand.

Great Deputy, the Welkins Vicegerent, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soules earthes God, and bodies fostering Patrone:

Cof. Not a word of Costard yet.

Ferd. So it is.

Cof. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is in telling true: but so.

Ferd. Peace,

Clo. Be to me, and every man that dares not fight.

Ferd. No words,

Clo. Of other mens secrets I beseech you.

Ferd. So it is, besieged with sable coloured melancholly, I did commend the blacke oppressing humour to the most wholesome Physicke of thy health giving ayre: And as I am a Gentleman, betooke my selfe to the like: the time When? about the sixt houre, When Beasts most graze, Birds best pecke, and men sit downe to that nourishment which is called Supper: So much for the time When. Now for the ground Which? which I meane I walke upon, it is ycliped, Thy Parke. Then for the place where I where I meane I did encounter that obiect and most p. eposterous event that draweth from my snow white Ven the Ebon-coloured Inke, which beere thou viewest, beholdest, surveyest or seest. But to the place Where: It standeth North North-East and by East from the West corner of thy curious kvotted Garden; There did I see that low spited Swaine, that base Minnow of thy my th, (Clo. Me?) that unlettered small-knowing soule, (Clo. Me?) that shallow vassal (Clo. Still M.?) which as I remember, hight Costard, (Clo. O me) soried and comforted contrary to thy established proclaimed Edict and Continent Canon: Which with, O with, but with this I passion to say wherewith:

Clo. With a Wench.

Ferd. With a childe of our Grandmother Eve, a female; or for thy more understanding a woman: him, i (as my ever esteemed dutie prickes me on) have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment by the sweet Graces Officer Anthony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation.

Anth. Me, an't shall please you? I am Anthony Dull.

Ferd. For Iaquenetta (so is the weaker vessell called) which I apprehended with the aforesaid Swain, I keep her as a vessell of thy Lawes fury and shall at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to triall. Thine in all complements of devoted and heart-burning heat of dutie.

Don Adriana de Armado.

Bir. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.

Ferd. I the best for the worst. But sirra, What say you to this?

Clo. Sir I confesse the Wench.

Fer. Did you heare the Proclamation?

Clo. I doe confesse much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

Ferd. It was proclaimed a yeeres imprisonment to be taken with a Wench.

Clo. It was taken with none sir, I wastaken with a Damofell.

Ferd. Well, it was proclaimed Damofell.

Clo. This was no Damofell neither sir, shee was a Virgin.

Ferd. It is so varied too, for it was proclaimed Virgin.

Clo. If it were, I deny her Virginitie: I was taken with a Maide.

Fer. This Maide will not serve your turne sir.

Clo. This Maide will serve my turne sir.

Fer. Sir I will pronounce your sentence: You shall fast a Weeke with Branne and Water.

Clo. I had rather pray a Moneth with Mutton and Porridge.

Ferd. And Don Armado shall be your Keeper.

My Lord Biron, see him deliver'd ore,

And goe we Lords to put in practice that,

Which each to other hath so strongly sworne. Exeunt.

Bir. Ile lay my head to any good mans H t,

These oathes and Lawes will prove an idle scorne.

Sirra, come on.

Clo. I suffer for the truth sir: for true it is, I was taken with Iaquenetta, and Iaquenetta is a true Girle, and therefore welcome the sowre cup of prosperity, affliction may one day smile againe, and untill then sit downe sorrow. Exit.

Enter Armado a Braggart, and Moth his Page.

Brag. Boy, What signe is it when a man of great spirit grows melancholly?

Boy. A great signe sir, that he will looke sad.

Brag. Why? sadnesse is one and the selfe-same thing deare Impe.

Boy. No, no, O Lord sir no.

Brag. How canst thou part sadnesse and melancholly, my tender Iuvenall?

Boy. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough Signior.

Brag. Why tough Signior? Why tough signior?

Boy. Why tender Iuvenall? Why tender Iuvenall?

Boy. I spoke it tender Iuvenall, as a congruent epitheton, appertaining to thy yong dayes, which we may nominate tender.

Boy. And I tough Signior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Brag. Pretty and apt.

Boy. How meane you sir, I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Brag. Thou pretty, because little.

Boy. Little pretty, because little: wherefore apt?

Brag. And therefore apt, because quicke.

Boy. Speake you this in my praise Master?

Brag. In thy condigne praise.

Boy. I will praise an Eele with the same praise.

Brag. What? that an Eele is ingenuous.

Boy. That an Eele is quicke.

Brag. I doe say thou art quicke in answers. Thou heat'st my blood.

Boy. I am answer'd sir.

Brag. I love not to be crost.

Boy. He speaks the clean contrary, crosses love not him.

Br. I have promis'd to study iij yeeres with the Duke.

Boy. You may doe it in an houre sir.

Brag. Impossible.

Boy. How many is one thrice told?

Brag. I am ill at reckning, it fits the spirit of a Tapster.

Boy. You are a Gentleman and a Gamester sir.

Brag. I confesse both, they are both the varnish of a compleat man.

Boy. Then I am sure you know how much the grosse summe of deul-ase amounts to.

Brag. It doth amount to one more then two.

Boy. Which the base vulgar call three. Br. True.

Boy. Why sir is this such a peece of study? Now here's three studied, ere you'll thrice winke, and how easie it is to put yeares to the word three, and study three yeeres in two words, the dancing horse will tell you

Brag. A

Brag. A most fine figure.

Boy. To Prove you a Cypher.

Brag. I will hereupon confesse I am in love: and as it is bate for a Souldier to love; so am I in love with a base Wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection, would deliver mee from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French Courtier for a new devis'd curtesie. I thinke scorne to sigh, meethinkes I should out-swear Cupid. Comfort me Boy, What great men have beene in love?

Boy. Hercules, Master.

Brag. Most sweet Hercules: more authority deare Boy, name more; and sweet my childe let them bee men of good repute and carriage.

Boy. Sampson, Master, he was a man of good carriage, great carriage: for hee carried the Towne-gates on his backe like a Porter: and he was in love.

Brag. O well-knit Sampson, strong joynted Sampson; I doe excell thee in my Rapier, as much as thou didst mee in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Sampsons Love my deare Moth?

Boy. A woman, Master.

Brag. Of what complexion?

Boy. Of all the foure, or the three, or the two, or one of the foure.

Brag. Tell me precisely of what Complexion?

Boy. Of the Sea-water Greene fir.

Brag. Is that one of the foure complexions?

Boy. As I have read fir, and the best of them too.

Brag. Greene indeed is the colour of Lovers: but to have a Love of that colour, me thinkes Sampson had small reason for it. He surely affected her for her wit.

Boy. It was so fir, for she had a greene wit.

Brag. My Love is most immaculate white and red.

Boy. Most immaculate thoughts Master, are mask'd under such colours.

Brag. Define, define, well educated infant.

Boy. My fathers witte, and my mothers tongue assist mee.

Brag. Sweet invocation of a childe, most pretty and pathetically.

Boy. If she be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne're be knowne:
For blushing cheekes by faults are bred,
And feares by pale white showne:
Then if she feare, or be to blame,
By this you shall not know,
For still her cheekes possesse the same,
Which native she doth owe:

A dangerous rime Master against the reason of white and redde.

Brag. Is there not a Ballet Boy, of the King and the Begger?

Boy. The world was very guilty of such a Ballet, some three Ages since, but I thinke now 'tis not to be found: or if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.

Brag. I will have that subject newly writ ore, that I may example my digression by some mighty president. Boy, I doe love that Countrey Girle that I tooke in the Parke with the rationall Hinde Costard: shee deserves well.

Boy. To be whip'd: and yet a better Love then my Master.

Brag. Sing Boy, my spirit growes heavy in love.

Boy. And that's great marvell, loving a light Wench.

Brag. I say sing.

Boy. Forbear till this company be past.

Enter Clowne, Constable, and Wench.

Const. Sir, the Dukes pleasure, is that you keepe Costard safe, and you must let him take no delight, nor no pennance, but he must fast three dayes a weeke: for this Damsell, I must keepe her at the Parke, shee is allow'd for the Day-woman. Fare you well. Exit.

Brag. I doe betray my selfe with blushing: Maide.

Maide. Man.

Brag. I will visit thee at the Lodg.

Maide. That's here by.

Brag. I know where it is situate.

Maide. Lord how wise you are!

Brag. I will tell thee wonders.

Maide. With that face?

Brag. I love thee.

Maide. So I heard you say.

Brag. And so farewell.

Maide. Faire weather after you.

Come Jaquenetta, away.

Exeunt.

Brag. Villaine, thou shalt fast for thy offences ere thou be pardoned.

Clow. Well sir, I hope when I doe it, I shall doe it on a full stomacke.

Brag. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Clow. I am more bound to you then your fellowes, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Con. Take away this Villaine, shut him up.

Boy. Come you transgressing slave, away.

Clow. Let me not be pent up sir, I will be fast being loose.

Boy. No sir, that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Clow. Well, if ever I doe see the merry dayes of desolation that I have seene, some shall see.

Boy. What shall some see?

Clow. Nay nothing, Master Moth, but what they looke upon. It is not for prisoners to be silent in their words, and therefore I will say nothing: I thanke God, I have as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet. Exit.

Brag. I doe affect the very ground (which is base) where her shoe (which is baser) guided by her foote (which is basest) doth tread. I shall be forsworne (which is a great argument of falshood) if I love. And how can that be true love, which is falsly attempted? Love is a familiar, Love is a Divell. There is no evill Angel but Love, yet Sampson was so tempted, and hee had an excellent strength: Yet was Salomon so seduced; and hee had a very good wit. Cupids But-shaft is too hard for Hercules Clubbe, and therefore too much oddes for a Spaniards Rapier: The first and second cause will not serve my turne: the Passado hee respects not, the Duello hee regards not; his disgrace is to be called Boy, but his glory is to subdue men. Adieu Valour, rust Rapier, bee still Drum, for your manager is in love; yea, hee loveth. Assist me some extemporall god of Rime, for I am sure I shall turne Sonnet. Devise Wit, write Pen, for I am for whole volumes in folio.

Finis Actus Primi.

Actus Secunda.

Enter the Princesse of France, with three attending Ladies, and three Lords.

Boyet. Now Madam summon up your dearest spirits,
Consider whom the King your Father sends:
To whom he sends, and what's his Embassie.
Your selfe, held precious in the worlds esteeme,
To parlee with the sole inheritour
Of all perfections that a man may owe,
Matchlesse Navarre: the plea of no lesse weight
Than Aquitaine, a Dowrie for a Queene.
Be now as prodigall of all deare grace,
As Nature was in making Graces deare,
When she did starve the generall world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you.

Prin. Good L. Boyet, my beauty though but meane, Needes not the painted flourish of your praise:
Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye,
Not uttered by base sale of Chapmens tongues:
I am lesse proud to heare you tell my worth,
Then you much willing to be counted wise,
In spending thus your wit in praise of mine.
But now to taske the tasker, good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling fame
Doe noyfe abroad Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painefull study shall out-weare three yeares,
No woman may approach his silent Court:
Therefore to's seemeth it a needfull course,
Before we enter his forbidden Gates,
To know his pleasure, and in that behalfe
Bold of your worthinesse, we single you,
As our best moving faire Soliciter:
Tell him the Daughter of the King of France,
On serious businesse, craving quicke dispatch,
Importunes personall conference with his Grace.
Haste, signifie so much, while we attend,
Like humble vifag'd Sutors his high will.

Boyet. Proud of imployment, willingly I goe. Exit.

Prin. All pride is willing pride, and your's is so:
Who are the Votaries my loving Lords, that are vow-fellows with this vertuous Duke?

Lor. Longaville is one.

Prin. Know you the man?

1 Lad. I knew him Madam at a marriage Feast,
Betweene L. Perigot and the beauteous heire
Of Iaques Fauconbridge solemnized.
In Normandy saw I this Longaville,
A man of soveraigne parts he is esteem'd:
Well fitted in the Arts, glorious in Armes:
Nothing becomes him ill that he would well.
The onely soyle of his faire vertues glosse,
(If vertues glosse will staine with any soyle,)
Is a sharpe wit match'd with too blunt a will:
Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will still wils,
It should none spare that come within his power.

Prin. Some merry mocking Lord belike, is't so?

Lad. 1. They say so most, that most his humors know.

Prin. Such short liv'd wits doe wither as they grow.
Who are the rest?

2. Lad. The yong Damaine, a well accomplish'd youth,

Of all that Vertue love, for Vertue loved:
Most power to doe most harme, least knowing ill:
For he hath wit to make an ill shape good,
And shape to win grace though he had no wit.
I saw him at the Duke Alencons once,
And much too little of that good I saw,
Is my report to his great worthinesse.

Rosa. Another of these Students at that time,
Was there with him, as I have heard a truth.

Birone they call him, but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an houre talke withall:
His eye begets occasion for wit,
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turnes to a mirth-moving jest.
Which his faire tongue (conceits Expositor)
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged cares play Trewant at his Tales,
And yonger hearings are quite ravished.
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

Prin. God blesse my Ladies, are they all in love?
That every one her owne hath garnished,
With such bedecking ornaments of praise.

Ma. Heere comes Boyet.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance Lord?

Boyet. Navarre had notice of your faire approach;
And he and his Competitors in oath,
Were all addrest to meete you gentle Lady
Before I came: Marry thus I have learnt,
He rather meanes to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes heere to besiege his Court,
Than seeke a dispensation for his oath:
To let you enter his unpeopled house.

Enter Navar, Longaville, Dumaine, and Birone:

Heere comes Navarre.

Nav. Faire Princessse, welcome to the Court of Navar.

Prin. Faire I give you backe againe, and welcome I have not yet: the rooofe of this Court is too high to bee yours, and welcome to the wide fields, too base to bee mine.

Nav. You shall be welcome Madam to my Court.

Prin. I will be welcome then, Conduct me thither.

Nav. Heare me deare Lady, I have sworne an oath.

Prin. Our Lady helpe my Lord, hee'l be forsworne.

Nav. Not for the world faire Madam, by my will.

Prin. Why, will shall breake it will, and nothing else.

Nav. Your Ladiship is ignorant what it is.

Prin. Were my Lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I heare your Grace hath sworne out House-keeping:
'Tis deadly sinne to keepe that oath my Lord,
And sinne to breake it:

But pardon me, I am too sodaine bold,
To teach a Teacher ill becometh me.
Vouchsafe to reade the purpose of my comming,
And sodainely resolve me in my suite.

Nav. Madam, I will, if sodainly I may.

Prin. You will the sooner that I were away,
For you'll prove perjur'd if you make me stay.

Bir. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Rosa. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Bir. I

Bir. I know you did,
Rosa. How needlesse was it then to aske the question?
Bir. You must not be so quicke.
Ro. 'Tis long of you that spur mee with such questions.
Bir. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill tire.
Rosa. Not till it leave the Rider in the mire.
Bir. What time a day?
Rosa. The houre that fooles should aske.
Bir. Now faire befall your maske.
Rosa. Faire fall the face it covers.
Bir. And fend you many lovers.
Rosa. Amen, so you be none.
Bir. Nay then will I be gone.
Fer. Madame, your father heere doth intimate,

The paiment of a hundred thousand Crownes,
 Being but th'one halfe, of an intire summe,
 Disburled by my father in his warres.
 But say that he, or we, as neither have Receiv'd that summe; yet there remains unpaid
 A hundred thousand more: in surety of the which,
 One part of Aquitaine is bound to us,
 Although not valued to the moneys worth.
 If then the King your father will restore
 But that one halfe which is unsatisfied,
 We will give up our right in Aquitaine,
 And hold faire friendship with his Majesty:
 But that it seemes he little purposeth,
 For here he doth demand to have repaid,
 An hundred thousand Crownes, and not demands
 One paiment of a hundred thousand Crownes,
 To have his title live in Aquitaine.
 Which we much rather had depart withall,
 And have the money by our father lent,
 Then Aquitaine, so guelded as it is.
 Deare Princeesse, were not his requests so farre
 From reasons yeelding, your faire selfe should make
 A yeelding 'gainst some reason in my brest,
 And goe well satisfied to France againe.

Prin. You doe the King my Father too much wrong,
 And wrong the reputation of your name,
 In so unseeming to confesse receit
 Of that which hath so faithfully beene paid.

Fer. I doe protest I never heard of it,
 And if you prove it, Ile repay it backe,
 Or yeeld up Aquitaine.

Prin. We arrest your word:
Boyet, you can produce acquittances
 For such a summe, from speciall Officers,
 Of Charles his Father.

Fer. Satisfie me so.

Boyet. So please your Grace, the packet is not come
 Where that and other specialties are bound,
 To morrow you shall have a sight of them.

Fer. It shall suffice me; at which enterview,
 All liberrall reason would I yeeld unto:
 Meane time, receive such welcome at my hand,
 As Honour, without breach of Honor may
 Make tender of, to thy true worthinesse.
 You may not come faire Princeesse in my gates,
 But heere without you shall be so receiv'd,
 As you shall deeme your selfe lodg'd in my heart,
 Though so deni'd farther harbour in my house:
 Your owne good thoughts excuse me, and farewell,
 To morrow we shall visit you againe.

Prin. Sweet health and faire desires confort your grace.

Fer. Thy owne wish, wish I thee, in every place. Exit.

Boy. Lady, I will commend you to my owne heart.
La. Ro. Pray you doe my commendations,
 I would be glad to see it.

Boy. I would you heard it grone.

La. Ro. Is the foule sicke?

Boy. Sicke at the heart.

La. Ro. Alacke, let it bloud.

Boy. Would that doe it good?

La. Ro. My Phisicke sayes I.

Bo. Will your prick't with your eye.

La. Ro. No point, with my knife.

Boy. Now God save thy life.

La. Ro. And yours from long living.

Bir. I cannot stay thanksgiving.

Exit.

Enter Dumaine.

Dum. Sir, I pray you a word: what Lady is that famed?

Boy. The heire of Alanson, Rosalin her name.

Dum. Agallant Lady, Mounfier fare you well. Exit.

Enter Longaville.

Long. I beseech you a word: what is she in the white?

Boy. A woman sometimes, if you saw her in the light.

Long. Perchance light in the light: I desire her name.

Boy. She hath but one for her selfe,

To desire that were a shame.

Lon. Pray you sir, whose daughter?

Boy. Her mothers, I have heard.

Long. Gods blessing a your beard.

Boy. Good sir be not offended,

She is an heire of Faulconbridge.

Long. Nay, my choller is ended:

Shee is a most sweet Lady.

Exit. Long.

Boy. Not unlike sir, that may be.

Enter Birone.

Bir. What's her name in the cap?

Boy. Katherine by good hap.

Bir. Is she wedded, or no?

Boy. To her will sir, or so.

Bir. You are welcome sir, adiew.

Boy. Fare well to me sir, and welcome to you. Exit.

La. Ma. That last is Birone, the merry mad-cap Lord.

Not a word with him, but a jest.

Boy. And every jest but a word.

Pri. It was well done of you to take him at his word.

Boy. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to boord.

Lad. Ma. Two hot Sheepes mary;

And wherefore not Ships? (lips.)

Boy. No sheepe (sweet Lamb) unlesse we feed on your

La. You sheepe and I pasture: shall that finish the jest?

Boy. So you grant pasture for me.

La. Not so gentle beast.

My lips are no Common, though severall they be.

Boy. Belonging to whom?

La. To my fortunes and me.

Prin. Good wits will be jangling; but gentles agree.

This civill warre of wits were much better used

On Navar and his bookemen, for heere 'tis abus'd.

Boy. If my observation (which very feldome lyes

By the hearts still rhetoricke, disclosed with eyes)

Deceive me not now, Navar is infected.

Prin. With what?

Boy. With that which we Lovers intitle affected.

Prin. Your reason.

Boy. Why all his behaviours doe make their retire,

To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire.

His heart like an Agot with your print impressed,

Proud

Proud with his forme, in his eye pride expressed.
His tongue all impatient to speake and not see,
Did stumble with haste in his eye-sight to be,
All senses to that sence did make their repaire,
To seele onely looking on fairest of faire :
Me thought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As Jewels in Christall for some Prince to buy. (glast,
Who tending their owne worth from whence they were
Did point out to buy them along as you past.
His faces owne margent did coate such amazes,
That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes.
He give you Aquitaine, and all that is his,
And you give him for my sake, but one loving kisse.

Prin. Come to our Pavillion, Boyet is disposed.

Boy. But to speake that in words, which his eye hath
I onely have made a mouth of his eye, (disclos'd,
By adding a tongue, which I know will not lye.

Lad. Ro. Thou art an old Love-monger, and speakest skillfully.

Lad. Ma. He is Cupid's Grandfather, and leames news of him.

Lad. 2. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.

Boy. Doe you heare my mad wenches?

Lad. 1. No

Boy. What then, doe you see?

Lad. 2. I, our way to be gone.

Boy. You are too hard for me.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Tertia.

Enter Braggart, and Boy.
Song.

Bra. Warble child, make passionate my sense of hearing.

Boy. Concolinell. —

Brag. Sweet Ayer, goe tenderesse of yeares : take this Key, give enlargement to the swaine, bring him felicitatly hither : I must imploy him in a letter to my Love.

Boy. Will you win your love with a French braule?

Brag. How meanest thou, brauling in French?

Boy. No my compleat master, but to jigge off a tune at the tongues end, canary to it with the feete, humour it with turning up your eye : sigh a note and sing a note, sometime through the throate : if you swallowed love with singing, love sometime through the nose, as if you snuff up love by smelling love, with your hat penthouselike ore the shop of your eyes, with your armes crost on your thinebelly doublet, (like a Rabbet on a spit) or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting, and keepe not too long in one tune, but a snip and away :
these are complements, these are humours, these betray nice wenches that would be betrayed without these, and make them men of note : doe you note men that most are affected to these?

Brag. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Boy. By my penne of observation.

Brag. But O, but O.

Boy. The Hobby-horse is forgot.

Brag. Cal'st thou my love Hobby-horse.

Boy. Mo Master, the Hobby-horse is but a Colt, and your Love perhaps, a Hackny :

But have you forgot your Love?

Brag. Almost I had.

Boy. Negligent student, learne her by heart.

Brag. By heart, and in heart Boy.

Boy. And out of heart Master : all those three I will prove.

Brag. What wilt thou prove?

Boy. A man, if I live (and this) by, in, and without, upon the instant : by heart you love her, because you heart cannot come by her : in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her : and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Brag. I am all these three.

Boy. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Brag. Fetch hither the Swaine, he must carry me a letter.

Boy. A message well sympathiz'd, a Horse to be embas-sador for an Ass.

Brag. Ha, ha, What sayest thou?

Boy. Marry sir, you must send the Ass upon the Horse, for he is very slow gated : but I goe.

Brag. The way is but short, away.

Boy. As swift as Lead sir.

Bra. Thy meaning pretty ingenious, is not Lead a met-tall heavy, dull, and slow?

Boy. Minime honest Master, or rather Master no.

Brag. I say Lead is slow.

Boy. You are too swift sir to say so.

Is that Lead slow which is fir'd from a Gunne?

Brag. Sweet smoke of Rhetorike,
He reputes me a Cannon, and the Bullet that's he :
I shoote thee at the Swaine.

Boy. Thump then, and I flee.

Exit.

Brag. A most acute Iuvenal, voluble and free of grace,
By thy favour sweet Welkin, I must sigh in thy face.
Most rude melancholly, Valour gives thee place.
My Herald is return'd.

Enter Page, and Clowne.

Pag. A wonder Master, here's a Costard broken in a shin.

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle, no Lenny begin.

Cl. No egma, no riddle, no Lenny, no salve, in the male sir. Or sir, Plantan, a plaine Plantan : no Lenny, no
Lenny, or Salve sir, but a Plantan.

Arm. By vertue thou inforcest laughter, thy silly thought, my spleene, the heaving of my lunges provokes me to ridiculous smiling : O pardon me my starres, doth the inconsiderate take salve for Lenny, and the world Lenvoy for a salve?

Pag. Doe the wise thinke them other, is not Lenny a salve? (plaine,

Arm. No Page, it is an epilogue or discourse to make
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore bene faine.
Now will I begin your morrall, and doe you follow with my Lenny.

The Foxe, the Ape, and the Humble-Bee,
Were still at oddes, being but three.

Pag. Vntill the Goose came out of doore,
Staying the oddes by adding foure.

A good Lenny, ending in the Goose : would you desire more?

Cl. The Boy hath sold him a bargain, a Goose, that's flat

Sir, your penny-worth is good, and your Goose be fat.
To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose :
Let me see a fat Lenvoy, I that's a fat Goose.

Arma. Come hither, come hither :

How did this argument begin ?

Boy. By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin.
Then call'd you for the Lenvoy.

Clow. True, and I for a Plantan :

Thus came your argument in :

Then the Boyes fat Lenvoy, the Goose that you bought,
And he ended the market.

Arma. But tell me : How was there a Costard broken in a shin ?

Pag. I will tell you fencibly.

Clow. Thou halt no feeling of it Moth,
I will speake that Lenvoy.

I Costard running out, that was safely within,
Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arma. We will talke no more of this matter.

Clow. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arma. Sirra Costard, I will infranchise thee.

Clow. O, marry me to one Francis, I smell some Lenvoy, some Goose in this.

Arma. By my sweet soule, I meane, setting thee at liberty.
Enfreedoming thy person ; thou wert Immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Clow. True, true, and now you will be my purgation, and let me loose.

Arma. I give thee thy liberty, set thee from durance, and in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this :
Beare this significant to the country Maide Jaquenetta :
there is remuneration, for the best ward of mine honors is rewarding my dependants. Moth, follow.— Exit.

Pag. Like the sequell I.

Signeur Costard adew.

Exit.

Clow. My sweet ounce of mans flesh, my in-cony lew:
Now will I looke to his remuneration.

Remuneration, O, that's the Latine word for three-farthings :
There-farthings remuneration, What's the price of this yncle ? I.d.no, He give you a remuneration: Why?
It carries it remuneration : Why? It is a fairer name then a French-Crowne. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Birone.

Bir. O my good knave Costard, exceedingly well met.

Clow. Pray you sir, How much Carnation Ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration ?

Bir. What is a remuneration ?

Cost. Marry sir, halfe penny farthing.

Bir. O, Why then three farthings worth of Silke.

Cost. I thanke your worship, God be wy you.

Bir. O stay slave, I must employ thee:

As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave,
Doe one thing for me that I shall intreate.

Clow. When would you have it done sir ?

Bir. O this after-noon.

Clow. Well, I will doe it sir : Fare you well.

Bir. O thou knowest not what it is.

Clow. I shall know sir, when I have done it.

Bir. Why villaine thou must know first.

Clow. I will come to your worship to morrow morning.

Bir. It must be done this after-noon,

Harke slave, it is but this :

The Princesse comes to hunt here in the Parke;

And in her traine there is a gentle Lady :

When tongues speake sweetly, then they name her name,
And Rosaline they call her, aske for her :

And to her white hand see thou doe commend

This seal'd up counsaile. There's thy guerdon : goe.

Clow. Guerdon, O sweet guerdon, better then remuneration, a levenpence-farthing better : most sweet guerdon.
I will doe it sir in print : guerdon, remuneration.

Exit.

Bir. O ! and I forsooth in love,

I that have beene loves whip ?

A very Beadle to a humerous sigh : A Criticke;

Nay, a night-watch Constable.

A domineering pedant ore the Boy,

Then whom no mortall so magnificent.

This wimpled, whyning, purblind waiward Boy,

This signior Iunior gyant dwärfe, don Cupid,

Regent of Love-rimes, Lord of folded armes,

Th'annointed soveraigne of sighes and groanes :

Liedge of all loyterers and malecontents :

Dread Prince of Plackets, King of Codpeeces.

Sole Emperator and great generall

Of trotting Parrators (O my little heart.)

And I to be a Corporall of his field,

And weare his colours like a Tumblers hoope ?

What ? I love ! I sue ! I seeke a wife,

A woman, that is like a Germane Clocke,

Still a repairing : ever out of frame,

And never going a right, being but a Watch :

But being watcht, that it may still goe right.

Nay, to be perjurde, which is worst of all :

And among three, to love the worst of all,

A whitly wanton, with a velvet brow.

With two pitch bals stucke in her face for eyes.

I, and by heaven, one that will doe the deed,

Though Argus were her Eunuch and her garde.

And I to sigh for her ! to watch for her !

To pray for her, goe to : it is a plague

That Cupid will impose for my neglect,

Of his almighty dreadfull little might.

Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and grone,

Some men must love my Lady, and some lone.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Princesse, a Forrester, her Ladies, and her Lords.

Prin. Was that the King that spurd his horse so hard;
Against the steepe unrising of the hill ?

Boy. I know not, but I thinke it was not he.

Prin. Who ere a was, a shew'd a mounting mind :
Well Lords, to day we shall have our dispatch,
On Saturday we will returne to France.

Then Forrester my friend, Where is the Bush
That we must stand and play the murtherer in ?

For. Hereby upon the edge of yonder Coppice,
A Stand where you may make the fairest shoote.

Prin. I thanke my beauty, I am faire that shoote;
And thereupon thou speak'st the fairest shoote.

For. Pardon me Madam, for I meant not so.

Prin. What, what ? First praise me, then againe say no.
O shone liv'd pride. Not faire ? alacke for woe.

For. Yes

For. Yes Madam faire.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now;
Where faire is nor, praise cannot mend the brow.
Here (good my glasse) take this for telling true:
Faire payment for foule words, is more then due.

For. Nothing but faire is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see, my beauty will be sav'd by merit.
O heresie in faire, fit for these dayes,
A giving hand, though foule, shall have faire praise.
But come, the Bow: Now Mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well, is then accounted ill:
Thus will I save my credit in the shoote,
Not wounding, pitty would not let me do't:
If wounding, then it was to shew my skill,
That more for praise, than purpose meant to kill.
And out of question, so it is sometimes:
Glory growes guilty of detested crimes,
When for Fames sake, to praise an outward part,
We bend to that, the working of the heart.
As I for praise alone now seeke to spill
The poore Deere blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boy. Doe not curst wives hold that selfe-soveraignty Onely for praise sake, when they strive to be Lords ore their Lords?

Prin. Onely for praise, and praise we may afford,
To any Lady that subdewes a Lord.

Enter Clowne.

Boy. Here comes a member of the common-wealth.

Clow. God dig-you-denall, pray you which is the head
Lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Clow. Which is the greatest Lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest.

Clow. The thickest, and the tallest: it is so, truth is truth.
And your waste Mistis, were as slender as my wit,
One a these Maides girdles for your waste should be fit.
Are not you the chiefe woman? You are the thickest here.

Prin. What's your will fir? What's your will?

Clow. I have a Letter from Monfieur Birone,
To one Lady Rosaline,

Prin. O thy letter, thy letter: He's a good friend of Stand aside good bearer. (mine.)

Boyet, you can carve,
Breake up this Capon.

Boy. I am bound to serve.

This Letter is mistooke: it importeth none here:
It is write to Jaquenetta.

Prin. We will reade it, I sweare.

Breake the necke of the Waxe, and every one give eare.

Boyet reads.

BY heaven, that thou art faire, is most infallible: true that thou art beauteous, truth it selfe that thou art lovely: more fairer then faire, beautifull then beautious, truer then truth it selfe: have comiseration on thy heroicall Vassall. The magnanimous and most illustre King Copernicus set eye upon the pernicious and indubitate Beg-ger Zenelophon: and he it was that might rightly say, Veni, vidi, vici: Which to Anatomize in the vulgar, O base and obscure vulgar; videlicet, He came, Saw, and overcame: he came one; see; two; covercame three.
Who came? the King. Why did he come? to see. Why did he see? to overcome. To whom came he? to the Begger. What saw he? the Begger. Who overcame he? the Begger. The conclusion is victory: On whose side? the King: the captive is inricht: On whose side?

the Beggers. The catastrophe is a Nuptiall: On whose side? the Kings: no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the King (for so stands the comparifon) thou the Beg-ger, for so witnesseth thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may. Shall I inforce thy love? I could.
Shall I entreate thy love? I will. What, shalt thou exchange for ragges, robes: for tittles titles, for thy selfe me. Thus expecting thy reply, I prophane my lips on thy foote, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

Thine in the dearest designe of industry,

Don Adriana de Armado.

Thus dost thou heare the Nemean Lion roare,
Gainst thee thou Lambe, that standest as his prey:
Submissive fall his princely feete before,
And he from forrage will incline to play.

But if thou strive (poore soule) what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

Prin. What plume of feather is he that indited this Letter? What vaine? What Wethercocke? Did you ever heare better?

Boy. I am much deceived, but I remember the stile.

Prin. Else your memory is bad, going ore it erewhile.

Boy. This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court
A Phantasmie, a Monarcho, and one that inakes sport
To the Prince and his Booke-mates

Prin. Thou fellow, a word.

Who gave thee this Letter?

Clow. I told you, my Lord.

Prin. To whom should'st thou give it?

Clow. From my Lord to my Lady.

Prin. From which Lord, to which Lady?

Clow. From my Lord Berowne, a good master of mine,
To a Lady of France, that he call'd Rosaline.

Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come Lords away.
Here sweet, put up this, 'twill be thine another day.

Exeunt.

Boy. Who is the shooter? Who is the shooter?

Rosa. Shall I teach you to know.

Boy. I my continent of beauty.

Rosa. Why she that beares the Bow. Finely put off.

Boy. My Lady goes to kill hornes, but if thou marry,
Hang me by the necke, if hornes that yeare miscarry.
Finely put on.

Rosa. Well then, I am the shooter.

Boy. And who is your Deare?

Rosa. If we choose by hornes, your selfe come not neare. Finely put on indeed.

Mari. You still wrangle with her Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boy. But shee her selfe is hit lower:
Have I hit her now.

Rosa. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when King Pippin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it.

Boy. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queene Guinover of Britaine was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Rosa.

Rosa. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it,
Thou canst not hit it my good man.

Boy. I cannot, cannot, cannot :
And I cannot, another can.

Exit.

Clo. By my troth most pleasant, how both did fit it.

Mar. A marke marvellous well shot, for they both did hit.

Boy. A marke, O marke but that marke : a marke sayes my Lady.

Let the marke have a pricke in't, to meate at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide a'th bow hand, yfaith your hand is out.

Clo. Indeed a'must shoote nearer, or heele ne're hit the clout.

Boy. And if my hand be out, then belike you hand is in.

Clo. Then will she get the upshoot by cleaving the Pin.

Mar. Come, come, you talke greafely, your lips grow foule.

Clo. She's too hard for you at pricks, fir challenge her to boule.

Boy. I feare too much rubbing : good night my good Oule.

Clo. By my foule a Swaine, a most simple Clowne.
Lord, Lord, how the Ladies and I have put him downe.
O my troth most sweete jests, most incony vulgar wit,
When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it were, so fit.

Armado ath to side, O a most dainty man.
To see him walke before a Lady, and to beare her Fan.
To see him kisse his hand, and how most sweetly a will sweare:

And his Page at other side, that handfull of wit,
Ah heavens, it is a most pathetical nit.
Sowla, sowla.

Exeunt.

Showte within.

Enter Dull, Holofernes, the Pedant, and Nathaniel.

Nath. Very reverent sport truly, and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Ped. The Deare was (as you know) sanguis in blood, ripe as a Pomwater, who now hangeth like a Jewell in the care of Celo the sky: the welken the heaven, and anon falleth like a Crab on the face of Terra, the soyle, the land, the earth.

Curat. Nath. Truly Master Holofernes, the epythites are sweetly varied like a scholler at the least: but fir I assure yee, it was a Bucke of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.

Dul. 'Twas not a haud credo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation: yet a kind of insinuation, as it were in via, in way of explication facere: as it were replication, or rather ostentare, to show as it were his inclination after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or ratherest unconfirmed fashion, to insert againe my haud credo for a Deare.

Dul. I said the Deare was not a haud credo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicity, bis coctus, O thou monster ignorance, how deformed doost thou looke?

Nath. Sir he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a booke.

He hath not eate paper as it were:

He hath not drunke inke.

His intellect is not replenished, he is onely an animall, onely sensible in the duller parts: and such barren plants are set before us, that we thankfull should be: which we taste and feeling, are for those parts that doe fructifie in us more then he.

For as it would ill become me to be vaine, indiscreet, or a foole;

So were there a patch set on Learning, to see him in a Schoole.

But omne bene say I, being of an old Fathers mind, Many can brooke the weather, that love not the wind.

Dul. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your wit, What was a month old at Cains birth, that's not five weekes old as yet?

Hol. Disfissima Goodman Dull, Disfissima Goodman Dull.

Dull. What is disfissima?

Nath. A tittle to Phebe, to Luna, to the Moone.

Hol. The Moone was a month old when Adam was no more. (score.

And wrought not to five-weekes when he came to five-
Th'allusion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. 'Tis true indeed, the Collusion holds in the Exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity, I say th'allusion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. And I say the polusion holds in the Exchange: for the Moone is never but a month old: and I say beside that, 'twas a Pricket that the Princeesse kild.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you heare an extemporall Epytaph on the death of the Deare, and to humour the ignorant call'd the Deare, the Princeesse kill'd a Pricket:

Nath. Perge, good Master Holofernes, perge, so it shall please you to abrogate scurility.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility.

The praysfull Princeesse pearst and pricke
a pretty pleasing Pricket,
Some say a Sore, but not a sore,
till now made sore with shooting.
The Dogges did yell, put ell to Sore,
then Sorell jumps from thicket:
Or Pricket-sore, or else Sorell,
the people fall a booting.
If Sore bee sore, then ell to Sore, makes fifty sores O sorell:
Of one sore I an hundred make by adding but one more L.

Nath. A rare talent.

Dul. If a talent be a claw, looke how he clawes him with a talent.

Nath. This is a gift that I have simple: simple, a foolish extravagant spirit, full of formes, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions. These are begot in the ventricle of memory, nourisht in the wombe of primater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occasion: but the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankfull for it.

Hol. Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners, for their Sonnes are well tutor'd by you, and their Daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the common-wealth.

Nath. Me hercle, If their Sonnes be ingenuous, they shall shall want no instruction: If their Daughters be capable, I will put it to them. But Vir sapit qui pauca loquitur, a soule Feminine saluteth us.

Enter Jaquenetta, and the Clowne.

Iaque. God give you good morrow Master Parson.

Nath. Master Parson, quasi Person? And if one should be perft, Which is the one?

Clo. Marry Master Schoolemaster, he that is likest to a hogthead.

Nath. Of perfting a Hogthead, a good luster of conceit in a turph of Earth, fire enough for a Flint, Pearle enough for a Swine: 'tis pretty, it is well.

Iaque. Good Master Parson be so good as roade me this Letter, it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armatho: I beseech you reade it.

Nath. Fauste precor gelida, quando, pecus omne sub umbra, ruminat, and so forth. Ah good old Mantuan, I may speake of thee as the traveller doth of Venice, Venetchi, venachia, qui non te videri, non te placet. Old Mantuan, old Mantuan. Who understandeth thee not, ut resolla misa. Vnder pardon sir, What are the contents? or rather as Horrace sayes in his, What! my soule verses.

Hol. I sir, and very learned.

Nath. Let me heare a stasse, a stanza, a verse, Lege domine.

If Love make me forsworne, how shall I sweare to loue? Ah neuer faith could hold if not to beautie vowed. Though to my selfe forsworne, to thee Ile faithfull proue. Those thoughts to me were Okes, to thee like Osiers bowed.

Study his byas leaves, and makes his booke thine eyes. Where all those pleasures live, that Art would comprehend.

If knowledge be the marke, to know thee shall suffice, Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend. All ignorant that soule, that sees thee without wonder. Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire; Thy eye loves lightning beares, thy voyce his dreadfull thunder.

Which not to anger bent, is musique, and sweet fire. Celestiall as thou art, Oh pardon love this wrong, That sings heavens praise, with such an earthly tongue.

Pedro. You find not the apostrophas, and so misse the accent. Let me superuise the cangenet.

Nath. Here are onely numbers ratified, but for the elegancy, facility, and golden cadence of poesie caret: Ovidius Naso was the man. And why in deed Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous floures of fancy? the jerkes of invention imitary is nothing: So doth the Hound his master, the Ape his keeper, the tyred Horse his rider: But Damosella Virgin, Was this directed to you?

Iaque. I sir from one mounsier Berowne, one of the strange Queenes Lords.

Nath. I will overglance the superscript.

To the snow-white hand of the most beaustious Lady, Rosaline. I will looke againe on the intellect of the Letter, for the nomination of the party written to the person written unto.

Your Ladiship in all desired employment, Berowne.

Per. Sir Holofernes, this Berowne is one of the Votaries with the King, and heare he hath framed a Letter to a sequent of the stranger Queenes: which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Trip and goe my sweet, deliver this Paper into the hand of the King, it may concerne much: stay not thy complement, I forgive thy duety, adue.

Maid. Good Costard goe with me; Sir God save your life.

Cost. Have with thee my girl.

Exit.

Hol. Sir you have done this in the feare of God very religiously: and as a certaine father saith——

Ped. Sir tell not me of the father, I doe feare colourable colours. But to returne to the Verses, Did they please you sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

Peda. I doe dine to day at the fathers of a certaine Pupill of mine, where if (being repast) it shall please you to gratifie the table with a Grace, I will on my priviledge I have with the parents of the foresaid Child or Pupill, undertake your bien venuto, where I will prove those Verses to bee very unlearned, neither favouring of Poetry, Wit, nor Invention. I beseech your Society.

Nath. And thanke you to: for society (saith the text) is the happinesse of life.

Peda. And certes the text most infallibly concludes it. Sir I doe invite you too, you shall not say me nay: pauca verba.

Away, the gentles are at their game, and we will to our recreation.

Exeunt.

Enter Birone with a Paper in his hand, alone.

Biro. The King he is hunting the Deare, I am courting my selfe.

They have pitch a Toyle, I am toying in a pytch, pitch that defiles; defile, a foule word: Well, set thee downe sorrow; for so they say the foole said, and so say I, and I the foole: Well proved wit. By the Lord this Love is as mad as Ajax, it kills sheepe, it kills me, I a sheepe: Well proved againe a my side. I will not love, if I doe, hang me: yfaith I will not. O but her eye: by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I doe nothing in the world but lye and lye in my throate. By heaven I doe love, and it hath taught me to Rime, and to be mallicholy: and here is part of my Rime, and heere my mallicholly. Well, she hath one a'my Sonnets already, the Clowne bore it, the Foole sent it, and the Lady hath it: sweet Clowne, sweeter Foole, sweetest Lady. By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper, God give him grace to grone.

He stands aside.

The King entreth.

Kim. Ay me!

Bir. Shot by heaven: proceed sweet Cupid, thou hast thumpt him with thy Birdbolt under the left pap: in faith secrets.

King. So sweet a kisse the golden Sunne gives not, To those fresh morning drops upon the Rose, As thy eye beames when their fresh Rayes have smot The night of dew that on my cheeks downe flowes. Nor shines the silver Moone one halfe so bright, Through the transparent bosome of the deepe, As doth thy face through teares of mine give light: Thou shin'st in every reare that I doe weepe, No drop, but as a Coach doth carry thee, So rideit thou triumphing in my woe. Doe but behold the teares that swell in me, And they thy glory through my griefe will shew:

But

But doe not love thy selfe, then thou wilt keepe
My teares for glasses, and still make me weepe.
O Queene of Queenes, how farre dost thou excell,
No thought can thinke, nor tongue of mortall tell.
How shall she know my griefes? Ile drop the paper.
Sweet leaves shade folly. Who is he comes heere?

Enter Longaville. The King steps aside.

What! Longaville! and reading: listen care.

Bir. Now in thy likeness, one more foole appeare.

Long. Ay me, I am forsworne.

Bir. Why he comes in like a perjur'd, wearing papers.

Long. In love I hope, sweet fellowship in shame.

Bir. One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have bin perjur'd so? (know,

Bir. I could put thee in comfort, not by two that I
Thou makest the triumphery, the corner cap of society,
The shape of Loves Tiburne, that hangs up simplicity.

Long. I feare these stubborn lines lacke power to move.

O sweet Maria, Empresse of my love,

These numbers will I teare, and write in prose.

Bir. O! Rimes are guards on wanton Cupids hose, Disfigure not his Shop.

Long. This same shall goe. He reads the Sonnet.

Did not the heavenly Rhetoricke of thine eye,

'Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,

Perswade my heart to this false perjury?

Vowes for thee broke deserve not punishment.

A Woman! forswore, but I will prove,

Thou bring a Goddesse, I forswore not thee.

My Vow was earthly, thou a heavenly Love.

Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.

Vowes are but breath, and breath a vapour is,

Then thou faire Sun, which on my earth dost shine,

Exhal'st this vapor-vow, in thee it is:

If broken then, it is no fault of mine:

If by me broke, what foole is not so wise,

To loose an oath, to win a Paradise?

Bir. This is the liver veine, which makes flesh a deity.

A greene Goose, a Goddesse, pure pure Idolatry.

God amend us, God amend, we are much out o' th' way.

Enter Dumaine.

Long. By whom shall I send this? (company?) Stay.

Bir. All hid, all hid, an old infant play,

Like a demy God, here sit I in the sky,

And wretched foolcs secrets heedfully ore-eye.

More Sackes to the myll! O heavens I have my wish,

Dumaine transform'd, foure Woodcocks in a dish.

Dum. O most divine Kate.

Bir. O most prophane coxcombe.

Dum. By heaven the wonder of a mortall eye.

Bir. By earth she is not, corporall, there you lye.

Dum. Her Amber haire for foule hath amber cored.

Bir. An Amber coloured Raven was well noted.

Dum. As upright as the Cedar.

Bir. Stoope I say, her shoulder is with-child.

Dum. As faire as day.

Bir. I as some dayes, but then no sunne must shine.

Dum. O that I had my wish?

Long. And I had mine.

King. And mine too good Lord.

Bir. Amen, so I had mine: Is not that a good word?

Dum. I would forget her, but a Fever she Raignes in my blood, and will remembred be.

Bir. A Fever in your blood! why then incision

Would let her out in Sawcers, sweet misprision.

Dum. Once more Ile read the Ode that I have writ.

Bir. Once more Ile marke how Love can varry Wit.

Dumaine reads his Sonnet.

On a day, alacke the day:

Love, whose Month is every May,

Spied a blossome passing faire,

Flaying in the wanton ayre:

Through the Velvet, leaves the wind,

All unscene, can passage find.

That the Lover sick to death,

Wish'd himselfe the heavens breath.

Ayre (quoth he) thy cheekes may blow,

Ayre, would I might triumph so.

But alacke my hand is sworne,

Nere to plucke thee from thy throne:

Vow alacke for youth unmette,

Youth so apt to plucke a sweet.

Doe not call it sinne in me,

That I am forsworne for thee.

Thou for whom Love would sweare,

Iuno but an Ethiop were,

And deny himselfe for Love,

Turning mortall for thy Love.

This will I send, and something else more plaine,

That shall expresse my true-loves fasting paine,

O would the King, Birone, and Longaville,

Were Lovers too, ill to example ill,

Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note:

For none offend, where all alike doe dote.

Long. Dumaine, thy Love is farre from charity,

That in Loves griefe desir'st society:

You may looke pale, but I should blush I know,

To be ore-heard, and taken napping so.

King. Come sir, you blush: as his, your case is such,

You chide at him, offending twice as much.

You doe not love Maria? Longaville,

Did never Sonnet for her sake compile;

Nor never lay his wreathed armes athwart

His loving bosome, to keepe downe his heart.

I had beene closely shrowded in this bush,

And markt you both, and for you both did blush.

I heard your guilty Rimes, obseru'd your fashion;

Saw sighes reeke from you, noted well your passion.

Aye me, sayes one! O Love, the other cries!

Her haire was Gold, Cristall the others eyes.

You would for Paradise breake faith and troth,

And Love for your Love would infringe an oath.

What will Birone say when that he shall heare

A faith infringed, which such a zeale did sweare.

How will he scorne? how will he spend his wit?

How will he triumph, leape, and laugh at it?

For all the wealth that ever I did see,

I would not have him know so much by me.

Bir. Now step I forth to whip hypocrisie.

Ah good my Liedge, I pray thee pardon me.

Good heart, What grace hast thou thus to reprove

These wormes for loving, that are most in love?

Your eyes doe make no couches in your teares.

There is no certaine Princeesse that appeares.

You'll not be perjur'd, 'tis a hatefull thing:

Tush, none but Minstrels like of Sonnetting.

But are you not a sham'd? nay, are you not

All three of you, to be thus much ore shot?
 You found his Moth, the King your Moth did see:
 But I a Beame doe find in each of three.
 O what a Scene of fool'ry have I scene,
 Offighes, of grones, of sorrow, and of teene:
 O me, with what strict patience have I sat,
 To see a King tranformed to a Gnat?
 To see great Hercules whipping a Gigge,
 And profound Salomon tuning a lygge?
 And Nestor play at push-pin with the boyes,
 And Cruticke Tymon laugh at idle toyes.
 Where lies thy griefe? O tell me good Dumaine.
 And gentle Longaville, where lyes thy paine?
 And where my Liedges? all about the brest.
 A Candle hoa!

Kin. Too bitter is thy jest,
 Are we betrayed thus to thy over-view?
Bir. Not you by me, but I betrayed to you.
 I that am honest. I that hold it sinne
 To breake the vow I am engaged in:
 I am betrayed by keeping company
 With men, like men of ltrang inconstancy.
 When shall you see me write a thing in rime?
 Or grone for Isabe? or spend a minutes time,
 In pruning me, when shall you heare that I will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye: a gate, a state, a brow, a brest, a walte, a legge, a limme.

Kin. Soft, Whither away so fast?
 A true man, or a theefe, that gallops so.

Bir. I post from Love, good Lover let me go.

Enter Jaquenetta, and Clowne.

Jaqu. God blesse the King.

Kin. What Present hast thou there?

Clo. Some certaine treason.

Kin. What makes treason heere?

Clo. Nay it makes nothing sir.

Kin. If it marre nothing neither,
 The treason and you goe in peace together.

Jaqu. I beseech your Grace let this Letter be read,
 Our person misdoubts it: it was treason he said.

Kin. Birone, read it over. Hercules the Letter.
 Where hadst thou it.

Jaqu. Of Costard.

Kin. Where hadst thou it?

Cost. Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio.

Kin. How now, what is in you? why dost thou teare it?
Bir. A toy my Liedge, a toy: your grace needs not feare it.

Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore let's heare it,

Dum. It is Birones writting, and heere is his name.

Bir. Ah you whoreson loggerhead, you were borne to doe me shame.

Guilty my Lord, guilty: I confesse, I confesse.

King. What?

Bir. That you three fooles, lackt me foole, to make up the messe.

He, he, and you: and you my Liedge, and I,
 Are picke-purfs in Love, and we deserve to dye.
 O dismisse this audience, and I shall tell you more.

Dum. Now the number is even.

Bir. True, true, we are foure: will these Turtles be gone?

Kin. Hence sirs, away.

Clo. Walke aside the true folke, and let the traytors stay.

Bir. Sweet Lords, sweet Lovers, O let us imbrace:
 As true we are as flesh and bloud can be.
 The Sea will ebbe and flow, heaven will shew his face:
 Young bloud doth not obey an old decree.
 We cannot crosse the cause why we are borne:
 Therefore of all hands must we be forsworne.

King. What, did these rent lines shew some love of thine? (Rosaline)

Bir. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heavenly
 That (like a rude and savage man of Inde.)
 At the first opening of the gorgeous East,
 Bowes not his vassall head, and strooken blind,
 Kisses the base ground with obedient brest?
 What peremptory Eage-sighted eye
 Dares looke upon the heaven of her brow,
 That is not blinded by her Majesty?

Kin. What zeale, what fury, hath inspir'd thee now?
 My Love (her Mistress) is a gracious Moone,
 She (an attending Starre) scarce scene a light.

Bir. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biront.
 O, but for my Love, day would turne to night,
 Of all complexions the cul'd soveraignty,
 Doe meet as at a faire in her faire checke,
 Where severall Worthies make one dignity,
 Where nothing wants, that want it selfe doth seeke.
 Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,
 Fye painted Rethoricke, O she needs it not,
 To things of sale, a sellers praise belongs:
 She passes praise, then praise too short doth blot.
 A withered Hermite, fivescore winters worne,
 Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye:
 Beauty doth varnish Age, as if new borne,
 And gives the Crutch the Cradles infancy.
 O 'tis the Sunne that maketh all things shine.

King. By heaven, thy Love is blacke as Ebony,

Bir. Is Ebony like her? O word divine?
 A wife of such wood were felicity.

O who can give an oth? Where is a booke?
 That I may sweare beauty doth beauty lacke,
 If that she learne not of her eye to looke:
 No face is faire that is not full so blacke.

Kin. O paradoxe, blacke is the badge of hell,
 The hue of dungeons, and the Schoole of night:
 And beauties crest becomes the heavens well.

Bir. Divels soonest tempt resembling spirits of light.
 O if in blacke my Ladies browes be deckt,
 It mournes, that painting an vsurping haire
 Should ravish doters with a false aspect:
 And therefore is she borne to make blacke, faire.
 Her favour turnes the fashion of the dayes,
 For native blond is counted painting now:
 And therefore red that would avoyd dispraise,
 Paints it selfe blacke, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To looke like her are Chimny-sweepers blacke.

Lon. And since her time, are Colliers counted bright

King. And Aethiops of their sweet complexion crake.

Dum. Darke needs no Candles now, for darke is light.

Bir. Your mistresses dare never come in raine,
 For feare their colours should be washt away.

Kin. 'Twere good yours did: for sir to tell you plaine,
 He find a fairer face not washt to day.

Bir. He prove her faire, or talke till dooms-day here.

Kin. No Divell will fright thee then so much as she.

Dum. I never knew man hold vile stuffe so deere.

Lon. Looke, here's thy love, my foot and her face set.

Bir. O if the streets were paved with thine eyes,

Her

Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.

Dum. O vile, then as she goes what upward lyes?
The street should see as she walk'd over head.

Kin. But what of this, are we not all in love?

Bir. Nothing so sure, and thereby all forsworne.

Kin. Then leave this chat, and good Birone now prove
Our loving lawfull, and our faith not torne.

Dum. I marry there, some flattery for this evill.

Long. O some authority how to proceed,
Some trickes, some quillies, how to cheat the divell.

Dum. Some salve for perjury.

Bir. O 'tis more then neede.

Have at you then affections men at armes,
Consider what you first did sweare unto:

To fast, to study, and to see no woman:

Flat treason gainst the Kingly state of youth.

Say, Can you fast? your stomackes are too young:
And abstinence ingenders maladies.

And where that you have vow'd to study (Lords)

In that each of you have forsworne his Booke.

Can you still dreame and pore, and thereon looke?

For when would you my Lord, or you, or you,

Have found the ground of studies excellence,

Without the beauty of a womans face;

From womens eyes this Doctrine I derive,

They are the Ground, the Bookes, the Academs;

From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire.

Why, universall plodding, poysons up

The nimble spirits in the arteries,

As motion and long during action tyres

The sinnowy vigour of the travailer.

Now for not looking on a womans face,

You have in that forsworne the use of eyes:

And study too, the causer of your vow.

For where is any Author in the world,

Teaches such beauty as a womans eye:

Learning is but an adjunct to our selfe,

And where we are, our learning likewise is.

Then when our selves we see in Ladies eyes,

Doe we not likewise see our learning there?

O we have made a Vow to study, Lords,

And in that vow we have forsworne our Bookes:

For when would you (my Leige) or you, or you?

In leaden contemplation have found out

Such fiery Numbers as the prompting eyes,

Of beauties tutors have enrich'd you with:

Other slow Arts intirely keepe the braine:

And therefore finding barraine practizers,

Scarce shew a harvest of their heavy toyle.

But Love first learned in a Ladies eyes,

Lives not alone immured in the braine:

But with the motion of all elements,

Courtes as swift as thought in every power,

And gives to every power a double power,

Above their functions and their offices.

It adds a precious seeing to the eye:

A Lovers eyes will gaze an Eagle blind.

A Lovers eare will heare the lowest sound.

When the suspicious head of theft is stopt,

Loves feeling is more soft and sensible,

Then are the tender hornes of Cockled Snayles.

Loves tongue proves dainty Bacchus, grosse in taste,

For Valour, is not Love a Hercules?

Still climbing trees in the Hesperides.

Subtill as Sphinx, as sweet and muscally,

As bright Apollo's Lute, strung with his haire.

As bright Apollo's Lute, strung with his haire.

And when Love speaks, the voyce of all the gods,

Make heaven drowfie with the harmony.

Never durst Poet touch a pen to write,

Vntill his Inke were tempered with Loves sighes:

O then his lines would ravish savage eares;

And plant in Tyrants mild humility,

From womens eyes this doctrine I derive.

They sparkle still the right Pomethan fire,

They are the Bookes, the Arts, the Academes,

That shew, containe, and nourish all the world.

Else none at all in ought proves excellent.

Then fooles you were these women to forswear:

Or keeping what is sworne, you will prove fooles.

For Wisedomes sake (a word that all men love)

Or for Loves sake, a word that loves all men.

Or for Mens sake, the author of these Women:

Or Womens sake, by whom we men are men,

Let us once loose our oathes to find our selves,

Or else we loose our selves, to keepe our oathes:

It is religion to be thus forsworne.

For Charity it selfe fulfills the Law:

And who can sever love from Charity?

Kin. Saint Cupid then, and Souldiers to the field.

Bir. Advance your standards, and upon them Lords.

Peil, mell, downe with them: but be first advis'd,

In confish that you get the Sunne of them.

Long. Now to plaine dealing, Lay these glozes by,

Shall we resolve to wooe these girles of France?

Kin. And winne them too, therefore let us devise,

Some entertainment for them in their Tents.

Bir. First from the Parke let us conduct them thither,

Then homeward every man attach the hand

Of his faire Mistresse, in the afternoone

We will with some strange pastime solace them:

Such as the shortnesse of the time can shape,

For Revels, Dances, Maskes, and merry houres,

Fore-runne faire Love, strewing her way with flowres.

Kin. Away, away, no time shall be omitted,

That will be time, and may by us be fitted.

Bir. Alone, alone sowed Cockell, reap'd no Corne,

And Iustice alwayes whirles in equall measure:

Light Wenches may prove plagues to men forsworne,

If so, our Copper buyes no better treasure.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Pedant, Curate, and Dull.

Peda. Satis quid sufficit.

Cur. I praise God for you sir, your reasons at dinner have beene sharpe and sententious: pleasant without scur-rillity, witty without affectation, audacious without im-pudency, learned without opinion, and strange without heresie: I did conuerse this quondam day with a companion of the Kings, who is intituled, nominated, or called,
Don Adriano de Armastho.

Ped. Novi hominum tanquam te, His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory: his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gate majesticall, and his generall behaviour vaine, ridiculous, and thrastronicall. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odde, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

M 2

Curat.

Curat. A most singular and choise Epithat,

Draw out his Table-booke.

Ped. He draweth out the thred of his verbosity, finer then the staple of his argument. I abhor such phantick phantasies, such infociable and poynt devise companions, such rackers of orthography, as to speake dour fine, when he should say doubt; det, when he should pronounce debt; d e b t, nor det: he clepeth a Calfe, Cause: halfe, haufe: neighbour vocatur nebour; neigh abbreviated ne: this is abhominable, which he would call abhominable: it insinuateth me of infamy: ne intelligis domine, to make franticke, lunaticke?

Curat. Laus deo, bene intelligo.

Peda. Borne boon for boon prescians, a little search, 'twill serve.

Enter Braggart, Boy.

Curat. Vides-ne quis venit?

Peda. Video, & gaudio.

Brag. Chirra.

Peda. Quare Chirra, not Sirra?

Brag. Men of peace well incountred.

Peda. Most military sir, salutation.

Boy. They have bene at a great feast of Languages, and stole the scraps.

Clow. O they have liv'd long on the almes-basket of words. I marvell thy M. hath not eaten thee for a word, for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus: Thou art easier swallowed then a flapdragon.

Page. Peace, the peale begins.

Brag. Mounfier, are you not lettered?

Page. Yes, yes, he teaches boyes the Horne-booke: What is Ab speld backward with the horne on his head?

Peda. Ba, pueritia with a horne added.

Page. Ba most feely Sheepe, with a horne: you heare his learning.

Peda. Quis quis, thou Consonant?

Page. The last of the five Vowels if You repeat them, or the first if I.

Peda. I will repeat them: a e i.

Page. The Sheepe, the other two concludes it on.

Brag. Now by the salt wave of the mediteraneum, a sweet tutch, a quicke veawe of wit, snip snap, quicke and home, it rejoyceth my intellect, true wit.

Page. Offered by a child to an old man: which is wit-old.

Peda. What is the figure? What is the figure?

Page. Hornes.

Peda. Thou disputes't like an Infant: goe whip thy Gigge.

Page. Lend me your Horne to make one, and I will whip about your Infamy unum cita a gigge of a Cuckolds horne.

Clow. And I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy Ginger bread: Hold, there is the very Remuneration I had of thy master, thou halfpenny purse of wit, thou Pidgeon-egge of discretion. O and the heavens were so pleased, that thou wert but my Bastard; What a joyfull father wouldst thou make me? Goe to, thou hast it ad dungil, at the fingers ends, as they say.

Peda. Oh I smell false Latine, dungel for vnguem.

Brad. Arif-man preambular, we will be singled from the barbarous. Doe you not educate youth at the Charg-house on the top of the Mountaine?

Peda. Or mons the hill.

Brag. At your sweet pleasure, for the Mountaine.

Peda. I doe sans question.

Brag. Sir, it is the Kings most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the Princess at her Pavilion, in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the after-noon.

Peda. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the after-noon: the word is well culd, choise, sweet, and apt I doe assure you sir, I doe assure.

Brag. Sir, the King is a noble Gentleman, and my familiar, I doe assure ye very good friend: for what is inward betweene us, let it passe. I doe beseech thee remember thy curtesie. I beseech thee apparell thy head: and among other importunate and most serious designes, and of great import indeed too: but let that passe, for I must tell thee it will please his Grace (by the world) sometime to leane upon my poore shoulder, and with his royall finger thus dally with my excrement, with my mustachio; but sweet heart let that passe. By the world I recount no fable, some certaine speciall honours it pleaseth his Greatnesse to impart to Armado a Souldier, a man of travell, that hath scene the world: but let that passe; the very all of all is: but sweet heart, I doe implore secrecy, that the King would have me present the Princess (sweet chucked) with some delightfull ostentation, or show, or pageant; or anticke, or fire-worke: Now, understanding that the Curate and your sweet selfe are good at such eruptions, and fodaine breaking out of myrth (as it were) I have acquainted you withall, to the end to crave your assistance.

Peda. Sir, you shall present before her the Nine Worthies. Sir Holofernes, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistants at the Kings command: and this most gallant, illustrate and learned Gentleman, before the Princess: I say none so fit as to present the Nine Worthies.

Curat. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?

Peda. Iofua, your selfe: my selfe, and this gallant gentleman Iudas Machabees; this Swaine (because of his great limme or joynt) shall passe Pompey the great, the Page Hercules.

Brag. Pardon sir, error: He is not quantity enough for that Worthies thumbe, he is not so big as the end of his Club.

Peda. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a Snake; and I will have an Apology for that purpose.

Page. An excellent device: so if any of the audience hiss, you may cry, Well done Hercules, now thou crushest the Snake; that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to doe it.

Brag. For the rest of the Worthies?

Peda. I will play three my selfe.

Page. Thrice worthy Gentleman.

Brag. Shall I tell you a thing?

Peda. We attend.

Brag. We will have, if this fadge not, an Antique. I beseech you follow.

Peda. Via good-man Dull, thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither sir.

Peda. Alone, we will employ thee.

Dull. Ile make one in a dance, or so: or I will play on on the taber to the Worthies, and let them dance the hey.

Ped. Most Dull, honest Dull, to our sport away. Exit.

Enter Princeesse, and Ladies.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairing's come thus plentifully in.
A Lady wal'd about with Diamonds: looke you, what I have from the loving King.

Rosa. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing but this: yes as much love in Rime,
As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leafe, margent and all,
That he was faine to scale on Cupids name.

Rosa. That was the way to make his god-head wax:
For he hath beene five thousand yeeres a boy.

Kath. I, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Rosa. You'll ne're be friends with him, a kild your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy,
And so she died: had she beene light like you,
Of such a merry nimble stirring spirit,
She might a beene a Grandam ere she died.
And so may you: For a light heart lives long.

Rosa. What's your darke meaning mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty darke.

Rosa. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kat. You'll marre the light by taking it in snuffe:
Therefore Ile darkely end the argument.

Ros. Looke what you doe, you doe it still i'th darke.

Kat. So doe not you, for you are a light Wench.

Rosa. Indeed I waigh not you, and therefore light.

Ka. You waigh me not, O that's you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason: for past care, is still past care.

Prin. Well banded both, a set of Wit well played.

But Rosaline, you have a Favour too?
Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would you knew.

And if my face were but as faire as yours,
My Favour were as great, be witness this.
Nay, I have Verses too, I thank Birone,
The numbers true, and were the numbring too,
I were the fairest goddesse on the ground.
I am compar'd to twenty thousand faires.
O he hath drawne my picture in his letter.

Prin. Any thing like?

Ros. Much in the letters, nothing in the praise.

Prin. Beauteous as Incke: a good conclusion.

Kat. Faire as a text B. in a Coppy booke.

Ros. Ware pensils. How? let me not dye your debtor,
My red Dominicall, my golden letter.
O that your face were full of Oes.

Prin. A Pox of that jest, and I beshrew all Shrowes:
But Katherine, what was sent to you
From faire Dumaine?

Kath. Madam, this Glove.

Prin. Did he not send you twaine?

Kath. Yes Madam: and moreover,
Some thousand Verses of a faithfull Lover
A huge translation of hypocrisie,
Vildly compil'd, profound simplicity.

Mar. This, and these Pearls, to me sent Longaville.
The Letter is too long by halfe a mile.

Prin. I thinke no lesse: Dost thou not wish in heart
The Chaine were longer, and the Letter short?

Mar. I, or I would these hands might never part.

Prin. We are wise girles to mocke our Lovers so.

Rosa. They are worse fooles to purchase mocking so.
That same Birone ile torture ere I goe.

O that I knew he were but in by th' weeke,
How I would make him fawne, and beg, and seeke,
And wait the season, and observe the times,
And spend his prodigall wits in booteles rimes.
And shape his service all to my behests,
And make him proud to make me proud with jests.
So pertaunt like would I o'refway his state,
That he should be my foole, and I his fate.

Prin. None are so surely caught, when they are catcht,
As Wit turn'd foole: folly in Wisdome hatch'd,
Hath wisdomes warrant, and the helpe of Schoole,
And Wits owne grace to grace a learned Foole?

Ros. The bloud of youth burnes not with such excesse,
As gravities revolt to wantonesse.

Mar. Folly in fooles beares not so strong a note,
As fool'ry in the Wise, when Wit doth dote:
Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
To prove by Wit, worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Heere comes Boyet, and mirth in his face.

Boy. O I am stab'd with laughter, Wher's her Grace?

Prin. Thy newes Boyet?

Boy. Prepare Madam, prepare.

Arme Wenches arme, incounters mounted are,
Against your Peace, Love doth approach, disguis'd:
Armed in arguments, you'll be surpriz'd.
Muste your Wits, stand in your owne defence,
Or hide your heads like Cowards, and flye hence.

Prin. Saint Dennis, to S. Cupid: What are they,
That charge their breath against us? Say scout say.

Boy. Vnder the coole shade of a Siccamore,
I thought to close mine eyes some halfe an houre:
When loe to interrupt my purpos'd rest,
Toward that shade I might behold addrest,
The King and his companions: warily
I stole into a neighbour thicket by,
And over-heard, what you shall over-heare:
That by and by disguis'd they will be heere.
Their Herald is a pretty knavish Page:
That well by heart hath con'd his embassage,
Action and accent did they teach him there.
Thus must thou speake, and thus thy body beare.

And ever and anon they made a doubt,
Prefence majesticall would put him out:
For quoth the King, an Angell shall thou see:
Yet feare not thou, but speake audaciously.
The Boy reply'd, an Angell is not evil:
I should have fear'd her, had she beene a devill.
With that all laugh'd, and clap'd him on the shoulder,
Making the bold wagge by their praises bolder.
One rub'd his elbow thus, and fleer'd, and swore,
A better speech was never spoke before.
Another with his finger, and his thumb,
Cry'd via, we will doo't, come what will come.
The third he caper'd and cried, All goes well.
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and downe he fell:
With that they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter so profound,
That in this spleene ridiculous appeares,
To checke their folly passions, solemne teares.

Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?

Boy. They doe, they doe: and are apparell'd thus,
Like Muscovites, or Russians, or I gesse.
Their purpose is to parlee, to court, and dance,

And every one his Love-feat will advance,
Vnto his severall Mistresse: which they'll know
By favours severall, which they did bestow.

Prin. And will they so? the Gallants shall be taskt:
For Ladies; we will every one be maskt,
And not a man of them shall have the grace
Despight of sute, to see a Ladies face.
Hold Rosaline, this Favour thou shalt weare,
And then the King will court thee for his Deare:
Hold, take thou this my sweet, and give me thine,
So shall Birone take me for Rosaline.
And change your Favours too, so shall your Loves
Woode contrary, deceiv'd by these removes.

Rosa. Come on then, weare the favours most in sight.

Kath. But in this changing, What is your intent?

Prin. The effect of my intent isto crosse theirs:
They doe it but in mocking merriment,
And mocke for mocke is onely my intent.
Their severall counsels they unbosome shall,
To Loves mistooke, and so be mockt withall.
Vpon the next occasion that we meete,
With Visages displayed to talke and greet.

Rosa. But shall we dance, if they desire us too't?

Prin. No, to the death we will not move a foot,
Nor to their pen'd speech render we no grace:
But while 'tis spoke, each turne away her face.

Boy. Why that contempt will kill the keepers heart,
And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I doe it, and I make no doubt,
The rest will ne're come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport, as sport by sport overthrowne:
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our owne.
So shall we stay mocking entended game,
And they well mockt, depart away with shame. Sound.

Boy. The Trumpet sounds, be maskt, the maskers come.

Enter Black mooves with musicke, the Boy with a speech, and the rest of the Lords disguised.

Page. All hail, the richest Beauties on the earth.

Bir. Beauties no richer then rich Taffata.

Page. A holy parcell of the fairest dames that ever turn'd their backs to mortall viewes.

The Ladies turne their backs to him.

Bir. Their eyes villaine, their eyes.

Page. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortall viewes.
Out

Bir. True, out indeed.

Page. Out of your favours heavenly spirit vouchsafe
Not to behold.

Bir. Once to behold, rogue.

Page. Once to behold with your Sunne beamed eyes,
With your Sunne beamed eyes.

Bir. They will not answer to that Epythite,
You were best call it Daughter-beamed eyes.

Page. They doe not marke me, and that brings me out.

Bir. Is this your perfectnesse? be gone you rogue.

Rosa. What would these strangers?

Know their minds Boyes.

If they doe speake our language, 'tis our will
That some plaine man recount their purposes.
Know what thy would?

Boy. What would you with the Princes?

Bir. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.

Ros. What would they, say they?

Boy. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.

Rosa. Why that they have, and bid them so be gone.

Boy. She sayes you have it, and you may be gone.

Kin. Say to her we have measur'd many miles,
To tread a Measure with you on the grasse.

Boy. They say that they have measur'd many a mile,
To tread a Measure with you on this grasse.

Rosa. It is not so. Aske them how many inches
Is in one mile? If they have measur'd many,
The measure then of one is easily told.

Boy. It to come hither, you have measur'd miles,
And many miles: the Princeesse bids you tell,
How many inches doth fill up one mile?

Bir. Tell her we measure them by weary steps.

Boy. She heares her selfe.

Rosa. How many weary steps,
Of many weary miles you have ore-gone,
Are numbred in the travell of one mile?

Bir. We number nothing that we spend for you,
Our duty is so rich, so infinite,
That we may doe it still without accompt.

Vouchsafe to shew the sunshine of your face,
That we (like savages) may worship it.

Rosa. My face is but a Moone and clouded too.

Kin. Blessed are clouds, to doe as such clouds doe.
Vouchsafe bright Moone, and these thy starres to shine,
(Those clouds removed) upon our watery eyne,

Rosa. O vaine petitioner, beg a greater matter,
Thou now requestst but Mooneshine in the water.

Kin. Then in our measure, vouchsafe but one change.
Thou bidst me beg, this begging is not strange.

Rosa. Play musicke then: nay you must doe it soone,
Not yet no dance: thus change I like the Moone.

Kin. Will you not dance: How come you thus estranged?

Rosa. You tooke the Moone at full, but now shee's changed?

Kin. Yet still she is the Moone, and I the Man.

Rosa. The musicke playes, vouchsafe some motion to it: Our eares vouchsafe it.

Kin. But your legges should doe it.

Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance,
We'll not be nice, take hands, we will not dance.

Kin. Why take you hands then?

Rosa. Onely to part friends.

Curtse sweet hearts, and so the Measure ends.

Kin. More measure of this measure, be not nice.

Rosa. We can afford no more at such a price.

Kin. Prife your selves then: what buyes your company?

Rosa. Your absence onely.

Kin. That can never be.

Rosa. Then cannot we be bought: and so adue,
Twice to your Visor, and halfe once to you.

Kin. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.

Ros. In private then.

Kin. I am best pleas'd with that.

Bir. White handed Mistris, one sweet word with thee.

Prin. Honey, and Milke, and Suger: there is three.

Bir. Nay then two treyes, and if you grow so nice
Methegline, Wort, and Malmsey; well runne dice:
There's halfe a dozen sweets.

Prin. Seventh sweet adue, since you can cog,
He play no more with you.

Bir. One word in secret.

Prin. Let it not be sweet.

Bir. Thou greiv'st my gall

Prin.

Prin. Gall, bitter.

Bir. Therefore meete.

Du. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a word?

Mar. Name it.

Dum. Faire Lady:

Mar. Say you so? Faire Lord;
Take you that for your faire Lady.

Dum. Please it you,
As much in private, and Ile bid adieu.

Mar. What, was your vizard made without a tongue?

Long. I know the reason Lady why you aske.

Mar. O for your reason, quickly sir, I long.

Long. You have a double tongue within your maske.
And would afford my speechlesse vizard halfe.

Mar. Vcalequoth the Dutch-man: is not Vcale a Calf?

Long. A Calf faire Lady?

Mar. No, a faire Lord Calf.

Long. Let's part the word.

Mar. No, Ile not be your halfe:
Take all and weane it, it may prove an Oxe.

Long. Looke how you but to your selfe in these sharpe mockes.

Will you give hornes chaff Lady? Doe not so.

Mar. Then dye a Calf before your hornes doe grow.

Long. One word in private with you ere I dye.

Mar. Bleat softly then, the Butcher heares you cry.

Boy. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keene
As is the Razors edge, invisable:
Cutting a smaller haire then may be seene,
Above the sence of fence so sensible:
Seemeth their conference, their conceits have wings,
Fleeter then arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things
Ref. Not one word more my maides, breake off, breake off.

Bir. By heaven, all dry beaten with pure scoffe.

Kin. Fare-well madde Wenches, you have simple wits. Exeunt.

Prin. Twenty adicus my frozen Muscovits.
Are these the breed of wits so wondred at?

Boy. Tapers they are, with your sweet breathes puffed out.

Rosa. Wel-liking wits they have, grosse, grosse, fat, fat.

Prin. O poverty in wit, Kingly poore flout.
Will they not (thinke you) hang themselves to night?
Or ever but in vizards shew their faces:

This pert Birone was out of count'nance quite.

Ref. O! They were all in lamentable cases.

The King was weeping ripe for a good word.

Prin. Birone did sweare himselfe out of all suite.

Mar. Dumaine was at my service, and his sword:
No point (quoth I:) my servant straight was mute.

Ka. Lord Longaville said I came ore his heart:
And trow you what he call'd me?

Prin. Qualme perhaps.

Kat. Yes in good faith.

Prin. Goe sicknesse as thou art.

Ref. Well, better wits have worne plaine statute caps,
But will you heare; the King is my love sworne.

Prin. And quicke Birone hath plighted faith to me.

Kat. And Longaville was for my service borne.

Mar. Dumaine is mine as sure as barke on tree.

Boy. Madam; and pretty mistresses give care,
Immediately they will againe be heere
In their owne shapes: for it can never be,
They will digest this harsh indignity.

Prin. Will they returne?

Boy. They will they will, God knowes,
And leape for joy, though they are lame with blowes:
Therefore change Favours, and when they repaire,
Blow like sweet Roses, in this summer aire.

Prin. How blow? how blow? Speake to be understood.

Boy. Faire Ladies maskt, are Roses in their bud:
Dismaskt, their damaske sweet commixture shewne,
Are Angels vailing clouds, or Roses blowne.

Prin. Avant perplexity: What shall we doe,
If they returne in their owne shapes to wooe?

Rosa. Good Madam, if by me you'll be advis'd,
Let's mocke them still as well knowne as disguis'd:

Let us complaine to them what fooles were heere,
Disguis'd like Muscovites in shapelesse geare:
And wonder what they were, and to what end
Their shallow shewes, and Prologue vildely pen'd,
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should be presented at our Tent to us.

Boy. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.

Prin. Whip to our Tents, as Roes runnes ore Land.

Exeunt.

Enter the King and the rest.

King. Faire sir, God save you. Wher's the Princeesse?

Boy. Gone to her Tent.

Please it your Majesty command me any service to her?

King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

Boy. I will, and so will she, I know my Lord. Exit.

Bir. This fellow pickes up wit as Pigeons pease,
And utters it againe, when Love doth please.
He is Wits Pedler, and retails his Wares,
At Wakes, and Waffels, Meetings, Markets, Faires.

And we that sell by grosse, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with such shew.
This Gallant pins the Wenches on his sleeve.
Had he bin Adam, he had tempted Eve.
He can carve too, and lifpe: Why this is he,
That kist away his hand in courtesie.

This is the Ape of Forne, Monsieur the nice,
That when he playes at Tables, chides the Dice
In honorable tearmes: Nay he can sing
A meane most meanly, and in Vshering
Mend him who can: the Ladies call him sweet.
The staires as he treads on them kisse his feete.
This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To shew his teeth as white as Whale his bone.
And consciences that will not dye in debt,
Pay him the duty of hony-tongued Boyes.

Kin. A blister on his sweet tongue with my heart,
That put Armadoes Page out of his part.

Enter Ladies.

Bir. See where it comes. Behaviour what wer't thou,
Till this madman shew'd thee? And what art thou now?

Kin. All hille sweet Madam, and faire time of day.

Prin. Faire in all Haile is foule, as I conceive.

Kin. Construe my speeches better, if you may.

Prin. Then with me better, I will give you leave,

Kin. We came to visit you, and purpose now
To leade you to our Court, vouchsafe it then.

Prin. This field shall hold me, and so hold your vow:
Nor God, nor I, delights in perjur'd men.

Kin. Rebuke me not for that which you provoke:

The

The vertue of your eye must breake my oath.

Pr. You nickname vertue : vice you should have spoke :

For vertues office never breakes men troth.

Now by my maiden honor, yet as pure

As the unfullied Lilly, I protest,

A world of torments though I should endure,

I would not yeeld to be your houses guest :

So much I hate a breaking cause to be

Of heavenly oathes, vow'd with integrity.

Kin. O you have liv'd in deuolation heere,

Vnscene, unvisited, much to our shame.

Prin. Not so my Lord, it is not so I sweare,

We have had pastimes heere, and pleasant game,

A messe of Russians left us but of late.

Kin. How Madam? Russians?

Prin. I in truth, my Lord.

Trim gallants, full of Courtship and of state.

Rosa. Madam speake true. It is not so my Lord :

My Lady (to the manner of the dayes)

In curtesie gives undeseruing praise.

We foure indeed confronted were with foure

In Russian habit : Heere they stayed an heere,

And talk'd apace : and in that heere (my Lord)

They did not blesse us with one happy word.

I dare not call them fooles ; but this I thinke,

When they are thirsty, fooles would faine haue drinke.

Bir. This jest is dry to me. Faire gentle sweet,

Your wit makes wife things foolish, when we greeke

With eyes best seeing, heavens fiery eye :

By light we lose light : your capacity

Is of that nature, that to your huge store,

Wise things seeme foolish, and rich things but poore.

Ref. This proves you wife and rich : for in my eye—

Bir. I am a foole, and full of poverty.

Ref. But that you take what doth to you belong,

It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.

Bir. O, I am yours and all that I possesse.

Ref. All the foole mine.

Bir. I cannot give you lesse.

Ref. Which of the Vizards was it that you wore?

Bir. Where? when? What Vizard?

Why demand you this?

Ref. There, then, that vizard, that superfluous case,

That hid the worse, and shew'd the better face.

Kin. We are discrid,

They'l mocke us now downeright.

Duk. Let us confesse, and turne it to a jest.

Prin. Amaz'd my Lord? Why looks your Highnesse faded?

Ref. Helpe hold his browes, hee'l swoone : why looke you pale?

Sea-sicke I thinke comming from Muscovy.

Bir. Thus poure the starres downe plagues for perjury.

Can any face of brass hold longer out?

Heere stand I, Lady dart thy skill at me,

Bruise me with scorne, confound me with a flout.

Thrust thy sharpe wit quite through my ignorance.

Cut me to peeces with thy keene conceit :

And I will wish thee never more to dance,

Nor never more in Russian habit waite.

O! never will I trust to speeches pen'd,

Nor to the motion of a Schoole-boyes tongue.

Nor never come in vizard to my friend,

Nor woo in rime like a blind-harpers songue,

Taffata phrases, silken tearmes precise,

Three-pil'd Hyperboles, spruce affection ;

Figures pedanticall, these summer flies,
Have blowne me full of maggot ostentation.

I doe forswear them, and I heere protest,

By this white Glove (how white the hand God knows)

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest

In russet yeas, and honest kersie noes.

And to begin Wench, so God helpe me law,

My love to thee is sound, sans cracke or flaw.

Rosa. Sans, sans, I pray you.

Bir. Yet I have a tricke

Of the old rage : beare with me, I am sicke.

Ile leave it by degrees : soft, let us see,

Write Lord haue mercy on us, on those three,

They are infected, in their hearts it lyes :

They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes :

These Lords are visited, you are not free :

For the Lords tokens on you doe I see.

Prin. No, they are free that gave these tokens to us.

Bir. Our states are forfeit, seeke not to undoe us.

Ref. It is not so ; for how can this be true,

That you stand forfeit, being those that sue.

Bir. Peace, for I will not have to doe with you,

Ref. Nor shall not, if I doe as I intend.

Bir. Speake for your selves, my wit is at an end.

King. Teach us sweet Madame, for our rude transgression, some faire excuse.

Prin. The fairest is confession.

Were you not heere but even now, disguis'd?

Kin. Madam, I was.

Prin. And were you well advis'd?

Kin. I was faire Madam.

Prin. When you then were heere,

What did you whisper in your Ladies eare?

Kin. That more then all the world I did respect her.

Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will reject
her.

Kin. Vpon mine Honor no.

Prin. Peace, peace, forbear :

Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.

Kin. Despise me when I breake this oath of mine.

Prin. I will, and therefore keepe it. Rosaline,

What did the Russian whisper in your eare?

Rosa. Madam, he swore that he did hold me deare

As precious eye-sight, and did value me

Above this World : adding there moreover,

That he would Wed me, or else dye my Lover.

Prin. God give thee joy of him : the Noble Lord

Most honorably doth uphold his word.

Kin. What meane you Madame?

By my life, my troth,

I never swore this Lady such an oath.

Ref. By heaven you did ; and to confirme it plaine, you gave me this : But take it fir againe.

King. My faith and this, the Princeesse I did give,

I knew her by this Jewell on her sleeve.

Prin. Pardon me fir, this Jewell did she weare,

And Lord Biron (I thanke him) is my deare.

What? Will you have me, or your Pearle againe?

Bir. Neither of either, I remit both twaine.

I see the tricke on't : Heere was a consent,

Knowing aforehand of our merriment,

To dash it like a Christmas Comedy.

Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight Zany,

Some mumble-newes, some trencher-knight, some Dicke

That smiles his cheek in yeares, and knowes the tricke

To make my Lady laugh, when she's dispos'd ;

Told

Told our intents before : which once disclos'd,
The Ladies did change Favours, and then we Following the signes, woo'd but the signe of she.
Now to our perjury, to adde more terror,
We are againe forsworne in will and error.
Much upon this it is : and might not you
Forefall our sport, to make us thus untrue ?
Doe not you know my Ladies foot by'th squier ?
And laugh upon the apple of her eye ?
And stand betweene her backe fir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, jesting merrily ?
You put our Page out : goe, you are allowd
Die when you will, a smocke shall be your shrowd.
You leere upon me, doe you ? There's an eye
Wounds like a Leaden sword.
Boy. Full merrily hath this brave managery this care-reere beene rutine.
Bir. Loe, he is tilting straight. Peace, I have done.

Enter Clowne.

Welcome pure wit, thou part'st a faire fray.
Clo. O Lord fir, they would kno,
Whether the three Worthies shall come in, or no.
Bir. What, are there but three ?
Clo. No fir, but it is vara fine,
For every one pursents three.
Bir. And three times thrice is nine.
Clo. Not so fir, under correction fir, I hope it is not so.
You cannot beg us fir, I can assure you fir, we know what we know : I hope fir three times thrice fir.
Bir. Is not nine.
Clo. Under correction fir, wee know where-untill it doth amount.
Bir. By love, I alwayes tooke three threes for nine.
Clo. O Lord fir, it were pittie you should get your living by reckning fir.
Bir. How much is it ?
Clo. O Lord fir, the parties themselves, the actors fir will shew where-untill it doth amount : for mine owne part, I am (as they say, but to perfect one man in one poore man) Pompon the great fir.
Bir. Art thou one of the Worthies ?
Clo. It pleased them to thinke me worthy of Pompey the great : for mine owne part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am to stand for him.
Bir. Goe, bid them prepare. Exit.
Clo. We will turne it finely off fir, we will take some care.

King. Birone, they will shame us :
Let them not approach.
Bir. We are shame-prooffe my Lord : and 'tis some policy, to have one shew worse then the Kings and his company.
Kin. I say they shall not come.
Prin. Nay my good Lord, let me ore rule you now ;
That sport best pleases, that doth least know how.
Where Zeale strives to content, and the contents
Dies in the Zeale of that which it presents :
Their forme confounded, makes most forme in mirth,
When great things labouring perish in their birth.
Bir. A right description of our sport my Lord.

Enter Braggart.

Brag. Anointed, I implore so much expence of thy royall sweet breath, as will vtter a brace of words.

Prin. Doth this man serve God ?
Bir. Why aske you ?
Prin. He speak's not like a man of God's making.
Brag. That's all one my faire sweet hony Monarch :
For I protest, the Schoolmaster is exceeding fantastickall : Too too vaine, too too vaine. But we will put it (as they say) to Fortuna delaguar. I wish you the peace of mind most royall cupplement.
King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies ;
He presents Hector of Troy, the Swaine Pompey the great,
the Parish Curate Alexander, Armadoes Page Hercules, the Pedant Judas Machabens : And if these foure Worthies in their first shew thrine, these foure will change habites, and present the other five.
Bir. There is five in the first shew.
Kin. You are deceived, tis not so.
Bir. The Pedant, the Braggart, the Hedge-Priest, the Foole, and the Boy.
A bare throw at Novum, and the whole world againe,
Cannot pricke out five such, take each one in's vaine.
Kin. The ship is under saile, and here she comes amaine.

Enter Pompey.

Clo. I Pompey am.
Boy. You lye, you are not he.
Clo. I Pompey am.
Boy. With Libbards head on knee.
Bir. Well said old mocker,
I must needs be friends with thee.
Clo. I Pompey am, Pompey surnam'd the big.
Do. The great.
Clo. It is great fir : Pompey surnam'd the great :
That oft in field, with Targe and Shield,
did make my foe to sweat :
And travailing along this coast, I heere am come by chance,
And lay my Armes before the legs of this sweet Lasse of France.
If your Ladiship would say thankes Pompey, I had done.
Prin. Great thankes great Pompey.
Clo. Tis not so much worth : but I hope I was perfect. I made a little fault in great.
Bir. My hat to a halfe-peny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

Enter Curate, for Alexander.

Curat. When in the world I liv'd, I was the worlds Commander ;
By East, West, North, and South, I spread my conquering might
My Scutcheon plaine declares that I am Alisander.
Boy. Your nose saies no, you are not :
For it stands too right.
Bir. Your nose smels no, in this most tender smelling Knight.
Prin. The Conqueror is dismayd :
Proceed good Alexander.
Cur. When in the world I lived, I was the worlds Commander.
Boy. Most true, 'tis right : you were so Alisander.
Bir. Pompey the great.
Clo. Your servant and Costard.
Bir. Take away the Conqueror, take away Alisander.
Clo. O fir, you have overthrowne Alisander the conqueror : you will be scrap'd out of the painted cloth for this.

this : your Lion that holds his Pollax sitting on a close stoole, will be given to Ajax. He will be the ninth' worthy. A Conqueror, and affraid to speake? Runne away for shame Alisander. There an't shall please you : a foolish mild man, an honest man, looke you, and soone dasht. He is a marvellous good neighbour insooth, and a very good Bowler : but for Alisander, alas you see, how 'tis a little ore-parted. But there are Worthies a coming, will speake their mind in some other sort.

Clo. Stand aside good Pompey.

Exit Clo.

Enter Pedant for Iudas, and the Boy for Hercules.

Ped. Great Hercules is presented by this Impe, Whose Club kil'd Cerberus that three-headed Cannus, And when he was a babe, a child, a shrimpe, Thus did he strangle Serpents in his Manus : Quoniam, he seemeth in minority, Ergo, I come with this Apology. Keepe some state in thy Exit, and vanish.

Exit Boy.

Ped. Iudas I am.

Dum. A Iudas?

Ped. Not Iscariot sir.

Iudas I am yetlip'd Machabens,

Dum. Iudas Machabens clipt, is plaine Iudas.

Bir. A kissing traitor. How art thou prov'd Iudas?

Ped. Iudas I am.

Dum. The more shame for you Iudas.

Ped. What meane you sir?

Boy. To make Iudas hang himselfe.

Ped. Begin sir, you are my elder.

Bir. Well follow'd, Iudas was hang'd on an Elder.

Ped. I will not be put out of countenance.

Bir. Because thou hast no face.

Ped. What is this.

Boy. A Citterne head.

Dum. The head of a bodkin.

Bir. A deaths face in a ring.

Lon. The face of an old Roman coyne, scarce seene.

Boy. The pummell of Casars Faulchion.

Dum. The carv'd-bone face on a Flaske.

Bir. Saint Georges halfe cheeke in a brooch.

Dum. I, and in a brooch of Lead.

Bir. I, and worne in the cap of a Tooth-drawer.

And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.

Ped. You have put me out of countenance.

Bir. False, we have given thee faces.

Ped. But you have out-fac'd them all.

Bir. And thou wer't a Lion, we would doe so.

Boy. Therefore as he is, an Ass, let him goe :

And so adieu sweet Iude. Nay, why dost thou stay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Bir. For the Ass to the Iude : give it him. Iudas away.

Ped. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boy. A light for monsieur Iudas, it growes darke, he may stumble.

Prin. Alas poore Machabens, how hath he beene baited.

Enter Braggart.

Bir. Hide thy head Achilles, heere comes Hector in Armes.

Dum. Though my mockes come home by me, I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.

Boy. But is this Hector?

Kin. I thinke Hector was not so cleane timber'd.

Lon. His legge is too big for Hector.

Dum. More Calfe certaine.

Boy. No, he is best indued in the small.

Bir. This can't be Hector.

Dum. He's a god or a Painter, for he makes faces.

Brag. The Armipotent Mars, of Launces the almighty, gave Hector a gift.

Dum. A gilt Nutmegge.

Bir. A Lemmon.

Lon. Stucke with Cloves.

Dum. No cloven.

Brag. The Armipotent Mars, of Launces the almighty, gave Hector a gift, the beire of Ilion;

A man so breathed, that certaine he would fight : yea From morne till night, out of his Pavillion.

I am that Flower.

Dum. That Mint.

Lon. That Cullambine.

Brag. Sweet Lord Longaville reine thy tongue.

Lon. I must rather give it the reine : for it runnes against Hector.

Dum. I, and Hector's a Grey-hound.

Brag. The sweet War-man is dead and rotten, Sweet chukes, beat not the bones of the buried : But I will forward with my device ;

Sweet Royalty bestow on me the Sence of hearing.

Birone Steps forth.

Prin. Speake brave Hector, we are much delighted.

Brag. I doe adore thy sweet Graces slipper.

Boy. Loves her by the foot.

Dum. He may not by the yard.

Brag. This Hector farre surmounted Hanniball.

The party is gone.

Clo. Fellow Hector, she is gone ; she is two moneths on her way.

Brag. What meanest thou ?

Clo. Faith unlesse you play the honest Trojan, the poore Wench is cast away : she's quicke, the child brags in her belly already : tis yours.

Brag. Dost thou infamonize me among Potentates ? Thou shalt dye.

Clo. Then shall Hector be whipt for Iaquenetta that is quicke by him, and hang'd for Pompey, that is dead by him.

Dum. Most rare Pompey.

Boy. Renowned Pompey.

Bir. Greater then great, great, great, great Pompey : Pompey the huge.

Dum. Hector trembles.

Bir. Pompey is moved, more Atees more Atees stirre them, or stirre them on.

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Bir. I, if a have no more mans blood in's belly, then will sup a Flea.

Brag. By the North-pole I doe challenge thee.

Clo. I will not fight with a pole like a Northern man ; Ile slash, Ile doe it by the sword : I pray you let me borrow my Armes againe.

Dum. Roome for the incensed Worthies.

Clo. Ile doe it in my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey.

Page. Master, let me take you a button hole lower : Doe you not see Pompey is uncasing for the combat : what

meane

meane you? you will lose your reputation.

Brag. Gentlemen and Souldiers pardon me, I will not combat in my shirt.

Du. You may not deny it, Pompey hath made the challenge.

Brag. Sweet bloods, I both may, and will.

Bir. What reason have you for't?

Bra. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt, I goe woolward for penance.

Eoy. True, and it was injoyned him in Rome for want of Linnen: since when, Ile be sworn he wore none, but a dishclout of Laquenettas, and that hee weares next his heart for a favour.

Enter a Messenger, Monsieur Marcade.

Mar. God save you Madam.

Prin. Welcome Marcade, but that thou interruptest our merriment.

Merc. I am sorry Madam, for the newes I bring is heavy in my tongue. The King your father.

Prin. Dead for my life.

Mar. Even so: My tale is told.

Bir. Worthies away, the Scene begins to cloud.

Bra. For mine owne part, I breathe free breath: I have seene the day of wrong, through the little hole of discretion, and I will right my selfe like a Souldier.

Exeunt Worthies.

Kin. How fare's your Majesty?

Prin. Boyes prepare, I will away to night.

Kin. Madam not so, I doe beseech you stay.

Prin. Prepare I say. I thanke you gracious Lords For all your faire endeavours and entreats: Out of a new sad-soule, that you vouchsafe, In your rich wisdom to excuse, or hide, The liberall opposition of our spirits, If over-boldly we have borne our selves, In the converse of breath (your gentlenesse Was guilty of it.) Farewell worthy Lord: A heavy heart beares not an humble tongue. Excuse me so, comming so short of thanks, For my great suit, so easily obtain'd.

Kin. The extreme parts of time, extremely formes All causes to the purpose of his speed: And often at his very loose decides That, which long proceffe could not arbitrate. And though the mourning brow of progeny Forbid the smiling curtesie of Love: The holy suite which faine it would convince, Yet since loves argument was first on foote, Let not the cloud of sorrow juggle it From what it purposed: since to waile friends lost, Is not by much so wholesome profitable, As to rejoyce at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not, my griefes are double.

Bir. Honest plain words, best pierce the eares of griefe And by these badges understand the King, For your faire sakes have we neglected time, Plaid foule play with our oathes: your beauty Ladies Hath much deformed us, fashioning our humors Even to the opposed end of our intents. And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous: As Love is full of unbecoming straines, All wanton as a child, skipping and vaine. Form'd by the eye, and therefore like the eye. Full of straying shapes, of habits, and of formes

Varying in subjects as the eye doth roule, To every varied object in his glance: Which party-coated presence of loose love Put on by us, if in your heavenly eyes, Have misbecom'd our oathes and gravities. Those heavenly eyes that looke into these faults, Suggested us to make: therefore Ladies Our love being yours, the error that Love makes Is likewise yours. We to our selves prove false, By being once false, for ever to be true To those that make us both, faire Ladies you, And even that falshood in it selfe a sinne, Thus purifies it selfe, and turnes to grace.

Prin. We have receiv'd your Letters, full of Love: Your Favours, the Ambassadors of Love. And in our maiden counsaile rated them, At courtship, pleasant jest, and curtesie, As bumbast and as lining to the time: But more devout then these are our respects Have we not beene, and therefore met your loves In their owne fashion, like a merriment.

Du. Our letters Madam, shew'd much more then jest.

Long. So did our looks.

Rosa. Wee did not coate them so.

King. Now at the latest minute of the houre, Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time me thinkes too short, To make a world-without-end bargain in; No, no my Lord, your Grace is perjur'd much, Full of deare guiltinesse, and therefore this: If for my Love (as there is no such cause) You will doe ought, this shall you doe for me, Your oath I will not trust: but goe with speed To some forlorne and naked Hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world: There stay, untill the twelve Celestiall Signes Have brought about their annuall reckoning. If this austere infociable life, Change not your offer made in heate of blood: If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging, and thin weedes Nip not the gaudy blossomes of your Love, But that it beare this triall, and last love: Then at the expiration of the yeare, Come challenge me, challenge me by these deserts, And by this Virgin palme, now kissing thine, I will be thine: and till that instant shut My woefull selfe up in a mourning house, Raining the teares of lamentation, For the remembrance of my Fathers death. If this thou doe deny, let our hands part, Neither intitled in the others heart.

King. If this, or more then this, I would deny, To flatter up these powers of mine with rest, The sodaine hand of death close up mine eye. Hence ever then, my heart is in thy breast.

Bir. And what to me my Love? and what to me?

Ros. You must be purged too, your finnes are rack'd. You are attaint with fault and perjury: Therefore if you my favour meane to get, A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest, But seeke the weary beds of people sicke.

Dum. But what to me my love? but what to me?

Kat. A wife? a beard, faire health, and honesty; With three-fold love, I wish you all these three.

Dum. O shall I say, I thanke you gentle wife?

Kat. Not so my Lord, a twelvemonth and a day,

Ile marke no words that smooth fac'd wooers say.

Come when the King doth to my Lady come :

Then if I have much love, Ile give you some.

Dum. Ile serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet sweare not, least ye be forsworne agen.

Long. What sayes Maria?

Mari. At the twelve-months end,
Ile change my blacke Gowne, for a faithfull friend.

Lon. Ile stay with patience : but the time is long.

Mari. The liker you, few taller are so yong.

Bir. Studies my Lady? Mistris, looke on me,
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye :
What humble suite attends thy answer there,
Impole some service on me for my Love.

Rosa. Oft have I heard of you my Lord Birone,
Before I saw you : and the worlds large tongue
Proclaimes you for a man replete with mockes,
Full of comparisons, and wounding floutes :
Which you on all estates will execute,
That lie within the mercy of your wit.
To weed this Wormewood from your fruitfull braine,
And therewithall to win me, if you please,
Without the which I am not to be won :
You shall this twelve-month terme from day to day,
Visite the speechlesse sicke, and still converse
With groaning wretches : and your taske shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Bir. To move wilde laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be, it is impossible.

Mirth cannot move a soule in agonie.

Rosa. Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fooles :
A jests prosperitie, lies in the care
Of him that heares it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it : then, if sickly eares,
Deaft with the clamors of their owne deare groanes,
Will heare your idle scornes ; continue then,
And I will have you, and that fault withall.
But if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall finde you empty of that fault,
Right joyfull of your reformation.

Bir. A twelve-month? Well : befall what will befall
Ile jest a twelve-month in an Hospitall.

Prim. I sweet my Lord, and so I take my leave.

King. No Madam, we will bring you on your way.

Bir. Our wooing doth not end like an old Play :
Iacke hath not Gill : these Ladies courtesie
Might well have made our sport a Comedie.

King. Come sir, it wants a twelve-month and a day,
And then 'twill end.

Bir. That's too long for a Play.

Enter Braggart.
Brag. Sweet Majesty vouchsafe me.

Prim. Was not that Hector?

Dum. The worthy Knight of Troy.

Brag. I will kisse thy Royall finger, and take leave.
I am a Votary, I have vow'd to Inguenetta to hold the Plough for her sweet love three yeeres. But most esteem'd greatnesse, will you heare the Dialogue that the two Learned men have compiled, in praise of the Owle and the Cuckow? It should have followed in the end of our shew.

Kin. Call them forth quickly, we will doe so.

Brag. Holla, Approach.

Enter all.

This side is Hiemus, Winter.

This Ver, the Spring : the one maintained by the Owle,
The other by the Cuckow.

Ver, begin.

The Song.

When Daisies pied, and Violets blew,
And Cuckow-buds of yellow brow :
And Lady-smocks all silver white,
Do paint the Meadows with delight,
The Cuckow then on every Tree,
Mockes married men, for thus sings he,
Cuckow.
Cuckow, Cuckow : O word of feare,
Unpleasing to a married eare.

When Shepheards pipe on Oaten straws,
And merry Larkes are Ploughmens clockes :
When Turtles tread, and Rookes and Doves,
And Maidens bleach their summer smokes :
The Cuckow then on every tree
Mockes married men ; for thus sings he,
Cuckow.
Cuckow, Cuckow : O word of feare,
Unpleasing to a married eare.

Winter.

When Ickles hang by the wall,
And Dicke the Shepheard blowes his nail ;
And Tom beares Logges into the Hall,
And Milke comes frozen home in pail :
When blood is nipt, and wayes be fowle,
Then nightly sings the staring Owle
Tu-whit so-who.
A merry note,
While greasie Ione doth keele the pot.

When all along the Wind doth blow,
And cossing drownes the Parsons Saw :
And Birds sit brooding in the Snow,
And Marrians Nose looks red and raw :
When roasted Crabs hiss in the bowle,
Then nightly sings the staring Owle,
Tu-whit so-who :
A merry note,
While greasie Ione doth keele the pot.

Brag. The words of Mercurie,
Are harsh after the songs of Apollo ;
You that way ; we this way.

Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

A MIDSOMMER Nights Dreame.

Actus Primus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolita, with others.

Theseus.

Now faire Hippolita, our nuptiall houre
Drawes on apace: foure happy daies bring in Another Moon: but oh, me thinks, how slow
This old Moon wanes? She lingers my de-
Like to a Step-dame, or a Dowager, (sires
Long withering out a yong mans reuennew.

Hip. Foure daies will quickly steep theselves in nights,
Foure nights will quickly dreame away the time:
And then the Moone, like to a silver bow,
Now bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

The. Go Philoftrate,
Stirre up the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth,
Turne melancholy forth to Funerals:
The pale companion is not for our pompe.
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And wonne thy love, doing thee injuries:
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pompe, with triumph, and with revelling.

Enter Egens and his daughter Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned Duke.

The. Thanks good Egens: what's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation, come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.

Stand forth Demetrius.

My Noble Lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her.

Stand forth Lysander.

And my gracious Duke,
This hath bewitch'd the bosome of my childe:
Thou, thou Lysander, thou hast given her rimes,
And interchang'd love-tokens with my childe:
Thou hast by Moone-light at her window sung,
With faining voice, verses of faining love,
And stolne the impression of her fantasie,
With bracelets of thy haire, rings, gawdes, conceits,
Knackes, trifles, Nose-gaies, sweet meats (messengers
Of strong prevailment in vnhardned youth)

With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughters heart,
Turn'd her obedience (which is due to me)
To stubborn harshnesse. And my gracious Duke,
Be it so she will not heere before your Grace,
Consent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient priuledge of Athens,
As she is mine, I may dispose of her;
Which shall be either to this Gentleman,
Or to her death, according to our Law,
Immediately provided in that case.

The. What say you Hermia? be advis'd faire Maid.
To you your Father should be as a God;
One that compos'd your beauties; yea and one
To whom you are but as a forme in waxe
By him imprinted: and within his power,
To leave the figure, or disfigure it:
Demetrius is a worthy Gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

The. In himselfe he is.
But in this kinde, wanting your fathers voice
The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment looke.

Her. I do entreat your Grace to pardon me,
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concerne my modestie
In such a preface heere to pleade my thoughts:
But I beseech your Grace, that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the society of men.
Therefore faire Hermia question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether (if you yeeld not to your fathers choice)
You can endure the livery of a Nunne,
For aye to be in shady Cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymnes to the cold fruitlesse Moone,
Thrice blessed they that maister to their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage,
But earthlier happy is the Rose distill'd,
Then that which withering on the virgin thorne,
Growes, lives, and dies, in single blessednesse.

N

Her.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die my Lord,
Ere I will yeeld my virgin Patent up
Vnto his Lordship; to whose unwilhed yoke,
My soule consents not to give soveraignty.

The. Take time to pause, and by the next new Moön
The sealing day betwixt my love and me,
For everlasting bond of fellowship:
Vpon that day either prepare to die,
For disobedience to you fathers will,
Or else to wed Demetrius as hee would,
Or on Dianes Altar to protest
For aie, austeritv, and single life.

Dem. Relent sweet Hermia, and Lysander, yeelde
Thy crazed title to my certaine right.

Lys. You have her fathers love, Demetrius:
Let me have Hermias: do you marry him.

Egeus. Scornfull Lysander, true, he hath my Love;
And what is mine, my love shall render him.
And she is mine, and all my right of her,
I do estate vnto Demetrius.

Lys. I am my Lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well posselt: my love is more then his:
My fortunes every way as fairly ranck'd
(If not with vantage) as Demetrius:
And (which is more then all these boasts can be)
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia.

Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, Ile auouch it to his head,
Made love to Neders daughter, Helena,
And won her soule: and she (sweet Lady) dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in Idolatry,
Vpon this spotted and inconstant man:

The. I must confesse, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof:
But being over-full of selfe-affaires,
My minde did lose it. But Demetrius come,
And come Egeus, you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.
For you faire Hermia, looke you arme your selfe,
To fit your fancies to your Fathers will;
Or else the Law of Athens yeelds you vp
(Which by no meanes we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of single life.

Come my Hippolita, what cheare my love?
Demetrius and Egeus go along:
I must imploy you in some businesse
Against our nuptials, and conferre with you
Of something, neerely that concernes your selves.

Ege. With dutie and desire we follow you. Exeunt.

Manet Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. How now my love? Why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the Roses there do fade so fast?

Her. Belike for want of raine, which I could well
Beteeme them, from the tempest of mine eyes.

Lys. Hermia for ought that ever I could reade,
Could ever heare by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth,
But either it was different in blood.

Her. O crosseltoo high to be enthal'd to love.

Lys. Or else misgraffed, in respect of yeares.

Her. O spight! too old to be ingag'd to yong.

Lys. Or else it stood upon the choise of merit.

Her. O hell! to chooise love by anothers eye.

Lys. Or if there were a simpathe in choise,
Warre, death, or sicknesse, did lay siege to it;
Making it momentarie, as a sound:

Swift as a shadow, short as any dreame,
Briefe as the lightning in the collied night,
That (in a spleene) vnfolde both heaven and earth;
And ere a man hath power to say, behold,
The jawes of darknesse do devour it up:
So quicke bright things come to confusion.

Her. If then true Lovers have beene ever crost,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our triall patience;
Because it is a customary crosse,
As due to love, as thoughts, and dreames, and sighes,
Wishes and teares; poore Fancies followers.

Lys. A good perswasion; therefore heare me Hermia,
I have a Widdow Aunt, a dowager,
Of great reuennue, and she hath no childe,
From Athens is her house remov'd seven leagues,
And she respects me, as her onely sonne:
There gentle Hermia, may I marry thee,
And to that place, the sharpe Athenian Law
Cannot pursue us. If thou lov'st me, then
Steale forth thy fathers house to morrow night:
And in the wood, a league without the towne,
(Where I did meeete thee once with Helena,
To do observance for a morne of May)
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander,
I sweare to thee, by Cupids strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicity of Venus Doves,
By that which knitteth soules, and prospers love,
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage Queene,
When the false Trojan vnder saile was scene,
By all the vowes that ever men have broke,
(In number more then ever women spoke)
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To morrow truly will I meeete with thee.

Lys. Keepe promise love: looke here comes Helena.

Enter Helena.

Her. God speede faire Helena, whither away?

Hel. Cal you me faire? that faire againe unsay,

Demetrius loves you faire: O happy faire!
Your eyes are loadstarres, and your tongues sweet ayre
More tuneable then Larke to shepheards care,
When wheate is greene, when hauthorne buds appeare,
Sicknesse is catching: O were favour so,
Your words I'd catch, faire Hermia ere I go,
My care should catch your voice, my eye, your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongues sweet melodie,
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest Ile give to be to you translated:
O teach me how you looke, and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius hart.

Her. I frowne upon him, yet he loves me still.

Hel. O that your frownes would teach my smiles such skil.

Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.

Hel. O that my prayers could such affection moove.

Her. The more I hate the more he followes me.

Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.

Her. His folly Helena is none of mine.

Hel. None but your beauty, wold that fault were mine

Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face,

Lysander and my selfe will flie this place.

Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens like a Paradise to mee.

O then, what graces in my Love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven into hell?

Lys. Helen, to you our mindes we will vnfold,
To morrow night, when Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage, in the watry glasse,
Decking with liquid pearle, the bladed grasse
(A time that Lovers flights doth still conceale)
I through Athens gates, haue we devis'd to steale.

Her. And in the wood, where often you and I,
Vpon faint Primrose beds, were wont to lye,
Emptying our bosomes, of their counsell i weld:
There my Lysander, and my selfe shall meete,
And thence from Athens turne away our eyes
To seeke new friends and strange companions;
Farewell sweet play-fellow, pray thou for us,
And good lucke grant thee thy Demetrius.
Keepe word Lysander we must starve our sight,
From lovers foode, till morrow deepe midnight.

Exit Hermia.

Lys. I will my Hermia. Helena adieu,
As you on him, Demetrius dotes on you. Exit Lysander.

Hel. How happy some, ore othersome can be?
Through Athens I am thought as faire as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so:
He will not know, what all, but he doth know,
And as hee erres, doting on Hermias eyes;
So I, admiring of his quairities:
Things base and vilde, holding no quantity;
Love can transpoise to forme and dignity,
Lovelookes not with the eyes, but with the minde;
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blinde.
Nor hath loves minde of any judgement taste:
Wings and no eyes, figure, vnheedy haste.
And therefore is Love said to be a childe,
Because in choise he often is beguil'd,
As waggish boyes in game themselves forswear;
So the boy Love is perjur'd every where.
For ere Demetrius lookt on Hermia eyne,
He hail'd downe oathes that he was only mine.
And when this Haile some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolv'd, and showres of oathes did melt.
I will go tell him of faire Hermias flight:
Then to the wood will he, to morrow night,
Pursue her; and for his intelligence,
If I haue thanks, it is a deere expence:
But heerein meane I to enrich my paine,
To haue his sight thither, and backe againe. Exit.

Enter Quince the Carpenter, Snug the Ioyner, Bottom the Weaver, Flute the bellows-mender, Snow the Tinker, and Starveling the Taylor.

Qu. Is all our company heere?

Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the scrip.

Qu. Here is the scrowle of every mans name, which is thought fit through all Athens, to play in our Enterlude before the Duke and the Dutches, on his wedding day at night.

Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on: then reade the names of the Actors: and so grow on to a point.

Qu. Marry our play is the most lamentable Comedy, and most cruell death of Pyramus and Thisbe.

Bot. A very good peece of worke I assure you, and a merry. Now good Peter Quince, call forth your Actors by the scrowle. Maisters spread your selves.

Quince. Answer as I call you: Nick Bottom the Weaver.

Bottom. Ready; name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quince. You Nicke Bottom are set downe for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus, a lover, or a tyrant?

Quince. A Lover that kills himselfe most gallantly for love.

Bot. That will aske some teares in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience looke to their cies: I will moove stormes; I will condole in some measure. To the rest yet, my chiefe humour is for a tyrant. I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to teare a Cat in, to make all iplit the raging Rocks; and shivering shocks shall breake the locks of prison gates, and Phibbus carre shall shine from farre, and make and marre the foolish Fates. This was lofty. Now name the rest of the Players. This is Ercles veine, a tyrants veine: a lover is more condoling.

Quin. Francis Flute the bellows-mender,

Flu. Heere Peter Quince.

Qu. You must take Thisbe on you.

Flu. What is Thisbe, a wandring Knight?

Qu. It is the Lady that Pyramus must love.

Flu. Nay faith, let not mee play a woman, I haue a beard comming.

Qu. That's all one, you shall play it in a Maske, and you may speake as small as you will.

Bot. And I may hide my face, let me play Thisbe too: Ile speake in a monstrous little voyce, Thisbe Thisbe, ah Pyramus my lover deare, thy Thisbe deare, and Lady deare.

Quin. No no, you must play Pyramus; and Flute, you Thisbe.

Bot. Well, proceed.

Qu. Robin Starveling the Taylor.

Star. Heere Peter Quince.

Quince. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisbes mother?

Tom Snow, the tinker.

Snow. Heere Peter Quince.

Qu. You Pyramus father; my selfe, Thisbes father; Snug the loyner, you the Lyons part; and I hope there is a play fitted.

Snug. Haue you the Lyons part written? pray you if it be, give it me, for I am slow of studie.

Qu. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bot. Let mee play the Lyon too; I will roare that I will doe any mans heart good to heare me. I will roare, that I will make the Duke say, Let him roare againe, let him roare againe.

Qu. If you should doe it too terribly, you would fright the Dutchesse and the Ladies, that they would shriek, and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us every mothers sonne.

Bottom. I graunt you friends, if that you should fright the Ladies out of their Wittes, they would haue no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voyce so, that I will roare you as gently as any sucking Dove; I will roare and 'twere any Nightingale.

Quince. You can play no part but Pyramus, for Pyra- mis is a sweet-fac'd man, a proper man as one shall see in a summers day; a most lovely Gentleman-like man, therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it, in either your straw-colour beard, your orange tawny beard, your purple in graine beard, or your French-crowne colour'd beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French-Crownes have no haire at all, and then you will play bare-fac'd. But maisters here are your parts, and I am to intreat you, request you, and desire you, to con them by to morrow night: and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the Towne, by Moone-light, there we will rehearse: for if we meete in the Citie, we shalbe dog'd with company, and our deuises knowne. In the meane time, I will draw a bil of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you faile me not.

Bot. We will meete, and there we may rehearse more obscenely and couragiously. Take paine, be perfect, adieu.

Quin. At the Dukes oake we meete.

Bot. Enough, hold or cut bow-strings.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter a Fairie at one doore, and Robin good-fellow at another.

Rob. How now spirit, whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale, through bush, through briar, Over parke, over pale, through flood, through fire, I do wander every where, swifter then Moons sphere; And I serve the Fairy Queene, to dew her orbs upon the The Cowslips tall, her pensioners be, (green. In their gold coats, spots you see, Those be Rubies, Fairie favors, In those freckles, live their favors, I must go seeke some dew drops heere, And hang a pearle in every cowslips eare. Farewell thou Lob of spirits, Ile be gon, Our Queene and all her Elues come heere anon.

Rob. The King doth keepe his Revels here to night, Take heed the Queene come not within his sight, For Oberon is pasing fell and wrath, Because that she, as her attendant, hath A lovely boy stolne from an Indian King, She never had so sweet a changeling, And jealous Oberon would have the childe Knight of his traine, to trace the Forrests wilde. But she (perforce) with-holds the loved boy, Crownes him with flowers, and makes him all her joy. And now they never meete in grove, or greene, By fountaine cleere, or spangled star-light sheene, But they do square, that all their Elues for feare Creepe into Acorne cups and hide them there.

Fai. Either I mistake your shape and making quite, Or else you are that shrew'd and knavish spirit Cal'd Robin Good-fellow. Are you not hee, That frights the maidens of the Villagere, Skim milke, and sometimes labour in the querne, And bootlesse make the breathlesse huswife cherne, And sometime make the drinke to beare no barme, Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harme, Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Pucke, You do their worke, and they shall have good lucke. Are not you he?

Rob. Thou speak'st aright;

I am that merrie wanderer of the night:

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,

When I a fat and beane-fed horse beguile,

Neighing in likeness of a filly foale,

And sometime lurke I in a Gossips bole,

In very likeness of a roasted crab:

And when she drinke, against her lips I bob,

And on her withered dewlop poure the Ale.

The wisest Aunt telling the saddest tale,

Sometime for three-foot stoole, mistaketh me,

Then slip I from her bum, downe topples she,

And tailour cries, and fals into a coffe.

And then the whole quire hold their hips, and loffe,

And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and sweare,

A merrier houre was never walted there.

But roome Fairy, heere comes Oberon.

Fai. And heere my Mistris:

Would that we were gone.

Enter the King of Fairies at one doore with his traine, and the Queene at another with hers.

Ob. Ill met by Moone-light,

Proud Tytania.

Qu. What, jealous Oberon? Fairy skip hence. I have forsworne his bed and company.

Ob. Tarrie rash Wanton, am not I thy Lord?

Qu. Then I must be thy Lady: but I know When thou wast stolne away from Fairy Land, And in the shape of Corin, sate all day, Playing on pipes of Corne, and versing love To amorous Phyllida. Why art thou heere Come from the farthest steepe of India?

But that forsooth the bouncing Amazon Your buskin'd Mistresse, and your Warrior love, To Theseus must be Wedded, and you come, To give their bed joy and prosperity.

Ob. How canst thou thus for shame Tytania,

Glance at my credite, with Hippolita?

Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?

Didst thou not leade him through the glimmering night From Peregina, whom he ravished?

And make him with faire Eagles breake his faith

With Ariadne, and Antiope?

Qu. These are the forgeries of jealousy,

And never since the middle Summers spring

Met we on hill, in dale, forrest, or mead,

By paved fountaine, or by russhie brooke,

Or in the beached margent of the sea,

To dance our ringlets to the whistling Winde,

But with thy braules thou hast disturb'd our sport.

Therefore the Windes, piping to vs in vaine,

As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea Contagious foggess: Which falling in the Land,

Hath every petty River made so proud,

That they have over-borne their Continents.

The Oxe hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vaine,

The Ploughman lost his sweat, and the greene Corne

Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:

The fold stands empty in the drowned field,

And Crowes are fatted with the murrion flocke,

The

The nine mens Morris is filld up with mud,
And the quaint Mazes in the wanton greene,
For lacke of tread are undistinguishable.
The humane mortals want their winter heere,
No night is now with hymne or caroll blest;
Therefore the Moone (the governesse of floods)
Pale in her anger, wathes all the aire;
That Rheumaticke diseases do abound.
And thorough this distemperature, we see
The seasons alter; hoared-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson Rose,
And on old Hyems chinne and Icie crowne,
An odorous Chaplet of sweet Sommer buds
Is as in mockry set. The spring, the Sommer,
The childing Autumne, angry Winter change
Their wonted Liveries, and the mazed world,
By their increase, now knowes not which is which;
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our debate, from our dissention,
We are their parents and originall.

Ob. Do you amend it then, it lies in you,
Why should Titania crosse her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my Henchman.

Qu. Set your heart at rest,
The Fairy land buyes not the child of me.
His mother was a Votresse of my Order;
And in the spiced Indian aire, by night
Full often hath she gossipt by my side,
And sat with me on Neptunes yellow sands,
Marking th'embarked traders on the flood,
When we have laught to see the sailes conceive,
And grow big bellied with the wanton winde:
Which she with pretty and with swimming gate,
Following (her wombe then rich with my yong squire)
Would imitate, and saile upon the Land,
To fetch me trifles, and returne againe,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandize.
But she being mortall of that boy did dye,
And for her sake I do reare up her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.

Ob. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Qu. Perchance till after Theseus wedding day.
If you will patiently dance in our Round,
And see our Moone-light revels, go with us;
If not, shun me and I will spare your haunts.

Ob. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Qu. Not for thy Fairy Kingdome. Fairies away:
We shall chide downe right, if I longer stay. Exeunt.

Ob. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove,
Till I torment thee for this injury.
My gentle Pucke come hither; thou remembrest
Since I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a Meare-maide on a Dolphins backe,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civill at her song,
And certaine starres shot madly from their Sphaeres,
To heare the Sea-maids musicke.

Pu. I remember.

Ob. That very time I say (but thou couldst not)
Flying betweene the cold Moone and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd; a certaine aime he tooke
At a faire Vestall, throned by the West,
And loos'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts,
But I might see young Cupids fiery shaft

Quencht in the chaste beames of the watry Moone;
And the imperiall Votresse passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.

Yet markt I where the bolt of Cupid fell.

It fell upon a little western flower:

Before, milke-white: now purple with loves wound,
And maidens call it, Love in idleness.

Fetch me that flower; the hearb I shew'd thee once,

The juyce of it, on sleeping eye-lids laid,

Will make or man or woman madly dote

Vpon the next live creature that it sees.

Fetch me this hearbe, and be thou heere againe,

Ere the Leviathan can swim a league.

Pu. Ile put a girdle about the earth, in forty minutes.

Exit.

Ob. Having once this juyce,

Ile watch Titania, when she is asleepe,

And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:

The next thing when she waking lookes upon,

(Be it on Lyon, Beare, or Wolfe, or Bull,

On meddling Monkey, or on busie Ape)

Shall pursue it, with the foule of love.

And ere I take this charme off from her sight,

(As I can take it with another hearbe)

Ile make her render up her Page to me.

But who comes heere? I am invisible,

And I will over-heare their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not,
Where is Lysander, and faire Hermia?

The one Ile stay, the other stayeth me.

Thou toldst me they were stolne into this wood;

And heere am I, and wood within this wood,

Because I cannot meet my Hermia.

Hence get thee gone, and follow me no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted Adamant,

But yet you draw not Iron, for my heart

Is true as Steele. Leave you your power to draw,

And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? do I speake you faire?

Or rather do I not in plainest truth,

Tell you I do not, nor I cannot love you?

Hel. And even for that do I love thee the more;

I am your spaniell, and Demetrius,

The more you beat me, I will fawne on you.

Vse me but as your spaniell; spurne me, strike me,

Neglect me, lose me; onely give me leaue

(Vnworthy as I am) to follow you.

What worser place can I beg in your love,

(And yet a place of high respect with me)

Then to be vsed as you do your dogge?

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit,

For I am sicke when I do looke on thee.

Hel. And I am sicke when I looke not on you.

Dem. You doe impeach your modesty too much,

To leave the Citty, and commit your selfe

Into the hands of one that loves you not,

To trust the opportunity of night,

And the ill counsell of a desert place,

With the rich worth of your virginity.

Hel. Your vertue is my priviledge: for that

It is not night when I doe see your face.

Therefore I thinke I am not in the night,

Nor doth this wood lacke worlds of company,

For you in my respect are all the world.
Then how can it be said I am alone,
When all the world is heere to looke on me?

Dem. He run from thee, and hide me in the brakes,
And leave thee to the mercy of wilde beaſts.

Hel. The wildeſt hath not ſuch a heart as you;
Runne when you will, the ſtory ſhall be chang'd:
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chafe;
The Dove purſues the Griffin, the milde Hinde
Makes ſpeed to catch the Tyger. Bootleſſe ſpeede,
When cowardly purſues, and valour flies.

Dem. I will not ſtay thy queſtions, let me go;
Or if thou follow me, do not beleewe,
But I ſhall do thee miſchiefe in the wood.

Hel. I, in the Temple, in the Towne, and Field
You do me miſchiefe. Fye Demetrius,
Your wrongs do ſet a ſcandall on my ſexe:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We ſhould be woo'd, and were not made to wooe.
I follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon the hand I love ſo well. Exit.

Ob. Fare thee well Nymph, ere he do leave this grove,
Thou ſhalt ſly him, and he ſhall ſeeke thy love.
Haſt thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.

Enter Pucke.

Pe. I, there it is.

Ob. I pray thee give it me.

I know a banke where the wilde time blowes,
Where Oxſlips and the nodding Violet growes,
Quite over-cannop'd with luſcious woodbine,
With ſweet muſke roſes, and with Eglantine,
There ſleepes Tytania, ſometime of the night,
Lul'd in theſe flowers, with dances and delight:
And there the ſnake throwes her enammell'd ſkinne,
Weed wide enough to wrap a Fairy in.
And with the juyce of this lle ſtreak her eyes,
And make her full of hatefull fantasies.
Take thou ſome of it, and ſeeke through this grove;
A ſweet Athenian Lady is in love
With a diſdainfull youth: annoint his eyes,
But do it when the next thing he eſpies,
May be the Lady. Thou ſhalt know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on.
Effect it with ſome care, that he may prove
More fond on her, then ſhe upon her love;
And looke thou meet me ere the firſt Cocke crow.

Pe. Feare not my Lord, your ſervant ſhall do ſo. Exit.

Enter Queens of Fairies, with her traine.

Qu. Come, now a Roundell, and a Fairy ſong:
Then for the third part of a minute hence,
Some to kill Cankers in the muſke roſe buds,
Some warre with Reremiſe, for their leathern wings,
To make my ſmall Elves coates, and ſome keepe backe
The clamorous Owle that nightly hoots and wonders
At our quaint ſpirits: Sing me now aſleepe,
Then to your offices, and let me reſt.

Fairies Sing.

*You ſpotted Snakes with double tongue,
Thorny Hedgehogges be not ſene,
Newts and blinde wormes do no wrong,
Come not neere our Fairy Queene.
Philomela with melody,*

*Sing in your ſweet Lullaby,
Lulla, lulla, lullaby, lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harme, nor ſpell, nor charme,
Come our lovely Lady nre,
So good night with Lullaby.*

*2. Fairy. Weaving Spiders come not heere,
Hence you long leg'd Spinners, hence:
Beetles blaſke approach not neere:
Wormes nor Snayle do no offence.

*1. Fairy. Hence away, now all is well:
One aloofe, ſand Centinell.*

Shee ſleeps.

Enter Oberon.

Ob. What thou ſeeſt when thou doſt wake,
Do it for thy true Love take:
Love and languish for his ſake.
Be it Ounce, or Catte, or Beare,
Pard, or Boare with briſtled haire,
In thy eye that ſhall appeare,
When thou wak'ſt, it is thy deare,
Wake when ſome vile thing is neere.

Enter Lyſander and Hermia.

Liſ. Faire love, you faint with wandring in the woods
And to ſpeake troth, I have forgot our way:
Wee'll reſt us Hermia, if you thinke it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.

Her. Be it ſo Lyſander: finde you out a bed,
For I upon this banke will reſt my head.

Lyſ. One turfe ſhall ſerve as pillow for us both,
One heart, one bed, two boſomes; and one troth.

Her. Nay good Lyſander, for my ſake my deere
Lie further off yet, do not lie ſo neere.

Lyſ. O take the ſence ſweet, of my innocence,
Love takes the meaning, in loves conference,
I meane that my heart unto yours is knit,
So that but one heart can you make of it.
Two boſomes interchanged with an oath,
So then two boſomes, and a ſingle troth,
Then by your ſide, no bed-roome me deny,
For lying ſo, Hermia, I do not lye.

Her. Lyſander riddles veer prettily:
Now much beſhrew my maſter, and my pride,
If Hermia meant to ſay, Lyſander lied:
But gentle friend, for love and courteſie
Lie further off, in humane modeſty,
Such ſeparation, as may well be ſaid,
Becomes a vertuous batchelour, and a maide,
So farre be diſtant, and good night ſweet friends:
Thy love ne're alter, till thy ſweet life end.

Lyſ. Amen, amen, to that faire prayer, ſay I,
And then end life, when I end loyalty:
Heere is my bed, ſleepe give thee all his reſt.

Her. With half that wiſh, the wiſhers eyes be preſt.

Enter Pucke.

They ſleepe.

Pe. Through the Forreſt have I gone,
But Athenian finde I none;
On whoſe eyes I might approve
This flowers force in ſtirring love.
Night and ſilence: who is heere?
Weedes of Athen he doth weare:
This is he (my maſter ſaid)
Deſpised the Athenian maide:
And heere the maiden ſleeping ſound,

On the danke and darty ground.
Pretty foule, she durst not lye
Neere this lacke-love, this kill-curtisie.
Churle, upon thy eyes I throw
All the power this charme doth owe:
When thou wak'st, let love forbid
Sleepe his seate on thy eye-lid.
So awake when I am gone:
For I must now to Oberon.

Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena running

Hel. Say, though thou kill me, sweete Demetrius.
De. I charge thee hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.
De. Stay on thy perill, I alone will go.

Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O I am out of breath, in this fond chace,
The more my prayer, the lesse is my grace,
Happy is Hermia, where so ere she lies:
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt teares.
If so, my eyes are oftner waht then hers.
No, no, I am as ugly as a Beare:
For beasts that meete me, runne away for feare,
Therefore no mavaile, though Demetrius
Do as a monster, fly my prefence thus.
What wicked and dissembling glasse of mine,
Made me compare with Hermias sphery cync?
But who is here? Lysander on the ground:
Deade or asleepe? I see no bloud, no wound,
Lysander, if you live, good sir awake.
Lys. And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.
Transparent Helena, nature here shews art,
That through thy bosome makes me see thy heart.
Where Demetrius? oh how fit a word
Is that vile name, to perish on my sword!
Hel. Do not say so Lysander, say not so:
What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
Yet Hermia still loves you: then be content.
Lys. Content with Hermia? No, I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
Not Hermia, but Helena now I love:
Who will not change a Raven for a Dove?
The will of man is by his reason sway'd:
And reason sayes you are the worthier Maide.
Things growing are not ripe untill their season:
So I being yong, till now ripe not to reason,
And touching now the point of humane skill,
Reason becomes the Marshall to my will,
And leades me to your eyes, where I orelooke
Loves stories, written in Loves richest booke.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keene mockery borne?
When at your hands did I deserve this scorner?
Is't not enough, is't not enough, yong man,
That I did never, no nor never can,
Deserve a sweete looke from Demetrius eye,
But you must flout my insufficiency?
Good troth you do me wrong, good-sooth you do)
In such disdainfull manner, me to wooe.
But fare you well: perforce I must confesse,
I thought you Lord of more true gentleness.
Oh, that a Lady of one man refus'd,
Should of another therefore be abus'd.

Exit.

Lys. She sees not Hermia: Hermia sleepe thou there,
And never maist thou come Lysander neere:

For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to a stomacke brings:
Or as the heresies that men do leave,
Are hated most of those that did deceive:
So thou, my surfeit, and my heresie,
Of all be hated: but the most of me,
And all my powers addresse your love and might,
To honour Helen, and to be her Knight. Exit.

Her. Helpe me Lysander, helpe me, do thy best
To plucke this crawling serpent from my brest.
Aye me, for pittie, what a dreame was here?
Lysander looke, how I do quake with feare:
Me-thought a serpent ate my heart away,
And yet sat smiling at his cruell prey.
Lysander, what remov'd? Lysander, Lord,
What, out of hearing, gone? No sound, no word?
Alacke where are you? speake and if you heare:
Speake of all loves: I swound almost with feare.
No, then I well perceive you are not nye,
Either death or you Ile finde immediately. Exit

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Clownes.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Par, pat, and here's a marvailous convenient place for our rehearfall. This Greene plot shall bee our stage, this hanthorne brake our tyring house, and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the Duke.

Bot. Peter Quince?

Peter. What saist thou, bully Bottom?

Bot. There are things in this Cmedy of Piramus and Thisby, that will never please. First, Piramus must draw a sword to kill himselfe: which the Ladies cannot abide.
How answer you that?

Snout. Berlaken, a parlous feare.

Star. I beleeve we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bottom. Not a whit, I have a device to make all well.
Write me a Prologue, and let the Prologue seeme to say, we will do no harme with our swords, and that Piramus is not kill'd indeede: and for the more better assurance, tell them, that I Piramus am not Piramus, but Bottom the Weaver; this will put them out of feare.

Qu. Well, we will have such a Prologue, and it shall be written in eight and sixe.

Bot. No, make it two more, let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the Ladies be ascar'd of the Lyon?

Star. I feare it, I promise you.

Bot. Maisters, you ought to consider with your selves, to bring in (God shield us) a Lyon among Ladies, is a most dreadfull thing. For there is not a more fearefull wilde foule then your Lyon living: and wee ought to looke to it.

Snout. Therefore another Prologue must tell hee is not a Lyon.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and halfe his face must be seene through the Lyons necke, and he himselfe must speake through, saying thus, or to the same effect:
Ladies, or faire Ladies, I would wish you, or I would request

request you, or I would entreat you, not to feare, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you thinke I come hither as a Lyon, it were pittie of my life. No, I am no such thing, I am a man as other men are; and there indeed let him name his name, and tell him plainly hee is Snug the joyner Quince. Well, it shall be so; but there is two hard things, that is, to bring the Moone-light into a chamber: for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meete by Moone-light.

Snug. Doth the Moone shine that night wee play our play?

Bot. A Calender, a Calender, looke in the Almanack, finde out Moone-shine, finde out Moone-shine.

Enter Pucke.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why then may you leave a casement of the great chamber window (where we play) open, and the Moone may shine in at the casement.

Qu. I, or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lanthorne, and say he comes to disfigure, or to present the person of Moone-shine. Then there is another thing, we must have a wall in the great Chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby (saies the story) did talke through the chinke of a wall.

Snug. You can never bring in a wall. What say you Bottome?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall, and let him have some Plaster, or some Lome, or some rough cast about him, to signifie wall; or let him hold his fingers thus; and through that cranny, shall Pyramus, and Thisby whisper.

Qu. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit downe every mothers sonne, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin; when you have spoken your speech, enter into that Brake, and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Robin.

Rob. What hempen home-spuns have we swaggering here,

So neere the Cradle of the Faery Queene?

What a Play toward? Ile be an auditor:

An Actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

Qu. Speake Pyramus: Thisby stand forth.

Pir. Thisby, the flowers of odious favors sweete.

Qu. Odours, odours.

Pir. Odours favors sweete,

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby deare.

But harke, avoyce: stay thou but here a while,

And by and by I will to thee appeare.

Exit. Pir.

Pu. A stranger Pyramus, then ere plaid here.

This. Must I speake now?

Pet. I marry must you. For you must vnderstand he goes but to see a noife that he heard, and is to come againe.

This. Most radiant Pyramus, most Lilly white of hue, Of colour like the red rose on triumphant bryer, Most brisky Iuuenall, and eke most lovely Iew, As true as truest horse that yet would never tyre, Ile meete thee Pyramus, at Ninies toombe.

Pet. Ninus toombe man: why, you must not speake that yet; that you answered to Pyramus: you speake all your part at once, cues and all. Pyramus enter, your cue is past; it is never tyre.

This. O, as true as truest horse, that yet would never tyre:

Pir. If I were faire, Thisby I were onely thine.

Pet. O monstrous. O strange. We are hanted; pray maisters, flye maisters, helpe.

The Clownes all Exit.

Pu. Ile follow you, Ile leade you about a Round, Through bogge, through bush, through brake, through Sometime a horse Ile be, sometime a hound: (bryer, A hogge, a headlesse Beare, sometime a fire, And neigh, and barke, and grunt, and rore, and burne, Like horse, hound, hog, Beare, fire, at every turne. Exit.

Enter Pyramus with the Asses head.

Bot. Why do they run away? This is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Enter Snug.

Sn. O Bottome, thou art chang'd; What do I see on thee?

Bot. What do you see? You see an Asses-head of your owne, do you?

Enter Peter Quince.

Pet. Blesse thee Bottome, blesse thee; thou art translated.

Exit.

Bot. I see their knavery; this is to make an ass of me, to fright me if they Could; but I will not stirre from this place, do what they can. I will walke up and downe here, and I will sing that they shall heare I am not afraid. The Woodcocke, so blacke of hew, With Orange-tawny bill.

The Throate, with his note so true, The Wren and little quill.

Tita. What Angell wakes me from my flowry bed?

Bot. The Finch, the Sparrow, and the Larke, The plain-song Cuckow gray;

Whose note full many a man doth marke, And dares not answer, nay.

For indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? Who would give a bird the lye, though he cry Cuckow, never so?

Tita. I pray thee gentle mortall, sing againe, Mine eare is much enamored of thy note; On the first view to say, to sweare I love thee. So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape.

And thy faire vertues force (perforce) doth move me.

Bot. Me-thinkes maiestresse, you should have little reason for that: and yet to say the truth, reason and love keepe little company together, now-a-days. The more the pittie, that some honest neighbours will not mak them friends. Nay, I can gleeke upon occasion.

Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautifull.

Bot. Not so neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine owne turne.

Tita. Out of this wood, do not desire to go, Thou shalt remaine here, whether thou wilt or no. I am a spirit of no common rate:

The Summer still doth tend upon my state, And I do love thee; therefore go with me, Ile give thee Fairies to attend on thee; And they shall fetch thee Jewels from the deepe; And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleepe; And I will purge thy mortall grossenesse so, That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.

Enter Pease-blossome, Cobweb, Moth, Mustard-seede, and foure Fairies.

Fai. Ready; and I, and I, and I, Where shall we go?

Tita. Be

Tita. Be kinde and curteous to this Gentleman.
Hop in his walkes, and gambole in his eies,
Feede him with Apricocks, and Dewberries,
With purple Grapes, greene Figs, and Mulberries,
The honie-bags steale from the humble Bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighes,
And light them at the fierie-Glow-wormes eyes,
To have my love to bed, and to arise:
And pluke the wings from painted Butterflies,
To fan the Moone-beames from his sleeping eies.
Nod to him Elues, and do him curtesies.

1. Fai. Haile mortall, haile.

2. Fai. Haile.

3. Fai. Haile.

Bot. I cry your worships mercy hartily; I beseech your worships name.

Cob. Cobwed.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Maister Cobwed: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.

Your name honest Gentleman?

Peaf. Pease blossome.

Bot. I pray you commend mee to mistresse Squash, your mother, and to maister Peascod your father. Good maister Pease-blossome, I shall desire of you more acquaintance too. Your name I beseech you sir?

Mus. Mustard-seede.

Bot. Good maister Mustard-seede, I know your patience well: that same cowardly gyant-like Oxe-beefe hath devoured many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you more acquaintance; good Maister Mustard-seede.

Tita. Come waite upon him, lead him to my bower.

The Moone me-thinks, lookes with a watrie eie,
And when she weepes, weepe every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chaltiry.

Tye up my lovers tongue, bring him silently.

Exit.

Enter King of Fairies, solus.

Ob. I wonder if Titania be awak't;
Then what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on, in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger: how now mad spirit,
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My Mistris with a monster is in love,
Neere to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dull and sleeping hower,
A crew of patches, rude Mechanicals,
That worke for bread upon Athenian stals,
Were met together to rehearse a Play,
Intended for great Thebes nuptiall day:
The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Piramus presented, in their sport,
Forooke his Scene, and entred in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take,
An Asses noll I fixed on his head.
Anon his Thissie must be answered,
And forth my Mimmiick comes: when they him spie,
As Wilde-geese, that the creeping Fowler eye,
Or ruffed-pated choughes, many in sort (Rising and cawing at the guns report)
Sever themselves, and madly sweepe the skye:

So at his sight, away his fellowes flie,
And at our stampe, here ore and ore one fals;
He murther cries, and helpe from Athen calls.
Their sense thus weake, lost with their fears thus strong,
Made senselesse things begin to do them wrong.
For briars and thornes at their apparell snatch,
Some sleeves, some hats, from yeelders all things catch,
Iled them on in this distracted feare;
And left sweete Piramus translated there:
When in that moment (so it came to passe)
Tytania waked, and straight way lov'd an Ass.

Ob. This fals out better then I could devise:
But hast thou yet lacht the Athenian eyes,
With the love juyce, as I did bid thee do?

Rob. I tooke him sleeping (that is finisht too)
And the Athenian woman by his side,
That when he wak't, of force she must be eyde.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Ob. Stand close, this is the same Athenian.

Rob. This is the woman, but not this the man.

Dem. O why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.

Her. Now I but chide, but I should vse thee worse.
For thou (I feare) hast given me cause to curse,
If thou hast slaine Lysander in his sleepe,
Being ore shoes in bloud, plunge in the deepe, and kill me too:

The Sunne was not so true unto the day,
As he to me. Would he have stollen away,
From sleeping Hermia? He beleeve as soone
This whole earth may be bord, and that the Moone
May through the Center creepe, and so displease
Her brothers noonetide, with th' Amipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast mured him,
So should a murthier looke, so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murderer looke, and so should I,
Pierst through the heart with your stearne cruelty:
Yet you the murderer looks as bright as cleare,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering spheare.

Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I'de rather give his carkasse to my hounds.

Her. Out dog, out cur, thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maidens patience. Hast thou slaine him then?
Henceforth be never numbred among men.
Oh, once tell true, and even for my sake,
Durst thou a lookt upon him, being awake?
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave rutch:
Could not a worme, an Adder do so much?
And Adder did it: for with doubler tongue
Then thine (thou serpent) never Adder stung,

Dem. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood,
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood:
Nor is he dead for ought that I can tell.

Her. I pray thee tell me then that he is well.

Dem. And if I could, what should I get therefore?

Her. A priviledge, never to see me more;
And from thy hated prefence part I: see me no more
Whether he be dead or no.

Exit.

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce veine,
Here therefore for a while I will remaine.
So sorrowes heavineffe doth heavier grow:
For debt that bankrout slip doth sorrow owe,
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,

If

If for his tender here I make some stay. Lie downe.

Ob. What hast thou done? Thou hast mistaken quite
And laid the love iuyce on some true loves sight:
Of thy misprision, must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

Rob. Then fate ore-rules, that one man holding troth,
A million faile, confounding oath on oath.

Rob. About the wood, goe swifter then the winde,
And Helena of Athens looke thou finde.
All fancy-sicke she is, and pale of cheere,
With sighes of love, that costs the fresh blood deare.
By some illusion see thou bring her heere,
He charme his eyes against she doth appeare,

Rob. I go, I go, looke how I go,
Swifter then arrow from the Tartars bowe.

Exit.

Ob. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupids archery,
Sinke in apple of his eye,
When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wak'st if she be by Beg of her for remedy.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. Captaine of our Fairy band,
Helena is heere at hand,
And the youth, mistooke by me,
Pleading for a Lovers fee.
Shall we their fond Pageant see?
Lord, what fooles these mortals be!

Ob. Stand aside: the noyse they make,
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once wooe one,
That must needs be sport alone:
And those things do best please me,
That befall preposterously.

Enter Lysander and Helena.

Lys. Why should you think y I should wooe in scorn?
Scorne and derision never comes in teares:
Looke when I vow I weepe, and vowes so borne,
In their nativity all truth appeares.
How can these things in me, seeme scorne to you?
Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true.

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more,
When truth kills truth, O diuinish holy fray!
These vowes are Hermias. Will you give her ore?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh.
Your vowes to her and me, (put in two scales)
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.

Lys. I had no judgement, when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none in my minde, now you give her ore.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you. Ans.

Dem. O Helena, goddesse, nymph, perfect, divine,
To what, my love, shall I compare thine eyne?
Christall is muddy, O how ripe in show,
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure congealed white, high Taurus snow,
Fann'd with the Easterne winde, turnes to a crow,
When thou holdst up thy hand. O let me kisse
This Princess of pure white, this seale of blisse.

Hel. O spight! O hell! I see you are all bent
To set against me, for your meriment:
If you were civill, and knew curtesie,
You would not do me thus much injury.

Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must joyne in soules to mocke me to?
If you are men, as men you are in show,
You would not vse a gentle Lady so?
To vow, and sweare, and superpraise my parts,
When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.
You both are Rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both Rivals, to mocke Helena.
A trim exploit, a manly enterprize,
To conjure teares up in a poore maids eyes,
With your derision; none of noble sort,
Would so offend a Virgin, and extort
A poore soules patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind Demetrius; be not so,
For you love Hermia; this you know I know;
And here with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermias love I yeeld you up my part;
And yours of Helena, to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do to my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia, I will none:
If ere I lov'd her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her, but as guest-wife (sojourn'd,
And now to Helena it is home return'd,
There to remaine.

Lys. It is not so.

De. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest to thy perill thou abide it deare.
Iooke where thy Love comes, yonder is thy deare.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The eare more quicke of apprehension makes,
Wherein it doth impaire the seeing sense,
It paies the hearing double recompence.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander found,
Mine eare (I thanke it) brought me to that sound.
But why vnkindly didst thou leave me so? (to go)

Lysan. Why should hee stay whom Love doth presse

Her. What love could presse Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysanders love (that would not let him bide)
Faile Helena; who more engilds the night,
Then all yon fiery oes, and eyes of light.

Why seek'st thou me? Could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee, made me leave thee so?

Her. You speake not as you thinke; it cannot be.

Hel. Loe, she is one of this confederacy,
Now I perceive they have conjoyn'd all three,
To fashion this false sport in spight of me.
Injurious Hermia, most vngratefull maid,
Have you conspir'd, have you with these contriv'd
To baite me, with this foule derision?

Is all the counsell that we two have shar'd,
The sisters vowes, the houres that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time,
For parting us; O and is all forgot?

All schoole daies friendship, child-hood innocence?
We Hermia, like two Artificiall gods,
Have with our needles, created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and mindes
Had bene incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet a vnion in partition,

Two lovely berries molded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart,
Two of the first life, coats in Heraldry,
Due but to one and crowned with one crest.
And will you rent our ancient love asunder,
To joyne with men in scorning your poore friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly.
Our sexe as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feele the injurie.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words,
I scorne you not; It seemes that you scorne me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorne
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other love, Demetrius
(Who even but now did spurne me with his foote)
To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestiall? Wherefore speakes he this
To her he hates? And wherefore doth Lysander
Deaie your love (so rich within his soule)
And tender me (torsooth) affection,
But by your letting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate?
(But miserable most, to love vnlov'd)
This you should pittie, rather then despise.

Her. I understand not what you meane by this.

Hel. I, do, persevere, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouthes upon me when I turne my backe,
Winke each at other, hold the sweet jest up:
This sport well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you have any pittie, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument:
But fare ye well, 'tis partly mine owne fault,
Which death or absence soone shall remedy.

Lys. Stay gentle Helena, heare my excuse,
My love, my soule, faire Helena.

Hel. O excellent!

Her. Sweet, do not scorne her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreate, I can compell,

Lys. Thou canst compell, no more then she entreate.
Thy threats have no more strength then her weak praise.

Hel. I love thee, by my life I doe;
I sweare by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that saies I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more then he can do.

Lys. If thou say so; with-draw and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come!

Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this?

Lys. Away, you Ethiops.

Dem. No, no, Sir, seeme to breake loose;
Take on as you would follow,
But yet come not: you are a tame man, go.

Lys. Hang off thou cat, thou but; vile thing let loose,
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Her. Why are you growne so rude?
What change is this sweete Love?

Lys. Thy love? out tawny Tartar, out;
Out loathed medicine; O hated poison hence.

Her. Do you not jest?

Hel. Yes sooth, and so do you.

Lys. Demetrius: I will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would I had your bond: for I perceive
A weake bond holds you; Ile not trust your word:

Lys. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?
Although I hate her, Ile not harme her so.

Her. What, can you do me greater harme then hate?

Hate me, wherefore? O me, what newes my Love?

Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?

I am as faire now, as I was ere while.

Since night you lov'd me; yet since night you left me:

Why then you left me (O the gods forbid)

In earnest, shall I say?

Lys. I, by my life,

And never did desire to see thee more:

Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt;

Be certaine, nothing truer: 'tis no jest,

That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me, you jugler, you canker blossome,
You theefe of love; What, have you come by night,
And stolne my loves heart from him?

Hel. Fine yfaith:

Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
No touch of bashfulness? What, will you teare
Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?
Fie, fie, you counterfeit, you puppet, you.

Her. Puppet? why so? I, that way goes the game.

Now I perceive that she hath made compare
Betweene our staturs, she hath vrg'd her height,
And with her personage, her tall personage,
Her height (forsooth) she hath prevail'd with him.
And are you growne so high in his esteeme,
Because I am so dwarfish, and so low?

How low am I, thou painted May-pole? Speake,
How low am I? I am not yet so low,
But that my nailes can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you though you mocke me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me; I was never curst:
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maide for my cowardize;
Let her not strike me: you perhaps may thinke,
Because she is something lower then my selfe,
That I can match her.

Her. Lower? harke againe.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me;
I evermore did love you Hermia,
Did ever keepe your counsels, never wronged you,
Save that in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood.
He followed you, for love I followd him,
But he hath chid me hence, and threatned me
To strike me, spurne me, nay to kill me too;
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I beare my folly backe,
And follow you no further. Let me go.
You see how simple, and how fond I am.

Her. Why get you gone: who ist that hinders you?

Hel. A foolish heart, that I leave here behinde.

Her. What, with Lysander?

Her. With Demetrius.

Lys. Be not afraid, she shall not harme thee Helena.

Dem. No sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O when she's angry, she is keene and shrewd,
She was a vixen when she went to schoole,
And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little againe? Nothing but low and little?
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone you dwarfe,
You minimus, of hindring knot-grasse made,
You bead, you acorne.

Dem. You are too officious,
In her behalfe that scornes your services.

Let her alone, speake not of Helena,
Take not her part. For if thou dost intend
Never so little shew of love to her,
Thou shalt abide it.

Lys. Now she holds me not,
Now follow if thou dar'st to try whose right,
Of thine or mine is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow? Nay, Ile go with thee cheeke by jowle.

Exit Lysander and Demetrius.

Her. You Mistris; all this coyle is long of you.
Nay, go not backe.

Hel. I will not trust you I,
Nor longer stay in your curst company.
Your hands then mine, are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though to runne away.

Exeunt.

Enter Oberon and Puck.

Ob. This is thy negligence, still thou mistak'st,
Or else committ'st thy knaveries willingly.

Puck. Beleeve me, King of shadowes, I mistooke,
Did not you tell me, I should know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on?
And so farre blamelesse proves my enterprize,
That I have pointed an Athenians eies,
And so farre am I glad, it so did sort,
As this their jangling I esteeme a sport.

Ob. Thou seest these Lovers seeke a place to fight,
Hie therefore Robin, overcast the night,
The starry Welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogge as blacke as Acheron,
And lead these testy Rivals so astray,
As one come not within anothers way.
Like to Lysander, sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stirre Demetrius vp with bitter wrong;
And sometime raile thou like Demetrius;
And from each other looke thou leade them thus,
Till ore their browes, death-counterfeiting sleepe
With leaden legs, and Battie-wings doth creepe;
Then crush this hearbe into Lysanders eie,
Whose liquor hath this vertuous property,
To take from thence all error, with his might,
And make his eie-bais role with wonted sight.
When they next wake, all this derision
Shall seeme a dreame, and fruitlesse vision,
And backe to Athens shall the Lovers wend
With leagne, whose date till death shall never end.
Whiles I in this affaire do thee imply,
Ile to my Queene, and beg her Indian Boy;
And then I will her charmed eie release
From monsters view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My Fairy Lord, this must be done with haste,
For nights-swift Dragons cut the Clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Auroras harbinger;
At whose approach Ghosts wandring here and there,
Troope home to Church-yards; damned spirits all,
That in crosse-waies and foulds have buriall,
Already to their wormy beds are gone,
For feare least day should looke their shames vpon,
They wilfully themselves exile from light,
And must for aye consort with blacke browd night.

Ob. But we are spirits of another sort:
I, with the morning love have oft made sport,
And like a Forrester, the groves may tread,
Even till the Easterne gate all fierie red,
Opening on Neptune, with faire blessed beames,
Turnes into yellow gold, his salt greene streames.

But notwithstanding haste, make no delay;
We may effect this businesse, yet ere day.

Puck. Vp and downe, vp and downe, I will leade them up and downe: I am fear'd in field and towne. Goblin, lead them up and downe: here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius?
Speake thou now.

Rob. Here villaine, drawne & readie. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight.

Rob. Follow me then to plainer ground.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander, speake againe;
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speake in some bush: Where dost thou hide thy head?

Rob. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come recreant, come thou childe,
Ile whip thee with a rod. He is desu'd
That drawes a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea, art thou there?

Ro. Follow my voice, we'll try no manhood here. Exit.

Lys. He goes before me, and still dares me on,
When I come where he calls me, then he's gone.

The villaine is much lighter heel'd then I:

I followed fast, but faster he did flye; Shifting places.

That fallen am I in darke yeven way,
And here will rest me. Come thou gentle day: Iye downe.

For if but once thou shew'st me thy gray light,
Ile finde Demetrius, and revenge this spight.

Enter Robin and Demetrius.

Rob. Ho, ho, ho, coward, why com'st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st. For well I wot.
Thou runst before me, shifting every place,
And dar'st not stand, nor looke me in the face.
Where art thou?

Rob. Come hither, I am here.

Dem. Nay then thou mock'st me; thou shalt buy this deere,

If ever I thy face by day-light see.

Now go thy way: fainnesse constraineth me,
To measure out my length on this cold bed,
By daies approach looke to be visited.

Enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thy houres, shine comforts from the East,
That I may backe to Athens by day-light,
From these that my poore company detest,
And sleepe that sometime shuts up sorrowes eie,
Steale me a while from mine owne companie. Sleepe.

Rob. Yet but three? Come one more,
Two of both kindes makes up foure.
Here she comes, curst and sad,
Cupid is a knavish lad,

Enter Hermia.

Thus to make poore females mad.

Her. Never so wearie, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torne with briars,
I can no further crawl, no further go;
My legs can keepe no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the breake of day,
Heavens shield Lysander, if they meane a fray.

Rob. On the ground sleepe sound,
Ile apply your eie, gentle lover, remedy.
When thou wak'st, thou rak'st

True delight in the sight of thy former Ladies eie,

And

And the Country Proverbe knowne,
That every man should take his owne,
In your waking shall be showne.
Iacke shall have ill, nought shall goe ill,
The man shall have his Mare againe, and all shall be well.

They sleeps all the AB.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Queene of Fairies, and Clowne, and Fairies, and the King behind them.

Tita. Come, sit thee downe upon this flowry bed,
While I thy amiable cheekes doe coy,
And sticke muske roses in thy sleeke smoothe head,
And kisse thy faire large eares, my gentle joy.

Clow. Where's Pease blossome?

Peaf. Ready.

Clow. Scratch my head, Pease-blossome. Where's Mounsieur Cobweb.

Cob. Ready.

Clow. Mounseieur Cobweb, good Mounseieur get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red hipt humble-Bee on the top of a thistle; and good Mounseieur bring mee the hony bag. Doe not fret your selfe too much in the action, Mounseieur; and good Mounseieur have a care the hony bag breake not, I would be loth to have you overflowne with a hony-bag signiour. Where's Mounseieur Mustardseed?

Muf. Ready.

Clow. Give me your newfe, Mounseieur Mustardseed.
Pray you leave your courtesie good Mounseieur.

Muf. What's your will?

Clow. Nothing good Mounseieur, but to helpe Cavalero Cobweb to scratch. I must to the Barbers Mounseieur, for me thinkes I am marvellous hairy about the face. And I am such a tender asse, if my haire doe but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tita. What, wilt thou heare some musicke, my sweet love?

Clow. I have a reasonable good care in musicke. Let us have the tongues and the bones.

Musicke Tonges, Rurall Musicke,

Tita. Or say sweet Love, what thou desirest to eat.

Clow. Truly a pecke of Provender; I could munch your good dry Oates. Me thinkes I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay hath no fellow.

Tita. I have a venturous Fairy,
That shall seeke the Squirrels hoard,
And fetch thee new Nuts.

Clow. I had rather have a handfull or two of dried pease.
But I pray you let none of your people stirre me, I have an exposition of sleepe come upon me.

Tita. Sleepe thou, and I will winde thee in my armes,
Fairies be gone, and be alwayes away.
So doth the woodbine, the sweet Honisuckle,
Gently entwist; the female Iuy so
Enrings the barky fingers of the Elme,

O how I love thee! how I dote on thee!

Enter Robin goodfellow, and Oberon.

Ob. Welcome good Robin:

See'st thou this sweet sight?

Her dotage now I doe begin to pittie.

For meeting her of late behind the wood,

Seeking sweet favors for this hateful foole,

I did upbraid her, and fall out with her.

For she his hairy temples then had rounded,

With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers.

And that same dew which sometime on the buds,

Was wont to swell like round and orient pearles;

Stood now within the pretty flouriets eyes,

Like teares that did their owne disgrace bewaile.

When I had at my pleasure taunted her,

And she in milde termes beg'd my patience,

I then did aske of her, her changeling child,

Which straight she gave me, and her Fairy sent

To beare him to my Bower in Fairy Land.

And now I have the Boy, I will undoe

This hateful imperfection of her eyes,

And gentle Pucke, take this transformed scalpe,

From off the head of this Athenian swaine;

That he awaking when the other doe,

May all to Athens backe againe repaire,

And thinke no more of this nights accidents,

But as the fierce vexation of a dreame.

But first I will release the Fairy Queene.

Bethou as thou wast wont to be;

See as thou wast wont to see.

Dians bud, or Cupids flower,

Hath such force and blessed power.

Now my Titania wake you my sweet Queene:

Tita. My Oberon, what visions have I scene!
Me-thought I was enamoured of an Asse.

Ob. There lyes your love.

Tita. How came these things to passe?

Oh, how mine eyes doe loath this visage now!

Ob. Silence a while. Robin take off his head:

Titania, musicke call, and strike more dead

Then cammon sleepe; of all these, fine the sense.

Tita. Musicke, ho musicke, such as charmeth sleepe.

Musicke still.

Rob. When thou awak'st, with thine owne foolles eyes peepe. (me)

Ob. Sound musicke; come my Queene, take hands with
And rocke the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Now thou and I are new in amity,

And will to morrow midnight, solemnly

Dance in Duke Theseus house triumphantly,

And blesse it to all faire posterity.

There shall these paires of faithfull Lovers be

Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Rob. Faire King attend, and marke,

I doe heare the morning Larke.

Ob. Then my Queene in silence sad,

Trip we after the nights shade;

We the Globe can compasse soone,

Swifter then the wandring Moone.

Tita. Come my Lord, and in our flight,

Tell me how it came this night,

That I sleeping heere was found,

Sleepers lye still.

O

With

With these mortalls on the ground.

*Exeunt.
Winde Hornes.*

Enter Theseus, Eggeus, Hippolita and all his traine.

Thes. Goe one of you, find out the Forrester,
For now our observation is perform'd ;
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My Love shall heare the musicke of my hounds.
Vncouple in the Westerne valley, let them goe ;
Dispatch I say, and find the Forrester.
We will faire Queene, up to the Mountaines top,
And marke the musically confusion
Of hounds and eccho in conjunction.

Hip. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete they bayed the Beare
With hounds of Sparta ; never did I heare
Such gallant chiding. For besides the groves,
The skies, the fountaines, every region neere,
Seem'd all one mutuall cry. I never heard
So musically a discord, such sweet thunder.

Thes. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so fanded, and their heads are hung
With eares that sweepe away the morning dew,
Crooke-kneed, and dew-lapt, like Thessalian Buls,
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tuneable
Was never hollaw'd to, nor cheer'd with horne,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly ;
Iudge when you heare. But soft, what nymphs are these?

Ege. My Lord, this is my daughter here asleepe,
And this Lyfander, this Demetrius is,
This Helena, old Nedar's Helena,
I wonder of this being heere together.

Thes. No doubt they rose up early, to observe
The right of May ; and hearing our intent,
Came heere in grace of our solemnity.
But speake Egeus ; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is my Lord.

Thes. Goe bid the hunt-men wake them with their hornes.

Hornes and they wake.

Shout within, they all start up.

Thes. Good morrow friends : Saint Valentine is past,
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?

Lyf. Pardon my Lord.

Thes. I pray you all stand up.
I know you two are Rivall enemies.
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so farre from jealousie,
To sleepe by hate, and feare no enmity,

Lyf. My Lord, I shall reply amazedly,
Halfe sleepe, halfe waking. But as yet, I sweare,
I cannot truly say how I came heere.

But as I thinke (for truly would I speake)
And now I doe bethinke me, so it is ;
I came with Hermia hither. Our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the perill of the Athenian Law.

Ege. Enough, enough, my Lord : you have enough ;
I beg the Law, the Law, upon his head :
They would have stolne away, they would Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me :
You of your wife, and me of my consent ;
Of my consent, that she should be your wife.

Dem. My Lord, faire Helena told me of their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither, to this wood,

And I in fury hither followed them ;
Fairst Helena, in fancy followed me.
But my good Lord, I wot not by what power,
(But by some power it is) my love
To Hermia (melted as the snow)

Seemes to me now as the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon :
And all the faith, the vertue of my heart,
The object and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is onely Helena. To her, my Lord,
Was I betroth'd, ere I see Hermia,
But like a sicknesse did I loath this food :
But as in health, come to my naturall taste,
Now doe I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.

Thes. Fairst Lovers, you are fortunately met ;
Of this discourse we shall heare more anon.

Egeus, I will over-bear your will ;
For in the Temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And for the morning now is something worne,
Our purpos'd hunting shall be set aside.
Away, with us to Athens ; three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.

Come Hippolita. Exit Duke and Lords.

Dem. These things seeme small and undistinguishable,
Like farre off mountaines turned into Clouds.

Her. Me-thinks I see these things with parted eye,
When every thing seemes double.

Hel. Some-thinks :
And I have found Demetrius, like a jewell,
Mine owne, and not mine owne.

Dem. It seemes to me,
That yet we sleepe, we dreame. Doe not you thinke,
The Duke was heere, and bid us follow him?

Her. Yea, and my Father.

Hel. And Hippolita.

Lyf. And he bid us follow to the Temple.

Dem. Why then we are awake ; lets follow him, and by the way let us recount our dreames.

Bottom wakes.

Exit Lovers.

Clb. When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer.
My next is, most fairst Piramus, Hey ho. Peter Quince ?
Flute the bellows-mender ? Snout the tinker ? Starveling ?
Gods my life ! stolne hence, and left me asleepe : I have had a most rare vision. I had a dreame, past the wit of man, to say, what dreame it was. Me-thought I was, there is no man can tell what. Me-thought I was,
and me-thought I had. But man is but a patch'd foole, if he will offer to say, what me-thought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the eare of man hath not seene, mans hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dreame was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballet of this dreame, it shall be called Bottomes Dreame, because it hath no bottome ; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the Duke. Peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death.

Exit.

Enter Quince, Flute, Thibby, Snout, and Starveling.

Qui. Have you sent to Bottomes house ? Is he come home yet ?

Sna. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is transported.

Thib. If

This. If he come not, then the play is mar'd. It goes not forward, doth it?

Qui. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens, able to discharge Piramus but he.

This. No, he hath simply the best wit of any handy-craft man in Athens.

Qui. Yea, and the best person too, and he is a very Paramour, for a sweet voyce.

This. You must say, Paragon. A Paramour is (God blesse us) a thing of naught.

Enter Snug the Ioyner.

Snug. Masters, the Duke is coming from the Temple, and there is two or three Lords and Ladies more married. If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

This. O sweet bully Bottom: thus hath he lost sixpence a day, during his life; he could not have scaped sixpence a day. And the Duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Piramus, Ile be hang'd. He would have deserved it. Sixpence a day in Piramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these Lads? Where are these hearts?

Qui. Bottom, O most couragious day! O most happy houre!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders; but aske me not what. For if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing as it fell out.

Qui. Let us heare, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me: all that I will tell you, is, that the Duke hath dined. Get your apparell together, good strings to your beards, new ribbands to your pumps, meete presently at the Palace, every man looke ore his part: for the short and the long is, our play is preferred: In any case let Thibby have cleane linnen: and let not him that plays the Lion, paire his nailes, for they shall hang out for the Lions claws. And most deare Actors, cate no Onions, nor Garlicke; for we are to utter sweet breath, and I doe not doubt but to heare them say, it is a sweet Comedy. No more words: away, goe away.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolita, Egeus and his Lords.

Hip. 'Tis strange my Theseus, that these lovers speake of

This. More strange then true. I never may beleieve These anticke fables, nor these Fairy toyes, Lovers and mad men have such seething braines, Such shaping phantasies, that apprehend more Then coole reason ever comprehends. The Lunaticke, the Lover, and the Poet, Are of imagination all compact. One fees more divels then vaste hell can hold; That is the mad man. The Lover, all as franticke, Sees Helens beauty in a brow of Egypt. The Poets eye in a fine frenzy rolling, Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven. And as imagination bodies forth the formes of things Vnknowne; the Poets pen turns them to shapes, And gives to ayre nothing, a locall habitation, And a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination,

That if it would but apprehend some joy, It comprehends some bringer of that joy. Or in the night, imagining some feare How easie is a bush suppos'd a Beare?

Hip. But all the story of the night told over, And all their minds transfigur'd to together, More witnesseth than fancies images, And growes to something of great constancy; But howsoever, strange, and admirable.

Enter Lovers, Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

The. Heere come the lovers, full of joy and mirth: Joy, gentle friends, joy and fresh dayes of love Accompany your hearts.

Lys. More then to us, Waite in your royall walkes, your boord, your bed.

This. Come now, what maskes, what dances shall we have,

To weare away this long age of three houres: Betweene our after supper, and bed-time?

Where is our usuall manager of mirth?

What Revels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing houre?

Call Egeus.

Ege. Heere mighty Theseus.

This. Say, what abridgement have you for this evening?

What maske? What musicke? How shall we beguile The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Ege. There is a brieve how many sports are rife: Make choise of which your Highnesse will see first.

Lys. The battell with the Centaurs to be sung By an Athenian Eunuch, to the Harpe.

The. We'll none of that. That have I told my love In glory of my kinsman Hercules.

Lys. The riot of the tipsie Bachanals, Tearing the Thracian singer, in their rage?

This. That is an old device, and it was plaid When I from Thebes came last a Conqueror.

Lys. The thrice three Muses, mourning for the death of learning, late deccast in beggery.

This. That is some Satire keene and criticall, Not sorting with a nuptiall ceremony.

Lys. A tedious brieve Scene of yong Piramus, And his love Thibby; very tragicall mirth.

The. Merry and tragicall? Tedious, and brieve? That is, hot ice, and wondrous strange snow. How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Ege. A play there is my Lord, some ten words long, Which is as brieve, as I have knowne a play;

But by ten words, my Lord, it is too long;

Which makes it tedious. For in all the play,

There is not one word apt, one Player fitted.

And tragicall my noble Lord it is:

For Piramus therein doth kill himselfe.

Which when I saw rehearst, I must confesse, Made mine eyes water: but more merry teares,

The passion of loud laughter never shed.

This. What are they that doe play it?

Ege. Hard handed men, that worke in Athens heere, Which never labour'd in their minds till now;

And now have toyled their unbreathed memories

With this same play, against your nuptials

This. And we will heare it.

Phi. No, my noble Lord, it is not for you. I have heard It over, and it is nothing, nothing in the world ; Vnlesse you can find sport in their intents, Extremely stretcht, and cond with cruell paine, To doe you service.

Thef. I will heare that play. For never any thing, Can be amisse, when simplenesse and duty tender it. Goe bring them in, and take your places, Ladies.

Hip. I love not to see wretchednesse or charged ; And duty in his service perishing.

Thef. Why gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He sayes, they can doe nothing in this kind.

Thef. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing : Our sport shall be, to take what they mistake ; And what poore duty cannot doe, noble respect Takes it in might, not merrit.

Where I have come, great Clearkes have purposed To greete me with premeditated welcomes ; Where I have seene them shiver and looke pale, Make periods in the midst of sentences, Throttle their practiz'd accent in their feares, And in conclusion, dumbly have broke off, Not paying me a welcome. Trust me sweet, Out of this silence yet, I pickt a welcome : And in the modesty of fearefull duty, I reade as much, as from the ratling tongue Of fauzy and audacious eloquence. Love therefore, and tongue-tide simplicity, In least, speake most, to my capacity.

Ege. So please your Grace, the Prologue is addrest.

Duk. Let him approach.

Flor. Trum.

Enter the Prologue.

Quince.

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will. That you should thinke, we come not to offend, But with good will. To shew our simple skill, That is the true beginning of our end. Consider then, we come but in despight. We doe not come, as minding to content you, Our true intent is. All for your delight, We are not heere. That you should here repent you, The Actors are at hand ; and by their show, You shall know all, that you are like to know.

Thef. This fellow doth not stand upon points.

Lys. He hath rid his Prologue, like a rough Colt : he knowes not the stop. A good morall my Lord. It is not enough to speake, but to speake true.

Hip. Indeed he hath plaid on his Prologue, like a child on the Recorder, a sound, but not in government.

Thef. His speech was like a tangled chaine : nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is the next ?

Tawnyer with a Trumpet before them,

Enter Pyramus, and Thisby, Wall, Moone-shine, and Lyon.

Pro. Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show, But wonder on, till truth make all things plaine. This man is Pyramus, if you would know ; This beauteous Lady, Thisby is certaine. This man with lyme and rough-cast, doth present Wall, the vile wall, which did these lovers sunder : And through walls chinke (poore soules) they are content To whisper. At the which, let no man wonder. This man, with Lanthorne, dog, and bush of thorne, Presenteth moone-shine. For if you will know, By moone-shine did these Lovers thinke no scorne To meet at Ninus toombe, there, there to wooe :

This grizly beast (which Lyon hight by name) The trusty Thisby, comming first by night, Did scarre away, or rather did affright : And as she fled, her mantle she did fall ; Which Lyon vile with bloody mouth did staine. Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall, And finds his gentle Thisbies Mantle, slaine ; Whereat, with blade, with bloody blamefull blade, He bravely broacht his boiling bloody breast, And Thisby, tarrying in Mulberry shade, His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest, Let Lyon, Moone-shine, Wall, and Lovers swaine, At large discourse, while here they doe remaine.

Exit all but Wall.

Thef. I wonder if the Lion be to speake,

Dem. No wonder, my Lord : one Lion may, when many Asses doe.

Exit Lyon, Thisby, and Moone-shine.

Wall. In this same Interlude, it doth befall, That I, one Snowt (by name) present a wall : And such a wall, as I would have you thinke, That had in it a crannied hole or chinke : Through which the Lovers, Pyramus and Thisby Did whisper often, very secretly. This loame, this rough-cast, and this stone doth shew, That I am that same Wall ; the truth is so. And this the cranny is, right and sinister, Through which the fearefull Lovers are to whisper.

Thef. Would you desire Lime and Haire to speake better ?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition, that ever I heard discourse, my Lord.

Thef. Pyramus drawes neere the Wall, silence.

Enter Pyramus.

Pir. O grim lookt night, O night with hue so blacke, O night, which ever art, when day is not : O night, O night, alacke, alacke, alacke, I feare my Thisbies promise is forgot. And thou O wall, thou sweet and lovely wall, That standes betweene her fathers ground and mine, Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall, Shew me thy chinke, to blinke through with mine eyne. Thankes courteous wall. Love shield thee well for this. But what see I ? No Thisby doe I see.

O wicked wall, through whom I see no blisse, Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me.

Thef. The wall me-thinkes being sensible, should curse againe.

Pir. No in truth sir, he should not. Deceiving me, Is Thisbies cue ; she is to enter, and I am to spy Her through the wall. You shall see it will fall.

Enter Thisby.

Pat as I told you ; yonder she comes.

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my mones, For parting my faire Pyramus, and me. My cherry lips have often kist thy stones ; Thy stones with Lime and Haire knit up in thee.

Pyr. I heare a voyce ; now will I to the chinke, To spy and I can see my Thisbies face. Thisby ?

This. My love thou art, my Love I thinke.

Pir. Thinke what thou wilt, I am thy Lovers grace, And like Lisander am I trusty still.

This. And I like Helen till the Fates me kill.

Pir. Not Shafalus to Procrus, was so true.

This. As Shalafus to Procrus, I to you.

Pir.

Pir. O kisse me through the hole of this vile wall.

Thib. I kisse the wals hole, not your lips at all.

Pir. Wilt thou at Nimies tombe meete me straight way?

Thib. Tide life, tide death, I come without delay.

Wall. Thus have I Wall, my part discharged so; And being done, thus Wall away doth goe. Exit Clow.

Duk. Now is the morall downe betweene the two Neighbours.

Dem. No remedy my Lord, when Wals are so wilfull, to heare without warning.

Dur. This is the silliest stufte that ere I heard.

Duk. The best in this kind are but shadowes, and the worst are no worse if imagination amend them.

Dur. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

Duk. If we imagine no worse of them then they of themselves, they may passe for excellent men. Here comes two noble beasts, in a man and a Lion.

Enter Lyon, and Moone shine.

Lyon. You Ladyes, you (whose gentle hearts do feare The smallest monstrous mouse that creepes on floore) May now perchance, both quake and tremble heere, When Lion rough in wildest rage doth roare. Then know that I, one Sung the loyner am A Lion fell, nor else no Lions damme: For if I should as Lion come in strife Into this place, 'twere pitty of my life.

Du. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast my Lord, that ere I saw.

Lif. This Lion is a very Fox for his valor.

Du. True, and a Goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so my Lord: for his valor cannot carry his discretion, and the Fox carries the Goose.

Du. His discretion I am sure cannot carry his valor: for the Goose carries not the Fox. It is well; leave it to his discretion, and let us hearken to the Moone.

Moone. This Lanthorne doth the horned Moone present.

De. He should have worne the hornes on his head.

Du. He is no crescent, and his honours are invisible, within the circumference.

Moone. This lanthorne doth the horned Moone present: My selfe, the man i'th Moone doth seeme to be.

Du. This is the greatest error of all the rest; the man should be put into the Lanthorne. How is it else the man i'th Moone?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle. For you see, it is already in snuffe.

Dur. I am weary of this Moone; would he would change.

Du. It appears by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane: but yet in courtesie, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lif. Proceed Moone.

Moone. All that I have to say, is to tell you, that the Lanthorne is the Moone; I, the man in the Moone; this thorne bush, my thorne bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why all these should be in the Lanthorne: for they are in the Moone. But silence, heere comes Thib.

Enter Thib.

Thib. This is old Nimies tombe: where is my love?

Lyon. Oh.

The Lion roares, Thib.

Dem. Well roar'd Lion.

Du. Well run Thib.

Dur. Well shone Moone.

Truly the Moone shines with a good grace.

Du. Well mouz'd Lion.

Dem. And then came Piramus.

Lif. And so the Lion vanisht.

Enter Piramus.

Pir. Sweet Moone, I thanke thee for thy sunny beames, I thanke thee Moone, for shining now so bright: For by thy gracious, golden, glittering streames, I trust to taste of truest Thib. fight.

But stay: O spight! but marke, poore Knight, What dreadfull dole is heere?

Eyes doe you see! How can it be!

O dainty Ducke: O Deere!

Thy mantle good; what staine with blood!

Approch you Furies fell:

O Fates! come, come: Cut thred and thrum,

Quaile, crush, conclude, and quell.

Du. This passion, and the death of a deare friend, Would goe neere to make a man looke sad.

Dur. Beshrew my heart, but I pitty the man.

Pir. O wherefore Nature, did'st thou Lions frame?

Since Lion vild hath heere desflour'd my deere:

Which is: no, no, which was the fairest Dame That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheere.

Come teares, confound: Out sword, and wound

The pap of Piramus:

I, that left pap, where heart doth hop;

Thus dye I, thus, thus, thus.

Now am I dead, now am I fled, my soule is in the sky,

Tongue lose thy light, Moone take thy flight,

Now, dye, dye, dye, dye, dye.

Dem. No dye, but an ace for him: for he is but one.

Lif. Lesse then an ace man. For he is dead, he is nothing.

Du. With the helpe of a Surgeon, he might yet recover, and prove an Ass.

Dur. How chance Moone-shine is gone before?

Thib. comes backe, and finds her Lover.

Enter Thib.

Duk. She will find him by starre-light.

Heere she comes, and her passion ends the play.

Dur. Me thinkes she should not use a long one for such a Piramus: I hope she will be brieve.

Dem. A Moch will turne the ballance, which Piramus, which Thib. is the better. (eyes.)

Lif. She hath spyed him already, with those sweet

Dem. And thus she meanes, videlicet.

Thib. Asleepe my Love? What, dead my Dove?

O Piramus arise:

Speake, speake: Quite dumb? Dead, dead? A tombe Must cover thy sweet eyes.

These Lilly Lips, this cherry nose,

These yellow Cowslip cheekes

Are gone, are gone: Lovers make mone:

His eyes were Greene as Leekes.

O sisters three, come, come to mee,

With hands as pale as Milke,

Lay them in gore, since you have shore

With sheeres, his thred of filke.

Tongue not a word: Come trusty sword:

Come blade; my brest imbrue:

And farewell friends, thus Thisby ends ;
Adieu, adieu, adieu.

Duk. Moon-shine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Demo. I, and Wall too.

Bot. No, I assure you, the wall is downe, that parted their Fathers. Will it please you to see the Epilogue, or to heare a Bergomaske dance, betweene two of our company ?

Duk. No Epilogue, I pray you ; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse ; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it had plaid Piramus, and hung himselfe in Thisbies garter, it would have beene a fine Tragedy : and so it is truly, and very notably discharged. But come, your Bergomaske ; let your Epilogue alone.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.

Lovers to bed, 'tis almost Fairy time.

I feare we shall out-sleepe the coming morne,

As much as we this night have over-watched.

This palpable grosse play hath well beguil'd

The heavy gate of night. Sweet friends to bed.

A fortnight hold we this solemnity,

In nightly Revels ; and new iollity.

Exeunt.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. Now the hungry Lyons rores,
And the Wolfe beholds the Moone :
Whilest the heavy ploughman shores,
All with weary taske fore-done.
Now the wasted brands doe glow,
Whilest the scritch-owle, scritch'ing loud,
Puts the wretch that lyes in woe,
In remembrance of a throwd.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the Church-way paths to glide,
And we Fairies, that doe runne,
By the triple Hecates teame,
From the presence of the Sunne,
Following darkenesse like a dreame,
Now are frolicke ; not a Mouse
Shall disturbe this hallowed house,
I am sent with broome before,
To sweep the dust behind the doore.

Enter King and Queene of Fairies, with their traine.

Ob. Through the house give glimmering light,

By the dead and drowfie fier,
Every Elfe and Fairy spright,
Hop as light as bird from brier,
And this Dirty after me, sing and dance it trippinglye.

Tita. First rehearse this song by roate,
To each word a warbling note.

Hand in hand, with Fairy grace,
Will we sing and blesse this place.

The Song.

Now until the breake of day,
Through this house each Fairy stray.

To the best Bride-bed will we,

Which by us shall blesse be :

And the issue there create,

Ever shall be fortunate :

So shall all the couples three,

Ever true in loving be :

And the bloss of Natures hand,

Shall not in their issue stand,

Never mole, barelip, nor scarre,

Nor marke prodigious, such as are

Despised in Naturis,

Shall upon their children be.

With this field dew consecrate,

Every Fairy take his gate,

And each severall chamber blesse,

Through this Pallace with sweet peace,

Ever shall in safety rest,

And the owner of it blest.

Trip away, make no stay ;

Meet me all by breake of day.

Robin. If we shadowes have offended,
Thinke but this (and all is mended)
That you have but slumbred here,
While these visions did appeare.
And this weake and idle theame,
No more yee lding but a dreame,
Gentles, doe not reprehend.
If you pardon, we will mend.
And as I am an honest Pucke,
If we have unearned lucke,
Now to scape the Serpents tongue,
We will make amends ere long :
Else the Pucke a lyar call.
So good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends,

FINIS.

The Merchant of Venice.

Actus Primus.

Enter Antonio, Salarino, and Salanio.

Antonio.

IN sooth I know not why I am so sad,
It wearies me: you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
What stuffe 'tis made of, whereof it is borne,
I am to learne: and such a Want-wit sadnesse makes of me,

That I have much adoe to know my selfe.

Sal. Your mind is tossing on the Ocean,
There where your Argosies with portly saile
Like Signiors and rich Burgers on the flood,
Or as it were the Pageants of the sea,
Doe over-peere the petty Trailliquers
That curtise to them, doe them reverence
As they flye by them with their woven wings.

Sala. Beleeve me sir, had I such venture forth,
The better part of my affections, would
Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grasse to know were sits the winde,
Peering in Maps for ports, and peers, and rodes:
And every object that might make me feare
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt
Would make me sad.

Sal. My winde cooling my broth,
Would blow me to an Ague, when I thought
What harme a wind too great might doe at sea.
I should not see the sandie houre-glasse runne,
But I should thinke of shallowes, and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew docks in sand,
Vailing her high top lower then her ribs
To kille her buriall; should I goe to Church
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethinke me straight of dangerous rockes,
Which touching but my gentle Vessels side
Would scatter all her spices on the streame,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silkes,
And in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shall I have the thought
To thinke on this, and shall I lacke the thought
That such a thing bechanc'd would make me sad?
But tell not me, I know Antonio
Is sad to thinke upon his merchandize.

Anth. Beleeve me no, I thanke my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottome trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate

Vpon the fortune of this present yeere:

Therefore my merchandize makes me not sad:

Sola. Why then you are in love.

Anth. Fic, fie.

Sola. Not in love neither! then let us say you are sad
Because you are not merry; and 'twere as easie
For you to laugh and leape, and say you are merry
Because you are not sad. Now by two-headed Janus,
Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peepe through their eyes,
And laugh like Parrats at a bag-piper.
And other of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not shew their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor sweare the jest be laughable.

Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Sola. Heere comes Bassanio,
Your most noble Kinsman,
Gratiano, and Lorenzo. Fareyouwell,
We leave you now with better company.

Sala. I would have staid till I had made you merry,
If worthier friends had not prevented me.

Anth. Your worth is very deere in my regard.

I take it your owne busines calls on you,
And you embrace th'occasion to depart.

Sal. Good morrow my good Lords.

(when?)

Bass. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh? say,
You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?

Sal. Wee'll make our leysures to attend on yours.

Exeunt Salarino, and Salanio.

Lord. My Lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio
We two will leave you, but at dinner time

I pray you have in mind where we must meete,

Bass. I will not faile you.

Grat. You looke not well signior Antonio,
You have too much respect upon the world:
They loose it that doe buy it with much care,
Beleeve me you are marvellously chang'd.

Anth. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano,
A stage, where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.

Grati. Let me play the foole,
With mirth and laughter: let old wrinckles come,
And let my Liver rather heate with wine,
Then my heat coole with mortifying grones.
Why should a man whose blood is warme within,
Sit like his Grandfire, cut in Alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes? and creepe into the Iaundies

By

By being peevish? I tell thee what Antonio,
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks :
There are a sort of men, whose visages
Doe creame and mantle like a standing pond,
And doe a willfull stillnesse entertaine,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,
As who should say, I am sir an Oracle,
And when I ope my lips, let no dogge barke.
O my Antonio, I doe know of these
That therefore onely are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; when I am very sure
If they should speake, would almost damme those eares
Which hearing them would call their brothers fooles :
Ile tell thee more of this another time.
But fish not with this malancholly baite
For this foole Gudgeon, this opinion :
Come good Lorenzo, faryewell a while,
Ile end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner time.
I must be one of these same dumbe wise men,
For Gratiano never let's me speake.

Gra. Well, keepe me company but two yeares mo;
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine owne tongue.

Ant. Fare you well, Ile grow a talker for this gear.

Gra. Thanks ifaith, for silence is onely commendable
In a neats tongne dri'd, and a maid not vendible. Exit.

Ant. It is that any thing now.

Bas. Gratiano speaks an infinite deale of nothing; more then any man in all Venice, his reasons are two graines of wheate hid in two bushels of chaffe: you shall seeke all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well: tell me now, what Lady is the same
To whom you swore a secrete Pilgrimage
That you to day promis'd to tell me of?

Bas. Tis not unknowne to you Antonio
How much I have disabled mine estate,
By something shewing a more swelling port
Then my faint meanes would grant continuance :
Nor doe I now make mone to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate, but my cheifecare
Is to come fairely off from the great debts
Wherein my time something too prodigall
Hath left me gag'd: to you Antonio
I owe the most in mony, and in love,
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get cleere of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you good Bassanio let me know it,
And if it stand as you your selfe still doe,
Within the eye of honour, be assur'd
My purse, my person, my extreamest meanes
Lye all unlock'd to your occasions.

Bas. In my schoole dayes, when I had lost one shaft
I shot his fellow of the selfesame flight
The selfesame way, with more aduised watch
To find the other forth, and by adventuring both,
I oft found both. I urge this child-hood proofe,
Because what followes is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and like a willfull youth,
That which I owe is lost: but if you please
To shoote another arrow that selfe way
Which you did shoot the first, I doe not doubt,
As I will watch the ayme: Or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard backe againe,

And thankfully rest debter for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance,
And out of doubt you doe to me more wrong
In making question of my uttermost,
Than if you had made waste of all I have :
Then doe but say to me what I should doe
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it: therefore speake.

Bas. In Belmont is a Lady richly left,
And she is faire, and fairer then that word,
Of wondrous vertues: sometimes from her eyes,
I did receive faire speechlesse messages:
Her name is Portia, nothing undervallued
To Cato's daughter, Brutus Portia,
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth;
For the foure windes blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors, and her sunny lockes
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece,
Which makes her seat of Belmont Cholchos strand;
And many Iasons come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, had I but the meanes
To hold a rivall place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should questionlesse be fortunate.

Ant. Thou knowst that all my fortunes are at sea,
Neither have I mony, nor commodity
To raise a present summe, therefore goe forth
Try what my credit can in Venice doe,
That shall be rackt even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont to faire Portia.
Goe presently enquire, and so will I
Where money is, and I no question make
To have it of my trust, or for my sake. Exeunt.

Enter Portia with her waiting woman Nerissa.

Portia. By my troth Nerissa, my little body is a weary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet Madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are:
and yet for ought I see, they are as sicke that surfet with too much, as they that starve with nothing; it is no small happinesse therefore to be feared in the meane, superfluity comes sooner by white haire, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounc'd.

Ner. They would be better if well followed.

Por. If to doe were as easie as to know what were good to doe, Chappels had beene Churches, and poore mens cottages Princes Pallaces: it is a good Divine that followes his owne instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, then be one of the twenty to follow mine owne teaching: the braine may devise lawes for the blood, but a hot temper leapes ore a cold decree, such a hare is madnesse the youth, to skip ore the meshes of good counsaile the cripple; but this reason is not in fashion to choose me a husband: O me, the word choose, I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike, so is the will of a living daughter curb'd by the will of a dead father: is it not hard Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever vertuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations, therefore the lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of Gold, Silver, and Lead, whereof who chooses his meaning, chooses

chooses you, will no doubt never be chosen by any rightly, but one who you shall rightly love; but what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these Princely tutors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee over-name them, and as thou namest them, I will describe them, and according to my description levell at my affection.

Ner. First there is the Neapolitan Prince.

Por. I that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talke of his horse, and he makes it a great appropriation to his owne good parts that he can shoo him himselfe: I am much afraid my Lady his mother plaid false with a Smyth.

Ner. Then is there the County Palentine.

Por. He doth nothing but frowne (as who should say, and you will not have me, choose: he heares merry tales and smiles not, I feare he will prove the weeping Philosopher when he growes old, being so full of unmannerly sadnesse in his youth.) I had rather to be married to a deaths head with a bone in his mouth, then to either of these: God defend me from these two.

Ner. How say you by the French Lord, Mounfier Le Bonne?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him passe for a man, in truth I know it is sinne to be a mocker, but he! why he hath a horse better then the Neapolitans, a better bad habite of frowning then the Count Palentine, he is every man in no man, if a Tarrell sing, he fals straight a capring, he will fence with his owne shadow. If I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands: if he would despise me, I would forgive him, for if he love me to madnesse, I should never requite him.

Ner. What say you then to Fauconbridge, the yong Baron of England?

Por. You know I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latine, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the Court and sweare that I have a poore penny-worth in the English: he is a proper mans picture, but alas who can converse with a dumbe show? how odly he is suited, I thinke he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.

Ner. What thinke you of the other Lord his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a boxe of the eare of the Englishman, and sworne he would pay him againe when he was able. I thinke the Frenchman became his surety, and scald under for another.

Ner. How like you the yong Germane, the Duke of Saxonyes Nephew?

Por. Very vildely in the morning when he is sober, and most vildely in the afternoone when he is drunke: when he is best, he is a little worse then a man, and when he is worst, he is little better then a beast: and the worst fall that ever fell, I hope I shall make snift to goe without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right Casket, you should refuse to performe your Fathers will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore for feare of the worst, I pray thee set a deepe glasse of Reinish-wine on the contrary Casket, for if the divell be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will doe any thing Nerrissa ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not feare Lady the having any of these

Lords, they have acquainted me with their determinations, which is indeed to returne to their home, and to trouble you with no more suite, unlesse you may be wonne by some other sort then your Fathers imposition, depending on the Caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibilla, I will dye as chaste as Diana: unlesse I be obtained by the manner of my Fathers will: I am glad this parcell of wooers are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I doate on his very absence: and I wish them a faire departure.

Ner. Doe you not remember Lady in your Fathers time, a Venetian, a Scholler and a Souldier that came hither in company of the Marquesse of Mountforrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio, as I thinke, so was hee call'd.

Ner. True Madam, he of all the men that ever my foolish eyes look'd upon, was the best deserving a faire Lady.

Por. I remember him will, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a Serving-man.

Ser. The foure strangers seeke you Madam to take their leave: and there is a fore-runner come from a fift, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the Prince his Master will be here to night.

Por. If I could bid the fift welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other foure farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a Saint, and the complexion of a divell, I had rather he should thrive me then wive me. Come Nerrissa, firra goe before; whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the doore.

Exeunt.

Enter Bassanio with Shylocke the Jew.

Shy. Three thousand ducates, well.

Bass. I fir, for three months.

Shy. For three mouths, well.

Bass. For the which, as I told you,

Antonio shall be bound.

Shy. Antonio shall become bound, well.

Bass. May you sted me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer.

Shy. Three thousand ducats for three moneths, And Antonio bound.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man.

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary.

Shy. No, no, no, no, no: my meaning in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient, yet his meanes are in supposition: he hath an Argosie bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies, I understand moreover upon the Ryalto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures hee hath squandred abroad, but ships are but boords, Saylers but men, there be landsrats, and water rats, water theeves, and land theeves, I meane Pyrats; and then there is the perrill of waters, windes, and rocks: the man is notwithstanding sufficient, three thousand ducates, I thinke I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Exe.

Jew. I will be assured I may : and that I may bee assured, I will bethinke mee, may I speake with Antonio—

Bas. If it please you to dine with us.

Jew. Yes, to smell porke, to eate of the habitation which your Prophet the Nazarite conjured the divell into : I will buy with you, sell with you, talke with you, walke with you, and so following : but I will not eate with you, drinke with you, nor pray with you. What newes on the Ryalto, who is he comes here ?

Enter Antonio.

Bas. This is signior Antonio.

Jew. How like a fawning publican he looks.

I hate him for he is a Christian :

But more, for that in low simplicity

He lends out money gratis, and brings downe

The rate of usance here with us in Venice,

If I can catch him once upon the hip,

I will feede fat the ancient grudge I beare him.

He hates our sacred Nation, and he railes

Even there were Merchants most doe congregate

On me, my bargaines, and my well-worne thrift,

Which he calls interest : Curled be my Trybe

If I forgive him.

Bas. Shylocke, doe you heare.

Shy. I am debating of my present store,

And by the neere gulse of my memory

I cannot instantly raise up the grosse

Of full three thousand ducats : what of that ?

Tubal a wealthy Hebrew of my Tribe

Will furnish me ; but soft, how many months

Doe you desire ? Rest you faire good signior,

Your worship was the last man in our mouthes.

Ant. Shylocke, albeit I neither lend nor borrow

By taking, nor by giving of excesse,

Yet to supply the ripe wants of my friend,

He breake a custome : is he yet posselt

How much he would ?

Shy. I, I, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot, three months, you told me so.

Well then, your bond : and let me see, but heare you,

Me thoughts you said, you neither lend nor borrow

Vpon advantage.

Ant. I doe never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his Vncle Labans sheepe,

This Jacob from our holy Abram was

(As his wife mother wrought in his behalfe)

The third possessor, I, he was the third.

Ant. And what of him, did he take interest ?

Shy. No, not take interest, not as you would say

Directly interest, marke what Jacob did,

When Laban and himselfe were compriz'd

That all the eanelings which were streakt and pied

Should fall as Jacob's hier, the Ewes being rancke,

In end of Autumne turned to the Rammes,

And when the worke of generation was

Betweene these woolly breeders in the act,

The skilfull shepherd pil'd me certaine wands,

And in the dooing of the deed of kind,

He stucke them up before the fulsome Ewes,

Who then conceaving, did in eaning time

Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's.

This was a way to thrive, and he was blest :

And thrift is blessing if men steale it not.

Ant. This was a venture sir that Jacob serv'd for,

A thing not in his power to bring to passe,

But sway'd and fashion'd by the hand of heaven.

Was this insert to make interest good ?

Or is your Gold and Silver Ewes and Rams ?

Shy. I cannot tell, I make it breeds as fast,

But note me signior.

Ant. Marke you this Bassanio,

The divell can cite Scripture for his purpose,

An evill soule producing holy witnesse,

Is like a villaine with a smiling cheeke,

A goodly apple rotten at the heart.

O what a goodly outside falsehood hath.

Shy. Three thousand ducats, 'tis a good round summe.

Three months from twelve, then let me see the rate.

Ant. Well Shylocke, shall we be beholding to you ?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft

In the Ryalto you have rated me

About my monyes and my usances :

Still have I borne it with a patient shrug,

(For suffrance is the badge of all our Tribe.

You call me misbeleever, cut-throate dog,

And spet upon my Iewish gaberdine,

And all for use of that which is mine owne.

Well then, it now appears you need my helpe :

Goe to then, you come to me, and you say,

Shylocke, we would have moneyes, you say so :

You that did voide your heume upon my beard,

And foote me as you spurne a stranger curie

Over your threshold, moneyes is your suite.

What should I say to you ? Should I not say,

Hath a dog money ? is it possible

A curie should lend three thousand ducats ? or Shall I bend low, and in a bond-mans key

With bared breath, and whispring humblenesse,

Say this : Faire sir, you spet on me on Wednesday last,

Your spurn'd me such a day ; another time

You cald me dog : and for these curtesies

He lend you thus much moneyes.

Ant. I am as like to call thee so againe,

To spet on thee againe, to spurne thee too.

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not

As to thy friend, for when did friendship take

A breed of barraine mettall of his friend ?

But lend it rather to thine enemye,

Who if he breake, thou maist with better face

Exact the penalties.

Shy. Why looke you how you storme,

I would be friends with you, and have your love,

Forget the shames that you have stained me with,

Supplie your present wants, and take no doite

Of usance for my monyes, and youle not heare me,

This is kind I offer.

Bas. This were kindnesse.

Shy. This kindnesse will I showe,

Goe with me to a Notary, seale me there

Your single bond, and in a merry sport

If you repay me not on such a day,

In such a place, such sum or sums as are

Exprest in the condition, let the forfeite

Be nominated for an equall pound

Of your faire flesh, to be cut off and taken

In what part of your body it pleaseth me.

Ant. Content in faith, He seale to such a bond,

And say there is much kindnesse in the Jew.

Bas. You

Bass. You shall not seale to such a bond for me,
He rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why feare not man, I will not forfeite it,
Within these two months, that's a month before
This bond expires, I doe expect returne
Of thrice three times the vauw of this bond.

Shy. O father Abram, what these Christians are,
Whose owne hard dealing teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others: Pray you tell me this,
If he should breake his day, what should I gaine
By the exaction of the forfeiture?

A pound of mans flesh taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither
As flesh of Muttons, Beefes, or Goates. I say
To buy his favour, I extend this friendship,
If he will take it, so: if not adiew,
And for my love I pray you wrong me not.

Ant. Yes Shylocke, I will seale unto this bond.

Shy. Then meete me forthwith at the Notaries,
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will goe and purse the ducats straite:
See to my house left in the fearefull guard
Of an unthrifty knave: and presently
Ile be with you.

Exit.

Ant. Hye thee gentle Jew. This Hebrew will turne
Christian, he growes kind.

Bass. I like not faire tearmes and, a villaines mind.

Ant. Come on, in this there can be no difmay,
My Shippes come home a month before the day.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

*Enter Morochius a savvy Moore all white, and three or four followers accordingly, with Portia,
Nerrissa, and their traine.
Flo. Cornets.*

Mor. Mistlike me not for my complexion,
The shadowed liverie of the burnisht funne,
To whom I am a neighbour, and neere bred.
Bring me the fairest creature Northward borne,
Where Phœbus fire scarce thawes the yficles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.
I tell thee Lady this aspect of mine
Hath feard the valiant, (by my love I sweare)
The best regarded Virgins of our Clyme
Have lov'd it too: I would not change this hue,
Except to steale your thoughts my gentle Queene.

Por. In tearmes of choise I am not soly led
By nice direction of a maidens eyes:
Besides, the lottry of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing:
But if my father had not scanted me,
And hedg'd me by his wit to yeeld my selfe
His wife, who wins me by that meanes I told you,
Your selfe (renowned Prince) then stood as faire
As any commer I have look'd on yet
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thanke you,
Therefore I pray you leade me to the Caskets
To try my fortune: By this Symitar

That slew the Sophy, and a Persian Prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,
I would ore-stare the sternest eyes that looke:
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth:
Plucke the yong sucking Cubs from the she Beare,
Yea, mocke the Lion when he rores for prey
To win the Lady. But alas the while,
If Hercules and Lychas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turne by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his rage,
And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Misse that which one unworthier may attaine,
And dye with grieving.

Port. You must take your chance,
And either not attempt to choose at all,
Or sweare before you choose, if you choose wrong
Never to speake to Lady afterward
In way of marriage, therefor be advis'd.

Mor. Nor will not, come bring me unto my chance.

Por. First forward to the temple, after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then,
To make me blest or curst'd it among men.

Cornets.

Exeunt.

Enter the Clowne alone.

Cl. Certainly, my conscience will serve me to runne from this Jew my Master: the fiend is at mine elbow, and tempts me, saying to me, lobbe, Launcelet lobbe, good Launcelet, or good lobbe, or good Launcelet lobbe, use your legs, take the start, runne away: my conscience sayes no; take heed honest Launcelet, take heed honest lobbe, or as afore-said honest Launcelet lobbe, doe not runne, scorne running with thy heeles; well, the most couragi-ous fiend bids me packe, fi sayes the fiend, away sayes
the fiend, for the heavens roule up a brave minde sayes the fiend, and runne; well, my conscience hanging about the necke of my heart, sayes very wisely to me: my honest friend Launcelet, being an honest mans sonne, or rather an honest womans sonne, for indeed my father did someting smacke, something grow too; he had a kind of taste; wel, my conscience sayes Launcelet bouge not, bouge sayes the fiend, bouge not sayes my conscience, conscience say I you counsaile well, fiend say I you counsaile well, to be rul'd by my conscience I should stay with the Jew my Master, who (God blesse the marke) is a kind of di-vell; and to runne away from the Jew I should be ruled by the fiend, who saving your reverence is the divell himselfe: certainly the Jew is the very divell incarnation, and in my conscience, my conscience is a kind of hard conscience, to offer to counsaile me to stay with the Jew;
the fiend gives the more friendly counsaile: I will runne fiend, my heeles are at your commandement, I will runne.

Enter old Gobbo with a Basket.

Gob. Master yong-man, you I pray you, which is the way to Master Iewes?

Laun. O heavens, this is my true begotten father, who being more then sand-blind, high gravell blind, knowes me not, I will try confusions with him.

Gob. Maister yong Gentleman, I pray you which is the way to Maister Iewes.

Laun. Turne upon your right hand at the next turning

ning, but at the next turning of all on your left; marry at the very next turning, turne of no hand, but turne downe indirectly to the lewes house.

Gob. Be Gods fonties 'twill be a hard way to hit, can you tell me whether one Launcelet that dwells with him, dwell with him or no.

Lann. Talke you of yong Master Launcelet, marke me now, now will I raise the waters; talke you of yong Master Launcelet?

Gob. No Master sir, but a poore mans sonne, his Father though I say't is an honest exceeding poore man, and God be thanked well to live.

Lann. Well, let his Father be what a will, we talke of yong Master Launcelet.

Gob. Your worships friend and Launcelet.

Lann. But I pray you ergo old man, ergo I beseech you, talke you of yong Master Launcelet.

Gob. Of Launcelet, ant please your mastership.

Lann. Ergo Master Launcelet, talke not of master Launcelet Father, for the yong gentleman according to fates and destinies, and such odde sayings, the sisters three, and such branches of learning, in indeed deceased, or as you would say in plaine tearmes, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry God forbid, the boy was the very staffe of my age, my very prop.

Lann. Doe I looke like a cudgell or a hovell-post, a staffe or a prop: doe you know me Father.

Gob. Alacke the day, I know you not yong Gentleman, but I pray you tell me, is my boy God reit his soule alive or dead.

Lann. Doe you not know me Father,

Gob. Alacke sir I am fand blind, I know you not.

Lann. Nay, indeed if you had your eyes you might faile of the knowing me: it is a wise Father that knowes his owne child. Well, old man, I wil tell you news of your sonne, give me your blessing, truth will come to light, murder cannot be hid long, a mans sonne may, but in the end truth will not.

Gob. Pray you sir stand up, I am sure you are not Launcelet my boy.

Lann. Pray you let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelet your boy that was your sonne that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot thinke you are my sonne.

Lann. I know not what I shall thinke of that: but I am Launcelet the Iewes man, and I am sure Margery your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery indeed, Ile be sworne if thou be Launcelet, thou art mine owne flesh and blood: Lord worshipt might he be, what a beard hast thou got; thou hast got more haire on thy chin, then Dobbin my philhorse has on his taile.

Lann. It should seeme then that Dobbins taile growes backward. I am sure he had more haire of his taile then I have of my face when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord how art thou chang'd: how doost thou and thy Master agree, I have brought him a present; how gree you now?

Lann. Well, well, but for mine owne part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground; my Master's a very Iew, give him a present, give him a halter, I am famisht in his service. You may tell every finger I have with my ribs: father I am glad you are come, give me your present to one Master Bassanio, who indeed gives rare new Liveries, if I serve not him, I will runne as farre as God has any ground. O rare fortune, here comes the man, to him Father, for I am a Iew if I serve the Iew any longer.

Enter Bassanio with a follower or two.

Bassa. You may doe so, but let it be so hastid that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clocke: see these Letters delivered, put the Liveries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anone to my lodging.

Lann. To him Father.

Gob. God blesse your worship.

Bass. Gramercy, would'st thou ought with me.

Gob. Here's my sonne sir, a poore boy.

Lann. Not a poore boy sir, but the rich Iewes man that would sir as my Father shall specifie.

Gob. He hath a great infection sir, as one would say to serve.

Lann. Indeed the short and the long is, I serve the Iew, and have a desire as my Father shall specifie.

Gob. His Master and he (saying your worships reverence) are scarce catercosins.

Lann. To be briefe, the very truth is, that the Iew having done me wrong, doth cause me as my Father being I hope an old man shall frutifie unto you.

Gob. I have here a dish of Doves that I would bestow upon your worship, and my suite is.

Lann. In very briefe, the suite is impertinent to my selfe, as your worship shall know by this honest old man, and though I say it, though old man, yet poore man my Father.

Bass. One speake for both, what would you?

Lann. Serve you sir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter sir.

Bass. I know thee well, thou hast obtain'd thy suite, Shylocke thy Master spoke with me this day, And hath perfer'd thee, if it be preferment To leave a rich Iewes service, to become The follower of so poore a Gentleman.

Clo. The old proverbe is very well parted betweene my Master Shylocke and you sir, you have the grace of God sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speak'st it well; goe Father with thy sonne, Take leave of thy old Master, and enquire My lodging out, give him a Livery More garded then his fellowes: see it done.

Clo. Father in, I cannot get a service, no, I have ne're a tongue in my head: well: if any man in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer to sweare upon a booke, I shall have good fortune; goe too, here's a simple line of life, here's a small trifle of wives, alas, fiftene wives is nothing, a leven widdowes and nine maides is a simple comming in for one man, and then to scape drowning thrice, and to be in perill of my life with the edge of a featherbed, here are simple scapes: well, if Fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gere: Father come, Ile take my leave of the Iew in the twinkling.

Exit Clowne.

Bass. I pray thee good Leonardo thinke on this, These things being bought and orderly bestowed Returne in haste, for I doe feast to night My best esteemd acquaintance, hie thee gon.

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Exit Leonardo.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where's your Master.

Lann.

Leon. Yonder fir he walkes.

Gra. Signior Bassanio.

Baf. Gratiano.

Gra. I have a suite to you.

Baf. You have obtain'd it.

Gra. You must not denie me, I must go with you to Belmont.

Baf. Why then you must: but heare thee Gratiano, Thou art too wilde, too rude, and bold of voice, Parts that become thee happily enough, And in such eyes as ours appeare not faults; But where they are not knowne, why there they show Something too liberall, pray thee take paine To allay with some cold drops of modestie Thy skipping spirit, least through thy wilde behaviour I be misconstr'd in the place I go to, And loose my hopes.

Gra. Signior Bassanio, heare me, If do not put on a sober habite, Talke with respect, and sweare but now and then, Weare prayer bookes in my pocket, looke demurely, Nay more, while grace is saying, hood mine eyes Thus with my hat, and sigh and say Amen: Vse all the observance of civility Like one well studied in a sad ostent To please his Grandam, never trust me more.

Baf. Well, we shall see your bearing.

Gra. Nay but I barre to night, you shall not gage me By what we do to night.

Baf. No that were pittie, I would intreate you rather to put on Your boldest suite of mirth, for we have friends That purpose merriment: but fare you well, I have some businesse.

Gra. And I must to Lorenzo and the rest, But we will visite you at supper time.

Exeunt

Enter Iessica and the Clowne.

Ief. I am sorry thou wilt leave my Father so, Our house is hell, and thou a merry diuell Did'st rob it of some taste of tediousnesse; But fare thee well, there is a ducat for thee, And Lancelot, soone at supper shalt thou see Lorenzo, who is thy new Maisters guest, Give him this Letter, do it secretly, And so farewell: I would not have my Father See mee talke with thee.

Clo. Adue, teares exhibit my tongue, most beautifull Pagan, most sweete Iew, if a Christian did not play the knave and get thee, I am much deceived; but adue, these foolish drops do somewhat drowne my manly spirit: adue.

Exit.

Ief. Farewell good Lancelot. Alacke, what hainous sinne is it in me To be ashamed to be my Fathers childe, But though I am a daughter to his blood, I am not to his manners: O Lorenzo, If thou keepe promise I shall end this strife, Become a Christian, and thy loving wife.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salario, and Solanio

Lo. Nay, we will flinke away in supper time, Disguise us at my lodging, and returne all in an houre.

Gra. We have not made good preparation.

Sal. We have not spok'tis yet of Torch-bearers.

Sol. 'Tis vile vnlesse it may be quaintly ordered, And better in my minde not vnderooke.

Lor. 'Tis now but foure of clock, we have two houres To furnish us; friend Lancelot what's the newes?

Enter Lancelot with a Letter.

Lan. And it shall please you to breake up this, it shall seeme to signifie.

Lo. I know the hand, in faith 'tis a faire hand, And whither then the paper it writ on, I the faire hand that writ.

Gra. Love-newes in faith.

Lo. By your leave fir.

Lor. Whither goest thou?

Lo. Marry fir to bid my old Maister the Iew to sup to night with my new Maister the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this, tell gentle Iessica

I will not faile her, speake it privately:

Go Gentlemen, will you prepare you for this Maske to night?

I am provided of a Torch-bearer.

Exit. Clowne.

Sal. I marry, ile be gone about it strait.

Sal. And so will I.

Lor. Meete me and Gratiano at Gratianos lodging Some houre hence.

Sal. 'Tis good wee do so.

Exit.

Gra. Was not that Letter from faire Iessica?

Lo. I must needs tell thee all, she hath directed How I shall take her from her Fathers house, What gold and jewels she is furnisht with, What Pages suite she hath in readinesse: If ere the Iew her Father come to heaven, It will be for his gentle daughters sake; And never dare misfortune crosse her foote. Vnlesse she do it vnder this excuse, That she is issue to a faithlesse Iew: Come go with me, peruse this as thou goest, Faire Iessica shall be my Torch-bearer.

Exit.

Enter Iew, and his man that was the Clowne.

Iew. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge, The difference of old Shylocke and Bassanio; What Iessica, thou shalt not gurmardize As thou hast done with me: what Iessica? And sleepe, and snore, and rend apparrell out. Why Iessica I say.

Clo. Why Iessica.

Shy. Who bids thee call? I do not bid thee call,

Clo. Your worship was wont to tell me I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Iessica.

Ief. Call you? what is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper Iessica, There are my Keyes: but wherefore should I go? I am not bid for love, they flatter me, But yet he go in hate, to feede upon The prodigall Christian. Iessica my girle, Looke to my house, I am right loath to go, There is some ill a bruing towards my rest, For I did dreame of money bags to night.

Clo. I beseech you fir go, my yong Maister Doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I his.

Clo. And they have conspired together, I will not say you shall see a Maske, but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on blacke monday last,

last, at six a clocke ith morning, falling out that yeere on ashwen/day was foure yeere in th'afternoone.

Shy. What are their maskes? heare you me Iessica,
Lock up my doores, and when you heare the drum
And the vile squealing of the wry-neckt Fife,
Clamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the publicke streete
To gaze on Christian fooles with varnisht faces:
But stop my houses eares, I meane my casements,
Let not the sound of shallow fopperie enter
My sober house. By Jacobs staffe I sweare,
I have no minde of feasting forth to night:
But I will go; go you before me sirra,
Say I will come.

Clow. I will go before sir. ●
Mistris looke out at window for all this;
There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Iewes eye.

Shy. What saies that foole of Hagars off-spring?
ha.

Ief. His words were farewell mistris, nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kinde enough, but a huge feeder:
Snaille-slow in profit, but sleepes by day
More then the wilde-cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him, and part with him
To one that I would have him helpe to waste
His borrowed purse. Well Iessica go in,
Perhaps I will returne immediately;
Doe as I bid you, shut doores after you, fast binde, fast
finde,

A proverbe never stale in thrifty minde.

Ief. Farewell, and if my fortune be not crost,
I have a Father, you a daughter lost.

Exit.

Exit.

Enter the Maskers, Gratiano and Salino.

Gra. This is the penthouse under which Lorenzo
Desired us to make a stand.

Sal. His houre is almost past.

Gra. And it is mervaille he out-dwells his houre,
For lovers ever run before the clocke.

Sal. O ten times faster Venus Pidgions flye
To steale loves bonds new made, then they are wont
To keepe obliged faith unforfaited.

Gra. That ever holds, who riseth from a feast?
With that keene appetite that he sits downe?
Where is the horse that doth untread againe
His tedious measures with the unbated fire,
That he did pace them fir st: all things that are,
Are with more spirit chased then enjoy'd.
How like a yonger or a prodigall
The skarfed barke puts from her native bay,
Hug'd and embraced by the strumpet winde:
How like a prodigall doth she returne
With over-wither'd ribs and ragged sailes,
Leane, rent, and begger'd by the strumpet winde?

Enter Lorenzo.

Salino. Heere comes Lorenzo, more of this hereafter.

Loren. Sweete friends, your patience for my long abode,
Not I, but my affaires have made you wait:
When you shall please to play the theeves for wives
Ile watch as long for you then: approach

Here dwells my father Iew. Hoa, who's within?

Iessica alone.

Ief. Who are you? tell me for more certainty,
Albeit Ile sweare that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy Love.

Ief. Lorenzo certaine, and my love indeed,
For who love I so much? and now who knowes
But you Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

Lo. Heaven and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.

Ief. Heere, catch this casket, it is worth the paines,
I am glad 'tis night, you do not looke on me,
For I am much asham'd of my exchange:
But love is blinde, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit,
For if they could, Cupid himselfe would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Ief. What, must I hold a Candle to my shame?
They in themselves goodfooth are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery Love,
And I should be obscur'd.

Lor. So you are sweet,
Even in the lovely garnish of a boy: but come at once,
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are staid for at Bassanio's feast.

Ief. I will make fast the doores and guild my selfe
With some more ducats, and be with you straight.

Gra. Now by my hood, a gentile, and no Iew.

Lor. Beshrew me but I love her heartily.
For she is wise, if I can judge of her,
And faire she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath prov'd her selfe:
And therefore like her selfe, wise, faire, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soule.

Enter Iessica.

What, art thou come? on gentlemen, away,
Our masking mates by this time for us stay.

Exit.

Enter Anthonio.

Ant. Who's there?

Gra. Signior Anthonio.

Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano, where are all the rest?
'T is nine a clocke, our friends all stay for you,
No maske to night, the winde is come about,
Bassanio presently will go aboard,
I have sent twenty out to seeke for you.

Gra. I am glad on't, I desire no more delight
Then to be under faile, and gone to night.

Exeunt.

Enter portia with Morocco, and both their traines.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtaines, and discover
The severall Caskets to this noble Prince:
Now make your choyse.

Mor. The first of gold, who this inscription beares,
Who chooseth me, shall gaine what men desire.
The second silver, which this promise carries,
Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves,
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt,
Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath.
How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Pa. The

How shall I know if do choofe the right.

Por. The one of them containes my picture Prince,
If you choofe that, then I am yours withall.

Mor. Some God direct my judgement, let me see,
I will furvey the infcriptions, backe againe:
What fayes this leaden casket?

Who choofeth me, must give and hazard all he hath.
Must give, for what? for lead, hazard for lead?

This casket threatens men that hazard all,
Do it in hope of faire advantages:

A golden minde stoopes not to shewes of drossie,
He then nor give nor hazard ought for lead.

What saies the Silver with her virgin hue?
Who choofeth me, shall get as much as he deserves.

As much as he deserves, pause there Morocho,
And weigh thy value with an even hand,

If thou bee'st rated by thy estimation
Thou doost deserve enough, and yet enough

May not extend so faire as to the Lady:
And yet to be afear'd of my deserving,

Were but a weake disabling of my selfe.

As much as I deserve, why that's the Lady.

I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,

In graces, and in qualities of breeding:

But more then these, in love I do deserve.

What if I strai'd no farther, but chose here?

Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold.

Who choofeth me shall gaine what many men desire:

Why that's the Lady, all the world desires her:

From the foure corners of the earth they come

To kisse this shrine, this mortall breathing Saint.

The Hircanian deserts, and the vaste wildes

Of wide Arabia are as throughfares now

For Princes to come view faire Portia.

The waterie Kingdome, whose ambitious head

Spets in the face of heaven, is no barre

To stop the fortune spirits, but they come

As ore a brooke to see faire Portia.

One of these three containes her heavenly picture.

Is't like that Lead containes her? twere damnation

To thinke so base a thought, it were too grosse

To rib her searecloath in the obscure grave:

Or shall I thinke in Silver she's immur'd

Being ten times undervalued to tride gold;

O sinfull thought, never so rich a Iem

Was set in worse then gold! They have in England

A coyne that beares the figure of an Angell

Stamp't in gold, but that's inculpt upon:

But here an Angell in a golden bed

Lies all within. Deliver me the key;

Here do I choofe, and thrive I as I may.

Por. There take it Prince, and if my forme lye there

Then I am yours.

Mor. O hell! what have we here, a carrion death,

Within whose empty eye there is a written scroule;

*All that glisters is not gold,
Often have you heard that told;
Many a man his life hath sold
But my outside to behold;
Gilded timber do wormes infold:
Had you bene as wise as bold,
Tong in limbo, in judgement old,
Your answer had not bene in scold
Fareyouwell, your suite is cold,*

Mor. Cold indeede, and labour lost,
Then farewell heate, and welcome frost:

Portia adew, I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus loofers part.

Por. A gentle riddance: draw the curtaines, go:
Let all of his complexion choofe me so.

Exit.

Exeunt.

Enter Sal'arino and Solanio.

Flo. Cornets.

Sal. Why man I saw Bassanio vnder sayle,
With him is Gratiano gone along;

And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.

Sol. The villaine Jew with outcries rail'd the Duke,
Who went with him to searce Bassanio's ship.

Sal. He comes too late, the ship was vnderfaile;
But there the Duke was given to understand

That in a Gondilo were seene together

Lorenzo and his amorous Iessica.

Besides, Antonio certified the Duke

They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Sol. I never heard a passion so confus'd,

So strange, outrageous, and so variable,

As the dogge Jew did utter in the streets;

My daughter, O my ducats, O my daughter,

Fled with a Christian, O my Christian ducats!

Justice, the law, my ducats, and my daughter;

A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,

Of double ducats, stolne from me by my daughter,

And jewels, two rich and precious stones,

Stolne by my daughter: justice, finde the girle,

She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats.

Sal. Why all the boyes in Venice follow him,

Crying his stones, his daughter, and his ducats,

Sol. Let good Antonio looke he keepe his day

Or he shall pay for this.

Sal. Marry well remembered,

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,

Who told me, in the narrow seas that part

The French and English, there miscaried

A vessell of our countrey richly fraught:

I thought upon Antonio when he told me,

And wisht in silence that it were not his.

Sol. You were best to tell Antonio what you heare,

Yet do not suddainely, for it may grieve him.

Sal. A kinder Gentleman treads not the earth,

I saw Bassanio and Antonio part,

Bassanio told him he would make some speede

Of his returne: he answered, do not so,

Slubber not businesse for my sake Bassanio,

But stay the very riping of the time,

And for the Jewes bond which he hath of me,

Let it not enter in your minde of love:

Be merry, and imploy your chiefest thoughts

To courtship, and such faire ostents of love

As shall conveniently become you there;

And even there his eye being big with teares,

Turning his face, he put his hand behinde him,

And with affection wondrous fencible

He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted.

Sal. I thinke he onely loves the world for him,

I pray thee let vs go and finde him out

And quicken his embraced heavinesse

With some delight, or other.

Exeunt.

Enter Nerriissa and a Servant.

Ner. Quick, quick I pray thee, draw the curtain strait,

P a

The

The Prince of Arragon hath rane his oath,
And comes to his election presently.

Enter Arragon, his traine, and Portia.
Flor. Cornets.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets noble Prince,
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptiall rights be solemniz'd:
But if thou faile, without more speech my Lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.

Ar. I am enjoynd by oath to observe three things;
First, never to vnfold to any one
Which casket 'twas I chole; next, if I faile
Of the right casket, never in my life
To wooe a maide in way of marriage:
Lastly, if I do faile in fortune of my choise,
Immediately to leave you, and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions every one doth sweare
That comes to hazard for my worthlesse selfe.

Ar. And so have I addrest me, fortune now
To my hearts hope: gold, silver, and base lead.
Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.
You shall looke fairer ere I give or hazard.
What sayes the golden chest, ha, let me see:
Who chooseth me, shall gaine what many men desire:
What many men desire, that many may be meant
By the foole multitude that choose by show,
Not learning more then the fond eye doth teach,
Which pries not to th' interior, but like the Martlet
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and rode of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jumpe with common spirits,
And ranke me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why then to thee thou Silver treasure house,
Tell me once more, what title thou doost beare;
Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves:
And well said too; for who shall go about
To cozen Fortune, and be honourable
Without the stampe of merit, let none presume
To weare an undeserv'd dignity:
O that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriv'd corruptly, and that cleare honour
Were purchast by the merrit of the wearer;
How many then should cover that stand bare?
How many be commanded that command?
How much low pleasantry would then be gleaned
From the true seede of honor? And how much honor
Pickt from the chaffe and ruine of the times,
To be new varnish't: Well, but to my choise.
Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.
I will assume desert; give me a key for this,
And instantly vnlocke my fortunes here.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you finde there.

Ar. What's heere, the portrait of a blinking idiot
Presenting me a scedule, I will reade it:
How much vnlike art thou to Portia?
How much vnlike my hopes and my deservings?
Who chooseth me, shall have as much as he deserves.
Did I deserve no more then a fooles head,
Is that my prize, are my deserts no better?

Por. To offend and judge are distinct offices,
And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

The first seven times tried this,

*Seven times tried that judgement is,
That did never choose amas,
Some there be that shadowes kisse,
Such have but a shadowes blisse:
There be fooles alive I wis
Silver'd o're, and so was this:
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So be gone for, you are sped.*

Ar. Still more foole I shall appeare
By the time I linger here,
With one fooles head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.
Sweet adue, Ile keepe my oath,
Patiently to beare my wroath.

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moath:
O these deliberate fooles when they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit to loose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresie,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

Por. Come draw the curtaine Nerrissa.

Enter Messenger.

Mes. Where is my Lady?

Por. Here, what would my Lord?

Mes. Madam, there is a lighted at your gate
A yong Venetian, one that comes before
To signifie th' approaching of his Lord,
From whom he bringeth sensible regreets;
To wit (besides commends and curteous breath)
Gifts of rich value; yet I have not scene
Solikely an Embassador of love.

A day in Aprill never came so sweete
To show how costly Sommer was at hand,
As this fore-spurrer comes before his Lord,

Por. No more I pray thee, I am halfe a-fear'd
Thou wilt say anone he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him:
Come come Nerrissa, for I long to see
Quicke Cupids Post, that comes so mannerly.

Ner. Bassanio Lord, love if thy will it be. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Solanio and Salarino.

Sol. Now, what newes on the Ryalto?

Sal. Why yet it lives there unchecked, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wrackt on the narrow Seas; the Goodwins I thinke they call the place, a very dangerous flat, and fatall, where the carcasses of many a tall ship, lye buried, as they say, if my gossip report be an honest woman of her word.

Sol. I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever knapt Ginger, or made her neighbours beleieve she wept for the death of a third husband: but it is true, without any slips of prolixity, or crossing the plaine high-way of talke, that the good Antonio, the honest Antio. O that I had a title good enough to keepe his name company!

Sal. Come, the full stop.

Sol. Ha, what sayest thou, why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Sal. I

Sal. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Sol. Let me say Amen betimes, least the divell crosse my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew. How now Shylocke, what newes among the Merchants?

Enter Shylocke.

Shy. You knew none so well, none so well as you; of my daughters flight

Sol. That's certaine, I for my part knew the Tailor that made the wings she flew withall.

Sol. And Shylocke for his owne part knew the bird was fledg'd, & then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damn'd for it.

Sol. That's certaine, if the divell may be her Iudge.

Shy. My owne flesh and blood to rebell.

Sol. Out upon it old carrion, rebels it at these yeeres.

Shy. I say my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Sol. There is more difference betweene thy flesh and hers, then betweene Iet and Iuorie, more betweene your bloods, then there is betweene red wine and rennish: but tell us, doe you heare whether Antonio have had any losse at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match, a bankrout, a prodigall, who dare scarce shew his head on the Ryalta, a begger that was vs'd to come so smug upon the Mart: let him look to his bond, he was wont to call me Vsurer, let him looke to his bond, he was wont to lend money for a Christian curtisie, let him looke to his bond.

Sol. Why I am sure if he forsaite, thou wilt not take his flesh, what's that good for?

Shy. To baite fish withall, if it will feede nothing else, it will feede my revenge; he hath disgrac'd me, and hindered me halfe a million, laugh't at my losses, mockt at my gaires, scorned my Nation, thwarted my bargaines, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies, and what's the reason? I am a Jew: Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimentionions, sences, affections, passions, fed with the same foode, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same meanes, warmed and cooled by the same Winter and Sommer as a Christian is? if you pricke us, do we not bleede? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us shall we not revenge? if we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility, revenge? If a Christian wrong a Jew what should his iustifiance be by Christian example? why revenge. The villany you teach me I will execute, and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a man from Antonio.

Gentlemen, my maister Antonio is at his house, and desires to speake with you both.

Sol. We have beene up and downe to seeke him.

Enter Tuball.

Sol. Here comes another of the Tribe, a third cannot be matcht, vnlesse the divell himselfe turne Jew.

Exeunt Gentlemen.

Shy. How now Tuball, what newes from Genowa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did heare of her, but cannot finde her.

Shy. Why there, there, there, there, a diamond gone cost me two thousand ducats in Franckford, the curfe never fell upon our Nation till now, I never felt it till now, two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, precious jewels: I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her care: would she were hearst at my foote, and the duckets in her coifin: no newes of them, why so? & I know not how much is spent in the search: why then losse upon losse, the theefe gone with so much, and so much to finde the theefe, and no satisfaction, no revenge, nor no ill lucke stirring, but what lights a my shoulders, no sighes but a my breathing, no teares but a my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill lucke too, Antonio as I heard in Genowa,

Shy. What, what, what, ill lucke, ill lucke.

Tub. Hath an Argosie cast away comming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thanke God, I thanke God, is it true, is it true?

Tu. I spoke with some of the Saylers that escaped the wracke.

Shy. I thanke thee good Tuball, good newes, good newes: ha, ha, here in Genowa.

Tu. Your daughter spent in Genowa, as I heard, one night fourescore ducats.

Shy. Thou stick'st a dagger in me, I shall never see my gold againe, fourescore ducats at a fitting, fourescore ducats.

Tu. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that sweare he cannot choose but breake.

Shy. I am very glad of it, ile plague him, ile torture him, I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them shewed me a ring that hee had of your daughter for a Monkie.

Shy. Out upon her, thou torturest me Tuball, it was my Turkis, I had it of Leah when I was a Batcheler: I would not have given it for a wildernesse of Monkies.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true, go Tuball, fee me an Officer, bespeake him a fortnight before; I will have the heart of him if he forfeit, for were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandize I will: go Tuball, and meet me at our Sinagogue, go good Tuball, at our Sinagogue Tuball.

Exeunt.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, and all their traine.

Por. I pray you tarrie, pause a day or two Before you hazard, for in choosing wrong I lose your company; therefore forbear a while, There's something tells me (but it is not love) I would not lose you, and you know your selfe, Hate counsailes not in such a quality; But least you should not understand me well, And yet a maiden hath no tongue, but thought, I would detain you here some month or two Before you venture for me. I could teach you How to choose right, but then I am forsworne; So will I never be, so may you misse me; But if you do, youle make me wisst a sinne, That I had beene forsworne: Bestrow your eyes, They have ore-lookt me and devided me, One halfe of me is yours, the other halfe Mine owne I would say: but first mine, then yours, And so all yours; O these naughty times Put bars betweene the owners and their rights. And so though yours, not yours (prove it so) Let fortune go to hell for it, not I. I speake too long, but 'tis to peize the time, To ich it, and draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Baf. Let me choofe,
For as I am, I live upon the racke.

Por. Vpon the racke Baffanio, then confesse
What treason there is mingled with your love.

Baf. None but that ugly treason of mistrust,
Which makes me feare the enjoying of my love:
There may as well be amitie and life,

'Tweene snow and fire, as treason and my love,

Por. I, but I feare you speake vpon the racke,
Where men enforced doe speake any thing.

Baf. Promise me life, and ile confesse the truth.

Por. Well then, confesse and live.

Baf. Confesse and love

Had beene the very sum of my confession:

O happy torment, when my torturer

Doth teach me answers for deliverance:

But let me to my fortune and the caskets.

Por. Away then, I am lockt in one of them,

If you do love me, you will finde me out.

Nerrissa and the rest, stand all aloofe,

Let musicke sound while he doth make his choise,

Then if he loofe he makes a Swan-like end,

Fading in musique. That the comparison

May stand more proper, my eye shall be the streame

And watric death-bed for him: he may win,

And what is musique then? Then musique is

Even as the flourish, when true subjects bowe

To a new crowned Monarch: Such it is,

As are those dulcet sounds in breake of day,

That creepe into the dreaming bride-groomes eare,

And summon him to marriage. Now he goes

With no lesse presence, but with much more love

Then yong Alcides, when he did redeeme

The virgine tribute, paid by howling Troy

To the Sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice,

The rest aloofe are the Dardanian wives:

With bleared visages come forth to view

The issue of th'exploit: Goe Hercules,

Live thou, I live with much much more dismay

I view the fight, then thou that mak'st the fray.

Here musicke.

A Song the whilst Bassanio comments on the Caskets to himselfe.

*Tell me where is fancie bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head:
How begot, how nourished.
It is engendred in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and Fancie dies,
In the cradle where it lies:
Let us all ring Fancies knell.
Ile begin it.
Ding dong, bell,
All. Ding, dong, bell.*

Replie, replie.

Baf. So may the outward shewes be least themselves,
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
In Law, what Plea so tainted and corrupt,
But being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the shew of evill? In Religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will blesse it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossnesse with faire ornament:
There is no vice so simple, but assumes
Some marke of vertue on his outward parts;

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stayres of sand, weare yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars?
Who inward searcht, have lyvers white as milke,
And these assume but valors excrement,
To render them redoubted. Looke on beauty,
And you shall see 'tis purchast by the weight,
Which therein workes a miracle in nature,
Making them lightest that weare most of it:
So are those criped snakie golden locks
Which makes such wanton gambols with the winde
Vpon supposed fairenesse, often knowne
To be the dowrie of a second head;
The scull that bred them in the Sepulcher.
Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea: the beautilous scarfe
Vailing an Indian beauty; In a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To intrap the wisest. Therefore thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Alidas, I will none of thee,
Nor none of thee thou pale and common drudge
'Tweene man and man: but thou, thou meager lead
Which rather threatnest than dost promise ought,
Thy palenesse moves me more than eloquence,
And here choofe I, joy be the consequence.

Por. How all the other passions fleet to ayre,
As doubtfull thoughts, and rash imbrac'd despaire:
And shuddring feare, and greene-eyed jealousy.
O love be moderate, allay thy extasie,
In measure raine thy joy, scant this excessie,
I feele too much thy blessing, make it lesse,
For feare I surfeit.

Baf. What finde I here?
Faire Portias counterfeit. What demie god
Hath come so neere creation? move these eies?
Or whether riding on the bals of mine
Seeme they in motion? Here are sever'd lips
Parted with finger breath, so sweet a barre
Should sunder such sweet friends: here in her haire
The Painter plaies the Spider and hath woven
A golden mesh t' intrap the hearts of men
Faster then gnats in cobwebs: but her eyes,
How could he see to do them? having made one,
He thinks it should have power to steale both his
And leave it selfe vn furnisht: Yet looke how farre
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In vnderprising it, so farre this shadow
Doth limpe behinde the substance. Here's the scroule,
The continent, and summary of my fortune.

*You that chouse not by the view,
Chance as faire, and chouse as true,
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content, and seeke no new.
If you be well pleas'd with this,
And hold your fortune for your blisse,
Turne you where your Lady is,
And claime her with a loving kisse.*

Baf. A gentle scroule; Faire Lady, by your leave,
I come by note to give, and to receive;
Like one of two contending in a prize
That thinks he hath done well in peoples eyes:
Hearing applause and univerfall shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
Whether those peales of praise be his or no.

So thrice faire Lady stand I even so,
As doubtfull whether what I see be true,
Vntill confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por. You see my Lord Bassanio where I stand,
Such as I am; though for my selfe alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish my selfe much better, yet for you,
I would be trebled twenty times my selfe,
A thousand times more faire, ten thousand times
More rich, that to stand high in your account,
I might in vertues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full summe of me
Is sum of nothing: which to terme in grosse,
Is an vnlesioned girle, vn schooll'd, vnpractiz'd,
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learne: happier then in this
Shee is not bred so dull but she can learne;
Happiest of all, is that her gentle spirit
Commits it selfe to yours to be directed,
As from her Lord, her Governour, her King.
My selfe, and what is mine, to you and yours
Is now converted. But now I was the Lord
Of this faire mansion, maister of my servants,
Queene ore my selfe: and even now, but now.
This house, these servants, and this same my selfe
Are yours, my Lord, I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, loose, or give away,
Let it preface the ruine of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaime on you.

Bas. Maddam, you have bereft me of all words,
Onely my bloud speakes to you in my veines,
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after some oration fairely spoke
By a beloved Prince, there doth appeare
Among the buzzing pleased multitude,
Where every something being blent together,
Turnes to a wilde of nothing, save of joy
Exprest, and not exprest: but when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence,
O then be bold to say Bassanio's dead.

Ner. My Lord and Lady, it is now our time
That have stood by and scene our wishes prosper,
To cry good joy, good joy my Lord and Lady.

Gra. My Lord Bassanio, and my gentle Lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish:
For I am sure you can wish none from me;
And when your Honours meane to solemnize
The bargaine of your faith: I do beseech you
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bas. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thanke your Lordship, you haue got me one.
My eyes my Lord can looke as swift as yours:
You saw the mistres, I beheld the maid:
You lov'd, I lov'd for intermission,
No more pertaines to me my Lord than you;
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls:
For wooing heete vntill I swet againe,
And swearing till my very rough was dry
With oathes of love, at last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this faire one heere
To have her love: provided that your fortune
Attchiv'd her mistresse.

Por. Is this true Nerrissa.

Ner. Madam it is so, so you stand pleas'd withall,

Bas. And do you Gratiano meane good faith?

Gra. Yes faith my Lord.

Bas. Our feast shall be much honored in your marriage.

Gra. Weele play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What and stake downe?

Gra. No, we shall ne're win at that sport, and stake downe.

But who comes heere? Lorenzo and his Infidell?
What and my old Venetian friend Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Iessica, and Salerio.

Bas. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither,
If that the youth of my new interest heere
Have power to bid you welcome: by your leave
I bid my very friends and Countermen
Sweet Portia welcome.

Por. So do I my Lord, they are intirely welcome.

Lor. I thanke your honor; for my part my Lord,
My purpose was not to have scene you heere,
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did intreate mee past all saying nay
To come with him along.

Sal. I did my Lord,
And have reason for it, Signior Antonio
Commends him to you.

Bas. Ere I ope his Letter
I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

Sal. Not sicke my Lord, vnlesse it be in minde,
Nor well, vnlesse in minde: his Letter there
Will shew you his estate.

Opens the Letter.

Gra. Nerrissa, cheere yond stranger, bid her welcome.
Your hand Salerio, what's the newes from Venice?
How doth that royall Merchant good Antonio;
I know he will be glad of our successe,
We are the lasons, we have won the fleece.

Sal. I would you had won the fleece that he hath lost.

Por. There are some shrewd contents in yond same Paper,
That steales the colour from Bassiano's cheek,
Some deere friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turne so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse?
With leave Bassanio I am halfe your selfe,
And must freely have the halfe of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bas. O sweet Portia,
Heere are a few of the vnpleasant't words
That ever blotted paper. Gentle Lady
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had
Ran in my veines: I was a Gentleman,
And then I told you true: and yet deere Lady,
Rating my selfe at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a Braggart, when I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing: for indeede
I have ingag'd my selfe to a deere friend,
Ingag'd my friend to his meere enemy
To feede my meanes. Heere is a Letter Lady,
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound
Issuing life blood. But is it true Salerio,

Hath

Hath all his ventures faild; what not one hit!
From Tripolis, from Mexico and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India,
And not one vessell scape the dreadfull touch
Of Merchant-marring rocks?

Sal. Not one my Lord.
Beside's, it should appeare, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it: never did I know
A creature that did beare the shape of man
So keene and greedy to confound a man.
He pyles the Duke at morning and at night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state
If they deny him justice. Twenty Merchants,
The Duke himselfe, and the Magnificoes
Of greatest port have all perswaded with him,
But none can drive him from the envious plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

Ies. When I was with him, I have heard him sweare
To Tuball and to Chus, his Countrey-men,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Then twenty times the value of the summe
That he did owe him: and I know my Lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poore Antonio.

Por. Is it your deere friend that is thus in trouble?

Bas. The deereft friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition'd, and vnwearied spirit
In doing curtesies: and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appeares
Then any that drawes breath in Italy.

Por. What summe owes he the Jew?

Bas. For me three thousand ducats.

Por. What, no more?

Pay him sixe thousand, and deface the bond:
Double sixe thousand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a haire through my Bassanio's fault.
First go with me to Church, and call me wife
And then away to Venice to your friend:
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an vnquiet soule. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over.
When it is payd, bring your true friend along,
My maid Nerissa, and my selfe meane time
Will live as maids and widdowes; come away,
For you shall hence upon your wedding day:
Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheere,
Since you are deere bought, I will love you deere.
But let me heare the letter of your friend.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my Creditors grow cruell, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit, and since in paying it, it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared betweene you and I, if I might see you at my death: notwithstanding, vso your pleasure, if your loue do not perswade you to come, let not my letter.

Por. O love! dispatch all busines and be gone.

Bas. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make hast; but till I come againe,
No bed shall ere be guilty of my stay,
Nor rest be interpos'd twixt us twaine.

Exeunt.

Enter the Jew, and Solanio, and Antonio, and the Taylor.

Jew. Taylor, looke to him, tell not me of mercy,

This is the foole that lends out money gratis.
Taylor, looke to him.

Ant. Heare me yet good Shylock.

Jew. Ile have my bond, speake not against my bond,
I have sworne an oath that I will have my bond:
Thou call'dst me dog before thou hadst a cause,
But since I am a dog, beware my phangs,
The Duke shall grant me justice: I do wonder
Thou naughty Taylor, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee heare me speake.

Jew. Ile have my bond, I will not heare thee speake;
Ile have my bond, and therefore speake no more.
Ile not be made a soft and dull-ey'd foole;
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yeeld
To Christian intercessors: follow not,
Ile have no speaking, I will have my bond. Exit Jew.

Sol. It is the most impenetrable curre
That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone,

Ile follow him no more with bootlesse prayers:
He seekes my life, his reason well I know;
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures
Many that have at times made mone to me,
Therefore he hates me.

Sol. I am sure the Duke will never grant this forfeiture to hold.

Ant. The Duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the justice of the State,
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all Nations. Therefore go,
These griefes and losses have so bated mee,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To morrow, to my bloody Creditor:
Well Taylor, on, pray God Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not. Exeunt.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and a man of Portia's.

Lor. Madam, although I speake it in your presence.
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity, which appeares most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your Lord.
But if you knew to whom you shew this honour,
How true a Gentleman you send releefe,
How deere a lover of my Lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the worke
Then customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good;
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose soules do beare an egal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lymaments, of manners and of spirit,
Which makes me thinke that this Antonio
Being the bosome lover of my Lord,
Must needs be like my Lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed
In purchasing the semblance of my soule,
From out the state of hellish cruelty.

This comes too neere the praising of my selfe,
Therefore no more of it: heere other things
Lorenzo I commit into your hands,

The husbandry and mannage of my house,
Vntill my Lords returne; for mine owne part
I have toward heaven breath'd a secret vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Onely attended by Nerrissa heere,
Vntill her husband and my Lords returne:
There is a monastery too miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you
Not to denie this imposition,
The which my love and some necessity
Now layes upon you.

Lor. Madame, with all my heart,
I shall obey you in all faire commands.

Por. My people do already know my minde,
And will acknowledge you and Iessica
In place of Lord Bassanio and my selfe.
So fare you well till we shall meete againe.

Lor. Faire thoughts & happy houres attend on you;

Ies. I wish your Ladieship all hearts content.

Por. I thanke you for your wish, and am well pleas'd
To wish it backe on you: fare you well Iessica. Exeunt.

Now Balthazar, as I have ever found thee honest true,
So let me finde thee still: take this same letter,
And use thou all the indeavor of a man,
In speed to Mantua, see thou render this
Into my cosins hand, Doctor Bellario,
And looke what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them I pray thee with imagin'd speed
Vnto the Traneēt, to the common Ferrie
Which trades to Venice; wait no time in words,
But get thee gone, I shall be there before thee.

Bal. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

Por. Come on Nerrissa, I have worke in hand
That you yet know not of; wee'll see our husbands
Before they thinke of us?

Ner. Shall they see us?

Por. They shall Nerrissa: but in such a habit,
That they shall thinke we are accomplished
With that we lacke; Ile hold thee any wager
When we are both accoutered like yong men,
Ile prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And weare my dagger with the braver grace,
And speake betweene the change of man and boy,
With a reede voyce, and turne two minuting steps
Into a manly stride, and speake of frayes
Like a fine bragging youth: and tell quaint lyes
How honourable Ladies fought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sicke and died.
I could not do withall: then Ile repent,
And wish for all that, that I had not kil'd them;
And twenty of these pany lies Ile tell
That men shall sweare I have discontinued schoole
Above a twelve moneth: I have within my minde
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging lacks,
Which I will practise.

Ner. Why, shall wee turne to men?

Por. Fie, what a questions that,
If thou wert nere a lewd interpreter?
But come, Ile tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stayes for us
At the Parke gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to day. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne and Iessica.

Clowne. Yes truly; for looke you, the sinnes of the Father are to be laid upon the children, therefore I promise you, I feare you, I was alwaies plaine with you, and so now I speake my agitation of the matter: therefore be of good cheere, for truly I thinke you are damn'd, there is but one hope in it that can do you any good, and that is but a kinde of bastard hope neither.

Ies. And what hope is that I pray thee?

Clow. Marry you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jewes daughter.

Ies. That were a kinde of bastard hope indeed, so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Clow. Truly then I feare you are damned both by father and mother, thus when I shun Sassa your father, I fall into Charibdis your mother; well, you are gone both waies.

Ies. I shall be sav'd by my husband, he hath made me a Christian.

Clow. Truly the more to blame he, we were Christians enow before, e'ne as many as could well live one by another: this making of Christians will raise the price of Hogs; if wee grow all to be porke-eaters, wee shall not shortly have a rather on the coales for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Ies. Ile tell my husband Lancelet what you say, heere he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly Lancelet, if you thus get my wife into corners?

Ies. Nay, you need not feare us Lorenzo, Lancelet and I are out, he tells me flatly there is no mercy for mee in heaven, because I am a Jewes daughter: and hee saies you are no good member of the common wealth, for in converting Jewes to Christians, you raise the price of Pork.

Lor. I shall and were that better to the Commonwealth than you can the getting up of the Negroes belly: the Moore is with childe by you Lancelet.

Clow. It is much that the Moore should be more then reason: but if she belesse then an honest woman, she is indeed more then I tooke her for.

Lor. How every foole can play upon the word, I think the best grace of witte will shortly turne into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none onely but Parrats:
go in sirra, bid them prepare for dinner?

Clow. That is done sir, they have all stomachs?

Lor. Goodly Lord, what a witte-snapper are you, then bid them prepare dinner.

Clow. That is done too sir, onely cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover than sir?

Clow. Not so sir neither, I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion, wilt thou shew the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant; I pray thee vnderstand a plaine man in his plaine meaning: goe to thy fellowes, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat; and we will come into dinner.

Clow. For the table sir, it shall be serv'd io, for the meat sir, it shall be covered, for your comming in to dinner sir, why let it be as humors and conceits shall governe.

Exit Clowne.

Lor. O deare discretion, how his words are suted,
The foole hath planted in his memory
An Army of good words, and I do know
A many foolles that stand in better place,
Garnisht like him, that for a trickie word
Desie the matter: how cheere'st thou Iessica,
And now good sweet say thy opinion,

Now

How dost thou like the Lord Bassanio's wife?

Ief. Past all expressing, it is very meete
The Lord Bassanio live an upright life
For having such a blessing in his Lady,
He findes the joyes of heaven heere on earth,
And if on earth he do not meane it, it
Is reason he should never come to heaven?
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one: there must be something else
Paund with the other, for the poore rude world
Hath not her fellow.

Lo. Even such a husband
Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Ief. Nay, but aske my opinion too of that?

Lor. I will anone, first let us go to dinner?

Ief. Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomacke?

Lor. No pray thee, let it serue for table talke,
Then how som ere thou speakest among other things,
I shall digest it?

Ief. Well, Ile set you forth.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes, Antonio, Bassanio, and Gratiano

Duke. What, is Antonio heere?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace?

Du. I am sorry for thee, thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhumane wretch,
Vncapable of pittie, voyd, and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard

Your grace hath tane great paines to qualifie
His rigorous course: but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawfull meanes can carry me
Out of his envies reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietnesse of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Du. Go one and call the Jew into the Court.

Sal. He is ready at the doore, he comes my Lord.

Enter Shylocke.

Du. Make roome, and let him stand before our face.
Shylocke, the world thinkes, and I thinke so too
That thou but leadst this fashion of thy mallice
To the last houre of act, and then 'tis thought
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange,
Than is thy strange apparant cruelty,
And where thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poore Merchants flesh,
Thou wilt not onely loofe the forfeiture,
But touch'd with humane gentlenesse and love,
Forgive a moyty of the principall,
Glancing an eie of pittie on his losses
That have of late so huddled on his backe,
Enow to presse a royall Merchant downe;
And plucke commiseration of his state
From brassie bosomes, and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborne Turkes and Tarters never traind

To offices of tender curtesie,

We all expect a gentle answer Jew?

Jew. I have posselt your grace of what I purpose,
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworne
To have the due and forfeit of my bond.
If you deny it, let the danger light
Vpon your Charter, and your Cities freedome.
You'l aske me why I rather choofe to have
A weight of carrion flesh, then to receive
Three thousand Ducats? Ile not answer that:
But say it is my humor; Is it answered?
What if my house be troubled with a Rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand Ducates
To have it bairn'd? What, are you answer'd yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping Pigge:
Some that are madde, if they behold a Cat:
And others, when the bag-pipe sings i'th nose,
Cannot containe their Vrine for affection.
Masters of passion swayes it to the moode
Of what it likes or loaths, now for your answer:
As there is no firme reason to be rendred
Why he cannot abide a gaping Pigge?
Why he a harmlesse necessary Cat?
Why he a woollen bag-pipe: but of force
Must yeeld to such inevitable shame,
As to offend himselfe being offended:
So can I give no reason, nor I will not;
More then a lodg'd hate, and a certaine loathing
I beare Antonio, that I follow thus
A loosing suite against him? Are you answered?
Bas. This is no answer thou vnfeeling man,
To excuse the currant of thy cruelty.

Jew. I am not bound to please thee with my answer.

Bas. Do all men kil the thing they do not love?

Jew. Hates an y man the thing he would not kill?

Bas. Every offence is not a hate at first.

Jew. What wouldst thou have a Serpent sting thee twice?

Ant. I pray you thinke you question with the Jew:
You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the maine flood bate his vsuall height,
Or even as well vse question with the Wolfe,
The Ewe bleate for the Lambe: when you behold,
You may as well forbid the Mountaine Pines
To wagge their high tops, and to make no noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven:
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seeke to soften that, than which what harder?
His Iewish heart. Therefore I do beseech you
Make no more offers, vse no farther meanes,
But with all brieft and plaine conveniency
Let me have judgement, and the Jew his will.

Bas. For thy three thousand Ducates heere is six.

Jew. If every Ducat in fixe thousand Ducates
Were in fixe parts, and every part a Ducate,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond?

Du. How shalt thou hope for mercy, rendring none?

Jew. What judgement shall I dread doing no wrong?
You have among you many a purchast slave,
Which like you Asses, and your Dogs and Mules,
You vse in abject and in slavish part,
Because your bought them. Shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heires?
Why sweate they under burthens? Let their beds
Be made as soft as yours: and let their pallats
Be season'd with such Viands: you will answer

The slaves are ours. So do I answer you.
The pound of flesh which I demand of him
Is decreedly bought, 'tis mine, and I will have it.
If you deny me, fie upon your Law,
There is no force in the decrees of Venice;
I stand for judgement, answer, Shall I have it?

Du. Upon my power I may dismiss this Court,
Unless Bellario a learned Doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come heere to day.

Sal. My Lord, heere stayes without A Messenger with Letters from the Doctor,
New come from Padua.

Du. Bring us the Letters, Call the Messengers.

Baf. Good, cheere Antonio. What man, corage yet:
The law shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
Ere thou shalt loose for me one drop of blood.

Ant. I am a tainted Weather of the flocke,
Meeteft for death, the weakest kinde of fruite
Drops earliest to the ground, so let me;
You cannot better be employ'd Bassanio,
Then to live still, and write mine Epitaph.

Enter Nerriſſa.

Du. Came you from Padua from Bellario?

Ner. From both.

My Lord Bellario greets your Grace.

Baf. Why doft thou whet thy knife so earnestly?

Iew. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrout there.

Gra. Not on thy foale: but on thy foule harsh Iew
Thou mak'st thy knife keene: but no mettall can,
No, not the hangmans Axe beare halfe the keenesse
Of thy sharpe enuy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Iew. No, none that thou haſt wit enough to make.

Gra. O be thou damn'd, inexorable dogge,
And for thy life let justice be accus'd:
Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith;
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That foules of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Thy curriſh spirit
Govern'd a Wolfe, who hang'd for humane slaughter,
Even from the gallowes did his fell foule ſteet;
And whil't thou layest in thy unhallowed ſam,
Jafus'd it ſelfe in thee: For thy desires
Are Wolviſh, bloody, ſterv'd, and ravenous.

Iew. Till thou canst raile the ſcale from off my bond
Thou but offend'st thy Lungs to ſpeale ſo loud:
Repaire thy wit good youth, or it will fall
To endleſſe ruine. I ſtand heere for Law.

Du. This Letter from Bellario doth commend
A yong and Learned Doctor in our Court;
Where is he?

Ner. He attendeth heere hard by
To know your answer, whether you'l admit him.

Du. With all my heart. Some three or four of you
Go give him curteous conduct to this place,
Meane time the Court ſhall heare Bellarios Letter.

*Y*our Grace ſhall underſtand, that at the receite of your Letter I am very ſicke: but in the inſtance that your meſſenger came, in loving viſitation, was with me a yong Doctor of Rome, his name is Balthazar: I acquainted him with the cauſe in Controverſie, betwene the Iew and Antonio the Merchant: We turn'd o're many Bookes together: hee is furniſhed with my opinion, which bettered with his owne learning, ſhe greatneſſe whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him as my importunſty, to fill up your Graces request in my ſtead. I beſeech you, let his lacke of years be no impediment to let him lacke a reverend eſtimation: for I never knewe ſo yong a body, with ſo old a head. I leave him to your gracions acceptance; whoſe trial ſhall better publiſh his commendation.

Enter Portia for Balthazar.

Du. You heare the learn'd Bellario what he writes,
And heere (I take it) is the Doctor come.

Give me your hand: Came you from old Bellario?

Por. I did my Lord.

Du. You are welcome: take your place;

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this preſent queſtion in the Court.

Por. I am enformed throughly of the cauſe.

Which is the Merchant heere? and which the Iew?

Du. Antonio and old Shylocke, both ſtand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylocke?

Iew. Shylocke is my name.

Por. Of a ſtrange nature is the ſute you follow,
Yet in ſuch rule, that the Venetian Law
Cannot impugne you as you do proceed,
You ſtand within his danger, do you not?

Ant. I, ſo he ſayes.

Por. Do you confeſſe the bond?

Ant. I do.

Por. Then muſt the Iew be mercifull.

Iew. On what compulſion muſt I? Tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not ſtrain'd,
It droppeth as the gentle raine from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice bleſt,
It bleſſeth him that gives, and him that takes,
'Tis mightieſt in the mightieſt, it becomes
The throned Monarch better then his Crowne.
His Scepter ſhewes the force of temporall power,
The attribute to awe and Maſteſty,
Wherein doth ſit the dread and feare of Kings:
But mercy is above this ſceptred ſway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of Kings,
It is an attribute to God himſelfe;
And earthly power doth then ſhew likeſt Gods
When mercy ſeaſons Juſtice. Therefore Iew,
Though Juſtice be thy plea, conſider this;
That in the courſe of Juſtice, none of us
Should ſee ſalvation: we do pray for mercy,
And that ſame prayer, doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have ſpoke thus much
To mitigate the juſtice of thy plea:
Which if thou follow, this ſtrict courſe of Venice
Muſt needs give ſentence gainſt the Merchant there.

Shy. My deeds upon my head, I crave the Law,
The penalty and forfeite of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to diſcharge the money?

Baf. Yes, heere I tender it for him in the Court,
Yea; twice the ſumme, if that will not ſuffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times ore,
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my hearts;
If this will not ſuffice it muſt appeare
That malice beares downe truth. And I beſeech you
Weſt once the Law to your authority.
To do a great right, do a little wrong.
And curbe this cruell divell of his will.

Por. It muſt not be, there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree eſtabliſhed:

'Twill be recorded for a Preſident,

And

And many an error by the same example;
Will rush into the state: It cannot be.

Jew. A Daniel come to judgement, yea a Daniel.

O wife young Iudge, how do I honour thee,

Por. I pray you let me looke upon the bond.

Jew. Heere 'tis most reverend Doctor, heere it is.

Por. Shylocke, there's thrice thy mony offered thee.

Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I lay perjury upon my soule?
No not for Venice.

Por. Why this bond is forfeit,
And lawfully by this the Jew may claime
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Neerest the Merchants heart; be mercifull,
Take thrice thy money, bid me teare the bond.

Jew. When it is paid according to the tenure.
It doth appeare you are a worthy Iudge:
You know the Law, your exposition
Hath beene most found. I charge you by the Law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proccede to judgement: By my soule I sweare,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me: I stay heere on my bond.

An. Most heartily I do beseech the Court
To give the judgement.

Por. Why then thus it is:
You must prepare your bosome for his knife.

Jew. O noble Iudge, O excellent yong man.

Por. For the intent and purpose of the Law
Hath full relation to the penalty,
Which heere appeareth due upon the bond.

Jew. 'Tis very true: O wife and upright Iudge,
How much more elder art thou then thy lookes?

Por. Therefore lay bare your bosome.

Jew. I, his brest,
So sayes the bond, doth it not noble Iudge?
Neerest his heart, those are the very words.

Por. It is so: Are there ballance heere to weigh the flesh?

Jew. I have them ready.

Por. Have by some Surgeon Shylock on your charge
To stop his wounds, least he should bleed to death.

Jew. It is not nominated in the bond?

Por. It is not so exprest: but what of that?

'Twere good you do so much for charity.

Jew. I cannot finde it, 'tis not in the bond.

Por. Come Merchant, have you any thing to say?

An. But little: I am arm'd and well prepar'd
Give me your hand Bassanio, fare you well.
Greeve not that I am false to this for you:
For heerein fortune shewes her selfe more kinde
Then is his custome. It is still her use
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty. From which lingring penance
Of such a misery, doth she cut me off:
Commend me to your honourable Wife,
Tell her the processe of Antonios end:
Say how I lov'd you; speake me faire in death:
And when the tale is told, bid her be Iudge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a Love:
Repent not you that you shall loose your friend,
And he repents not that he payes your debt.
For if the Jew do cut but deepe enough,
Ile pay it instantly, with all my heart.

Bas. Antonio, I am married to a wife,

Which is as deere to me as life it selfe,
But life it selfe, my wife and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life.
I would loose all, I sacrifice them all
Heere to this devill, to deliver you.

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that,
If she were by to heare you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife whom I protest I love,
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Intreat some power to change this currish Jew.

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behinde her backe,
The wish would make else an vnquiet house, (ter

Jew. These be the Christian husbands: I have a daught'r would any of the stocke of Barrabas
Had beene her husband, rather then a Christian.
We trifle time, I pray thee pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchants flesh is thine,
The Court awards it, und the law doth give it.

Jew. Most rightfull Iudge.

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast,
The Law allowes it, and the Court awards it.

Jew. Most learned Iudge, a sentence, come prepare.

Por. Tarry a little, there is something else,
This bond doth give thee heere no jot of blood,
The words expressely are a pound of flesh:
Then take thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh,
But in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the Lawes of Venice confiscate
Vnto the state of Venice.

Gra. O upright Iudge,
Marke Jew, O learned Iudge.

Shy. Is that the law?

Por. Thy selfe shalt see the Act:
For as thou urgest justice, be assur'd
Thou shalt have justice more then thou desirest.

Gra. O learned Iudge, marke Jew, a learned Iudge.

Jew. I take this offer then, pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.

Bas. Heere is the mony.

Por. Soft, the Jew shall have all justice, soft, no haste,
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Jew, an upright Iudge, a learned Iudge.

Por. I therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh,
Shed thou no blood, nor cut thou lesse nor more
But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more
Or lesse then a just pound, be it so much
As makes it light or heavy in the substance,
Or the devision of the twentieth part
Of one poore scruple, nay if the scale do turne
But in the estimation of a hayre,
Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel Jew,
Now infidell I have thee on the hip.

Por. Why doth the Jew pause, take thy forfeiture.

Shy. Give me my principall, and let me go.

Bas. I have it ready for thee, heere it is.

Por. He hath refus'd it in the open Court,
He shall have meerly justice and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel still say I, a second Daniel,
I thanke thee Jew for teaching me that word.

Shy. Shall I not have barely my principall?

Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be taken so at thy perill Jew.

Shy. Why then the Devill give him good of it:
He stay no longer question.

Por. Tarry

Por. Tarry Iew,
The Law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the Lawes of Venice,
If it be proved against an Alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts
He seeke the life of any Citizen,
The party 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seaze one halfe his goods, the other halfe
Comes to the privy coffe of the State,
And the offenders life lyes in the mercy
Of the Duke onely, 'gainst all other voyce.
In which predicament I say thou standst:
For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That indirectly, and directly too
Thou had contriv'd against the very life
Of the defendant: and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehearst.
Downe therefore, and beg mercy of the Duke.
Gra. Beg that thou maist have leave to hang thy selfe,
And yet thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord,
There fore thou must be hang'd at the states charge.
Duk. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou aske it:
For halfe thy wealth, it is Antonios,
The other halfe comes to the generall state,
Which humblenesse may drive unto a fine.
Por. I for the state, not for Antonio.
Shy. Nay, take my life and all, pardon not that,
You take my house, when you doe take the prop
That doth sustaine my house: you take my life
When you doe take the meanes whereby I live.
Por. What mercy can you render him Antonio?
Gra. A halter Gratia, nothing else for Gods sake.
Ant. So please my Lord the Duke, and all the Court
To quite the fine for one halfe of his goods,
I am content: so he will let me have
The other halfe in use, to render it
Vpon his death, unto the Gentleman
That lately stole his daughter.
Two things provided more, that for this favour
He presently become a Christian:
The other, that he doe record a gift
Heere in the Court of all he dyes posselt
Vnto his sonne Lorenzo, and his daughter.
Duk. He shall doe this, or else I doe recant
The pardon that I late pronounced heere.
Por. Art thou contented Iew? what dost thou say?
Shy. I am content.
Por. Clarke, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you give me leave to goe from hence,
I am not well, send the deed after me,
And I will signe it.
Duk. Get thee gone, but doe it.
Gra. In christning thou shalt have two godfathers,
Had I beene judge, thou shouldst have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not to the font. Exit.
Duk. Sir I intreat you with me home to dinner.
Por. I humbly doe desire your Grace of pardon,
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meete I presently set forth.
Duk. I am sorry that your leysure serves you not:
Antonio greatifie this gentleman,
For in my mind, you are much bound to him.
Exit Duke and his traine.
Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my freind

Have by your wisedome beene this day acquitted
Of greivous penalties, in lieu whereof,
Three thousand Ducats due unto the Iew
We freely cope your courteous paines withall.
Ant. And stand indebred over and above
In love and service to you evermore.
Por. He is well paid that is well satisfied,
And I delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein doe account my selfe well paid,
My mind was never yet more mercenary.
I pray you know me when we meete againe,
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.
Bass. Deare sir, of force I must attempt you further,
Take some remembrance of us as a tribute,
Not as a fee: grant me two things, I pray you
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
Por. You presse me farre, and therefore I will yeeld,
Give me your gloves, Ile weare them for your sake,
And for your love Ile take this ring from you,
Doe not draw backe your hand, Ile take no more,
And you in love shall not deny me this?
Bass. This ring good sir, alas it is a trifle,
I will not shame my selfe to give you this.
Por. I will have nothing else but onely this,
And now methinkes I have a mind to it.
Bass. There's more depends on this then on the vauw,
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation,
Onely for this I pray you pardon me.
Por. I see sir you are liberall in offers,
You taught me first to beg, and now me thinkes
You teach me how a begger should be answer'd.
Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife,
And when she put it on, she made me vow
That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.
Por. That scuse serves many men to save their gifts,
And if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I have deserv'd this ring,
Shee would not hold out enemy for ever
For giving it to me: well, peace be with you. Exeunt.
Ant. My Lord Bassanio, let him have the ring,
Let his deservings and my love withall
Be valued against your wives commandement.
Bass. Goe Gratiano, run and over-take him,
Give him the ring, and bring him if thou canst
Vnto Antonios house, away, make haste. Exit Grat.
Come, you and I will thither presently,
And in the morning early will we both Flye toward Belmont, come Antonio. Exeunt.

Enter Portia, and Nerissa.

Por. Enquire the Iewes house out, give him this deed,
And let him signe it, we'll away to night,
And be a day before our husbands home:
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Faire sir, you are well ore-tane:
My L. Bassanio upon more advice,
Hath sent you heere this ring, and doth intreat
Your company at dinner.
Por. That cannot be;
His ring I doe accept most thankfully,
And so I pray you tell him: furthermore,
I pray you shew my youth old Shylockes house.
Grat. That will I doe.
Ner. Sir, I would speake with you:

He see if I can get my husbands ring
Which I did make him sweare to keepe for ever.
Por. Thou maist I warrant, we shall have old swearing
That they did give therings away to men;
But wee le out-face them, and out-sweare them too:
Away, make haste, thou know'st where I will tarry.
Ner. Come good sir, will you shew me to this house.
Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Lorenzo and Iessica.

Lor. The moone shines bright. In such a night as this,
When the sweet winde did gently kisse the trees,
And they did make no noyse, in such a night
Treilus me thinks mounted the Trojan wall,
And sigh'd his soule toward the Grecian tents
Where Cressid lay that night.

Ies. In such a night.
Did Thisby fearefully ore-trip the dewe,
And saw the Lyons shadow ere himselfe,
And ranne dismayed away.

Loren. In such a night
Stood Dido with a Willow in her hand
Vpon the wilde sea bankes, and waft her Love
To come againe to Carthage.

Ies. In such a night
Medea gathered the enchanted hearbs
That did renew old Eson.

Loren. In such a night
Did Iessica steale from the wealthy Iewe,
And with an Vnchrist Love did runne from Venice,
As farre as Belmont.

Ies. And in such a night.
Did young Lorenzo sweare he lov'd her well,
Stealing her soule with many vowes of faith,
And ne're a true one.

Loren. And in such a night
Did pretty Iessica (like a little throw)
Slander her Love, and he forgave it her.

Ies. I would out-night you did no body come:
But harke, I heare the footing of a man.

Enter Messenger.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

Mes. A friend. (friend?)

Loren. A friend, what friend? your name I pray you

Mes. Stephano is my name, and I bring word
My Mistresse will before the breake of day
Be heere at Belmont, she doth stray about
By holy crosses where she kneeles and prayes
For happy wedlocke houres.

Loren. Who comes with her?

Mes. None but a holy Hermit and her maid:
I pray you is my Master yet return'd?

Loren. He is not, nor we have not heard from him,
But go we in I pray thee Iessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the Mistresse of the house.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. Sola, sola: wo ha ho, sola, sola-

Loren. Who calls?

Clo. Sola, did you see M. Lorenzo, and M. Lorenza, sola,

Lor. Leave hollowing man, here. (sola.)

Clo. Sola, where, where?

Lor. Heere?

Clo. Tell him ther's a Post come from my Master, with his home full of good newes, my Master will be here ere morning sweet love.

Loren. Let's in, and there expect their comming.

And yet no matter: why should we goe in?

My friend Stephano signifie pray you

Within the house, your Mistresse is at hand,

And bring your musique forth into the a . . .

How sweet the moone-light sleeps upon this banke,

Heere will we sit, and let the sounds of Musicke

Creepe in our eares; soft stilnes, and the night

Become the tutches of sweet harmony:

Sit Iessica, looke how the floore of heaven

Is thicke inlayed with patterns of bright gold,

There's not the smallest orbe which thou beholdest

But in his motion like an Angell sings,

Still quiring to the young eyed Cherubins;

Such harmony is in immortal soules,

But whilst this muddy vesture of decay

Doth grossly close in it, we cannot heare it:

Come hoe, and wake Diana with a hymne,

With sweetest tutches pearce your Mistresse eare,

And draw her home with musicke.

Iessi. I am never merry when I heare sweet musique.

Play musicks.

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive:

For doe but note a wilde and wanton heard

Or race of youthfull and unhandled colts,

Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,

Which is the hot condition of their blood,

If they but heare perchance a trumpet sound,

Or any ayre of musicke touch their eares,

You shall perceive them make a mutuall stand,

Their savage eyesturn'd to a modest gaze,

By the sweet power of musicke: therefore the Poet

Did faine that Orpheus drew teares, stones, and floods.

Since naught so stockish, hard, and full of rage,

But musicke for the time doth change his nature,

The man that hath no musicke in himselfe,

Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,

Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoiles,

The motions of his spirit are dull as night,

And his affections darke as Erebus,

Let no such man be trusted: marke the musicke.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall:

How farre that little candle throwes his beames,

So shines a good deed in a naughty world. (dile?)

Ner. When the moone shone we did not see the can-

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the lesse,

A substitute shines brightly as a King

Vntill a King be by, and then his state

Empties it selfe, as doth an inland brooke

Into the maine of waters: musike, harke. Musicks.

Ner. It is your musicke Madam of the house.

Por. Nothing is good I see without respect,

Methinks it sounds much sweeter then by day?

Ner. Silence bestowes that vertue on it Madam,

Por. The Crow doth sing as sweetly as the Larke

When

When neither is attended : and I thinke
The Nightingale if she should sing by day
When every Goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a Musitian then the Wren?
How many things by season, season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection!
Peace, how the Moone sleepes with Endimion,
And would not be awak'd

Musicke ceases.

Lor. That is the voyce,
Or I am much deceiu'd of Portia.
Por. He knowes meas the blind man knowes the Cuc-kow by the bad voyce?
Lor. Deere Lady welcōme home?
Por. We have beene praying for our husbands welfare
Which speed we hope the better for our words,
Are they return'd?
Lor. Madam, they are not yet :
But there is come a Messenger before
To signifie rheir comming.
Por. Goe in Nerrissa,
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence,
Nor you Lorenzo, Iessica nor you.

A Tucket sounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand, I heare his Trumpet,
We are no tell-tales Madam, feare you not.
Por. This night me thinkes is but the daylight sicke,
It lookes a little paler, 'tis a day:
Such as the day is, when the Sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their Followers.

Bas. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walke in absence of the sunne.
Por. Let me give light, but let me not belight,
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,
And never be Bassanio so from me,
But God fort all : you are welcome home my Lord.
Bas. I thanke you Madam, give welcome to my friend
This is the man, this is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound.
Por. You should in all sence be much bound to him,
For as I heare he was much bound for you.
Ant. No more then I am well acquitted of.
Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house :
It must appeare in other wayes then words,
Therefore I scant this breathing curtisie.
Gra. By yonder Moone I sweare you doe me wrong,
Infaithe I gave it to the Iudges Clarke,
Would he were gelt that had it for my part,
Since you doe take it Love so much at heart.
Por. A quarrell hoe already, what's the matter?
Gra. About a hoope of Gold, a paltry Ring
That she did give me, whose Poesie was
For all the world like Cuslers Poetry
Vpon a knife ; Love me, and leave me not.
Ner. What talke you of the Poesie or the vawle :
You swore to me when I did give it you,
That you would weare it till the houre of death,
And that it should lye with you in your grave,
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have beene respectiue and have kept it.
Gave it a Iudges Clarke : but well I know
The Clarke will ne're weare haire on's face that had it.

Gra. He will, and if he live to be a man.
Ner. If, if a Woman live to be a man.
Gra. Now by this hand I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher then thy selfe, the Iudges Clarke,
A prating boy that begg'd it as a Fee,
I could not for my heart deny it him.
Por. You were too blame, I must be plaine with you,
To part so slightly with your wives first gift,
A thing stucke on with oathes upon your finger,
And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.
I gave my Love a Ring, and made him sweare
Never to part with it, and heere he stands :
I dare be sworne for him, he would not leave it,
Nor plucke it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Now in faith Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cause of griefe,
And 'twere to me I should be mad at it.
Bas. Why I were best to cut my left hand off,
And sweare I lost the Ring defending it.
Gra. My Lord Bassanio gave his Ring away
Vnto the Iudge that begg'd it, and indeed
Deserv'd it too : and then the Boy his Clarke
That tooke some paines in writing, he begg'd mine,
And neither man nor master would take ought
But the two Rings.
Por. What Ring gave you my Lord?
Not that I hope which you receiv'd of me.
Bas. If I could adde a lye unto a fault,
I would deny it : but you see my finger
Hath not the Ring upon it, it is gone.
Por. And even so voide is your false heart of truth.
By heaven I will ne're come in your bed
Vntill I see the Ring.
Ner. Nor I in yours, till I againe see mine.
Bas. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the Ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the Ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the Ring,
And how unwillingly I left the Ring,
When nought would be accepted but the Ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure?
Por. If you had knowne the vertue of the Ring,
Or halfe her worthinesse that gave the Ring,
Or your owne honour to containe the Ring,
You would not then have parted with the Ring :
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleas'd to have defended it
With any termes of Zeale : wanted the modesty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony :
Nerrissa teaches me what to beleeve,
He dye for't, but some Woman had the Ring?
Bas. No by mine honor Madam, by my soule
No Woman had it, but a civill Doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand Ducates of me,
And begg'd the Ring ; the which I did deny him,
And suffer'd him to goe displeas'd away :
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my deere friend. What should I say sweet Lady?
I was inforc'd to send it after him,
I was beset with shame and curtisie,
My honor would not let in gratitude
So much besmeare it. Pardon me good Lady,
And by these blessed Candles of the night,
Had you beene there, I thinke you would have begg'd
The Ring of me, to give thee worthy Doctor.

Por. Let not that Doctor ere come neere my house,
Since he hath got the jewell that I loved,
And that which you did sweare to keepe for me,
I will become as liberall as you,
He not deny him any thing I have,
No, not my body, nor my husbands bed:
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it.
Lye not a night from home. Watch me like Argus,
If you doe not, if I be left alone,
Now by mine honor which is yet mine owne,
He have the Doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his Clarke: therefore be well advis'd
How you doe leave me to mine owne protection.

Gra. Well, doe you so: let not me take him then,
For if I doe, he mar the yong Clarkes pen.

Ant. I am th'unhappy subject of these quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieve not you,
You are welcome notwithstanding.

Bas. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong,
And in the hearing of these many friends
I sweare to thee, even by thine owne faire eyes
Wherein I see my selfe.

Por. Marke you but that?
In both mine eyes he doubly sees himselfe:
In each eye one, sweare by your double selfe,
And there's an oath of credit.

Bas. Nay, but heare me.
Pardon this fault, and by my soule I sweare
I never more will breake an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my body for thy wealth,
Which but for him that had your husbands ring
Had quite miscarried. I dare be bound againe,
My soule upon the forfeit, that your Lord
Will never more breake faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety: give him this,
And bid him keepe it better then the other.

Ant. Heere Lord Bassanio, sweare to keepe this ring.

Bas. By heaven it is the same I gave the Doctor.

Por. I had it of him: pardon Bassanio,
For by this ring the Doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me my gentle Gratiano,
For that same scrubbed boy the Doctors Clarke
In lieu of this, last night did lye with me.

Gra. Why this is like the mending of high wayes
In Sommer, where the wayes are faire enough:
What, are we Cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?

Por. Speake not so grossely, you are all amaz'd;
Heere is a letter, read it at your leysure,
It comes from Padua from Bellario.

There you shall find that Portia was the Doctor,
Nerrissa there her Clarke. Lorenzo heere
Shall witnesse I set forth as soone as you,
And but ey'n now return'd: I have not yet
Entred my house. Antonio you are welcome,
And I have better newes in store for you
Than you expect: unseale this letter soone,
There you shall find three of your Argosies
Are richly come to ourt our todainly.
You shall not know by what strange accident
I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumbe.

Bas. Were you the Doctor, and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the Clarke that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. I, but the Clarke that never means to doe it,
Vnlesse he live untill he be a man.

Bas. (Sweet Doctor) you shall be my bedfellow,
When I am absent, then lye with my wife.

Ant. (Sweet Lady) you have given me life and living;
For heere I reade for certaine that my ships
Are safely come to Rhodes.

Por. How now Lorenzo?

My Clarke hath some good comforts too for you.

Ner. I, and he give them him without a fee,
There doe I give to you and Jessica
From the rich Jew, a speciall deed of gift
After his death, of all he dyes possess'd of.

Loren. Faire Ladies you drop Manna in the way
Of starved people.

Por. It is almost morning,
And yet I am sure you are not satisfied
Of these events at full. Let us goe in,
And charge us there upon intergatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so, the first intergatory
That my Nerrissa shall be sworne on, is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
Or goe to bed, now being two houres to day,
But were the day come, I should wish it darke,
Till I were couching with the Doctors Clarke.
Well, while I live, he feare no other thing
So sore, as keeping safe Nerrissa ring.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

As you like it.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orlando.

AS I remember Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will, but a poore thousand Crownes, and as thou saist, charged my brother on his blessing to breed me well: and there begins my sadnesse: My brother Iaques he keeps at schoole, and report speakes goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or (to speake more properly) stayes me heere at home unkept: for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an Oxe? his horses are bred better, for besides that they are faire with their feeding, they are taught their mannage, and to that end Riders decerely hir'd: but I (his brother) gaine nothing under him but growth, for the which his Animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I: besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seemes to take from me: he lets me feede with his Hindes, barres me the place of a brother, and as much as in him lyes, mines my gentility with my education. This is it Adam that grieues me, and the spirit of my Father, which I thinke is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adam. Yonder comes my Master, your brother.

Orla. Goe apart Adam, and thou shalt heare how he will shake me up.

Oli. Now Sir, what make you heare?

Orla. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Oli. What marre you then sir?

Orla. Marry sir, I am helping you to marre that which God made, a poore unworthy brother of yours with idleness.

Oli. Marry sir be better employed, and be naught a while.

Orla. Shall I keepe your hogs, and eat huskes with them? what prodigall portion have I spent, that I should come to such penury?

Oli. Know you where you are sir?

Orla. O sir, very well: heere in your Orchard.

Oli. Know you before whom sir?

Orla. I, better then him I am before, knowes me: I know you are my eldest brother, and in the gentle condition of blood you should so know me: the courtesie of nations allowes you my better, in that you are the first borne, but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us: I have as much of my father in me; as you, albeit I confesse your coming before me is neerer to his reverence.

Oli. What Boy.

(this.

Orla. Come, come elder brother, you are too yong in

Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me villaine?

Orla. I am no villaine: I am the yongest sonne of sir Rowland de Boyes, he was my father, and he is thrice a villaine that sayes such a father begot villaines: wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had paid out thy tongue, for saying so, thou hast raild on thy selfe,

Adam. Sweet Master be patient, for your Fathers remembrance, be at accord.

Oli. Let me goe I say.

Orla. I will not till I please: you shall heare me: my father charg'd you in his will to give me good education: you have train'd me like a pezant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities: the spirit of my father growes strong in me, and I will no longer endure it: therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poore allottery my father left me by testament, with that I will goe buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou doe? beg when that is spent? Well sir, get you in. I will not long be troubled with you: you shall have some part of your will, I pray you leave me.

Orla. I will no further offend you, then becomes me for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dogge.

Adam. Is old dogge my reward: most true, I have lost my teeth in your service: God be with my old master, he would not have spoke such a word. Ex. Orl. Ad.

Oli. Is it even so, begin you to grow upon me? I will physicke your ranckenesse, and yet give no thousand crownes neither: holla Dennis.

Enter Dennis.

Dem. Calls your worship.

Oli. Was not Charles the Dukes Wraffle heere to speake with me?

Dem. So please you, he is heere at the doore, and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in: 'twill be a good way: and to morrow the wraffling is.

Enter Charles.

Char. Good morrow to your worship.

Oli. Good Mounseur Charles: what's the new newes at the new Court?

Char. There's no newes at the Court sir, but the old newes: that is, the old Duke is banished by his yonger brother the new Duke, and three or foure loving

Lords

Lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new Duke, therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell if Rosalind the Dukes daughter be banished with her Father?

Cha. O no; for the Dukes daughter her Cousen so loves her, being ever from their Cradles bred together, that he would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her; she is at the Court, and no lesse beloved of her Vncle, then his owne daughter, and never two Ladies loved as they doe.

Oli. Where will the old Duke live?

Cha. They say he is already in the Forrest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they say many yong Gentlemen flocke to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrastle to morrow before the new Duke?

Charl. Marry doe I sir: and I came to acquaint you with a matter: I am given sir secretly to understand, that your yonger brother Orlando hath a disposition to come in disguis'd against me to try a fall: to morrow sir I wrastle for my credit, and he that escapes me without some broken limbe, shall acquit him well: your brother is but young and tender, and for your love I would bee loth to foyle him, as I must for my owne honour if he come in: therefore out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withall, that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brooke such disgrace well as he shall runne into, in that it is a thing of his owne search, and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thanke thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite: I had my selfe notice of my Brothers purpose heerein, and have by under-hand meanes laboured to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. He tell thee Charles, it is the stubbornest yong fellow of France, full of ambition, an envious emulator of every mans good parts, a secret and villanous contriver against me his naturall brother: therefore use thy discretion, I had as lief thou didst breake his necke as his finger. And thou wert best looke to't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he doe not mightily grace himselfe on thee, he will practise against thee by poyson, entrap thee by some treacherous devise, and never leave thee till he hath tane thy life by some indirect meanes or other: for I assure thee, (and almost with teares I speake it) there is not one so young, and so villanous this day living. I speake but brotherly of him, but should I anathomize him to thee, as he is, I must blush, and weepe, and thou must looke pale and wonder.

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you: if hee come to morrow, Ile give him his payment: if ever he goe alone againe, Ile never wrastle for prize more: and so God keepe your worship.

Oli. Farewell good Charles. Now will I stirre this Gamester: I hope I shall see an end of him, for my soule (yet I know not why) hates nothing more then he: yet he's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned, full of noble devise, of all sorts enchantingly beloved, and indeed so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my owne people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long, this wrastler shall cleare all: nothing remains, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now Ile goe about.

Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Rosalind, and Celia.

Cel. I pray thee Rosalind, sweet my Coz, be merry.

Ros. Deere Celia; I show more mirth then I am mistresse of, and would you yet were merrier: unlesse you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learne mee how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Heerein I see thou lov'st mee not with the full waight that I love thee; if my Vncle thy banished father had banished thy Vncle the Duke my Father, so thou hadst bene still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine; so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously temper'd, as mine is to thee.

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoyce in yours.

Cel. You know my Father hath no child, but I, nor none is like to have; and truly when he dies, thou shalt be his heire? for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee againe in affection: by mine honour I will, and when I breake that oath, let me turne monster: therefore my sweet Rose, my deare Rose, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth I will Coz, and devise sports: let me see, what thinke you of falling in Love?

Cel. Marry I prethee doe, to make sport withall: but love no man in good earnest, nor no further in sport neyther, then with safety of a pure blush, thou maist in honor come off againe.

Ros. What shall be our sport then?

Cel. Let us sit and mocke the good housewife Fortune from her wheele, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would we could doe so: for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountifull blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'Tis true, for those that she makes faire, she scarce makes honest, and those that she makes honest, she makes very ill favouredly.

Ros. Nay now thou goest from Fortunes office to Natures: Fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature.

Enter Clowne.

Cel. No; when Nature hath made a faire creature, may she not by Fortune fall into the fire? though nature hath given us wit to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune sent in this foole to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed there is fortune too hard for nature, when fortune makes natures naturall, the cutter off of natures wit.

Cel. Peradventure this is not Fortunes worke neither, but Natures, who perceiving our naturall wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this Naturall for our whetstone: for alwayes the dulnesse of the foole, is the whetstone of the wits. How now Witte, whither wander you?

Clow. Mistresse, you must come away to your father,

Cel. Were you made the messenger?

Clow. No by mine honour, but I was bid to come for you

Ros.

Ref. Where learned you that oath foole?

Clo. Of a certaine Knight, that swore by his Honour they were good Pancakes, and swore by his Honour the Mustard was naught: Now Ile stand to it, the Pancakes were naught, and the Mustard was good, and yet was not the Knight forsworne.

Cel. How prove you that in the great heape of your knowledge?

Ref. I marry, now unmuzzle you wisedome.

Clo. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chinnes, and sweare by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By our beards (if we had them) thou art.

Clo. By my knavery (if I had it) then I were: but if you sweare by that that is not, you are not forsworne: no more was this knight swearing by his Honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworne it away, before ever he saw those Pancakes, or that Mustard.

Cel. Prethee, who is't that thou means't?

Clo. One that old Ferdricke your Father loves.

Ref. My Fathers love is enough to honor him enough; speake no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation, one of these dayes.

Clo. The more pittie that fooles may not speake wisely, what Wisemen doe foolishly.

Cel. By my troth thou saiest true: For, since the little wit that fooles have was silenced, the little foolery that wife men have makes a great shew; Here comes Mounsieur Le Ben.

Enter Le Ben.

Ref. With his mouth full of newes.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as Pigeons feed their young.

Ref. Then shall we be newes-cram'd.

Cel. All the better: we shall be the more marketable.

Boon-jour Mounfier le Ben, what the newes?

Le Ben. Faire Princeesse,

You have lost much good sport.

Cel. Sport: of what colour?

Le Ben. What colour Madam? How shall I answer you?

Ref. As wit and fortune will.

Clo. Or as the destinies decrees.

Cel. Well said, that was laid on with a trowell.

Clo. Nay, if I keepe not my ranke,

Ref. Thou loofest thy old smell.

Le Ben. You amaze me Ladies: I would have told you of good wraffling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ref. Yet tell us the manner of the Wraffling.

Le Ben. I will tell you the beginning: and if it please your Ladiships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to doe, and heere where you are, they are comming to performe it.

Cel. Well, the beginning that is dead and buried.

Le Ben. There comes an old man, and his three sons.

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Ben. Three proper yong men, of excellent growth and presence.

Ref. With bills on their neckes: Be it knowne unto all men by these presents.

Le Ben. The eldest of the three, wraffled with Charles the Dukes Wraffler, which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribbes, that there is little hope of life in him; So he serv'd the second, and so the third: yonder they lye, the poore old man their Farher, making such pittifull dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ref. Alas.

Clo. But what is the sport Mounfieur, that the Ladies have lost?

Le Ben. Why this that I speake of.

Clo. Thus men may grow wiser every day. It is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribbes was sport for Ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Ref. But is there any else long to see this broken Musicke in his sides? Is there yet another doates upon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wraffling Cofin?

Le Ben. You must if you stay heere, for heere is the place appointed for wraffling, and they are ready to performe it.

Cel. Yonder sure they are comming. Let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke, Lords, Orlando, Charles and Attendants.

Duk. Come on, since the youth will not be intreated, His owne perill on his forwardnesse.

Ref. Is yonder the man?

Le Ben. Even he, Madam.

Cel. Alas, he is too yong: yet he lookes successfully.

Du. How now daughter, and Cofin:

Are you crept hither to see the wraffling?

Ref. I my Lidge, so please you give us leave.

Du. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such oddes in the man: In pittie of the challengers youth, I would faine disswade him, but he will not be entreated. Speake to him Ladies, see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither good Mounfieur Le Ben.

Duk. Doe so: Ile not be by.

Le Ben. Mounfieur the Challenger, the Princeesse calls for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ref. Yong man, have you challeng'd Charles the Wraffler?

Orl. No faire Princeesse: he is the generall challenger, I come but as others doe, to try with him the strength of my youth.

Cel. Yong Gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your yeares: you have seene cruell prooffe of this mans strength, if you saw your selfe with your eyes, or knew your selfe with your judgement, the feare of your adventure would counsell you to a more equall enterprife. We pray you for your owne sake to embrace your owne safety, and give over this attempt.

Ref. Doe yong Sir, your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we will make it our suite to the Duke, that the wraffling might not goe forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your harde thoughts, wherein I confesse me much guilty to deny so faire and excellent Ladies any thing. But let your faire eyes, and gentle wishes goe with me to my triall; wherein if I be foil'd, there is but one sham'd that was never gracious: if kil'd, but one dead that is willing to be so: I shall doe my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me; the world no injury, for in it I have nothing: onely in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied, when I have made it empty.

Ref. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cel.

Cel. And mine to eke out hers.

Ref. Fare you well : pray heaven I be deceiv'd in you.

Cel. Your hearts desires be with you.

Char. Come, where is this yong gallant, that is so desirous to lye with his mother earth ?

Orla. Ready fir, but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duk. You shall try but one fall.

Cha. No, I warrant your Grace you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily perswaded him from a first.

Orla. You meane to mocke me after : you should not have mockt me before : but come your wayes.

Ref. Now Hercules, be thy speede yong man,

Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the legge.

Wrestle.

Ref. Oh excellent yong man.

Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should downe.

Shout.

Duk. No more, no more.

Orla. Yes I beseech your Grace, I am not yet well breath'd.

Duk. How do'st thou Charles ?

Le Ben. He cannot speake my Lord.

Duk. Beare him away :

What is thy name yong man ?

Orla. Orlando my Liege, the yongest sonne of Sir Rowland de Boyes.

Duk. I would thou hadst beene sonne to some man else, The world esteem'd thy father honourable, But I did find him still mine enemy : Thou should'st have better pleas'd me with this deed, Hadst thou descended from another house : But fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth, I would thou hadst told me of another Father.

Exit. Duk.

Cel. Were I my Father (Coze) would I doe this ?

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Rowlands sonne, His yongest sonne, and would not change that calling To be adopted heire to Fredricke.

Ref. My Father lou'd Sir Rowland as his soule, And all the world was of my Fathers mind, Had I before knowne this yong man his sonne, I should have given him teares unto entreaties, Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Cel. Gentle Cosen, Let us goe thanke him, and encourage him : My Fathers rough and envious disposition Sticks me at heart : Sir, you have well deserv'd, If you doe keepe your promises in love, But justly as you have exceeded all in promise, Your Mistris shall be happy.

Ref. Gentleman, Weare this for me : one out of suites with fortune That could give more, but that her hand lackes meane. Shall we goe Coze ?

Cel. I : fare you well faire Gentleman,

Orl. Can I not say, I thanke you ? My better parts Are all throwne downe, and that which here stands up Is but a quintine, a meere livelesse blocke.

Ref. He calls us backe : my pride fell with my fortunes Ile aske him what he would : Did you call Sir ? Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrowne More then your enemies.

Cel. Will you goe Coze ?

Ref. Have with you : fare you well.

Exit.

Or. What passion hangs these waights upon my tongue ? I cannot speake to her, yet she urg'd conference.

Enter Le Ben.

O poore Orlando ! thou art overthrowne Or Charles, or something weaker masters thee.

Le Ben. Good sir, I doe in friendship counsaile you To leave this place ; Albeit you have deserv'd High commendation, true applause, and love ; Yet such is now the Dukes condition, That he misconsters all that you have done : The Duke is humorous, what he is indeed More suites you to conceive, then I to speake of.

Orla. I thanke you sir ; and pray you tell me this, Which of the two was daughter of the Duke, That heere was at the Wrestling ?

Le Ben. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners, But yet indeed the taller is his daughter, The other is daughter to the banish'd Duke, And heere detain'd by her usurping Vncle To keepe his daughter company, whose loves Are dearer then the naturall bond of Sisters : But I can tell you, that of late this Duke Hath tane displeasure 'gainst his gentle Neece, Grounded upon no other argument, But that the people praise her for vertues, And pittie her, for her good fathers sake ; And on my life his malice 'gainst the Lady Will sodainely breake forth : Sir, fare you well, Hereafter in a better world then this, I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

Orl. I rest much bounden to you : fare you well. Thus must I from the smoake into the smother, From tyrant Duke, unto a tyrant Brother, But heavenly Rosaline.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Celia, and Rosaline.

Cel. Why Cosin, why Rosaline : Cupid have mercy, Not a word ?

Ref. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs, throw some of them at me ; come, lame me with reasons.

Ref. Then there were two Cosens laid up, when the one should be lam'd with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your Father ?

Ref. No, some of it is for my childe's Father : Oh how full of briers is this working day world.

Cel. They are but burs, Cosen, throwne upon thee in holiday foolery, if we walke not in the trodden paths, our very petty-coates will catch them.

Ref. I could shake them off my coate, these burs are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.

Ref. I would try if I could cry hem, and have him.

Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.

Ref. O they take the part of a better wrestler then my selfe.

Cel. O, a good wish upon you : you will try in time

in

in despite of a fall : but turning these jests out of service, let us take in good earnest : Is it possible on such a fo-daine, you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowlands your eldest sonne ?

Ros. The Duke my Father lov'd his Father dearly.

Cel. Doth it therefore ensue that you should love his Sonne dearly ? By this kind of chafe, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly ; yet I hate not Orlando.

Ros. No faith, hate him nor for my sake.

Cel. Why should I not ? doth he not deserve well ?

Enter Duke with Lords.

Ros. Let me love him for that, and doe you love him Because I doe. Looke, here comes the Duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Duk. Mistris, dispatch you with your safest haste, And get you from our Court.

Ros. Me Vnckle !

Duk. You Cosen,
Within these ten dayes if that thou beest found
So neere our publike Court as twenty miles,
Thoudiest for it.

Ros. I doe beseech your Grace
Let me the knowledge of my fault beare with me :
If with my selfe I hold intelligence,
Or have acquaintance with mine owne desires,
If that I doe not dreame, or be not franticke,
(As I doe trust I am not) then deere Vnckle,
Never so much as in a thought unborne,
Did I offend your highnesse.

Duke. Thus doe all Traitors,
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace it selfe ;
Let it suffice thee that I trust thee not.

Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a Traitor ;
Tell me whereon the likelihood depends ?

Duk. Thou art thy Fathers daughter, there's enough.

Ros. So was I when your highnesse tooke his Dukedome,
So was I when your highnesse banisht him ;
Treason is not inherited my Lord,
Or if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me, my Father was no Traitor :
Then good my Leige, mistake me not so much,
To thinke my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Deere Sovereigne heare me speake.

Duk. I Celia, we staid her for your sake,
Else had she with her Father rang'd along.

Cel. I did not then intreat to have her stay.
It was your pleasure, and your owne remorse,
I was too yong that time to value her,
But now I know her : if she be a Traitor,
Why so am I ; we still have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learn'd, plaid, eate together,
And wheresoere we went, like Junos Swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable.

Duk. Shee is too subtile for thee, and her smoothnes
Her very silence, and her patience,
Speake to the people, and they pittie her :
Thou art a foole, she robs thee of thy name,
And thou wilt show more bright, and seeme more vertu-
When she is gone : then open not thy lips, (ous
Firme, and irrevocable is my doome,
Which I have past upon her, she is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence then on me my Leige,
I cannot live out of her company.

Duk. You are a foole : you Neice provide your selfe,
If you out-stay the time, upon mine honor,
And in the greatnesse of my word you dye.

Exit Duke, &c.

Cel. O my poore Rosaline, whither wilt thou goe ?
Wilt thou change iather ? I will give thee mine :
I charge thee be not thou more griev'd then I am.

Ros. I have more cause.

Cel. Thou hast not Cosen,
Prethee be cheerefull ; know'st thou not the Duke
Hath banish'd me his daughter ?

Ros. That he hath not.

Cel. No, hath not ? Rosaline lacks then the love
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one,
Shall we be sundred ? shall we part sweet girl ?
No, let my Father seeke another heire :
Therefore devise with me how we may flye
Whither to goe, and what to beare with us,
And doe not seeke to take your charge upon you,
To beare your griefes your selfe, and leave me out :
For by this heaven (now at our sorrowes pale ;))
Say what thou canst, Ile goe along with thee.

Ros. Why, whither shall we goe ?

Cel. To seeke my Vnckle in the Forrest of Arden.

Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us,
(Maides as we are) to travell for farre ?
Beauty provoketh theeves sooner then gold.

Cel. Ile put my selfe in poore and meane attire,
And with a kind of vंबर smutch my face,
The like doe you, so shall we passe along,
And never stir assailants.

Ros. Were it not better,
Because that I am more then common tall,
That I did suite me all points like a man,
A gallant curtellax upon my thigh,
A bore-speare in my hand, and in my heart
Lye there what hidden womans feare there will,
Weele have a swashing and a marshall outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That doe outface it with their semblances.

Cel. What shall I call thee when thou art a man ?

Ros. Ile have no worse a name then Loves owne Page,
And therefore looke you call me Ganimed,
But what will you be call'd ?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state :
No longer Celia, but Aliena.

Ros. But Cosen, what if we assaid to steale
The clownish Foole out of your Fathers Court :
Would he not be a comfort to our travails ?

Cel. Heele goe along ore the wide world with me,
Leave me alone to wooe him ; Let's away
And get our Jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time, and safest way
To hide us from pursuite that will be made
After my flight : now goe we in content
To liberty, and not to banishment.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke Senior : Amiens, and two or three Lords like Forresters.

Duk. Sen. Now my Coe-mates, and brother in exile :
Hath not old custome made this life more sweet

Then

Then that of painted pompe? Are not these woods
More free from perill then the envious Court?
Heere feele we not the penalty of Adam,
The seasons difference, as the Icie phange
And churlish chiding of the winters winde,
Which when it bites and blowes upon my body
Even till I shrinke with cold, I smile, and say
This is no flattery: these are counsellors
That feelingly perswade me what I am:
Sweet are the vices of adversity
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Weares yet a precious lewell in his head:
And this our life exempt from publike haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, bookes in the running brookes,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Amien. I would not change it, happy is your Grace
That can translate the stubbornesse of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a stile.

Duk. Sen. Come, shall we goe and kill us venison?
And yet it irkes me the poore dapled foolles
Being native Burgers of this desert City,
Should in their owne confines with forked heads
Have their round hanches goard.

1. Lord. Indeed my Lord
The melancholy Iaques grieves at that,
And in that kind sweares you doe more usurpe
Then doth your brother that hath banish'd you:
To day my Lord of Amiens, and my selfe,
Did steale behind him as he lay along
Vnder an oake, whose anticke roope peepes out
Vpon the brooke that brawles along this wood,
To the which place a poore sequestred Stag
That from the Hunters ayne had tane a hurt,
Did come to languish; and indeed my Lord
The wretched animall heav'd forth such groanes
That their discharge did stretch his leatherne coat
Almost to bursting, and the big round teares
Cours'd one another downe his innocent nose
In pittous chafe; and thus the hairy foole,
Much marked of the melancholly Iaques,
Stood on th'extremest verge of the swift brooke,
Augmenting it with teares.

Duk. Sen. But what said Iaques?
Did he not moralize this spectacle?

1. Lord. O yes, into a thousand similies.
First, for his weeping into the needlesse streame;
Poore Deere quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings doe, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much: then being alone,
Left and abandoned of his velvet friend;
'Tis right quoth he, thus misery doth part
The Fluxe of company: anon a careless Heard
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him
And never staves to greet him: I quoth Iaques, Sweepe on you fat and greazy Citizens,
'Tis just the fashion; wherefore doe you looke
Vpon that poore and broken bankrupt there?
Thus most inuectively he pierceth through
The body of the Country, City, Court,
Yea, and of this our life, swearing that we
Are meere usurpers, tyrants, and whats worse
To fright the Animals, and to kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling places.

Duk. Sen. And did you leave him in this contemplation?

2. Lord. We did my Lord, weeping and commenting Vpon the sobbing Deere.

Duk. Sen. Show me the place,
I love to cope him in these sullen fits,
For then he's full of matter.

1. Lor. Ile bring you to him strait.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Duk, with Lords.

Duk. Can it be possible that no man saw them?
It cannot be, some villaines of my Court
Are of consent and sufferance in this.

1. Lord. I cannot heare of any that did see her,
The Ladies her attendants of her chamber
Saw her a bed, and in the morning early,
They found the bed untreasur'd of their Mistis.

2. Lord. My Lord, the roynish Clowne, at whom so oft,
Your Grace was wont to laugh, is also missing:

Hesperia the Princesse Gentlewoman
Confesses that she secretly ore-heard
Your daughter and her Cosen much commend
The parts and graces of the Wrasler
That did but lately foile the synowy Charles,
And she beleeves where ever they are gone
That youth is surely in their company.

Duk. Send to his brother, fetch that gallant hither,
If he be absent, bring his Brother to me,
Ile make him find him: doe this sodainely;
And let not search and inquisition quaille,
To bring againe these foolish runaways.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Orlando, and Adam.

Orl. Who's there?

Ad. What my yong master, oh my gentle master,
Oh my sweet master, O you memory
Of old Sir Rowland? why, what make you here?
Why are you vertuous? Why doe people love you?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
Why would you be so fond to overcome
The bonny prifer of the humorous Duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
Know you not Master, to some kind of men,
Their graces serve them but as enemies,
No more doe yours: your vertues gentle Master
Are sanctified and holy traitors to you:
Oh what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that beares it?

Orl. Why, what's the matter?

Ad. O unhappy youth,
Come not with these doores: within this rooffe
The enemy of all your graces lives
Your brother, no, no brother, yet the sonne
(Yet not the son, I will not call him son)
Of him I was about to call his Father,
Hath heard your praises, and this night he meanes,
To burne the lodging where you use to lye,
And you within it: if he faile of that

He

He will have other meanes to cut you off ;
I overheard him : and his practises :
This is no place, this house is but a butchery ;
Abhorre it, feare it, doe not enter it.

Orl. Why whither Adam would'st thou have me goe?

Ada. No matter whither, for you come not here.

Orl. What, would'st thou have me goe and beg my
Or with a base and boistrous Sword enforce (foode,
A theevish living on the common roade ?
This I must doe, or know not what to doe :
Yet this I will not doe, doe how I can,
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood, and bloudy brother.

Ada. But doe not so : I have five hundred Crownes,
The thrifty hire I saved under you father,
Which I did store to be my foster Nurse,
When service should in my old limbes lye lame,
And unregarded age in corners throwne,
Take that, and he that doth the Ravens feede,
Yea providently caters for the Sparrow,
Be comfort to my age : here is the gold,
All this I give you, let me be your servant,
Though I looke old, yet I am strong and lusty ;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot, and rebellious liquors in my bloud,
Nor did not with unbalshfull forehead woe,
The meanes of weakenesse and debility,
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty, but kindly ; let me goe with you,
He doe the service of a younger man
In all your businesse and necessities.

Orl. Oh good old man, how well in thee appears
The constant service of the antique world,
When service sweate for duty, not for meede :
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweate, but for promotion,
And having that doe choake their service up,
Even with the having, it is not so with thee :
But poore old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossome yeeld,
In lieu of all thy paines and husbandry,
But come thy wayes, wee'll goe along together,
And ere we have thy youthfull wages spent,
Wee'll light upon some settled low content.

Ada. Master goe on, and I will follow thee
To the last gaspe with truth and loyalty,
From seventy yeeres, till now almost fourescore
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventene yeeres, many their fortunes seek
But at fourescore, it is too late a weeke,
Yet fortune cannot recompence me better
Then to dye well, and not my Masters debter. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosalind for Ganimed, Celis for Aliena, and Clowne, alias Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter, how merry are my spirits?

Clo. I care not for my spirits, if my legges were not weary.

Ros. I could find in my heart, to disgrace my mans apparell, and to cry like a woman : but I must comfort the weaker vessell, as doubtlet and hose ought to show it selfe coragious to petty-coate ; therefore courage, good Aliena.

Cel. I pray you beare with me, I can goe no further.

Clo. For my part, I had rather beare with you, then beare you : yet I should beare no crosse if I did beare you, for I thinke you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the Forrest of Arden.

Clo. I, now am I in Arden, the more foole I, when I was at home I was in a better place, but Travellers must be content.

Enter Corin, and Silvius.

Ros. I, be so good Touchstone : looke you, who comes here, a yong man and an old in solemne talke.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorne you still.

Sil. Oh Corin, that thou knew'st how I doe love her.

Cor. I partly guesse : for I have lov'd ere now.

Sil. No Corin, being old, thou canst not guesse,
Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover,
As ever sigh'd upon a midnight pillow :
But if thy love were ere like to mine,
As sure I thinke did never man love so :
How many actions most ridiculous,
Hast thou beene drawne to by thy fantasie ?

Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.

Sil. Oh thou didst then never love so hartly,
If thou remembrest not the slightest folly,
That ever love did make thee runne into,
Thou hast not lov'd.

Or if thou hast not fate as I doe now,
Wearying thy hearer in thy Mistris praise,
Thou hast not lov'd.

Or if thou hast not broke from company,
Abruptly as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not lov'd.

O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe.

Exeunt.

Ros. Alas poore Shepheard ! searching of their wound,
I have by hard adventure found mine owne.

Clo. And I mine : I remember when I was in love, I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for comming a nights to Lane Smile, and I remember the kif-sing of her batlet, and the Cowes dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milk'd ; and I remember the wooing of a peascod instead of her, from whom I tooke two cods, and giving her them againe, said with weeping teares, weare these for my sake : we that are true Lovers, runne into strange capers ; but as all is mortall in nature,
so is all nature in love, mortall in folly.

Ros. Thou speak'st wiser then thou art ware of.

Clo. Nay, I shall ne're be ware of mine owne wit, till
I breake my shins against it.

Ros. Love, Love, this Shepheards passion,
Is much upon my fashions.

Clo. And mine, but it growes 'someting' stale with me.

Cel. I pray you, one of you question yon'd man,
If he for gold will give us any foode,
I faint almost to death.

Clo. Holla ; you Clowne.

Ros. Peace foole, he's not thy kinsman.

Cor. Who cal's?

Clo. Your betters Sir.

Cor. Else are they very wretched.

Ros.

Ref. Peace I say; good even to you friend.

Cor. And to you gentle Sir, and to you all.

Ref. I prethee Shepheard, if that love or gold
Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest our selves, and feed:
Here's a yong maid with travaile much oppressed,
And faints for succour.

Cor. Faire Sir, I pittie her,
And wish for her sake more then for mine owne,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her:
But I am shepheard to another man,
And doe not sheere the Fleeces that I graze:
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little wreakes to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality.
Besides his Coate, his Flockes, and bounds of feede
Are now on sale, and at our sheep-coat now
By reason of his absence there is nothing
That you will feed on: but what is, come see,
And in my voyce most welcome shall you be.

Ref. What is he that shall buy his flocke and pasture?

Cor. That yong Swaine that you saw heere but ere-while.

That little cares for buying any thing.

Ref. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
Buy thou the Cottage, pasture, and the flocke,
And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

Cl. And we will mend thy wages:
I like this place, and willingly could
Waste my time in it.

Cor. Assuredly the thing is to be sold:
Goe with me, if you like upon report,
The foile, the profit, and this kind of life,
I will your very faithfull Feeder be,
And buy it with your gold right fodainely.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter, Amyens, Iaques, and others.

Song.

*Under the greene wood tree,
who loves to lye with me,
And turne his merry Note, unto the sweet Birds thr one:
Come hisher, come hisher, come hisher:
Heere shall he see no enemy,
But Winter and rough Weather.*

Iaq. More, more, I prethee more.

Amy. It will make you melancholly Monsieur Iaques

Iaq. I thanke it: More, I prethee more,

I can sucke melancholly out of a song.

As a Weazel suckes egges: More, I prethee more.

Amy. My voyce is ragged, I know I cannot please you.

Iaq. I doe not desire you to please me,
I doe desire you to sing:

Come, more, another stanza: Call you'em stanza's?

Amy. What you will Monsieur Iaques.

Iaq. Nay, I care not for their names, they owne me nothing. Will you sing.

Amy. More at your request, then to please my selfe.

Iaq. Well then, if ever I thanke any man, Ile thanke you: but that they call complement is like th'encounter of two dog-Apes. And when a man thankes me hartily, me thinkes I have given him a peny, and he renders me the beggerly thankes. Come sing, and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Amy. Well, Ile end the song. Sirs, cover the while, the Duke will drinke under this tree; he hath beene all this day to looke you.

Iaq. And I have beene all this day to avoyd him:

He is too disputeable for my company:

I thinke of as many matters as he, but I give Heaven thankes, and make no boast of them.
Come, warble, come.

Song. Altogether heere.

*Who doth ambition shunne,
and loves to live i'th Swaine;
Seeking the food he eateth,
and pleas'd with what he gets:
Come hisher, come hisher, come hisher,
Heere shall he see, &c.*

Iaq. Ile give you a verse to this note,
That I made yesterday in despight of my invention.

Aym. And ile sing it.

Iaq. Thus it goes.

If it doe come to passe, that any man turne Ass:
*Leaving his wealth and ease,
A stubborne will to please,
Ducdame, ducdame, ducdame:
Heere shall he see, grosse fooles as he,
And if he will come to me.*

Aym. What's that Ducdame?

Iaq. 'Tis a Greeke invocation, to call fooles into a circle. Ile goe sleepe if I can: if I cannot, Ile raile against all the first borne of Egypt.

Aym. And Ile goe seeke the Duke,
His banket is prepar'd.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Orlando, and Adam.

Adam. Deere Master, I can goe no further:
O I dye for food. Heere lye I downe,
And measure out my grave. Farwell kind master.

Orl. Why how now Adam? No greater heart in thee!
Live a little, comfort a little, cheere thy selfe a little.
If this uncouth Forrest yeeld any thing savage,
I will either be food for it, or bring it for foode to thee:
Thy conceite is neerer death, then thy powers.
For my sake be comfortable, hold death a while
At the armes end: I will heere be with thee presently,
And if I bring thee not something to eate,
I will give thee leave to dye: but if thou diest
Before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour.
Well said, thou look'st cheereley,
And Ile be with thee quickly: yet thou liest
In the bleake ayre. Come, I will beare thee
To some shelter, and thou shalt not dye
For lacke of a dinner,
If there live any thing in this Desert.
Cheereley good Adam.

*Exeunt.
Scena*

Scena Septima.

Enter Duke Sen. & Lord, like out-laws.

Du. Sen. I thinke he be transform'd into a beast,
For I can no where finde him, like a man.

1. Lord. My Lord, he is but even now gone hence,
Heere was he merry, hearing of a Song.

Du. Sen. If he compact of iarres, grow Muscally,
We shall have shortly discord in the Spheares:
Go seeke him, tell him I would speake with him.

Enter Jaques.

1. Lord. He saves my labor by his owne approach.

Du. Sen. Why how now Monsieur, what a life is this
That your poore friends must wooe your companie,
What, you looke merrily.

Jaq. A Foole, a foole: I met a foole i'th Forrest,
A motley Foole (a miserable world:)
As I do live by food, I met a foole,
Who laid him downe, and bask'd him in the Sun,
And rail'd on Lady Fortune in good termes,
In good set termes, and yet a motley toole.
Good morrow foole (quoth I:) no Sir, quoth he,
Call me not foole, till heaven hath sent me fortune,
And then he drew a diall from his poake,
And looking on it, with lacke-lustre eye,
Sayes, very wisely, it is ten a clocke:
Thus we may see (quoth he) how the world waggess:
'Tis but an houre agoe, since it was nine,
And after one houre more, 'twill be eleven,
And so from houre to houre, we ripe, and ripe,
And then from houre to houre, we rot, and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale. When I did heare
The motley Foole, thus morall on the time,
My Lungs began to crow like Chanticleere,
That Fooles should be so deepe contemplative:
And I did laugh, sans intermission
An houre by his diall. Oh noble foole,
A worthy foole: Motley's the onely weare.

Du. Sen. What foole is this?

Jaq. O wortheie foole: One that hath bin a Courtier
And sayes, if Ladies be but young, and faire,
They have the gift to know it: and in his braine,
Which is as dry as the remainder bisket
After a voyage: He hath strange places cram'd
With observation, the which he vents
In mangled formes. O that I were a foole,
I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Du. Sen. Thou shalt have one.

Jaq. It is my onely suite,
Provided that you weed your better judgements
Of all opinion that growes ranke in them,
That I am wise. I must have liberty
Withall, as large a Charter as the winde,
To blow on whom I please, for so fooles have:
And they that are most gauled with my folly,
They most must laugh: And why sir must they so?
The why is plaine, as way to Parish Church:
He, that a foole doth very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart
Seeme senselesse of the bob. If not,
The Wife-mans folly is anathomiz'd
Even by the squandring glances of the foole.

Invest me in my motley: Give me leave
To speake my minde, and I will through and through Cleanse the foule body of th' infected world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

Du. Sen. Fie on thee. I can tell what thou wouldst do.

Jaq. What, for a Counter, would I do, but good?

Du. Sen. Most mischeuous foule sin, in chiding sin:
For thou thy selfe hast ben a Libertine,
As sensuall as the brutish sting it selfe,
And all th' imbossed foies, and headed evils,
That thou with license of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the generall world.

Jaq. Why who cries out on pride,
That can therein taxe any private partie:
Doth it not flow as hugely as the Sea,
Till that the wearie verie meanes do ebbe.
What woman in the Citie do I name,
When that I say the Cittie woman beares
The cost of Princes on unworthie shoulders?
Who can come in, and say that I meane her,
When such a one as she, such is her neighbour?
Or what is he of basest function,
That sayes his braverie is not on my cost,
Thinking that I meane him, but therein suites
His folly to the mettle of my speech.
There then, how then, what then, let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himselfe: if he be free,
Why then my taxing like a wild-goose flies
Vnclain'd of any man. But who comes here?

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Forbeare, and eate no more.

Jaq. Why I have eate none yet.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessitie be serv'd.

Jaq. Of what kinde should this Cocke come of?

Du. Sen. Art thou thus bolden'd man by thy distress?
Or else a rule despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so emptie?

Orl. You touch'd my veine at first, the thornie point
Of bare distress, that hath tane from me the shew
Of smooth civilitie: yet am I in-land bred,
And know some nourtire: But forbear, I say,
He dies that touches any of this fruite,
Till I, and my affaires are answered.

Jaq. And you will not be answer'd with reason,
I must dye.

Du. Sen. What would you have?
Your gentleness shall force, more then your force
Move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.

Du. Sen. Sit downe and feed, & welcome to our table

Orl. Speake you so gently? Pardon me I pray you,
I thought that all things had beene savage heere,
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of sterne commandment. But what ere you are
That in this desert inaccessible,
Vnder the shade of melancolly boughes,
Loose, and neglect the creeping houres of time:
If ever you have look'd on better dayes:
If ever beene where bells have knoll'd to Church:
If ever sate at any good mans feast:
If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a teare,
And know what 'tis to pittie, and be pittied:
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be,
In the which hope, I bush, and hide my Sword.

R

Duke

Du. Sen. True is it, that we have seene better dayes,
And have with holy bell bin knowld to Church,
And sat at good mens feasts, and wip'd our eyes
Of drops, that sacred pity hath engendred:
And therefore sit you downe in gentlenesse,
And take upon command, what helpe we have
That to your wanting may be ministred,

Orl. Then but forbear your food a little while:
Whiles (like a Doe) I go to finde my Fawne,
And give it food. There is an old poore man,
Who after me, hath many a wearie steppe.
Limpt in pure love: till he be first suffic'd,
Opprest with two weake evils, age, and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.

Du. Sen. Go finde him out,
And we will nothing waste till you returne.

Orl. I thanke ye, and be blest for your good comfort.

Du. Sen. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappie:
This wide and vniverfall Theater
Presents more wofull Pageants then the Sceane
Wherein we play in.

Ia. All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women, meere Players;
They have their Exits and their Entrances,
And one man in his time plaies many parts,
His Acts being seven ages. At first the Infant,
Mewling, and puking in the Nurseries armes:
Then, the whining Schoole-boy with his Satchell
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Vnwillingly to schoole. And then the Lover,
Sighing like Furnace, with a wofull ballad
Made to his Mistresse eye-brow. Then a Soldier,
Full of strange oathes, and bearded like the Pard,
Ielous in honor, sodaine, and quicke in quarrell,
Seeking the bubble Reputation
Even in the Canons mouth: And then, the Iustice
In faire round belly, with good Capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formall cut,
Full of wise sawes, and moderne instances,
And so he plays his part. The sixt age shifts
Into the leane and slipper'd Pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side,
His youthfull hofe well sav'd, a world too wide,
For his shrunke shanke, and his bigge manly voyce,
Turning againe toward childish treble pypes,
And whistles in his sound. Last Scene of all,
That ends this strange eventfull historie,
Is second childishnesse, and meere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

Enter Orlando with Adam.

Du. Sen. Welcome: set downe your venerable burthen, and let him feed.

Orl. I thanke you most for him.

Ad. So had you neede,
I scarce can speake to thanke you for my selfe.

Du. Sen. Welcome, fall too: I will not trouble you,
As yet to question you about your fortunes:
Give us some musicke, and good Cozen, sing.

Song.

*Blow, blow, thou winter winds,
Thou art not so unkinde, as mans ingratitude
Thy tooth is not so keene, because thou art not seene, although thy breath be rude.*

*Heigh ho, sing heigh ho, vnto the greene holly,
Most friendship, is saying; most Loving, meere folly:
The heigh ho, the holly,
This Life is most iolly,*

*Freize, freize, thou bitter skie that dost not bight so nigh
as benefits forget:*

Though thou the waters warpe, thy sting is not so sharpe, as friend remembred not.

Heigh ho, sing &c.

Duke Sen. If that you were the good Sir Rowlands son,
As you have whisper'd faithfully you were,
And as mine eye doth his effigies witness,
Most truely limin'd, and living in your face,
Be truely welcome hither: I am the Duke
That lov'd your Father: the rescuer of your fortune,
Go to my Cave, and tell me. Good old man,
Thou art right welcome, as thy Master is:
Support him by the arme: give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Lords, & Oliver.

Du. Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made mercie,
I should not see an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present: but looke to it,
Finde out thy brother wheresoere he is,
Seeke him with Candle: bring him dead, or living
Within this tweluemcneth, or turne thou no more
To seeke a living in our Territorie.
Thy Lands and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brothers mouth,
Of what we thinke against thee.

Ol. Oh that your Highnesse knew my heart in this:
I never lov'd my brother in my life.

Duke. More villaine thou. Well, push him out of dores
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and Lands:
Do this expediently, and turne him going. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Hang there my verse, in witness of my love,
And thou thrice crowned Queene of night survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale spheare above
Thy Huntresse name, that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind, these Trees shall be my Bookes,
And in their barkes my thoughts lie charracter,
That every eye, which in this Forrest lookes,
Shall see thy vertue witness every where
Run, run Orlando, carve on every Tree,
The faire, the chaste, and unexpressive she. Exit.

Enter Corin & Clowne.

Co. And how like you this shepherds life Mr. Touchstone?
Cl.

Clow. Truly Shepheard, in respect of it selfe, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherds life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well: but in respect that it is private, it is a very vild life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well: but in respect it is not in the Court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life (looke you) it fits my humor well: but as there is no more plentie in it, it goes much against my stomacke. Has't any Philosophie in thee shepheard?

Cor. No more, but that I know the more one sickens, the worse at ease he is: and that hee that wants mony, meanes, and content, is without three good friends. That the propertie of raine is to wet, and fire to burne: That good pasture makes fat sheepe: and that a great cause of the night, is lacke of the Sunne: That hee that hath learned no wit by Nature, nor Art, may complaine of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Clow. Such a one is a naturall Philosopher: Was't ever in Court, Shepheard?

Cor. No truly.

Clow. Then thou art damn'd.

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Clow. Truly thou art damn'd; like an ill roasted Egge, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at Court? your reason.

Clow. Why, if thou never was't at Court, thou never saw'st good manners: if thou never saw'st good manners, then thy manners must be wicked, and wickednes is sin, and sinne is damnation: Thou art in a parlous state shepheard.

Cor. Not a whit Touchstone, those that are good maners at the Court, are as ridiculous in the Countrey, as the behaviour of the Countrey is most mockable at the Court. You told me, you salute not at the Court, but you kisse your hands; that courtesie would be uncleanly if Courtiers were shepherds.

Clow. Instance, briefly: come, instance.

Cor. Why we are still handling our Ewes, and their Fels you know are greasie.

Clow. Why doe not your Courtiers hands sweate? and is not the grease of Mutton, as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow: A better instance I say: Come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Clow. Your lips will feele them the sooner. Shallow again: a more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarr'd over, with the surgery of our sheepe: and would you have us kisse Tarre? The Countiers hands are perfum'd with Civet.

Clow. Most shallow man: Thou wormes meate in respect of a good peece of flesh indeed: learne of the wife and perpend: Civet is of a baser birth then Tarre, the verie uncleanly fluxe of a Cat. Mend the instance Shepheard.

Cor. You have too Courtly a wit, for me, Ile rest.

Clow. Wilt thou rest damn'd? God helpe thee shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw.

Cor. Sir, I am a true Labourer, I earne that I eate: get that I weare; owe no man hate, envie no mans happinesse: glad of other mens good, content with my harme: and the greatest of my pride, is to see my Ewes graze, and my Lambes sucke.

Clow. That is another simple firne in you, to bring the Ewes and the Rammes together, and to offer to get your living, by the copulation of Cattle, to be bawd to a Belweather, and to betray a shee-Lambe of a twelvemonth to a crooked-pated olde Cuckoldly Ramme, out of all reasonable match. If thou bee't not damn'd for this, the divell himselfe will have no shepherds, I cannot see else how thou should'st scape.

Cor. Heere comes young M. Ganimed, my new Mistress Brother.

Enter Rosalinde.

Ros. From the east to westerne Inde, no Jewell is like Rosalinde,
His worth being maim'd on the wnde,
through all th' World beares Rosalinde.
All the pictures fairest Linde,
are but blacke to Rosalinde:
Let no face be kept in minde,
but the faire of Rosalinde.

Clow. Ile rime you so, eight yeares together; dinners, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted: it is the right Butter-womens ranke to Market.

Ros. Our Foole.

Clow. For a taste.

If a Hart doe lacke a Hinde.
Let him seeke out Rosalinde:
If the Cat will after kinde,
so be sure will Rosalinde:
Wintred garments must be kinde,
so must slender Rosalinde:
They that reap must sheafe and binde,
then to cart with Rosalinde.
Sweetest nut, hath sowrest rinde,
such a nut is Rosalinde.
He that sweetest rose will finde, must finde Loves prick, & Rosalinde.

This is the very false gallop of Verses, why doe you infect your selfe with them?

Ros. Peace you dull foole, I found them on a tree.

Clow. Truly the tree yeelds bad fruite.

Ros. Ile graffe it with you, and then I shall graffe it with a Medler: then it will be the earliest fruit i'th country: for you'l be rotten ere you be halfe ripe, and that's the right vertue of the Medler.

Clow. You have said: but whether wisely or no, let the Forrest judge.

Enter Celia with a writing.

Ros. Peace, here comes my sifter reading, stand aside.

Cel. Why should this Desert bee, for it is unpeopled? Noe:
Tongues Ile hang on every tree,
that shall civill sayings see.
Some, how briefe the Life of man runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span, buckles in his summe of age.
Some of violat'd vowes,
twixt the soules of friend, and friend,
But upon the fairest bowes,
or at every sentence end;
Will I Rosalinda write, teaching all that roade, to know
The quintessence of every sprite, heaven would in little show.
Therefore heaven Nature chang'd, that one body should be fill'd
With all Graces wide enlarg'd, nature presently disill'd

*Helens cheeks, but not his heart,
Cleopatra's Majestie :
Attalanta's better part,
sad Lucrecia's Modestie.
Thus Rosalinde of many parts,
by Heavenly Synode was devis'd,
Of manie faces, eyes, and hearts,
to have the touches dearest pris'd.
Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
and I to live and die her slave.*

Ref. O most gentle Jupiter, what tedious hemilie of Love have you wearied your parishioners withall, and never cride, have your parishioners withall, and never cri'de, have patience good people.

Cel. How now ! backe friends: Shepheard go off a little: go with him firrah.

Clo. Come shepheard, let us make an honourable retreat, though not with bagge and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage. Exit.

Cel. Didst thou heare these verses ?

Ref. O yes, I heard them all, and more too, for some of them had in them more feete then the Verses would beare.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might beare the Verses.

Ref. I, but the feet were lame, and could not beare themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou heare without wondring, how thy name should be hang'd and carved upon these trees ?

Ref. I was seaven of the nine dayes out of wonder, before you came : for looke heere what I found on a Palme tree ; I was never so berim'd since Pythagoras time that I was an Irish Rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Tro you, who hath done this ?

Ref. Is it a man ?

Cel. And a chaine that you once wore, about his neck : change you colour ?

Ref. I pre'thee who ?

Cel. O Lord, Lord, it is a hard matter for friends to meete ; but Mountaines may be remoov'd with Earthquakes, and so encounter.

Ref. Nay, but who is it ?

Cel. Is it possible ?

Ref. Nay, I pre'thee now, with most petitionary vehemence, till me who it is.

Cel. O wonderfull, wonderfull, and most wonderfull wonderfull, and yet againe wonderfull, and after that out of all hooping.

Ref. Good my complection, dost thou thinke though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doublet and a hose in my disposition ? One inch of delay more, is a South-sea of discoverie. I pre'thee tell me, who is it quickly, and speake apace : I would thou couldst stammer, that thou might'st powre this conceal'd man out of thy mouth, as Wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle : either too much at once, or none at all. I pre'thee take the Corke out of thy mouth, that I may drinke thy tydings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.

Ref. Is he of Gods making ? What manner of man ? Is his head worth a hat ? Or his chin worth a beard ?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Ref. Why God will send more, if the man will bee thankfull ; let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando, that tript up the Wrastlers heeles, and your heart, both in an instant.

Ref. Nay, but the divell take mocking : speak : sadde brow, and true maid :

Cel. I'faith (Coz) tis he,

Ref. Orlando ?

Cel. Orlando.

Ref. Alas the day, what shall I do with my doublet and hose ? What did he when thou saw'st him ? What sayde he ? How look'd he ? Wherein went he ? What makes he heere ? Did he aske for me ? Where remains he ? How parted he with thee ? And when shalt thou see him againe ? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You must borrow me Gargantuas mouth first : 'tis a Word too great for any mouth of this Ages size, to say I and no, to these particulars, is more then to answer in a Catechisme.

Ref. But doth he know that I am in this Forrest, and in mans apparrell ? Looks he as freshly, as he did the day he Wraisted ?

Cel. It is as easie to count Atomies as to resolve the propositions of a Lover : but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with good observance. I found him under a tree like a drop'd Acorne.

Ref. It may well be call'd Ioves tree, when it droppes forth such fruit.

Cel. Give me audience, good Madam.

Ref. Proceed.

Cel. There lay hee stretch'd along like a Wounded knight.

Ref. Though it be pittie to see such a sight ; it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry holla, to the tongue, I prethee : it curvettes unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a Hunter.

Ref. O ominous, he comes to kill my Hart.

Cel. I would sing my song without a burthen, thou bring'st me out of tune.

Ref. Do you not know I am a woman, when I thinke, I must speake : sweet, say on.

Enter Orlando & Jaques.

Cel. You bring me ont. Soft, comes he not neere ?

Ref. 'Tis he, sinke by, and note him.

Iaq. I thanke you for your companie, but good faith I had as lief have beene my selfe alone.

Orl. And so had I : but yet for fashion sake I thanke you too, for your societie.

Iaq. God bny you, let's meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do desire we may be better strangers.

Iaq. I pray you marre no more trees with Writing Love-songs in their barks.

Orl. I pray you marre no more of my verses with reading them ill-favouredly.

Iaq. Rosalinde is your loves name ? Orl. Yes, Iust.

Iaq. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleasing you when she was christen'd.

Iaq. What stature is she of ?

Orl. Iust as high as my heart.

Iaq. You are full of prety answers : have you not bin acquainted with goldsmiths wives, & cond the out of rings.

Orl. Not so : but I answer you right painted cloath, from whence you have studied you questions.

Iaq. You have a nimble wit ; I thinke 'twas made of Attalanta's heeles. Will you sitte downe with me, and wee two will raile against our Mistris the world, and all our miserie.

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world but my selfe against against whom I know no faults.

Iaq. The worst fault you have, is to be in love.

Orl. 'Tis a fault I will not change, for your best vertue: I am wearie of you.

Iaq. By my troth, I was seeking for a Foole, when I found you.

Orl. He is drown'd in the brooke, looke but in, and you shall see him.

Iaq. There I shall see mine owne figure.

Orl. Which I take to be either a foole, or a Cipher.

Iaq. He tarrie no longer with you, farewell good signior Love.

Orl. I am glad of your departure: Adieu good Monsieur Melanchollie.

Ref. I wil speake to him like a sawcie Lackie, and under that habit play the knaue with him: do you heare For-

Orl. Verie wel, what would you? (rester.

Ref. I pray you, what i't a clocke?

Orl. You should aske me what time o'day: ther's no clocke in the Forrest.

Ref. Then there is no true Lover in the Forrest, else sighing every minute, and groaning every houre would detect the lazie foote of time, as wel as a clocke.

Orl. And why not the swift foote of time? Had not that bin as proper?

Ref. By no meanes sir; Time travels in divers paces, with diverse persons: He tell you who Time ambles withall, who Time trots withall, who time gallops withall, and who he stands still withall.

Orl. I prethee, whom doth he trot withall?

Ref. Marry he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemniz'd: if the interim be but a fennight, Times pace is so hard, that it seemes the length of seven yeare.

Orl. Who ambles time withall?

Ref. With a Priest that lackes Latine, and a rich man that hath not the Gownt: for the one sleepe easily because he cannot study, and the other lives merrily, because he feelles no paine: the one lacking the burthen of leane and wastefull Learning; the other knowing no burthen of hevie tedious penurie. These time ambles withall.

Orl. Whom doth he gallop withall?

Ref. With a theefe to the gallows: for though hee goe as softly as foot can fall, he thinkes himselfe too soone there:

Orl. Whom staies it still withall?

Ref. With Lawiers in the vacation: for they sleepe betweene Terme and Terme, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Orl. Where dwell you pretty youth?

Ref. With this Shepheardesse my sister: heere in the skirts of the Forrest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Ref. As the Connie that you see dwell where shee is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is something finer, than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ref. I have bin told so of many: but indeed, an old religious Vnckle of mine taught me to speake, who was in his youth an inland man, one that knew Courtship too well: for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many Lecturs against it, and I thanke God, I am not a Woman to be touch'd with so many giddie offences as he hath generally tax'd their whole sex withall,

Orl. Can you remember any of the principall evils, that he laid to the charge of women?

Ref. There were none principall, they were all like one another, as halfe pence are, every one fault seeming monstrous, till his fellow-fault came to match it.

Orl. I prethee recount some of them.

Ref. No: I will not cast away my physick, but on those that are sicke. There is a man haunts the Forrest, that abuses our yong plants with carving Rosalind on their borkes; hangs Odes upon Hawthornes, and Elegies on brambles; all (forsooth) deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that Fancie-monger, I would give him some good counsell, for he seemes to have the Quotidian of Love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is so Love-shak'd, I pray you tell me your remedie.

Ref. There is none of my Vnckles markes upon you: he taught me how to know a man in love: in which cage of rushes, I am sure you are not prisoner.

Orl. What were his markes?

Ref. A leane cheek, which you have not: a blew eye and sunken, which you have not: an unquestionable spirit, which you have not: a beard neglected, which you have not: (but I pardon you for that, for simply your having no beard, is a younger brothers revennew) then your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbutton'd, your shoe untide, and every thing about you, demonstrating a carelesse desolation: but you are no such man; you are rather point device in your accoutrements, as loving your selfe, than seeming the Lover of any other. (I Love.

Orl. Faire youth, I would I could make thee beleeve

Ref. Me beleeve it? You may asloone make her that you Love beleeve it, which I warrant she is apter to do, than to confesse she do's: that is one of the points, in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the Trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. I sweare to thee youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ref. But are you so much in love, as your rimes speake?

Orl. Neither rime nor reason can expresse how much.

Ref. Love is meerely a madnesse, and I tell you, deserves as well a darke house, and a whip, as madmen do: and the reason why they are not so punish'd and cured, is that the Lunacie is so ordinarie, that the whippers are in love too: yet I professe curing it by counsell.

Orl. Did you ever cure any so?

Ref. Yes one, and in this manner. He was to imagine me his Loue, his Mistris: and I set him every day to wooe me. At which time would I, being but a moonish youth, greeve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking, proud, fantastick, apish, shallow, inconstant, full of teares, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly any thing, as boyes and women are for the most part, cattle of this colour: would now like him, now loath him: then entertaine him, then forswear him: now weepe for him, then spit at him; that I drave my Suter from his mad humor of love, to a living humor of madnes, which was to forswear the full streame of the world, and to live in a nooke meerly Monastick: and thus I cur'd him, and this way will I take upon me to wash your Liver as cleare as a found sheeps heart, that there shal not be one spot of loue in't.

Orl. I would not be cured, yonth.

Ref. I would cure you, if you would. but call me Rosalind, and come every day to my Coar, and wooe me.

Orlan. Now by the faith of my love, I will; Tell mee where it is.

Rof. Go with me to it, and Ile shew it you: and by the way, you shall tell me, where in the Forrest you live: Will you goe?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Rof. Nay, you must call me Rosalind: Come sister will you goe?
Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clowne, Audrey, & Iaques.

Clow. Come apace good Audrey, I will fetch up your Goates, Audrey: and how Audrey am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

And. Your features, Lord warrant us: what features?

Clow. I am heere with thee, and thy Goates, as the most capricious Poet honest Ovid was among the Gothes.

Iaq. O knowledge ill inhabited, worse then Iove in a thatch'd house.

Clow. When a mans verses cannot be understood, nor a mans good wit seconded with the forward childe, understanding: it strikes a man more dead then a great reckoning in a little roome: truly, I would the Gods had made thee poetically.

And. I do not know what Poetically is: is it honest in deed and word: is it a true thing?

Clow. No truly: for the truest poetrie is the most faining, and Lovers are given to Poetrie: and what they sweare in Poetrie, may be said as Lovers, they do feigne.

And. Do you wish then that the Gods had made mee Poetically?

Clow. I do truly: for thou swear'st to me thou art honest: Now if thou wert a Poet, I might have some hope thou didst feigne.

And. Would you not have me honest?

Clow. No truly, unless thou wert hard favour'd: for honestie coupled to beautie, is to have Honie a sawce to Sugar.

Iaq. A materiall foole.

And. Well, I am not faire, and therefore I pray the Gods make me honest.

Clow. Truly, and to cast away honestie upon a foule slut, were to put good meate into an uncleane dish.

And. I am not a slut, though I thanke the Goddess I am foule.

Clow. Well, praised be the Gods, for thy foulness; fluttishness may come hereafter. But be it, as it may bee, I will marrie thee: and to that end, I have beene with Sir Oliver Mar-text, the Vicar of the next village, who hath promis'd to meete me in this place of the Forrest, and to couple us.

Iaq. I would faine see this meeting.

And. Well, the Gods give us joy.

Clow. Amen. A man may if he weare of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt: for heere wee have no Temple but the wood, no assembly but horne-beasts. But what though? Courage. As hornes are odious, they are necessary. It is said, many a man knowes no end of his goods; right: Many a man has good Hornes, and knowes no end of them. Well, that is the dowrie of his wife, 'tis none of his owne getting; hornes, even so poore men alone:

No, no, the noblest Deere hath them as huge as the Rascal: Is the single man therefore blessed? No, as a wall'd Towne is more worthier then a village, so is the forehead of a married man, more honourable then the bare brow of a Batcheller: and by how much defence is better then no skill, by so much is a horne more precious then to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Heere comes Sir Oliver: Sir Oliver Mar-text you are well met. Will you dispatch us heere under this tree, or shall we goe with you to your Chappell?

Ol. Is there none here to give the woman?

Clow. I will not take her on guift of any man.

Ol. Truly she must bee given, or the marriage is not lawfull.

Iaq. Proceed, proceed: Ile give her.

Clow. Good even good M. what ye call: how doe you Sir, you are verie well met: godild you for your last companie, I am verie glad to see you, even a toy in hand heere Sir: Nay, pray be cover'd.

Iaq. Will you be married, Motley?

Clow. As the Oxe hath his bow sir, the horse his curb, and the Falkon her bells, so man hath his desires, and as Pigeons bill, so wedlocke would be nibbling.

Iaq. And will you (being a man of your breeding) bee married under a bush like a begger? Get you to Church, and have a good Priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but joyne you together, as they joyne Wainscot, then one of you will prove a shrunke pannel, and like greene timber, warpe, warpe.

Clow. I am not in the minde, but I were better to be married of him then of another, for he is not like to marrie me well: and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter, to leave my wife.

Iaq. Goe thou with me.

And let me counsell thee.

Clow. Come sweete Audrey,

We must be married, or we must live in baudrey: Farewell good M. Oliver: Not O sweet Oliver, O brave Oliver leave me not behind thee: But winde away, be gone I say, I will not to wedding with thee.

Ol. 'Tis no matter; Ne're a fantasticall knave of them all shall flout me out of my calling.
Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosalind & Celis.

Rof. Never talke to me, I will weepe.

Cel. Do I prethee, but yet haue the grace to consider, that teares do not become a man.

Rof. But have I not cause to weepe?

Cel. As good cause as one would desire, Therefore weepe.

Rof. His very haire

Is of the dissembling colour.

Cel. Something browner then Iudasses: Marrie his kisses are Iudasses owne children.

Rof. I'faith his haire is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour:

Your Chessnut was ever the onely colour:

Rof. And his kissing is as full of sanctitie, As the touch of holy bread.

Cel.

Cel. Hee hath bought a paire of chaste lips of Diana: a Nun of winters sisterhood kisses not more religiouslie, the very yce of chastitie is in them.

Ros. But wy did he sweare he would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay certainly, there is no truth in him.

Ros. Doe you thinke so?

Cel. Yes, I thinke he is not a picke purse, nor a horse-stealer, but for his verity in love, I do thinke him as concave as a covered goblet, or a Worme-eaten nut.

Ros. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in, but I thinke he is not in.

Ros. You have heard him sweare downeright he was.

Cel. Was, is not is: besides, the oath of a Lover is no stronger then the word of a Tapster, they are both the confirmers of false reckonings, he attends here in the forest on the Duke your father.

Ros. I met the Duke yesterday, and had much question with him: he askt me of what parentage I was; I told him of as good as he, so he laugh'd and let mee goe. But what talke we of Fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Cel. O that's a brave man, he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oathes, and breakes them bravely, quite trawers athwart the heart of his lover, as a puiſny Tilter, that spurres his horse but on one side, breakes his staffe like a noble goose; but all's brave that youth mounts, and folly guides: who comes heere?

Enter Corin.

Corin. Mistresse and Master, you have oft enquired After the Shepheard that complain'd of love, Whom you saw sitting by me on the Turfe, Praying the proud disdainfull Shepherdesse That was his Mistresse.

Cel. Well: and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly plaid Betweene the pale complexion of true Love, And the red glow of scorne and prowd disdain, Goe hence a little and I shall conduct you If you will marke it.

Ros. O come, let us remove, The sight of Lovers feedeth those in love: Bring us to this sight, and you shall say Ile prove a busie actor in their play.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Sil. Sweet Phebe doe not scorne me, do not Phebe Say that you love me not, but say not so In bitterness; the common executioner Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck, But first begs pardon: will you sterner be Then he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner, I flie thee, for I would not injure thee: Thou tellst me there is murder in mine eye, 'Tis pretty sure, and very probable,

That eyes that are the frailest, and softest things, Who shut their coward gates on atomies, Should be called tyrants, butchers, murderers. Now I do frowne on thee with all my heart, And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee: Now counterfeit to swoound, why now fall downe, Or if thou canst not, oh for shame, for shame, Lye not, to say mine eyes are murderers: Now shew the wound mine eye hath made in thee, Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains Some scarre of it: Leane but upon a rush, The Cicatrice and capable impresseure Thy Palme some moment keepes: but now mine eyes Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not, Nor I am sure there is no force in eyes That can doe hurt.

Sil. O deere Phebe,

If ever (as that ever may be neere)

You met in some fresh cheek the power of fancie, Then shall you know the wounds invisible That Loves keene arrowes make.

Phe. But till that time

Come not thou neere me: and when that time comes, Afflict me with thy mockes, pittie me not, As till that time I shall not pittie thee.

Ros. And why I pray you? who might bee your mother That you insult, exult, and all at once Over the wretched? what though you have no beauty As by my faith, I see no more in you

Then without Candle may goe darke to bed:

Must you be therefore proud and pittilesse?

Why what meanes this? why do you looke on me?

I see no more in you then in the ordinarie

Of natures sale-work: 'ods my little life,

I thinke she meanes to tangle mine eyes too:

No faith proud mistresse, hope not after it,

'Tis not your inkie browes, your blacke silke haire,

Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of creame

That can entame my spirits to your worship:

You foolish Shepheard, wherefore do you follow her

Like foggy South, puffing with winde and raine,

You are a thousand times a properer man

Then she a woman. 'Tis such fooles as you

That makes the world full of ill-favour'd children:

'Tis not her glasse, but you that flatters her,

And out of you she sees her selfe more proper

Then any of her lineaments can shew her:

But Mistris, know your selfe, downe on your knees

And thanke heaven, fasting for a good mans love;

For I must tell you friendly in your care,

Sell when you can, you are not for all markets:

Cry the man mercie, love him, take his offer,

Foule is most foule, being foule to be a scoffer.

So take her to thee Shepheard, fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a yeere together, I had rather heare you chide, then this man wooe.

Ros. Hees false in love with your foulness, & shee'll

Fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast

As she answers thee with frowning lookes, ile saunce

Her with bitter words: why looke you so upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I beare you.

Ros. I pray you do not fall in love with me,

For I am false then vowes made in wine:

Besides, I like you not: if you will know my house,

'Tis at the tuft of Olives, here hard by:

Will you goe Sister? Shepheard ply her hard:

Come

Come Sister : Shepherdesse, looke on him better
And be not proud, though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as he.

Come, to our flocke,

Exit.

Phe. Deed Shepheard, now I find thy saw of might,
Who ever lov'd, that lov'd not at first sight?

Sil. Sweet Phebe.

Phe. Hah : what sayst thou Silvius?

Sil. Sweet Phebe pittie me.

Phe. Why I am sorry for thee gentle Silvius.

Sil. Where ever sorrow is, reliefe would be :
If you doe sorrow at my griefe in love ,
By giving love your sorrow, and my griefe
Were both extermin'd.

Phe. Thou hast my love, is not that neighborly?

Sil. I would have you.

Phe. Why that were covetousnesse :
Silvius; the time was, that I hated thee;
And yet it is not, that I beare thee love,
But since that thou canst talke of love so well,
Thy company, which earst was irksome to me
I will endure; and Ile employ thee too :
But doe not looke for further recompence
Then thine owne gladnesse, that thou art employd.

Sil. So holy, and so perfect is my love,
And in such a poverty of grace,
That I shall thinke it a most plentious crop
To gleane the broken eares after the man
That the maine harvest reapes: loofe now and then
A scattered smile, and that Ile live upon. (while?)

Phe. Knowst thou the youth that spoketo mee yere-

Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft,
And he hath bought the Cottage and the bounds
That the old Carlot once was Master of.

Phe. Thinke not I love him, though I a ske for him,
'Tis but a peevishe boy, yet hee talkes well,
But what care I for words? yet words do well
When he that speakes them pleases those that heare :
It is a pretty youth, not very pretty,
But sure hee's proud, and yet his pride becomes him;
Hee'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is his complexion : and faster then his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heale it up :
He is not very tall, yet for his yeares hee's tall:
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well :
There was a pretty rednesse in his lip,
A little ripen, and more lustie red
Then that mixt in his cheeke : 'twas just the difference
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled Damaske.
There be some women Silvius, had they markt him
In parcells as I did, would have gone neere
To fall in love with him : but for my part
I love him not, nor hate him not : and yet
I have more cause to hate him then to love him,
For what had he to doe to chide at me ?
He said mine eyes were blacke and my haire blacke,
And now I am remembered, scorn'd at me :
I marvel why I answer'd not againe,
But that's all one : omittance is no quittance :
Ile write to him a very tanting Letter,
And thou shalt beare it, wilt thou Silvius ?

Sil. Phebe, with all my heart.

Phe. Ile write it strait :

The matter's in my head, and in my heart,
I will be bitter with him, and passing short;
Goe with me Silvius.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Rosalind, and Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I prethee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say you are a melancholly fellow.

Jaq. I am so : I doe love it better then laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either, are abhominable fellowes, and betray themselves to every moderne censure, worse then drunkards.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why then 'tis good to be a poste.

Jaq. I have neither the Schollers melancholy, which is emulation : nor the Musicians, which is fantastickall;
nor the Courtiers, which is proud : nor the Souldiers, which is ambitious: nor the Lawiers, which is politicke;
nor the Ladies, which is nice : nor the Lovers, which is all these : but it is a melancholy of mine owne, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the fundrie contemplation of my travells, in which my often rumination, wraps me in a most humorous sadnesse.

Ros. A Traveller : by my faith you have great reason to be sad : I feare you have sold your owne Lands, to see other mens; then to have seene much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poore hands.

Jaq. Yes, I have gain'd my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad: I had rather have a foole to make me merrie, then experience to make me sad, and to travaile for it too.

Orl. Good day, and happinesse, deere Rosalind.

Orl. Nay then God buy you, and you talke in blanke verse. Exit.

Ros. Farewell Mounsier Traveller: looke you lispe, and weare strange suites; disable all the benefits of your own Countrie: be out of love with your nativity, & almost chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will scarce thinke you have swam in a Gundello. Why how now Orlando, where have you bin all this while? you a lover? and you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My faire Rosalind, I come within an houre of my promise.

Ros. Breake an houres promise in love? he that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and breake but a part of the thousand part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapt him eith' shoulder, but Ile warrant him heart hole.

Orl. Pardon me deere Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, and you be so tardy, come no more in my sight, I had as leife be woo'd of a Snaille.

Orl. Of a Snaille?

Ros. I, of a Saale : for though he comes slowly, hee carries his house on his head; a better joynture I thinke then you make a woman : besides, hee brings his destinie
with him.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why hornes: which such as you are faine to be beholding to your wives for: but he come armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Vertue

Orl. Vertue is no horne-maker : and my Rosalind is vertuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Cel. It pleases him to call you so : but he hath a Rosalind of a better leere then you.

Ros. Come, wooe me, wooe mee : for now I am in a holy-day humor, and like enough to consent : What would you say to me now, and I were your very, verie Rosalind?

Orl. I would kisse before I spoke:

Orl. Nay, you were better speake first, and when you were gravel'd, for lacke of matter, you might take occasion to kisse : verie good Orators when they are out, they will spit, and for lovers, lacking (God warne us) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kisse.

Orl. How if the kisse be denide?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreatie, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could bee out, being before his beloved Mistris?

Ros. Marrie that should you if I were your Mistris, or I should thinke my honestie ranker then my wit.

Orl. What, of my suite?

Ros. Not out of your apparrell, and yet out of your suite.

Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person, I say I will not have you.

Orl. Then in mine owne person, I doe.

Ros. No faith, die by Attorney : the poore world is almost six thousand yeeres old, and in all this time there was not any man dyed in his owne person (videlicet) in a love cause : Troilus had his braine dash'd out with a Grecian club, yet hee did what hee could to die before, and he is one of the patternes of love. Leander, he would have liv'd many a faire yeere though Hero had turn'd Nun; if it had not bene for a hot Midlommer-night, for (good youth) hee went but forth to wash in the Hellespont, and being taken with the crampe, was drown'd, and the foolish Chroniclers of that age, found it was Hero of Sestos. But these are all lies, men have dyed from time to time, and wormes have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind, for I protest her frowne might kil me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a flie: but come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more comming-on disposition: and aske me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me Rosalind.

Ros. Yes faith will I, Fridayes and Saterdayes, and all.

Orl. And wilt thou have me?

Ros. I, and twentie such.

Orl. What sayest thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so.

Rosalind. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing : Come sifter, you shall bee the Priest, and marrie us : give me your hand Orlando : What doe you say sifter?

Orl. Pray thee marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin, will you Orlando.

Cel. Goe too : will you Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Orl. I will.

Ros. I, but when?

Orl. Why now, as fast as she can marrie us.

Ros. Then you must say, I take thee Rosalind for wife.

Orl. I take thee Rosalind for wife.

Ros. I might aske you for your Commission, But I doe take thee Orlando for my husband : there's a girle goes before the Priest, and certainly a Womans thought runnes before her actions.

Orl. So do all thoughts, they are wing'd.

Ros. Now tell me how long you would have her, after you have posselt her?

Orl. For ever, and a day.

Ros. Say a day, without the ever : No, no Orlando, men are Aprill when they wooe, December when they wed : Maides are May when they are maides, but the sky changes when they are wives : I will be more jealous of thee, then a Barbary cocke-pidgeon over his hen, more clamorous then a Parrat against raine, more new-fangled then an ape, more giddy in my desires, then a monkey : I will weepe for nothing, like Diana in the Fountaine, and I will doe that when you are dispos'd to bee merry : I will laugh like a Hyen, and that when thou art inclin'd to sleepe.

Orl. But will my Rosalind doe so?

Ros. By my life, she will doe as I doe.

Orl. O but she is wife.

Ros. Or else she could not have the wit to doe this : the wiser, the waywarder : make the doores upon a womans wit, and it will out at the casement : shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole : stop that, 'twill flie with the smoake out at the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say, wit whither wilt?

Ros. Nay, you might keepe that checke for it, till you met your wives wit going to your neighbours bed,

Orl. And what wit could wit have, to excuse that?

Ros. Marry to say, she came to seeke you there : you shall never take her without her answer, unlesse you take her without her tongue : O that woman that cannot make her fault her husbands occasion, let her never nurse her childe her selfe, for she will breed it like a foole.

Orl. For these two houres Rosalind I will leave thee.

Ros. Alas, deere love, I cannot lacke thee two houres.

Orl. I must attend the Duke at dinner, by two a clocke I will be with thee againe.

Ros. I, goe your wayes, goe your wayes : I knew what you would prove, my freinds told me as much, and I thought no lesse : that flattering tongue of yours wonne mee : 'tis but one call away, and so come death : two o' clocke is your howre.

Orl. I sweet Rosalind.

Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend mee, and by all pretty oathes that are not dangerous, if you breake one jot of your promise, or come one minute behinde your howre, I will thinke you the most patheticall breake-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may bee chosen out of the grosse band of the unfaithfull : therefore beware my censurè, and keepe your promise.

Orl. With no lesse religion, then if thou wert indeed my Rosalind : so adieu.

Ros. Well, Time is the olde Justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try : adieu.

Exit.

Cel. You have simply misus'd our sexe in your love-prate :

prate: we must have your doublet and hose pluckt over your head, and shew the world what the bird hath done to her owne nest.

Ros. O coz, coz, coz: my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how many fathoms deepe I am in love: but it cannot be founded: my affection hath an unknowne bottome, like the Bay of Portugall.

Cel. Or rather bottomlesse; that as fast as you poure affection in, it runs out.

Ros. No, that same wicked Bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceiv'd of spleene, and borne of madnesse, that blinde rascally boy, that abuses every ones eyes, because his owne are out, let him be judge, how deepe I am in love: ile tell thee Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orland: Ile goe finde a shaddow, and sigh till he come.

Cel. And Ile sleepe.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Iaques and Lords, Forresters.

Iaq. Which is he that killed the Deare?

Lord. Sir, it was I.

Iaq. Let's present him to the Duke like a Romane Conquerour, and it would do well to set the Deares hornes upon his head, for a branch of victorie; have you no song Forrester for this purpose?

Lord. Yes Sir.

Iaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noyse enough.

Musicke, Song.

*What shall he have that kild the Deare?
His Leather skin, and hornes to weare:
Then sing him home, the rest shall beare this burthen;
Take thou no scorne to weare the borne,
It was a crest ere thou wast borne,
Thy fathers father wore it,
And thy father bore it,
The borne, the borne, the lusty borne,
Is not a thing to laugh to scorne.*

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. How say you now, is it not past two a clocke? And heere much Orlando.

Cel. I warrant you with pure love, & troubled braine.

Enter Silvius.

He hath tane his bow and arrowes, and is gone forth To sleepe: looke who comes here.

Sil. My errand is to you, faire youth, My gentle Phoebe, bid me give you this: I knew not the contents, but as I guesse By the sterne brow, and waspish action Which she did use, as she was writing of it, It beares an angry tenure; pardon me, I am but as a guiltlesse messenger.

Ros. Patience her selfe would startle at this letter,

And play the swaggerer, beare this, beare all: Shee saies I am not faire, that I lacke manners, She calls me proud, & that she could not love me Were man as rare as Phenix: 'od's my will, Her love is not the Hare that I did hunt, Why writes she so to me? well Shepheard, well, This is a Letter of your owne device.

Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents, Phoebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a foole, And turn'd into the extremitie of love. I saw her hand, she has a leatherne hand, A freestone coloured hand: I verily did thinke That her old gloves were one, but twas her hands: She has a hufwifes hand, but that's no matter: I say she never did invent this letter, This is a mans invention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure it is hers.

Ros. Why, tis a boysterous and a cruell stile, A stile for challengers: why, she defies me, Like Turke to Christian: womens gentle braine Could not drop forth such giant rude invention, Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect Then in their countenance: will you heare the letter?

Sil. So please you, for I never heard it yet: Yet heard too much of Phebes crueltie.

Ros. She Phebes me: marke how the tyrant writes.

Read. Art thou god, in Shepheard turn'd?

That a maidens heart hath burn'd?

Can a woman rail thus.

Sil. Call you this railing?

Ros. Read. Why, thy godhead laid apart,

War'st thou with a womans heart?

Did you ever heare such railing?

Whiles the eye of man did wooe me,

That could do no vengeance to me.

Meaning me a beast.

If the scorne of your bright eye

Have power to raise such love in mine,

Alacke, in me, what strange effect

Would they worke in milde aspect?

Whiles you chid me, I did love,

How then might your prayers move?

He that brings this love to thee,

Little knows this love in me:

And by him scale up thy minde,

Whether that thy youth and kinde

Will the faithfull offer take

Of me, and all that I can make,

Or else by him my love denie,

And then Ile studie how to die.

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Alas poore Shepheard,

Ros. Doe you pittie him? No, he deserves no pittie: wilt thou love such a woman? what to make thee an instrument, and play false strings upon thee? not to be endur'd. Well, goe your way to her: (for I see Love hath made thee a tame snake) and say this to her: That if she love me, I charge her to love thee: if she will not, I will never have her, unlesse thou intreat for her: if you bee a true lover hence, and not a word; for here comes more company.

Exit. Sil.

Enter Oliver.

know)

Olv. Good morrow, faire ones: pray you, (if you Where in the Purlies of this Forrest, stands.

A sheep-coat, fenc'd about with Olive-trees.

Cel. West of this place, downe in the neighbor bottome
The ranke of Oziers, by the murmuring streame
Left on your right hand, bring you to the place :
But at this houre the house doth keepe it selfe,
There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description,
Such garments, and such yeeres : the boy is faire,
Of femall favour, and bestowes himselfe
Like a ripe sister : But the woman low
And browner then her brother : are not you
The owner of the house I did enquire for ?

Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say we are.

Orl. Orlando doth commend him to you both,
And to that youth he calls his Rosalind,
He sends this bloody napkin ; are you he ?

Ref. I am : what must we understand by this ?

Orl. Some of my shame, if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkercher was stain'd.

Cel. I pray you tell it.

Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to returne againe
Within an houre, and pacing through the Forrest,
Chewing the food off sweet and bitter fancie,
Loe what befell : he threw his eye aside,
And marke what object did present it selfe
Vnder an old Oake, whose bows were mofs'd with age,
And high rop bald with drie antiquitie :
A wretched ragged man, ore-growne with haire
Lay sleeping on his backe ; about his necke
A greene and guiled snake had wreath'd it selfe,
Who with her head, nimble in threates approach'd
The opening of his mouth ; but sodainly
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd it selfe,
And with indented glides, did slip away
Into a bush, under whose bushes shade
A Lyonnesse, with udders all drawne drie,
Lay cowering head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stirre ; for 'tis
The royall disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing, that doth seeme as dead :
This seene, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother :

Cel. O I have heard him speake of that same brother,
And he did render him the most unnaturall
That liv'd amongst men.

Oli. And well he might so doe,
For well I know he was unnaturall.

Ref. But to Orlando : did he leave him there
Food to the suck'd and hungry Lyonnesse ?

Oli. Twice did he turne his backe and purpos'd so :
But kindnesse, nobler ever then revenge,
And Nature stronger then his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the Lyonnesse :
Who quickly fell before him, in which hurtling
From miserable slumber I awaked.

Cel. Are you his brother ?

Ref. Was't you he rescu'd ?

Cel. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him ?

Oli. 'Twas I : but 'tis not I : I doe not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

Ref. But for the bloody napkin ?

Oli. By and by :

When from the first to last betwixt us two,
Teares our recountments had most kindly bath'd,
As how I came into that Desert place.
In briebe, he led me to the gentle Duke,
Who gave me fresh array, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brothers love.
Who led me instantly unto his Cave ;
There stript himselfe, and heere upon his arme
The Lyonnesse had torne some flesh away,
Which all this while had bled ; and now he fainted,
And cride in fainting upon Rosalinde.
Breefe, I recover'd him, bound up his wound,
And after some small space, being strong at heart,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am
To tell this storie, that you might excuse
His broken promise, and to give this napkin
Died in his blood, unto the Shepheard youth,
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

Cel. Why how now Ganimed, sweet Ganimed.

Oli. Many will swoon when they do looke on bloud.

Cel. There is more in it ; Cosen Ganimed.

Oli. Looke, he recovers.

Ref. I would I were at home.

Cel. Wee'll leade you thither :

I pray you will you take him by the arme.

Oli. Be of good cheere youth : you a man ?
You lacke a mans heart.

Ref. I doe so, I confesse it :

Ah, firra, a body would thinke this was well counterfeited, I pray you tell your brother how well I counterfeited ; beigh-ho.

Oli. This was not counterfeit, there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was passion of earnest.

Ref. Counterfeit, I assure you.

Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.

Ref. So I doe : but yfaith, I should have beene a woman by right.

Cel. Come, you looke paler and paler : pray you draw homewards : good sir, goe with us.

Oli. That will I : for I must beare answer backe
How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ref. I shall devise something : but I pray you commend my counterfeting to him : will you goe ?

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Clowne and Awdrie.

Cl. We shall finde a time Awdrie, patience gentle Awdrie.

Awd. Faith the Priest was good enough, for all the old gentlemen saying.

Cl. A most wicked Sir Oliver, Awdrie, a most vile Mar-tux. But Awdrie, there is a youth heere in the Forrest layes claime to you.

Awd. I, I know who 'tis : he hath no interest in me in the world : here comes the man you meane.

Enter William.

Cl. It is meat and drinke to me to see a Clowne, by my my troth, we that have good wits, have much to answer for: we shall be flouting: we cannot hold.

Will. Good eu'n Andrey.

And. God ye good eu'n William.

Will. And good eu'n to you Sir.

Clo. Good eu'n gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head: Nay prethee be couer'd. How olde are you Friend?

Will. Five and twenty Sir.

Clo. A ripe age: Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Clo. A faire name. Was't borne i'th Forrest heere?

Will. I sir, I thanke God.

Clo. Thanke God: A good answer:

Art rich?

Will. Faith sir, so, so.

Clo. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good: and yet it is not, it is but so, so:

Art thou wife?

Will. I sir, I have a prettie wit.

Clo. Why, thou sayest well. I do now remember a saying: The foole doth thinke he is wise, but the wiseman knowes himselfe to be a Foole. The Heathen Philosopher, when he had a desire to cate a Grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that Grapes were made to cate, and lippes to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do sir.

Clo. Give me your hand: Art thou Learned?

Will. No sir.

Col. Then learne this of me, To have, is to have. For it is a figure in Rhetoricke, that drinke being powr'd out of a cup into a glasse, by filling the one, doth empty the other. For all your Writers do consent, that ipse is hee: now you are not ipse for I am he.

Will. Which he sir?

Col. He sir, that must marrie this woman: Therefore you Clowne, abandon: which is in the vulgar, leave the societie: which in the boorish, is companie, of this female: which in the common, is woman: which together, is, abandon the society of this Female, or Clowne thou perishest: or to thy better understanding, dyest; or (to wit) I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deale in poyson with thee, or in bastinado, or in Steele: I will bandy with thee in faction, I will ore-run thee with policy: I will kill thee a hundred and fifty wayes, therefore tremble and depart.

And. Do good William.

Will. God rest you merry sir.

Exit.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Our Master and Mistresse seekes you: come away, away.

Clo. Trip Andry, trip Andry, I attend, I attend.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Orlando & Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible, that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that, but seeing, you should love her?

And loving woo? and wooing, she should graunt? And will you persever to enjoy her?

Ol. Neither call the giddinesse of it in question; the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sodaine wooing, nor sodaine consenting: but say with me, I love Aliena: say with her, that she loves me; consent with both, that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good: for my fathers house, and all the revennew, that was old Sir Rowlands, will I estate upon you, and heere live and die a Shepheard.

Enter Rosalind.

Orl. You have my consent.

Let your wedding be to morrow: thither will I Invite the Duke, and all's contented followers: Go you, and prepare Aliena; for looke you, Heere comes my Rosalinde.

Ref. God save you brother.

Ol. And you faire sister.

Ref. Oh my deere Orlando, how it greeves me to see thee weare thy heart in a scarfe.

Orl. It is my arme.

Ref. I thought thy heart had beene wounded with the clawes of a Lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a Lady.

Ref. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeyted to found, when he shew'd me your handkercher?

Orl. I, and greater wonders then that.

Ref. O, I know where you are: nay, tis true: there was never any thing so sodaine, but the sight of two Rammes, and Cesars Thrafonicall bragge, of, I came, saw, and overcame. For your brother, and my sister, no sooner met, but they look'd: no sooner look'd, but they lov'd; no sooner lov'd, but they sigh'd: no sooner sigh'd but they ask'd one another the reason: no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedie: and in these degrees, have they made a paire of staires to marriage, which they will climbe incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage; they are in the verie wrath of love, and they will together. Clubbes cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to morrow: and I will bid the Duke to the Nuptiall. But O, how bitter a thing it is, to looke into happines through another mans eyes: by so much the more shall I to morrow be at the height of heart heaviness, by how much I shall thinke my brother happie, in having what he wishes for.

Ref. Why then to morrow, I cannot serve your turne for Rosalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ref. I will wearie you then no longer with idle talking. Know of me then (for now I speake to some purpose) that I know you are a Gentleman of good conceit: I speake not this, that you should beare a good opinion of my knowledge: inso much (I say) I know you are: neither doe I labor for a greater esteeme then may in some little measure draw a beleeve from you, to doe your selfe good, and not to grace me. Beleeve then, if you please, that I can doe strange things: I have since I was three yeare old convert with a Magitian, most profound in his Art, and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalinde so neere the heart, as your gesture cries it out: when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marrie her. I know into what straights of fortune she is driven, and it is not impossible to me, if it appeare not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to morrow, humane as she is, and without any danger.

to

Orl. Speak'st thou in sober meanings?

Ref. By my life I do, which I tender dearly, though I say I am a Magitian: Therefore put you in your best array, bid your friends: for if you will be married to morrow, you shall: and to Rosalind if you will.

Enter Silvius & Phebe.

Looke, here comes a Lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phe. Youth, you have done me much vngentlenesse, To shew the letter that I writ to you.

Ref. I care not if I have: it is my studie To seeme despightfull and vngentle to you: You are there followed by a faithfull shepheard, Looke vpon him, love him: he worships you.

Phe. Good shepheard, tell this youth what 'tis to love

Sil. It is to be all made of sighes and teares, And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganimed.

Or. And I for Rosalind.

Ref. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service, And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganimed.

Or. And I for Rosalind.

Ref. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasie, All made of passion, and all made of wishes, All adoration, duty and obferbance, All humblenesse, all patience, and impatience, All purity, all trial, all obferbance: And so am I for Thebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganimed.

Or. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ref. And so am I for no woman.

Phe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Or. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Ref. Why do you speake too, Why blame you mee to love you.

Orl. To her, that is not heere, nor doth not heere.

Ref. Pray you no more of this, 'tis like the howling of Irish Wolves against the Moone: I will helpe you if I can: I would love you if I could: To morrow meet me altogether: I will marry you, if ever I marry Woman, and Ile be married to morrow: I will satisfie you, if ever I satisfi'd man, and you shall be married to morrow. I will content you, if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married to morrow: As you love Rosalind meet, as you love Phebe meet, and as I love no woman, Ile meet: so fare you well: I have left you commands

Sil. Ile not faile, if I live.

Phe. Nor I.

Or. Nor I.

Exeunt.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Cl. To morrow is the joyfull day Audrey, to morow will we be married.

Au. I do desire it with all my heart, and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world?

Heere come two of the banish'd Dukes Pages.

1. Pa. Wel met honest Gentleman.

Cl. By my troth well met: come, sit, sit, and a song.

2. Pa. We are for you, sit i'th middle.

1. Pa. Shal we clap into't roundly, without hauking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the onely prologues to a bad voice.

2. Pa. I faith, y' faith, and both in a tune like two gipfies on a horse.

Song.

*It was a Lover, and his lasse,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That a're the greene corne feild did passe,
In the spring time, the onely pretty rang time,
When Birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding.
Sweet Lovers love the spring,
And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, & a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crown'd with the prime.
In spring time, &c.*

*Betweene the acres of the Rie,
With a hey, and a ho, & a hey nonino:
These pretty Countryfolks would ly.
In spring time, &c.*

*This Carrol they began that houre,
With a hey and a ho, & a hey nonino,
How that a life was but a Flower,
In spring time, &c.*

Cl. Truly youg Gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very vntunable.

1. Pa. you are deceiv'd Sir, we kept time, we lost not our time.

Cl. By my troth yes: I count it but time lost to heare such a foolish song. God buy you, and God mend your voices. Come Audrie.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, Celis.

Du. Sen. Dost thou beleeeve Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?

Or. I sometimes do beleeeve, and sometimes do not, As those that feare they hope, and know they feare.

Enter Rosalinde, Silvius, & Phebe.

Ref. Patience once more, whiles our compact is vrg'd: You say, if I bring in your Rosalinde, You will bestow her on Orlando heere? (hir.

Du. Sr. That would I, had I kingdomes to give with

Ref. And you say you will have her, when I bring hir?

Or. That would I, were I of all kingdomes King.

Ref. You say, you'l marry me, if I be willing.

Phe. That will I, should I dy the houre after.

Ro. But if you do refuse to marry me, You'l give your selfe to this most faithfull Shepheard.

Phe. So is the bargaine.

Ref. You say that you'l have Phebe if she will.

Sil. Though to have her and death, were both one thing.

S

Ref.

Ros. I have promis'd to make all this matter even:
 Keepe you your word, O Duke, to give your daughter,
 You yours Orlando, to receive his daughter:
 Keepe you your word Phebe, that you'll marry me,
 Or else refusing me, to wed this shepheard:
 Keepe your word Silvius, that you'll marry her
 If she refuse me, and from hence I go
 To make these doubts all even. Exit Ros. and Celia.

Du. Se. I do remember in this shepheard boy,
 Some lively touches of my daughters favour.

Or. My Lord, the first time that I ever saw him,
 Me thought he was a brother to your daughter:
 But my good Lord, this Boy is Forrest borne,
 And hath bin tutor'd in the rudiments
 Of many desperate studies, by his vncle,
 Whom he reports to be a great Magitian.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Obscured in the circle of this Forrest.

Iag. There is sure another flood toward, and these couples are comming to the Arke. Here comes a payre of very strange beasts, which in all tongues, are call'd Fooles.

Clo. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Iag. Good my Lord, bid him welcome: This is the Motley-minded Gentleman, that I have so often met in the Forrest: he hath bin a Courtier he sweares.

Clo. If any man doubt that, let him put mee to my purgation, I have trod a measure, I have flattred a Lady, I have bin politicke with my friend, smooth with mine enemy, I have vndone three Tailors, I have had foure quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Iag. And how was that tane up?

Clo. Faith we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Iag. How seventh cause? Good my Lord, like this fellow.

Du. Se. I like him very well.

Clo. God'ild you sir, I desire you of the like: I presse in heere sir, amongst the rest of the Country copulatives to swear, and to forswear, according as marriage binds and blood breakes: a poore virgin sir, an il favor'd thing sir, but mine owne, a poore humour of mine sir, to take that that no man else will: rich honesty dwels like a miser sir, in a poore house, as your Pearle in your foule oyster.

Du. Sen. By my faith, he is very swift, and sententious
Clo. According to the fooles bolt sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Iag. But for the seventh cause. How did you finde the quarrell on the seventh cause?

Clo. Vpon a lye, seven times removed: (beare your body more seeming Audrey) as thus sir: I did dislike the cut of a certaine Courtiers beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, hee was in the minde it was: this is call'd the retort courteous. If I sent him word againe, it was not well cut, he wold send me word he cut it to please himselfe: this is call'd the quip modest. If againe, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called, the reply churlish. If againe it was not well cut, he would answer I spake not true: this is call'd the reproofe valiant. If againe, it was not well cut, he wold say, I lie: this is call'd the counter-checke quarrellsome: and so to the lie circumstantiall, and the lie direct.

Iag. And how oft did you say his beard was not well cut?

Clo. I durst go no further then the lye circumstantiall:

nor he durst not give me the lie direct: and so wee measur'd swords, and parted.

Iag. Can you nominate in order now, the degrees of the lie.

Clo. O sir, we quarrell in print, by the booke: as you have bookes for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort courteous: the second, the Quip-modest: the third, the reply Churlish: the fourth, the Reproofe valiant: the fifth, the Counterchecke quarrellsome: the sixth, the Lye with circumstance: the seventh, the Lye direct: all these you may avoyd, but the Lye direct: and you may avoide that too, with an If. I knew when seven Iustices could not take up a Quarrell, but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If; as if you saide so, then I saide so: and they shooke hands, and swore brothers. Your If, is the onely peace-maker: much vertue in if.

Iag. Is not this a rare fellow my Lord? He's as good at any thing, and yet a foole.

Du. Se. He uses his folly like a stalking-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, Rosalind, and Celia.

Still Musicke.

Hymen, Then is there mirth in heaven,
 When earthly things made eaven asone together.

Good Duke receive thy daughter,
 Hymen from Heaven brought her,
 Tea brought her hether.

That thou mightst joyne his hand with his,
 Whose heart within his bosome is.

Ros. To you I give my selfe, for I am yours.

To you I give my selfe, for I am yours.

Du. Se. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Or. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight & shape be true, why then my love adieu.

Ros. Ile have no Father, if you be not he:

Ile have no Husband, if you be not he:

Nor ne're wed woman, if you be not she.

Hy. Peace hoa: I barre confusion,

'Tis I must make conclusion

Of these most strange events:

Here's eight that must take hands,

To joyne in Hymens bands,

If truth holds true contents.

You and you, no crosse shall part;

You and you, are heart in heart;

You, to his love must accord,

Or have a Woman to your Lord.

You and you, are sure together,

As the Winter to fowle Weather:

Whiles a Wedlocke Hymne we sing,

Feede your selves with questioning:

That reason, wonder may diminish

How thus we met, and these things finish.

Song.

Wedding is great Innos crowne,

O blessed bond of boord and bed:

'Tis Hymen peoples every towne,

High wedlocke then be honored:

Honor, high honor and renowne

To Hymen, God of every Towne.

Du. Se. O my deere Neece, welcome thou art to me,
 Even daughter welcome, in no lesse degree.

Phe.

Pho. I will not eate my word, now thou art mine,
Thy faith, my fancie to thee doth combine.

Enter second Brother.

2. Bro. Let me have audience for a word or two:
I am the second sonne of old Sir Rowland,
That bring these tidings to this faire assembly.
Duke Frederick hearing how that every day,
Men of great worth resorted to this forrest,
Addrest a mighty power, which were on foote
In his owne conduct, purposely to take
His brother heere, and put him to the sword:
And to the skirts of this wilde Wood he came;
Where, meeting with an old Religious man,
After some question with him, was converted
Both from his enterprize, and from the world:
His crowne bequeathing to his banish'd Brother,
And all their Lands restor'd to him againe
That were with him exil'd. This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Du. Se. Welcome yong man:
Thou offer'st fairely to thy brothers wedding:
To one his lands with-held, and to the other
A land it selfe at large, a potent Dukedome.
First, in this Forrest, let us do those ends
That heere were well begun, and well begot:
And after, every of this happie number
That have endur'd shrew'd daies, and nights with us,
Shal share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meane time, forget this new-falne dignity,
And fall into our Rusticke Revelry:
Play Musicke, and you Brides and Bride-groomes all,
With measure heap'd in joy, to th' Measures fall.

Iag. Sir, by your patience: if I heard you rightly,
The Duke hath put on a Religious life,
And throwne into neglect the pompous Court.

2. Bro. He hath.

Iag. To him will I: out of these convertites,
There is much matter to be heard, and learp'd:
You to your former Honor, I bequeath;
Your patience, and your vertue, well deserves it.
You to a love, that your true faith doth merit:
You to your land, and love, and great allies:
You to a long, and well-deserved bed:
And you to wrangling, for thy loving voyage
Is but for two moneths vi'tuall'd: So to your pleasures,
I am for other, then for dancing meazures.

Du. Se. Stay, Iag, stay.

Iag. To see no pastime, I: what you would have,
He stay to know, at your abandon'd cave. Exit.

Du. Se. Proceed, proceed, we will begin these rights,
As we do trust, they'll end in true delights.

Ref. It is not the fashion to see the Lady the Epilogue:
but it is no more unbandsome, then to see the Lord the Prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush,
'tis true, that a good play needes no Epilogue. Yet to good wine they do use good bushes: & good plaies prove the better by the helpe of good Epilogues: What a case am I in then, that am neither a good Epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalfe of a good play? I am not furnish'd like a Begger, therefore to begge will not become mee. My way is to conjure you, and He begin with the Women. I charge you (O women) for the love you beare to men, to like as much of this Play, as please you: And I charge you (O men) for the love you beare to women (as I perceive by your simpring, none of you hates them) that betweene you, and the women, the play may please. If I were a Woman, I would kisse as many of you as had beards that pleas'd me, complexions that lik'd me, and breaths that I desir'd: And I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will for my kind offer, when I make curt'sie, bid me farewell. Exeunt.

THE

Taming of the Shrew.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Begger and Hostesse, Christopher Sly.

Begger.

Le pheeze you infaith.

Host. A paire of stokes you rogue.

Beg. Yare a baggage, the Slies are no Rogues. Looke in the Chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror: therefore Paucapallabris, let the world slide: Sessia.

Host. You will not pay for the glasses you haue burst?

Beg. No, not a deniere: go by S. Ieronimy, goe to thy cold bed, and warme thee.

Host. I know my remedy, I must go fetch the Headborough.

Beg. Third, or fourth, or fift Borough, Ile answer him by Law. Ile not budge an inch boy: Let him come, and kindly. Falles asleep.

Winde hornes. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his traine.

Lo. Huntsman I charge thee, tender wel my hounds, Brach Meriman, the poore Curie is imbest, And couple Clowder with the deepe-mouth'd brach, Saw'st thou not boy how Silver made it good At the hedge corner, in the couldest fault, I would not lose the dogge for twenty pound.

Hun. Why Belman is as good as he my Lord, He cried upon it at the meekest losse, And twice to day pick'd out the dullest sent, Trust me, I take him for the better dogge.

Lord. Thou art a foole, if Eecho were as fleet, I would esteeme him worth a dozen such: But sup them well, and looke unto them all, To morrow I intend to hunt againe.

Hun. I will my Lord.

Lord. What's heere? One dead, or drunke? See doth he breathe?

Hun. He breath's my Lord. Were he not warm'd with Ale, this were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly.

Lord. Oh monstrous beast, how like a swine he lies. Grim death, how foule and loathsome is thine imagel Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man. What thinke you, if he were convey'd to bed, Wrap'd in sweet cloathes: Rings put upon his fingers: A most delicious banquet by his bed, And brave attendants neere him when he wakes, Would not the begger then forget himselfe?

1. Hun. Beleeve me Lord, I thinke he cannot choose.

2. H. It would seem strange unto him when he wak'd

Lord. Even as a flatt'ring dreame, or worthles fancie.

Then take him up, and manage well the jest: Carry him gently to my fairest Chamber, And hang it round with all my wanton pictures: Balme his foule head in warme distilled waters, And burne sweet Wood to make the Lodging sweete: Procure me Mulicke ready when he wakes, To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound: And if he chance to speake, be ready straight (And with a low submissive reverence) Say, what is it your Honor will command: Let one attend him with a silver Bason Full of Rose-water, and bestrew'd with Flowers, Another beare the Ewer: the third a Diaper, And say wilt please your Lordship coole your hands. Some one be ready with a costly suite, And aske him what apparel he will weare: Another tell him of his Hounds and Horfe, And that his Lady mournes at his diseafe, Perswade him that he hath bin Lunaticke, And when he sayes he is, say that he dreames, For he is nothing but a mighty Lord: This do, and do it kindly, gentle sir, It wil be pastime passing excellent, If it be husbanded with modesty.

1. Hun. My Lord I warrant you we wil play our part As he shall thinke by our true diligence He is no lesse then what we say he is.

Lor. Take him up gently, and to bed with him, And each one to his office when he wakes.

Sound trumpets.

Sirrah, go see what Trumpettis that sounds, Belike some Noble Gentleman that meanes (Travelling some journey) to repose him heere.

Enter Servingman.

How now? who is it?

Ser. An't please your Honor, Players That offer service to your Lordship.

Enter Players.

Lor. Bid them come neere: Now fellowes, you are welcome.

Pla. We thanke your Honor.

Lor. Do you intend to stay with me to night?

2. Pla. So please your Lordship to accept our duty.

Lor. With all my heart. This fellow I remember, Since once he plaide a Farmers eldest sonne, 'Twas where you woo'd the Gentlewoman so well: I have forgot your name: but sure that part

Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd.

Sir. I thinke 'twas Soto that your honor meanes.

Lord. 'Tis very true, thou didst it excellent:
Well you are come to me in happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can assist me much.
There is a Lord will heare you play to night;
But I am doubtfull of your modesties,
Least (over-eying of his odde behauiour,
For yet his honor never heard a play)
You breake into some merry passion,
And so offend him: for I tell you sirs,
If you should smile, he growes impatient.

Plai. Feare not my Lord, we can contain our selves,
Were he the veriest anticke in the world.

Lord. Go sirra, take them to the Buttery,
And give them friendly welcome every one,
Let them want nothing that my house affords.

Exit one with the Players.

Sirra go you to Bartholmew my Page,
And see him dress'd in all suites like a Lady:
That done, conduct him to the drunkards chamber,
And call him Madam, do him obeifance:
Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He beare himselfe with honourable action
Such as he hath observ'd in noble Ladies
Vnto their Lords, by them accomplished,
Such duty to the drunkard let him do:
With soft low tongue, and lowly curtesie,
And say: What is't your Honor will command,
Wherein your Lady, and your humble wife,
May shew her duty, and make knowne her love.
And then with kinde embracements, tempting kisses
And with declining head into his bosome
Bid him shed teares, as being over-joyed
To see her noble Lord restor'd to health,
Who for this seven yeares hath esteemed him
No better then a poore and loathsome begger:
And if the boy have not a womans guift
To raine a shower of commanded teares,
An Onion will do well for such a shift,
Which in a Napkin (being clost convey'd)
Shall in despite enforce a watery eye:
See this dispatch'd with all the hast thou canst,
Anon Ile give thee more instructions.

Exit a servingman.

I know the boy will well usurpe the grace,
Voice, gate, and action of a Gentlewoman.
I long to heare him call the drunkard husband,
And how my men will stay themselves from laughter,
When they do homage to this simple peasant,
Ile in to counsell them: haply my presence
May well abate the over-merry spleene,
Which otherwise would grow into extreames.

Enter aloft the drunkard with attendants, some with apparel, Bason and Ewer, & other appurtenances, & Lord.

Beg. For Gods sake a pot of small Ale.

1. Ser. Wilt please your Lordship drink a cup offack?

2. Ser. Wilt please your Honor taste of these Conserves?

3. Ser. What raiment will your honor weare to day.

Beg. I am Christophero Sly, call not mee Honour nor Lordship: I ne're dranke facke in my life: and if you giue me any Conserves, give me conserves of Beefe: ne're ask me what raiment Ile weare, for I have no more doubles then backes: no more stockings then legges: nor no more shooes then feet, nay sometime more feete then shooes, or such shooes as my toes looke through the over-leather.

Lord. Heaven cease this idle humor in your Honor.

Oh that a mighty man of such descent,
Of such possessions, and so high esteeme
Should be infused with so foule a spirit.

Beg. What would you make me mad? Am not I Christopher Sly, old Slies sonne of Burton-heath, by byrth a Pedler, by education a Cardmaker, by transmutation a Beare-heard, and now by present profession a Tinker.
Aske Murrian Hacket the fat Alewife of Wincot, if shee know me not: if she say I am not xiiii.d. on the force for sheere Ale, score me up for the lyingst knave in Christen dome. What I am not bestraught: here's—

3. Man. Oh this it is that makes your Lady mourne.

2. Man. Oh this is it that makes your seruants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it, that your kindred shuns your
As beaten hence by your strange Lunacy. (house
Oh Noble Lord, bethinke thee of thy birth,
Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,
And banish hence these abject lowly dreames:
Looke how thy servants do attend on thee,
Each in his office ready at thy becke.

Wilt thou have Musicke? Harke Apollo plaies, Musick.
And twenty caged Nightringales do sing.

Or wilt thou sleepe? Wee'l have thee to a Couch,
Softer and sweeter then the lustfull bed
On purpose trim'd up for Semiramis.

Say thou wilt walke: we will bestrow the ground.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trap'd,
Their harnesses studded all with Gold and Pearle.
Dost thou love hawking? Thou hast hawkes will soare
Above the morning Larke. Or wilt thou hunt,
Thy hounds shall make the Welkin answer them
And fetch shrill ecchoes from the hollow earth.

1. Man. Say thou wilt course, thy gray-hounds are as
As breathed Stags: I flecter then the Roe. (swift

2. M. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee strait
Adonis painted by a running brooke,
And Citherea all in sedg's hid,
Which seeme to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with winde.

Lord. Wee'l shew thee so, as she was a Maid,
And how she was beguiled and surpriz'd,
As lively painted, as the deed was done.

3. Man. Or Daphne roming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall sweare she bleeds,
And at that sight thal sad Apollo weepe,
So workmanly the blood and teares are drawne.

Lord. Thou art a Lord, and nothing but a Lord:
Thou hast a Lady farre more Beautifull,
Then any woman in this waining age.

1. Man. And till the teares that she hath shed for thee,
Like envious fouds ore-run her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world,
And yet she is inferiour to none.

Beg. Am I a Lord, and have I such a Lady?
Or do I dreame? Or have I dream'd till now?
I do not sleepe: I see, I heare, I speake:
I smell sweet favours, and I feele soft things:
Vpon my life I am a Lord indeede,
And not a Tinker, nor Christophero Sly.
Well, bring our Lady hither to our sight,
And once againe a pot o'th smallest Ale.

2. Man. Wilt please your mightinesse to wash your hands:

Oh how we joy to see your wit restor'd,
Oh that once more you knew but what you are:
These fifteene yeeres you have bin in a dreame,
Or when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.

Beg. These fifteene yeeres, by my fay, a goodly nap,
But did I never speake of all that time?

1. Man. Oh yes my Lord, but very idle words,
For though you lay heere in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say, ye were beaten our of doore,
And raile upon the Hostesse of the house,
And say you would present her at the Leete,
Because she brought stone-Iugs, and no seal'd quarts:
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Beg. I, the womans maide of the house.

3. Ma. Why sir you know no house, nor no such maid
Nor no such men as you have reckon'd up,
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turph, and Henry Pimpernell,
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Beg. Now Lord be thanked for my good amends.

All. Amen,

Enter Lady with Attendants.

Beg. I thanke thee, thou shalt not lose by it.

Lady. How fares my noble Lord?

Beg. Marry I fare well, for heere is cheere enough.
Where is my wife?

La. Heere noble Lord, what is thy will with her?

Beg. Are you my wife, and will not cal me husband?
My men should call me Lord, I am your good-man.

La. My husband and my Lord, my Lord and husband
I am your wife in all obedience.

Beg. I know it well, what must I call her?

Lord. Madam,

Beg. Alice Madam, or Ione Madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else, so Lords call Ladies.

Beg. Madame wife, they say that I have dream'd,
And slept above some fifteene yeare or more.

Lady. I, and the time seem's thirty vnto me,
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Beg. 'Tis much, ser-vants leave me and her alone:
Madam undresse you, and come now to bed.

La. Thrice noble Lord, let me intreat of you
To pardon me yet for a night or two:
Or if not so, untill the Sun be set.

For your Physitians have expressly charg'd,
In perill to incurre your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed:
I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Beg. I, it stands so that I may hardly tarry so long:
But I would be loth to fall into my dreames againe: I wil therefore tarrie in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Your Honors Players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant Comedy,
For so your doctors hold it very meete,
Seeing too much sadnesse hath congeal'd your blood,
And melancholly is the Nurse of frenzie,
Therefore they thought it good you heare a play,
And frame your minde to mirth and merriment,
Which barres a thousand harmes, and lengthens life.

Beg. Marry I will let them play, it is not a Comon-ty, a Christmas gambold, or a tumbling trick?

Lady. No my good Lord, it is more pleasing stufte.

Beg. What, household stufte?

Lady. It is a kinde of history.

Beg. Well, we'l see't:

Come Madame wife sit by my side,
And let the world slip, we shall ne're be yonger.

Flourish. Enter Lucentio, and his man Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since for the great desire I had
To see faire Padua, nursery of Arts,
I am arriv'd for fruitfull Lumbar dy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy,
And by my fathers love and leave am arr'n'd
With his good will, and thy good company.
My trusty servant well approv'd in all,
Heere let us breath, and happily institute
A courie of Learning, and ingenious studies.
Pisa renowned for grave Citizens
Gave me my being, and my father first
A Merchant of great Trafficke through the world:
Vincenzio's co-ne of the Bentivolij,
Vincenzio's sonne, brought up in Florence,
It shall become to serve all hopes conceiv'd
To decke his fortune with his vertuous deedes:
And therefore Tranio, for the time I study,
Vertue and that part of Philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happinesse,
By vertue specially to be achiev'd.
Tell me thy minde, for I have Pisa left,
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow plash, to plunge him in the deepe,
And with faciety seekes to quench his thirst.

Tra. Me Pardonato, gentle maister mine:
I am in all affected as your selfe,
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To sucke the sweets of sweete Philosophy.
Onely (good maister) while we do admire
This vertue, and this morall discipline
Let's be no Stoickes, nor no stockes I pray,
Or so devote to Aristotles checkes
As Ovid; be an out-cast quite abjur'd:
Balke Lodgicke with acquaintance that you have,
And practise Rhetoricke in your common talke,
Musicke and Poesie use, to quicken you,
The mathematickes, and the Metaphysickes
Fall to them as you finde your stomacke serves you:
No profit growes, where is no pleasure tane:
In brieve sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies Tranio, well dost thou advise,
If Biondello thou wert come ashore,
We could at once put us in readinesse,
And take a Lodging fit to entertaine
Such friends (as time) in Padua shall beget.
But stay a while, what company is this?

Tra. Maister some shew to welcome us to Towne.

*Enter Baptista with his two daughters, Katherine & Bianca, Gremio a Pantallowne, Hortensio a Shuiter to Bianca.
Lucen. Tranio, stand by.*

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For how I firmly am resolv'd you know:
That is, not to bestow my yongest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder:
If either of you both love Katherine,

Because

Because I know you well, and love you wel,
Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Gre. To cart her rather. She's too rough for me,
There, there Hortensio, will you any Wife?

Kat. I pray you sir, is it your will
To make a stale of me amongst these mates?

Hor. Mates maid, how meane you that?
No mates for you,

Unlesse you were of gentler milder mould.

Kat. I faith sir, you shall never neede to feare,
I wis it is not halfe way to her heart:
But if it were, doubt not, her care should be,
To combe your noddle with a three-legg'd stoole,
And paint your face, and use you like a foole.

Hor. From all such divels, good Lord deliver us.

Gre. And mee too, good Lord.

Tra. Husht maister, heres some good pastime toward,
That wench is starke mad, or wonderfull froward.

Luc. But in the others silence do I see,
Maids milde behaviour and sobriety.
Peace Tranio.

Tra. Well said Maister, mum, and gaze your fill.

Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soone make good
What I have said, Bianca get you in,
And let it not displease thee good Bianca,
For I will love thee ne're thelesse my girle.

Kat. A pretty peate, it is best put finger in the eye, and she knew why.

Bia. Sister content you, in my discontent.
Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe:
My bookes and instruments shall be my company,
On them to looke, and practise by my selfe.

Luc. Hearke Tranio, thou maist heare Minerva speak.

Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange,
Sorry am I that our good will effects
Bianca's greefe.

Gre. Why will you mew her up
(Signior Baptista) for this fiend of hell,
And make her beare the pennance of her tongue?

Bap. Gentlemen content ye: I am resolv'd:
Go in Bianca.

And for I know she taketh most delight
In Musicke, instruments, and Poetry,
Schoolemaisters will I keepe within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth. If you Hortensio,
Or signior Gremio you know any such,
Preferre them hither: for to cunning men,
I will be very kinde and liberrall,
To mine owne children, in good bringing up,
And so farewell: Katherina you may stay,
For I have more to commune with Bianca.

Kat. Why, and I trust I may go too, may I not?
What shall I be appointed houres, as though (Belike) I knew not what to take,
And what to leave? Ha.

Gre. You may go to the divels dam: your guifts are so good here's none will holde you: Their love is not so great Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairely out. Our cakes dough on both sides:
Farewell: yet for the love I beare my sweet Bianca, if I can by any meanes light on a fit man to teach her that wherin the delights, I will wish him to her father.

Hor. So will I Signior Gremio: but a word I pray:
Though the nature of our quarrell yet never brook'd parle, know now upon aduice, it toucheth us both: that we may yet againe have accesse to our faire Mistris, and be happie rivals in Bianca's love, to labour and effect one thing specially.

Gre. What's that I pray?

Hor. Marrie sir to get a husband for her Sister.

Gre. A husband: a divell.

Hor. I say a husband.

Gre. I say, a divell: Think'ft thou Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any a man is so verie a foole to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush Gremio: though it passe your patience and mine to endure her lewd alarums, why man there bee good fellows in the world, and a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and mony enough.

Gre. I cannot tell: but I had as lief take her dowrie with this ondition; To be whipt at the hie crosse every morning.

Hor. Faith (as you say) there's small choise in rotten apples: come, since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintain'd, till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have too't afresh: Sweet Bianca, happy man be his dole: he that runnes fastest, gets the Ring: How say you signior Gremio?

Grem. I am agreed, and would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing that would throughly wooe her, wed her, and bed her, and ridde the house of her. Come on.

Exeunt ambo. Manet Tranio and Lucentio.

Tra. I pray sir tel me, is it possible
That love should of a fodaine take such hold.

Luc. Oh Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible or likely.
But see, while idely I stood looking on,
I found the effect of Love in idleness,
And now in plainnesse do confesse to thee
That art to me as secret and as deere
As Anna to the Queene of Carthage was:
Tranio I burne, I pine, I perish Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest gyrl:
Counsaile me Tranio, for I know thou canst:
Assist me Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now,
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love touch'd you, nought remaines but so,
Redime te captum quam queas minimo.

Luc. Gramercies Lad: go forward, this contents,
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's found.

Tra. Master, you look'd so longly on the maide
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Luc. Oh yes, I saw sweet beaultie in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor had,
That made great love to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kist the Cretan strond.

Tra. Saw you no more? Mark'd you not how her sister,
Began to scold, and raise up such a storme?
That mortall cares might hardly endure the din,

Luc. Tranio, I saw her corall lips to move;
And with her breath she did perfume the ayre,
Sacred and sweet was all I saw in her.

Tra. Nay, then 'tis time to stirre him from his trance:
I pray awake sir: if you love the Maide;
Bend thoughts and wits to atcheeve her. Thus it stands:
Her elder sister is so curst and shrew'd,
That till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, your love must live a mide at home,
And therefore has he closely meud her up,

Because

Because she will not be annoy'd with sisters.

Luc. Ah Tanio, what a cruell Fathers he:
But art thou not advis'd, he tooke some care
Together cunning Schoolemasters to instruct her.

Tra. I marry am I sir, and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I have it Tranio.

Tra. Maister, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jumpe in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first.

Tra. You will be schoole-maister,
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That's your device.

Luc. It is: May it be done?

Tra. Not possible: for who shall beare your part,
And be in Padua heere Vincentio's sonne,
Keepe house, and ply his booke, welcome his friends,
Visit his Countermen, and banquet them?

Luc. Basta, content thee: for I have it full.
We have not yet bin seene in any house,
Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces,
For man or maister: then it followes thus;
Thou shalt be maister, Tranio in my sted:
Keepe house, and port, and servants, as I should,
I will some other be, some Florentine,
Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio at once
Vncase thee: take my Coulord hat and cloake,
When Biondello comes, he waites on thee,
But I will charme him first to keepe his tongue.

Tra. So had you neede:
In breefe Sir, sith it your pleasure is,
And I am tyed to be obedient,
For so your father charg'd me at our parting:
Be serviceable to my sonne (quoth he)
Although I thinke 'twas in another fence,
I am content to be Lucentio,
Because so well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio be so, because Lucentio loves,
And let me be a slave, 't'achieue that maide.
Whose sodaine fight hath thral'd my wounded eye.

Enter Biondello.

Heere comes the rogue. Sirra, where have you bin?

Bion. Where have I beene? Nay how now, where are you? Maister, ha's my fellow Tranio stolne your cloathes, or you stolne his, or both? Pray what's the newes?

Luc. Sirra come hither, 'tis notime to jest,
And therefore frame your manners to the time.
Your fellow Tranio heere to save my life,
Puts my apparrell, and my count'nance on,
And I for my escape have put on his:
For in a quarrell since I came ashore,
I kil'd a man, and feare I was defried:
Waite you on him, I charge you, as becomes:
While I make way from hence to save my life:
You vnderstand me?

Bion. I sir, ne're a whit.

Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth,
Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him, would I were so too.

Tra. So could I faith boy, to have the next wish after, that Lucentio indeede had Baptista's yongest daughter. But sirra, not for my sake, but your maisters, I advise you use your manners discreetly in all kind of companies: When I am alone, why then I am Tranio: but in all places else, your maister Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio let's go:

One thing more rests, that thy selfe execute,
To make one 'mong these wooers: if thou aske me why,
Sufficieth my reasons are both good and waighy.

Exeunt. The Presenters above speakes.

1. Man. My Lord you nod, you do not minde the play.

Beg. Yes by Saint Anne do I, a good matter surely:
Comes there any more of it?

Lad. My Lord, 'tis but begun.

Beg. 'Tis a very excellent peece of worke, Madame
Lady: would 'twere done. They sit and marke.

Enter Petruchio, and his man Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua; but of all
My best beloued and approved friend
Hortensio: & I trow this is his house:
Heere sirra Grumio, knocke I say.

Grum. Knocke sir? whom should I knocke? Is there any man ha's rebus'd your worship?

Pet. Villaine I say, knocke me heere soundly.

Grum. Knocke you heere sir? Why sir, what am I sir, that I should knocke you heere sir?

Pet. Villaine I say, knocke me at this gate,
And rap me well, or Ile knocke your knaves pate.

Grum. My Maister is growne quarrellsome:
I should knocke you first,
And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Pet. Will it not be?
Faith sirrah, and you'll not knocke, Ile ring it,
Ile trie how you can Sol, Fa, and sing it.

He rings him by the eares.

Grum. Helpe mist'ris helpe, my maister is mad.

Pet. Now knocke when I bid you: sirrah villaine.

Enter Hortensio.

Hor. How now, what's the matter? My olde friend Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio? How do you all at Verona?

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray? Contutti la core bene trovato, may I say.

Hor. Alla vostra casa ben venuto molto honorato signior mio Petruchio.

Rise Grumio rise, we will compound this quarrell.

Grum. Nay 'tis no matter sir, what he leges in Latine.
If this be not a lawfull cause for me to leave his service, looke you sir: He bid me knocke him, & rap him soundly sir. Well, was it fit for a servant to use his maister so, being perhaps (for ought I see) two and thirty, a peepe out? Whom would to God I had well knockt at first, then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A fencelesse villaine: good Hortensio,
I bad the rascall knocke upon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Grum. Knocke at the gate? O heavens: spake you not these words plaine? Sirra, Knocke me heere: rappe me heere: knocke me well, and knocke me soundly? And come you now with knocking at the gate?

Pet. Sirra be gone, or take not I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio patience, I am Grumio's pledge:
Why this a heavy chance twixt him and you,
Your ancient trusty pleasant servant Grumio:
And tell me now (sweet friend) what happy gale
Blowes you to Padua heere, from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters yongmen through the world,
To

To seeke their fortunes farther than at home,
Where small experience growes but in a few.
Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me,
Antonio my father is decaist,
And I have thrust my selfe into this maze,
Happily to wive and thrive, as best I may:
Crownes in my purse I have, and goods at home,
And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio. Shall I then come roundly to thee,
And with thee to a shrew'd ill-favour'd wife?
Thou'dst thanke me but a little for my counsell;
And yet Ile promise thee she shall be rich,
And very rich: but th'art too much my friend,
And Ile not with thee to her.

Pet. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as wee,
Few words suffice: and therefore, if thou know
One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife:
(As wealth is burthen of my wooing dance)
Be she as foule as was Florentius Love,
As old as Sibell, and as curst and shrow'd
As Socrates Zuntippe, or a worse:
She moves me not, or not removes at least Affections edge in time. Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriaticke seas.
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Grn. Nay looke you sir, hee tels you flatly what his minde is: why give him Gold enough, and marrie him to a Puppet or an Aglet babie, or an old trot with ne're a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses. Why nothing comes amisse, so mo-ny comes withall.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are stept thus farre in,
I will continue that I broach'd in jest,
I can Petruchio helpe thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and yong and beautilous.
Brought up as best becomes a Gentlewoman.
Her onely fault, and that is fault enough,
Is, that she is intollerable curst,
And shrew'd, and froward, so beyond all measure,
That were my state farre worser then it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of Gold.

Pet. Hortensio peace: thou knowst not golds effect,
Tell me her fathers name, and 'tis enough:
For I will boord her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in Autumne cracke.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola,
An affable and courteous Gentleman,
Her name is Katherina Minola,
Renown'd in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her;
And he knew my deceased father well:
I will not sleepe Hortensio til I see her,
And therefore let me be thus bold with you,
To give you over at this first encounter,
Vnlesse you will accompany me thither.

Grn. I pray you Sir let him go while the humor lasts.
A my word, and she knew him as wel as I do, she would tinkle scolding would do little good upon him. Shee may perhaps call him halfe a score Knaves, or so: Why that's nothing; and he begin once, hee'l raile in his rope trickes. He tell you what sir, and she stand him but a litle, he wil throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure hir with it, that shee shall have no more eyes to see withall then a Car: you know him not sir.

Hor. Tarry Petruchio, I must go with thee,

For in Baptistas keepe my treasure is:
He hath the Jewell of my life in hold,
His yongest daughter, beautifull Bianca,
And her with-holds hee from me. Other more
Suters to her, and rivals in my Love:
Supposing it a thing impossible,
For those defects I have before rehearst,
That ever Katherina will be woo'd:
Therefore this order hath Baptista tane,
That none shal have accessse vnto Bianca,
Till Katherine the Curst, have got a husband.

Grn. Katherine the curst,
A riddle for a maide, of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace,
And offer me disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoole-maister
Well scene in Musicke, to instruct Bianca,
That so I may by this device at least
Have leave and leisure to make love to her,
And vn suspected court her by her selfe.

Enter Gremio and Lucentio disguised.

Grn. Heere's no knavery. See, to beguile the old folkes how the yong folkes lay theirs head together. Maister, maister, looke about you: Who goes there? ha.

Hor. Peace Gremio, it is the rivall of my Love.
Petruchio stand by a while.

Grn. A proper stripling, and an amorous.

Gre. O very well, I have perus'd the note.
Hearke you sir, Ile have them very fairely bound,
All bookes of Love, see that at any hand,
And see you reade no other Lectures to her:
You understand me. Over and beside Signior Baptistas liberality

Ile mend it with a Largeesse. Take your paper too,
And let me have them very wel perfum'd,
For she is sweeter then perfume it selfe
To whom they go to: what will you reade to her?

Luc. What ere I reade to her, Ile pleade for you,
As for my patron, stand you so assur'd;
As firmly as your selfe were still in place,
Yea and perhaps with more successfull words
Then you; vnlesse you were a scholler sir.

Gre. Oh this learning, what a thing it is.

Grn. Oh this Woodcocke, what an Assie it is.

Pet. Peace sirra.

Hor. Grn. mum: God save you signior Gremio.

Gre. And you are well met, Signior Hortensio.
Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista Minola,
I promise to enquire carefully
About a schoolemaister for the faire Bianca,
And by good fortune I have lighted wel
On this yong man: For learning and behaviour
Fit for her turne, well read in Poetrie
And other bookes, good ones, I warrant ye:

Hor. 'Tis well: and I have met a Gentleman
Hath promise me to helpe one to another,
A fine Musitian to instruct our Mistris,
So shal I no whit be behinde in duty
To faire Bianca, so beloved of me.

Gre. Beloved of me, and that my deeds shal prove.

Grn. And that his bags shal prove.

Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love,
Listen to me, and if you speake me faire,
Ile tell you newes indifferent good for either.
Heere is a Gentle nan whom by chance I met

Vpon

Vpon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo ourst Katherine,
Yea, and to marry her, if her dowrie please,
Gre. So said, so done, is well:

Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?

Pet. I know she is an irkesome brawling scold:
If that be all Maisters, I heare no harme.

Gre. No, sayst me so, friend? What Countreyman?

Pet. Borne in Verona, old Buzonios sonne:

My father dead, my fortune lives for me,
And I do hope, good dayes and long, to see.

Gre. Oh sir, such a life with such a wife, were strange:

But if you have a stomacke, too't a Gods name,
You shall haue me assisting you in all.

But will you woo this Wilde-cat?

Pet. Will I live?

Gre. Will he woo her? I: or Ile hang her,

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?

Thinke you, a little dinne can daunt mine eares?

Have I not in my time heard Lions rore?

Have I not heard the sea, puffed up with windes,

Rage like an angry Boare, chafed with sweat?

Have I not heard great Ordnance in the field?

And heavens Artillerie thunder in the skies?

Have I not in a pitched battell heard

Loud larums, neighing steeds, & trumpets clangue?

And do you tell me of a womans tongue?

That gives not halfe so great a blow to heare,

As will a Chesse-nut in a Farmers fire.

Tush, tush, feare boyes with bugs.

Gre. For he feares none.

Gre. Hortensio hearken:

This Gentleman is happily arriv'd,

My minde presumes for his owne good, and yours.

Hor. I promist we would be Contributors,

And beare his charge of wooing whatsoere.

Gre. And so we will, provided that he win her.

Gre. I would I were as sure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio brave, and Biondello.

Tra. Gentlemen God save you. If I may be bold,
Tell me I beseech you, which is the readiest way
To the house of Signior Baptista Minola?

Bio. He that ha's the two faire daughters: ist he you meame?

Tra. Even he Biondello.

Gre. Hearke you sir, you meane not her to——

Tra. Perhaps him and her sir, what have you to do?

Pet. Not her that chides sir, at any hand I pray.

Tra. I love no chiders sir: Biondello, let's away.

Luc. Well begun Tranio.

Hor. Sir, a word ere you go:

Are you a sutor to the Maid you talke of, yea or no?

Tra. And if I be sir, is it any offence?

Gre. No: if without more words you will get you hence.

Tra. Why sir, I pray are not the streets as free
For me, as for you?

Gre. But so is not she.

Tra. For what reason I beseech you.

Gre. For this reason if you'll know,
That she's the choise love of Signior Gremio.

Hor. That she's the chosen of signior Hortensio.

Tra. Softly my Maisters: If you be Gentlemen
Do me this right: heare me with patience.

Baptista is a noble Gentleman,

To whom my Father is not all unknowne,
And were his daughter fairer then she is,
She may more suture have, and me for one.
Fairst Ledaes daughter had a thousand wooers,
Then well one more may faire Bianca have,
And so she shall. Lucentio shall make one,
Though Paris came, in hope to speed alone.

Gre. What, this Gentleman will out-talke us all.
Lu. Sir give him head, I know hee'l prove a Iade.

Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?

Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as to aske you,
Did you yet ever see Baptistas daughter?

Tra. No sir, but heare I do that he hath two:
The one, as famous for a scolding tongue,
As is the other, for beauteous modestie.

Pet. Sir, sir, the first's for me, let her go by.

Gre. Yea, leave that labour to great Hercules,
And let it be more then Alcides twelve.

Pet. Sir understand you this of me (insooth)
The yongest daughter whom you hearken for,
Her father keepes from all access of sutors,
And will not promise her to any man,
Vntill the elder sister first be wed.

The yonger then is free, and not before.

Tra. If it be so sir, that you are the man
Must steed us all, and me amongst the rest:

And if you breake the ice, and do this seek,

Atchieve the elder: let the yonger free,

For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so gracelesse be, to be ingrate.

Hor. Sir you say well, and well you do conceive,
And since you do profess to be a sutor,
You must as we do, gratifie this Gentleman,
To whom we all rest generally beholding.

Tra. Sir, I shall not be slacke, in signe wherof,
Please ye we may contrive this afternoone,
And quaffe carowfes to our Mistresse health,
And do as adversaries do in law,
Strive mightily, but eate and drinke as friends.

Gre. Bion. Oh excellent motion: fellowes let's be gon.

Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it so,
Petruchio, I shall be your Benvenuto.

Exeunt.

Enter Katherine and Bianca.

Bia. Good sister wrong me not, nor wrong your selfe,
To make a bondmaide and a slave of me,
That I disdaine: but for these other goods,
Vnbinde my hands, Ile pull them off my selfe,
Yea all my raiment, to my petticoate,
Or what you will command me, will I do,
So well I know my dutie to my elders.

Kate. Of all thy suters heere I charge thee tell Whom thou lov'st best: see thou dissemble not.

Bianca. Beleeve me sister, of all the men alive,
I never yet beheld that speciall face,
Which I could fancie, more then any other.

Kate. Minion thou lyest, Is't not Hortensio?

Bion. If you affect him sister, heere I sweare
Ile pleade for you my selfe, but you shall have him.

Kate. Oh then belike you fancie riches more,
You will have Gremio to keepe you faire.

Bian. Is it for him you do envie me so?

Nay then you jest, and now I well perceive

You have but jested with me all this while;

I prethee sister Kate untie my hands.

Ka. If that be jest, then all the rest was so. Strikes her.

Enter

Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why how now Dame, whence growes this insolence?

Bianca stand aside, poore gyrl she weepes :
Goply thy Needle, meddle not with her.
For shame thou Hilding of a divellish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her, that did ne're wrong thee?
When did she crosse thee with a bitter word?

Kat. Her silence flouts me, and Ile be reueng'd,

Flies after Bianca

Bap. What in my sight? Bianca get thee in. Exit.

Kat. What will you not suffer me: Nay now I see
She is your treasure, she must have a husband,
I must dance bare-foot on her wedding day,
And for your love to her, leade Apes in hell.
Talke not to me, I will goe sit and weepe,
Till I can finde occasion of revenge.

Bap. Was never Gentleman thus greiv'd as I?
But who comes here.

Enter Gremio, Lucentio, in the habit of a meane man, Petruccio with Tranio, with his boy bearing a Lute and Bookes.

Gre. Good morrow neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good morrow neighbour Gremio: God save you Gentlemen.

Pet. And you good sir: pray have you not a daughter, cal'd Katerina, faire and vertuous?

Bap. I have a daughter sir, cal'd Katerina,

Gre. You are too blunt, go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me signior Gremio, give me leave.

I am a gentleman of Verona sir,
That bearing of her beauty, and her wit,
Her affability and bashfull modestie:
Her wondrous qualities, and milde behaviour,
Am bold to shew my selfe a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witnessse
Of that report, which I so oft have heard,
And for an entrance to my entertainment,
I do present you with a man of mine
Cunning in Musicke, and the Mathematickes,
To instruct her fully in those sciences,
Whereof I know she is not ignorant:
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong,
His name is Licio, borne in Mantua.

Bap. Y'are welcome sir, and he for your good sake.
But for my daughter Katerina, this I know,
She is not for your turne, the more my greefe.

Pet. I see you do not meane to part with her.
Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not, I speake but what I finde,
Whence are you sir? What may I call your name.

Pet. Petruccio is my name, Antonio's sonne,
A man well knowne throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well: you are welcome for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale Petruccio, I pray let us that are poore petitioners speake too? Baccaro, you are mervay-lous forward.

Pet. Oh, Pardon me signior Gremio, I would faine bee doing.

Gre. I doubt it not sir. But you will curse
Your wooing neighbours: this is a guift
Very gratefull, I am sure of it, to expresse
The like kindnesse my selfe, that have bene
More kindly beholding to you then any

Freely give unto this yong Scholler, that hath Beene long studying at Rhemes, as cunning
In Greeke, Latine, and other Languages,
As the other in Musicke and Mathematickes:
His name is Cambio: pray accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks signior Gremio:
Welcome good Cambio. But gentle sir,
Me thinks you walke like a stranger,
May I be so bold, to know the cause of your coming?

Tra. Pardon me sir, the boldnesse is mine owne,
That being a stranger in this Citye here,
Do make thy selfe a suitor to your daughter,
Vnto Bianca, faire and vertuous:
Nor is your firme resolve unknowne to me,
In the preferment of the eldest sister.

This liberty is all that I request,
That upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome 'mongst the rest that woo,
And free accesse and fauour as the rest.

And toward the education of your daughters,
I heere bestow a simple instrument,

And this small packet of Greeke and Latine bookes,
If you accept them, then their worth is great:

Bap. Lucentio is your name, of whence I pray:

Tra. Of Pisa sir, sonne to Vinsencio.

Bap. A mightie man of Pisa by report,
I know him well: you are very welcome sir:
Take you the Lute, and you the set of bookes,
You shall go see your Pupils presently.
Holla, within.

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, leade these Gentlemen
To my two daughters, and then tell them both
These are their Tutors, bid them use them well,
We will go walke a little in the Orchard,
And then to dinner: you are passing welcome,
And so I pray you all to thinke your selves,

Pet. Signior Baptista, my businesse asketh haste,
And everie day I cannot come to wooe,
You know my father well, and in him me,
Left folie heire to al his Lands and goods,
Which I have bettered rather then decreast,
Then tell me, if I get your daughters love,
What dowrie shall I have with her to wife.

Bap. After my death, the one halfe of my Lands,
And in possession twentie thousand Crownes.

Pet. And for that dowrie, Ile assure her of Her widdow-hood, be it that she survive me
In all my Lands and Leases whosoever,
Let specialties be therefore drawne betweene us,
That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. I, when the speciall thing is well obtain'd,
That is her love: for that is all in all.

Pet. Why that is nothing: for I tell you father,
I am as peremptorie as the proud minded:
And where two raging fires meete together,
They do consume the thing that feedes their furie.
Though little fire growes great with little winde,
Yet extreame gusts will blow out fire and all:
So I to her, and so she yeelds to me,
For I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well maist thou woo, and happy bee thy speed:
But be thou arm'd for some unhappie words.

Pet. I to the prooffe, as Mountaines are for windes,
That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Enter Hortensio with his head broke.

Bap.

Bap. How now my friend, why dost thou looke so pale?

Hor. For feare I promise you, if I looke pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good Musitian?

Hor. I thinke she'll sooner prove a souldier,
Iron may hold with her, but never Lutes.

Bap. Why then thou canst not break her to the Lute?

Hor. Why no, for she hath broke the Lute to me:

I did but tell her she mistooke her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering,
When (with a most impatient divellish spirit)

Frets call you these? (quoth she) Ile fume with them:

And with that word she stroke me on the head,

And through the instrument my pate made way,

And there I stood amazed for a while,

As on a Pillorie, looking through the Lute,

While she did call me Rascall, Fidler;

And twangling Iacke, with twenty such vild tearmes,

As had she studied to misuse me so.

Pet. Now by the world, it is a lusty Wench

I love her ten times more then ere I did,

Oh how I long to have some chat with her.

Ba. Wel go with me, and be not so discomfited.

Proceed in practise with my yonger daughter,

She's apt to learne, and thankfull for good turnes:

Signior Petruchio; will you go with us,

Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

Exit. Maist Petruchio.

Pet. I pray you do. I will attend her heere.

And woo her with some spirit when she comes.

Say that she raile, why then Ile tell her plaine,

She sings as sweetly as a Nightingale:

Say that she frowne, Ile say she lookes as cleere

As morning Roses newly washt with dew:

Say she be mute, and will not speake a word,

Then Ile commend her volubility,

And say she vttereth piercing eloquence:

If she do bid me packe, Ile give her thanks,

As though she bid me stay by her a weeke:

If she deny to wed, Ile crave the day

When I shall aske the banes, and when be married.

But heere she comes, and now Petruchio speake.

Enter Katerina.

Good morrow Kate, for thats your name I heare.

Kat. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:

They call me Katerina, that do talke of me.

Pet. You lye infaith, for you are call'd plaine Kate,

And bony Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst:

But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendome,

Kate of Kate-hall, my super-dainty Kate,

For dainties are all Kates; and therefore Kate

Take this of me, Kate of my consolation,

Hearing thy mildnesse prais'd in every Towne,

Thy vertues spoke of, and thy beauty founded,

Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs,

My selfe am mov'd to woo thee for my wife.

Kat. Mov'd, in good time, let him that mov'd you hether

Remove you hence: I knew you at the first

You were a mouable.

Pet. Why, what's a mouable?

Kat. A joy'd stoole.

Pet. Thou hast hit it: come sit on me.

Kat. Asses are made to beare, and so are you.

Pet. Women are made to beare, and so are you.

Kat. No such lade sir as you, if me you meane.

Pet. Alas good Kate, I will not burthen thee,
For knowing thee to be but yong and light.

Kat. To light for such a swaine as you to catch,
And yet as heavy as my waight should be.

Pet. Should be, should: buzze.

Kat. Well tane, and like a buzzard.

Pet. Oh slow-wing'd Turtle, shal a buzzard take thee?

Kat. I for a Turtle, as he takes a buzard.

Pet. Come, come you Waspe, y'faith you are too angry.

Kat. If I be waspish, best beware my sting.

Pet. My remedy is then to plucke it out.

Kat. I, if the foole could finde it where it lies.

Pet. Who knowes not where a Waspe does weare his sting? In his taile.

Kat. In his tongue?

Pet. Whose tongue?

Kat. Yours if you talke of tales, and so farewell.

Pet. What with my tongue in your taile.

Nay, come againe, good Kate, I am a Gentleman,

Kat. That Ile trie. She strikes him

Pet. I sweare Ile cuffe you, if you strike againe.

Kat. So may you loose your armes,

If you strike me, you are no Gentleman,

And if no Gentleman, why then no armes.

Pet. A Herald Kate? Oh put me in thy bookes.

Kat. What is your Crest, a Coxcombe?

Pet. A comlesse Cocke, so Kate will be my Hen.

Kat. No Cocke of mine, you crow too like a craven

Pet. Nay come Kate; come; you must not looke so fowre.

Kat. It is my fashion when I see a Crab.

Pet. Why heere's no crab, and therefore looke not fowre.

Kat. There is, there is.

Pet. Then shew it me.

Kat. Had I a glasse, I would.

Pet. What, you meane my face.

Kat. Well ay'm'd of such a yong one.

Pet. Now by S. George I am too yong for you.

Kat. Yet you are wither'd.

Pet. 'Tis with cares.

Kat. I care not.

Pet. Nay heare you Kate. Insooth you scape not so.

Kat. I chafe you if I tatter. Let me go.

Pet. No, not a whit, I finde you passing gentle:

'Twas told me you were rough, and coy, and sullen,

And now I finde report a very liar,

For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous,

But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers.

Thou canst not frowne, thou canst not looke a scanke,

Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,

Nor hast thou pleasure to be crosse in talke:

But thou with mildnesse entertain'st thy wooers,

With gentle conference, soft, and affable.

Why does the world report that Kate doth limpe?

Oh slanderous world: Kate like the hazle twig

Is straight, and slender, and as browne in hue

As hazle nuts, and sweeter then the kernels:

Oh let me see thee walke: thou dost not halt.

Kat. Go foole, and wham thou keep'st command.

Pet. Did ever Diana become a Grove

As Kate this chamber with her princely gate,

O be thou Diana, and let her be Kate,

And

And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportfull.

Kate. Where did you study all this goodly speech?

Pet. It is extempore, from my mother wit.

Kate. A witty mother, witlesse else her sonne.

Pet. Am I not wife?

Kat. Yes, keepe you warme.

Pet. Marry so I meane sweet Katherine in thy bed:

And therefore setting all this chat aside,
Thus in plaine termes: your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife: your dowry greced on,
And will you, nill you, I will marry you.
Now Kate, I am a husband for your turne,
For by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,
Thou must be married to no man but me,

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Traymo.

For I am he am borne to tame you Kate,
And bring you from a wild Kat to a Kate
Conformable as other household Kates:

Heere comes your father, never make deniall,
I must, and will have Katherine to my wife. (daughter?)

Bap. Now Signior Petruchio, how speed you with my

Pet. How but well sir? how but well?

It were impossible I should speed amisse. (dumps?)

Bap. Why how now daughter Katherine, in your

Kat. Call you me daughter? now I promise you
You have shewed a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me wed to one halfe Lunaticke,
A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing lacke,
That thinkes with oathes to face the matter out.

Pet. Father, 'tis thus, your selfe and all the world
That talk'd of her, have talk'd amisse of her:

If she be curst, it is for pollicy,
For she's not troward, but modest as the Dove,
Shee is not hot, but temperate as the morne,
For patience she will prove a second Grissel,
And Roman Lucrece for her chastity:
And to conclude, we have greed so well together,
That upon sonday is the wedding day.

Kat. He see thee hang'd on sonday first. (first.)

Gre. Harke Petruchio, she sayes she'll see thee hang'd

Tra. Is this your speeding? nay then godnight our part.

Pet. Be patient gentlemen, I choose her for my selfe,
If she and I be pleas'd, what's that to you?

'Tis bargain'd twixt us twaine being alone,
That she shall still be curst in company.

I tell you 'tis incredible to beleve
How much she loves me: oh the kindest Kate,
Shee hung about my necke, and kisse on kisse
Shee wi'd so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twinke she won me to her love.

Oh you are novices, 'tis a world to see
How tame when men and women are alone,
A meacocke wretch can make the curstest shrew:
Give me thy hand Kate, I will unto Venice
To buy apparell 'gainst the wedding day;
Provide the feast father, and bid the guests,
I will be sure my Katherine shall be fine.

Bap. I know not what to say, but give me your hands,
God send you joy, Petruchio, 'tis a match.

Gre. Tra. Amen say we, we will be witnesses.

Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen adieu;
I will to Venice, sonday comes apace,
We will have rings, and things, and fine array,

And kisse me Kate, we will be married a sonday.

Exit Petruchio, and Katherine.

Gre. Was ever match clapt up so sodainely?

Bap. Faith Gentlemen now I play a merchants part,
And venture madly on a desperate Mart.

Tra. I was a commodity lay fretting by you,
'Twill bring you gaine, or perish on the seas.

Bap. The gaine I seeke, is quiet me the match.

Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch:
But now Baptista, to your yonger daughter,
Now is the day we long have looked for,
I am your neighbour, and was suter first.

Tra. And I am one that love Bianca more
Then words can witnesse, or your thoughts can guesse.

Gre. Yongling, thou canst not love so deare as I

Tra. Gray-beard thy love doth freeze.

Gre. But thine doth fry,
Skipper stand backe, 'tis age that nourisheth.

Tra. But youth in Ladies eyes that flourisheth.

Bap. Content you gentlemen, I will compound this 'Tis deeds must win the prize, and he of both (trife,
That can assure my daughter greatest dower,
Shall have Biancas love.

Say signior Gremio, what can you assure her?

Gre. First, as you know, my house within the City
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands:
My hangings all of sirian tapestry;
In luory cofers I have stufte my crownes:
In Cypres chests my arras counterpoints,
Costly apparell, tents, and Canopies,
Fine Linen, Turkey cushions bott with pearle,
Valiens of Venice gold, in needle worke:
Pewter and brasie, and all things that belongs
To house or house-keeping: then at my farme
I have a hundred milch-kine to the paille,
Sixe-score fat Oxen standing in my stalls,
And all things answerable to this portion.
My selfe am strooke in yeeres I must confesse,
And if I dye to morrow this is hers,
If whil't I live she will be onely mine.

Tra. That onely came well in: sir, list to me,
I am my Fathers heyre and onely sonne,
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
He leave her houses three or foure as good
Within rich Pisa walls, as any one

Old Signior Gremio has in Padua,
Besides, two thousand Duckets by the yeere
Offruitfull land, all which shall be her joynter.
What, have I pincht you Signior Gremio?

Gre. Two thousand Duckets by the yeere of land,
My Land amounts not to so much in all:
That she shall have, besides an Argosie
That now is lying in Marsellis roade:

What, have I choakt you with an Argosie?
Tra. Gremio, 'tis knowne my father hath no lesse
Then three great Argosies, besides two Galliasse
And twelve tite Gallies, these I will assure her,
And twice as much what ere thou offrest next.

Gre. Nay, I have offred all, I have no more,
And she can have no more then all I have,
If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why then the maid is mine from all the world
By your firme promise, Gremio is out vied.

Bap. I must confesse your offer is the best,
And let your father make her the assurance,

T

She

She is your owne, else you must pardon me :
If you should dye before him, where's her dower ?

Tra. That's but a cavill : he is old, I young.

Gre. And may not yong men dye as well as old ?

Bap. Well gentlemen, I am thus resolv'd,
On sonday next, you know

My daughter Katherine is to be married :

Now on the sonday following, shall Bianca

Be Bride to you, if you make this assurance :

If not, to Signior Gremio :

And so I take my leave, and thanke you both. Exit.

Gre. Adieu good neighbour : now I feare thee not :

Sirra, yong gamester, your father were a foole

To give thee all, and in his wayning age

Set foot under thy table : tut, a toy,

An old Italian foxe is not so kind my boy. Exit.

Tra. A vengeance on your crafty withered hide,

Yet I have fac'd it with a card of ten :

'Tis in my head to doe my master good :

I see no reason but suppos'd Lucentio

Must get a father, call'd suppos'd Vincentio,

And that's a wonder : fathers commonly

Do get their children : but in this case of wooing,

A child shall get a fire, if I faile not of my cunning. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fidler forbear, you grow too forward Sir,
Have you so soone forgot the entertainment
Her sister Katherine welcom'd you withall ?

Hort. But wrangling pedant, this is

The patronesse of heavenly harmony :

Then give me leave to have prerogative,

And when in Musicke we have spent an houre,

Your Lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous Ass that never read so farre,
To know the cause why musicke was ordain'd :

Was it not to refresh the mind of man

After his studies, or his usuall paine ?

Then give me leave to reade Philosophy,

And while I pause, serve in your harmony.

Hort. Sirra, I will not beare these braves of thine.

Bian. Why gentlemen, you doe me double wrong,
To strive for that which resteth in my choyce :

I am no breeching scholler in the schooles,

Ile not be tied to houres, nor pointed times,

But learne my Lessons as I please my selfe,

And to cut off all strife : heere sit we downe,

Take you your instrument, play you the whiles,

His Lecture will be done ere you have tun'd.

Hort. You'll leave his Lecture when I am in tune ?

Luc. That will be never, tune your instrument,

Bian. Where left we last ?

Luc. Heere Madam : Hic ibat Simois, hic est Sigeia tel-lus, hic steterat Priami regia Celsa senis.

Bian. Conster them.

Luc. Hic ibat, as I told you before, Simois, I am Lucentio, hic est, sonne unto Vincentio of Pisa, Sigeia tel-lus, disguised thus to get your love, hic steterat, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing, priami, is my man Tranio, regia, bearing my port, celsa senis that we might beguile
the old Pantaloun.

Hort. Madam, my instruments 'in tune.

Bian. Let's heare, oh fie, the treble jarres.

Luc. Spit in the hole man, and tune againe.

Bian. Now let me see if I can conster it. Hic ibat simois, I know you not; hic est Sigeia telus, I trust you not, hic steterat priami, take heed he heare us not, regia presume not, Celsa senis, despaire not.

Hort. Madam, 'tis now in tune.

Luc. All but the base.

Hort. The base is right, 'tis the base I have that jars.

Luc. How fiery and forward our Pedant is,
Now for my life that I have doth court my love,
Pedascule, Ile watch you better yet :
In time I may beleave, yet I mistrust.

Bian. Mistrust it not, for sure Æacides
Was Ajax call'd to from his grandfather.

Hort. I must bekeve my Master, else I promise you,
I should be arguing still upon that doubt,
But let it rest, now Lusio to you :
Good master take it not unkindly pray

That I have bene thus pleasant with you both.

Bian. You may goe walke, and give me leave a while,
My Lessons make no musicke in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formall sir, well I must waite
And watch withall, for but I be deceiv'd,
Our fine Musitian groweth amorous.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learne the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of Art,
To teach you gamoth in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pithy, and effectuall,
Then hath bene taught by any of my trade,
And there it is in writing fairely drawne.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamoth long agoe.

Hor. Yet reade the gamoth of Hortensio.

Bian. Gamoth I am, the ground of all accord :
Are, to plead Hortensio's passion :

Beeme, Bianca take him for thy Lord

(fave, that loves withall affection :

D solve, one Cliffe, two notes have I,

Elami, show pittie or I dye.

Call you this gamoth ? tut I like it not,

Old fashions please me best, I am not so nice

To change true rules for old inventions.

Enter a Messenger.

Nicke. Mistresse, your father prayes you leave your
And helpe to dresse your sisters chamber up, (bookes,
You know to morrow is the wedding day.

Bian. Farewell sweet masters both, I must be gone.

Luc. Faith Mistresse then I have no cause to stay.

Hort. But I have cause to pry into this pedant,
Methinkes he lookes as though he were in love:
Yet if thy thoughts Bianca be so humble
To cast thy wandring eyes on every stale :

Seize thee that List, if once I find thee ranging,

Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing. Exit.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katherine, Bianca, and others, attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day
That Katherine and Petruchio should be married,
And yet we heare not of our sonne in Law :
What will be said, what mockery will it be ?
To want the Bride-groome when the Priest attends
To speake the ceremoniall rites of marriage ?
What sayes Lucentio to this shame of ours ?

Kate. No shame but mine, I must forsooth be forst
To give my hand oppos'd against my heart
Vnto a mad-braine rudesby, full of spleene,
Who woo'd in haste, and meanes to wed at leysure:
I told you I, he was a franticke foole,
Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour,
And to be noted for a merry man;
He'll wooe a thousand, point the day of marriage,
Make friends, invite, yes and proclaime the banes,
Yet never meanes to wed where he hath woo'd:
Now must the world point at poore Katherine,
And say, loe, there is mad Petruchio's wife
If it would please him come and marry her.

Tra. Patience good Katherine and Baptista too,
Vpon my life Petruchio meanes but well,
What ever fortune stayes him from his word,
Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise,
Though he be merry, yet withall he's honest.

Kate. Would Katherine had never seene him though.
Exit weeping.

Bap. Goe girl, I cannot blame thee now to weepe,
For such an injury would vex a saint,
Much more a shrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. Master, master, newes, and such newes as you never heard of.

Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?

Bio. Why, is it not newes to heare of Petruchio's com-
Bap. Is he come? (ming?)

Bio. Why no sir.

Bap. What then?

Bio. He is comming.

Bap. When will he be heere?

Bio. When he stands where I am, and sees you there.

Tra. But say, what to thine old newes?

Bio. Why Petruchio is comming, in a new hat and an old jerkin, a paire of old breeches thrice turn'd; a paire of bootes that have bene candle-cases, one buckled, another lac'd: an old rusty sword tane out of the Towne Armory, with a broken hilt, and chapeleffe: with two broken points: his horse hip'd with an old mothy saddle, the stirrups of no kindred: besides posselt with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine, troubled with the Lampasse, infected with the fashions, full of Windegalls sped with Spavins, raied with the Yellowes, past cure of the Fives, starke spoyl'd with the Staggers, begnawne with the Bots, Waid in the backe, and shoulder-shotten, neere leg'd before, and with a halfe-cheek Bitte, and a headstall of sheepes leather, which being restrain'd to keepe him from stumbling, hath bene often burst, and now repaired with knots: one girth fixe times peec'd, and a womans Crupper of velure, which hath two letters for her name, fairely set dowee in studs, and heere and there peec'd with packthread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bio. Oh sir, his Lackey, for all the world Caparison'd like the horse: with a linnen stocke on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartred with a red and blew list; an old hat, and the humor of forty fancies prickt in't for a feather: a monster, a very monster in apparell, and not like a Christian foot-boy, or a gentlemans Lackey.

Tra. 'Tis some odde humor prickts him to this fashion,
Yet oftentimes he goes but meane apparel'd.

Bap. I am glad he's come now howsoever he comes.

Bion. Why sir, he comes not.

Bap. Didst thou not say he comes?

Bion. Who, that Petruchio came?

Bap. I, that Petruchio came (backe.)

Bion. No sir, I say his horse comes with him on his

Bap. Why that's all one.

Bion. Nay by S. Iany, I hold you a penny, a horse and a man is more then one, and yet not many.

Enter Petruchio, and Grumio.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who's at home?

Bap. You are welcome sir.

Pet. And yet I come not well.

Bap. And yet you halt not.

Tra. Not so well apparell'd as I wish you were.

Pet. Were it better I should rush in thus:
But where is Kate? where is my lovely Bride?
How does my father? gentles methinks you frowne,
And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some Commet, or unusuall prodigy?

Bap. Why sir, you know this is your wedding day:
First were we sad, fearing you would not come,
Now sadder that you come so unprovided:
Fye, doffe this habit, shame to your estate,
An eye-fore to our solemne festivall.

Tra. And tell us what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife:
And sent you hither so unlike your selfe?

Pet. Tedious it were to tell, and harsh to heare,
Sufficeth I am come to keepe my word,
Though in some part inforced to disgresse,
Which at more leysure I will so excuse,
As you shall well be satisfied with all.

But where is Kate? I stay too long from her.
The morning weares, 'tis time we were at Church.

Tra. See not your Bride in these unreverent robes,
Goe to my chamber, put on clothes of mine.

Pet. Not I, beleeve me, thus Ile visit her.

Bap. But thus I trust you will not marry her. (words.)

Pet. Good sooth even thus: therefore ha done with
To me she's married, not unto my cloathes:
Could I repaire what she will weare in me,
As I can change these poore accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate, and better for my selfe.
But what a foole am I to chat with you,
When I should bid good morrow to my Bride?
And seale the title with a lovely kisse.

Exit.

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attire,
We will perswade him be it possible,
To put on better ere he goe to Church.

Bap. Ile after him, and see the event of this. Exit.

Tra. But sir, Love concerneth us to adde
Her fathers liking, which to bring to passe
As before I imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man what ere he be,
It skills not much, weele fit him to our turne,
And he shall be Vscentio of Pisa,
And make assurance heere in Padua
Of greater summes then I have promised,
So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with content.

Luc. Were it not that my fellow schoolemaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly:

'Twere good me-thinks to steale our marriage,
Which once perform'd, let all the world say no,
Ile keepe mine owne despite of all the world.

Tra. That by degrees we meane to looke into,

And watch our vantage in this businesse,
We'll over-reach the grey-beard Gremio,
The narrow prying father Minola,
The quaint Musician, amorous Lisio,
All for my Masters sake Lucentio.

Enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio, came you from the Church?

Gre. As willingly as ere I came from schoole.

Tra. And is the Bride and Bridegroom comming home?

Gre. A bridegroome say you? tis a groomer indeed,
A grumbling groomer, and that the girle shall find.

Tra. Curstier then she, why 'tis impossible.

Gre. Why hee's a devill, a devill, a very fiend.

Tra. Why she's a devill, a devill, the devils damme.

Gre. Tut, she's a Lambe, a Dove, a foole to him:

He tell you sir Lucentio; when the Priest
Should aske if Katherine should be his wife,

I, by goggs woones quoth he, and swore so loud,
That all amaz'd the Priest let fall the booke,

And as he stoop'd againe to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridegroome tooke him such a cuffe,
That downe fell Priest and booke, and booke and Priest,
Now take them up quoth he, if any list.

Tra. What said the wench when he rose up againe?

Gre. Trembled and shooke: for why, he stamp'd and swore.

As if the Vicar meant to cozen him:

But after many ceremonies done,

He calls for wine, a health quoth he, as if

He had bene aboard carowling to his Mates

After a storme; quast off the Muscadell,

And threw the fops all in the Sextons face:

Having no other reason, but that his beard

Grew thinne and hungerly, and seem'd to aske

Him fops as he was drinking: This done, he tooke

The Bride about the necke, and kist her lips

With such a clamorous smacke, that at the parting,

All the Church did eccho: and I seeing this,

Came thence for very shame, and after me,

I know the rout is comming; such a mad marriage

Never was before: harke, harke, I heare the minstrels play. Musicke playes.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Bianca, Hortensio, Baptista.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thanke you for your
I know you thinke to dine with me to day, (paines,

And have prepar'd great store of wedding cheere,

But so it is, my haste doth call me hence,

And therefore heere I meane to take my leave.

Bap. Is't possible you will away to night?

Pet. I must away to day before night come,
Make it no wonder: if you knew my businesse,

You would intreat me rather goe then stay:

And honest company, I thanke you all,

That have beheld me give away my selfe

To this most patient, sweet, and vertuous wife,

Dine with my father, drinke a health to me,

For I must hence, and farewell to you all.

Tra. Let us intreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Gre. Let me intreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Kat. Let me intreat you.

Pet. I am content.

Kat. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay,
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kate. Now if you love me stay.

Pet. Gremio, my horse.

Gre. I sir, they be ready; the Oates have eaten the horses.

Kate. Nay then,

Doe what thou canst, I will not goe to day,

No, nor to morrow, not till I please my selfe,

The dore is open sir, there lyes your way,

You may be jogging whiles your bootes are greene:

For me, He not be gone till I please my selfe,

'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groomer,

That take it on you at the first so roundly.

Pet. O Kate content thee, prethee be not angry.

Kat. I will be angry, what hast thou to doe?

Father, be quiet, he shall stay my leisure.

Gre. I marry sir, now it begins to worke.

Kat. Gentlemen, forward to the bridall dinner.

I see a woman may be made a foole

If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall goe forward Kate at thy command,

Obeey the Bride you that attend on her.

Goe to the feast, revell and domineere,

Carowse full measure to her maiden-head,

Be madde and merry, or goe hang you selves:

But for my bonny Kate, she must with me:

Nay, looke not big, nor stampe, nor stare, nor fret,

I will be master of what is mine owne,

Shee is my goods, my chattels, she is my house,

My household-stuffe, my field, my barne,

My horse, my ox, my asse, my any thing,

And heere she stands, touch her who ever dare,

He bring mine action on the proudest he,

That stops my way in Padua: Gremio

Draw forth thy weapon, we are beset with theeves,

Rescue thy Mistrisse if thou be a man:

Fear not sweet wench, they shall not touch thee Kate,

He buckler thee against a Million. Exeunt. P. Ka.

Bap. Nay, let them goe, a couple of quiet ones. (ing

Gre. Went they not quickly, I should dye with laugh-

Tra. Of all mad matches never was the like.

Luc. Mistrisse, what's your opinion of your sister?

Bian. That being mad her selfe, she's madly mated.

Gre. I warrant him Petruchio is Kated.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though Bride and Bride-

For to supply the places at the table, (groomer wants

You know there wants no junkets at the feast:

Lucentio, you shall supply the Bridegroomes place,

And let Bianca take her sisters roome.

Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall Lucentio: come gentlemen lets goe.

Enter Gremio.

Exeunt.

Gre. Fye, fie on all tired Iades, on all mad Masters, and all foule wayes: was ever man so beaten? was ever man so raide? was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are comming after to warme them:

now were not I a little pot, and soone hot; my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the rooffe of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me, but I with blowing the fire shall warme my selfe: for considering the weather, a taller man then I will take cold: Holla, hoa Curtis.

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that calls so coldly?

Gre. A peece of Ice: if thou doubt it, thou maist slide from my shoulder to my heele, with no greater grater a run but my head and my necke. A fire good Curtis.

Cur. Is my Master and his wife comming Grumio?

Grn. Oh I Curtis I, and therefore fire, fire, cast on no water.

Cur. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported.

Grn. She was good Curtis before this frost: but thou know'st winter tames man, woman, and beast: for it hath tam'd my old master, and my new mistress, and my selfe fellow Curtis.

Cur. Away you three inch foole, I am no beast.

Grn. Am I but three inches? Why thy horse is a foot and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complaine on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at hand) thou shalt soone feece; to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office.

Cur. I prethee good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Grn. A cold world Curtis in every office but thine, and therefore fire: doe thy duty, and have thy duty, for my Master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Cur. There's fire ready, and therefore good Grumio the newes.

Grn. Why lacke boy, ho boy, and as much newes as thou wilt.

Cur. Come, you are so full of conicatching.

Grn. Why therefore fire, for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the Cooke, is supper ready, the house trim'd, rushes strew'd, cobwebs swept, the serving men in their new fustian, the white stockings, and every officer his wedding garment on? Be the lackes faire within, the Gills faire without, the Carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Cur. All ready: and therefore I pray thee what newes.

Grn. First know my horse istired, my master and mistress false out. Cur. How?

Grn. Out of their saddles into the durt, and thereby hangs a tale.

Cur. Let's ha't good Grumio.

Grn. Lend thine eare.

Cur. Heere.

Grn. There.

Cur. This 'tis to feece a tale, not to heare a tale.

Grn. And therefore 'tis call'd a sensible tale: and this Cuffe was but to knocke at your eare, and beseech listening: now I begin, Inprimis we came downe a foule hill, my Master riding behinde my Mistress.

Cur. Both of one horse?

Grn. What's that to thee?

Cur. Why a horse.

Grn. Tell thou the tale: but hadst thou not crost me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse: thou shouldst have heard in how miery a place, how she was bemoil'd, how he left her with the horse upon her, how he beat me because her horse stumbled, how she waded through the durt to plucke him off me: how he swore, how she prai'd, that never prai'd before: how I cryed, how the horses ranne away, how her bridle was burst: how I lost my crupper, with many things of worthy memory, which now shall dye in oblivion, and thou returne unexperienc'd to thy grave.

Cur. By this reckning he is more shrew than she.

Grn. I, and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find when he comes home. But what talke I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Ioseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugersop and the rest: let their heads bee slickely comb'd, their blew coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit, lot them curtseie with their left legges, and not presume to touch a haire of my Masters horie-taile, till they kisse their hands. Are they all ready?

Cur. They are.

Grn. Call them forth.

Cur. Doe you heare ho? you must meet my maister to countenance my Mistress.

Grn. Why she hath a face of her owne.

Cur. Who knowes not that?

Grn. Thou it seemes, that calls for company to countenance her.

Cur. I call them forth to credit her.

Enter foure or five serving men.

Grn. Why she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Nat. Welcome home Grumio.

Phil. How now Grumio.

Ios. What Grumio.

Nick. Fellow Grumio.

Nath. How now old lad.

Grn. Welcome you: how how you: what you: fellow you: and thus much for greeting. Now my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things neate?

Nat. All things are ready, how neere is our master?

Grn. E'ne at hand, alighted by this: and therefore be not—— Cockes passion, silence, I heare my Master.

Enter Petruchio and Kate.

Pet. Where be these knaves? What no man at doore To hold my stirrop, nor to take my horse?

Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?

All ser. Heere, heere sir, heere sir.

Pet. Heere sir, heere sir, heere sir, heere sir: You logger-headed and unpollisht groomes: What? no attendance? no regard? no duty? Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Grn. Heere sir, as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You pezant, swaine, yon horson malt-horse drudge, Did I not bid thee meete me in the Parke, And bring along the rascall knaves with thee?

Grn. Nathaniels coate sir was not fully made, And Gabriels pumpes were all unpink'th heele: There was no Linke to colour Peters hat, And Walters dagger was not come from theathing: There were none fine, but Adam, Rafe, and Gregory, The rest were ragged, old, and beggerly, Yet as they are, they come to meete you.

Pet. Goe rascalls, goe and fetch my supper in. Ex. Ser. Where is the life that late I led?

Where are those? Sit downe Kate.

And welcome. Soud, soud, soud, soud.

Enter servants with supper.

Why when I say? Nay good sweet Kate be merry. Off with my boots, you rogues: you villaines, when?

It was the Friar of Orders gray,

As he forth walked on his way.

Out you rogue, you plucke my foote awry, Take that, and mend the plucking of the other. Be merry Kate: Some water heere: what hoa.

Enter one with water.

Where's my Spaniel Troilus? Sirra, get you hence, And bid my cozen Ferdinand come hither: One Kate that you must kisse, and be acquainted with. Where are my Slippers? Shall I have some water? Come Kate and wash, and welcome heartily: You horson villaine, will you let it fall?

Kate. Patience I pray you, 'twas a fault unwilling.

Pet. A horson beetle-headed flap-ear'd knave :
Come Kate sit downe, I know you have a stomacke,
Will you give thankes, sweet Kate, or else shall I ?
What's this, Mutton ?

1. Ser. I.

Pet. Who brought it ?

Ser. I.

Pet. 'Tis burnt, and so is all the meate :
What dogges are these ? Where is the rascall Cooke ?
How durst you villaines bring it from the dresser
And serve it thus to me that love it not ?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all :
You heedlesse jolt-heads, and unmanner'd slaves.
What, doe you grumble ? Ile be with you straight.

Kate. I pray you husband be not so disquiet,
The meate was well, if you were so contented.

Pet. I tell thee Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away,
And I expressly am forbid to touch it :
For it engenders choller, planteth anger,
And better 'twere that both of us did fast,
Since of our selves, our selves are chollericke,
Then feede it with such over-rosted flesh :
Be patient, to morrow't shall be mended,
And for this night we'l fast for company.
Come I will bring thee to thy Bridall chamber. Exeunt.

Enter Servants severally.

Nath. Peter didst ever see the like ?

Peter. He kills her in her owne humor.

Grn. Where is he ?

Enter Curtis a Servant.

Cur. In her chamber, making a sermon of continen-cy to her, and railes, and sweare, and rates, that she (poore soule) knowes not which way to stand, to looke, to speake, and sits as one new risen from a dreame. Away, away, for he is comming hither.

Enter Petruchio.

Pet. Thus have I politickely begun my reigne,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully :
My Faulcon now is sharpe, and passing empty,
And till she stoope, she must not be full gorg'd,
For then she never lookes upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my Haggard,
To make her come, and know her Keepers call :
That is, to watch her, as we watch these Kites,
That baite, and beate, and will not be obedient :
She eate no meate to day, nor none shall eate.
Last night she slept not, nor to night she shall not :
As with the meate, some undeserved fault
Ile find about the making of the bed,
And heere Ile sling the pillow, there the bouldster,
This way the Coverlet, another way the sheetes :
I, and amid this hurly I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her,
And in conclusion, she shall watch all night,
And if she chance to nod, Ile raile and brawle,
And with the clamor keepe her still awake :
This is a way to kill a Wife with kindnesse,
And thus Ile curbe her mad and headstrong humor :
He that knowes better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speake, 'tis charity to shew. Exit.

Enter Tranio, and Hortensio.

Tra. Is't possible friend Liso, that mistress Bianca
Doth fancy any other but Lucentio,
I tell you sir, she beares me faire in hand.

Hor. Sir, to satisfie you in what I have said,

Stand by, and marke the manner of histeaching.

Enter Bianca.

Lut. Now Mistress, profit you in what you read ?

Bian. What Master reade you first, resolve me that ?

Lut. I reade, that I professe the Art to love.

Bian. And may you prove sir Master of your Art.

Lut. While you sweet deere prove Mistress of my heart.

Hor. Quicke proceeders marry, now tell me I pray, you that durst sweare that your mistress Bianca
Lov'd me in the World so well as Lucentio.

Tra. Oh despightfull Love, unconstant womankind,
I tell thee Liso this is wonderfull.

Hor. Mistake no more, I am not Liso,
Nor a Musitian as I seeme to be,
But one that scornes to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a Gentleman,
And makes a God of such a Cullion ;
Know sir, that I am call'd Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca,
And since mine eyes are witnessse of her lightnesse,
I will with you, if you be so contented,
Forswear Bianca, and her love for ever.

Hor. See how they kisse and court: Signior Lucentio,
Heere is my hand, and heere I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more, but doe forswear her
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd them withall.

Tra. And heere I take the like unfained oath:
Never to marry with her, though she would intreat,
Eye on her, see how beastly she doth court him.

Hor. Would all the world but he had quite forsworne
For me, that I may surely keepe mine oath.
I will be married to a wealthy Widdow,
Ere three dayes passe, which hath as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud disdainefull Haggard,
And so farewell signior Lucentio,
Kindnesse in women, not their Beauteous lookes
Shall win my love, and I take my leave,
In resolution, as I swore before.

Tra. Mistress Bianca, blesse you with such grace,
As longeth to a Lovers blessed case :
Nay, I have tane you napping gentle Love,
And have forsworne you with Hortensio.

Bian. Tranio you jest, but have you both forsworne
me ?

Tra. Mistress we have.

Lut. Then we are rid of Liso.

Tra. I faith he'll have a lusty Widdow now,
That shall be woo'd, and wedded in a day.

Bian. God give him joy.

Tra. I, and he'll tame her.

Bian. He sayes so Tranio.

Tra. Faith he is gone unto the taming schoole.

Bian. The taming schoole : what is there such a place ?

Tra. I mistress, and Petruchio is the master,
That teacheth trickes eleven and twenty long,
To tame a shrew, and charme her chattering tongue.

Enter Biandello.

Bian. Oh Master, master, I have watcht so long,
That I am dogge-weary, but at last I spied
An ancient Angell comming downe the hill,
Will serve the turne.

Tra. What is he Biandello.

Bian. Master, a Marcantant, or a pedant,

I know not what, but formall in apparell,
In gate and countenance surly like a father.

Luc. And what of him Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and trust my tale,
He make him glad to see me Vincensio,
And give assurance to Baptista Minola,
As if he were the right Vincensio.
Take me your love, and then let me alone.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you sir.

Tra. And you sir, you are welcome.

Travaille you farre on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir at the farthest for a weeke or two,

But then up farther, and as farre as Rome,

And so to Tripoly, if God lend me life.

Tra. What Countreyman I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua Sir, marry God forbid,

And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Ped. My life sir? how I pray? for that goes hard.

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua

To come to Padua, know you not the cause?

Your ships are staid at Venice, and the Duke

For private quarrell 'twixt your Duke and him,

Hath publish'd and proclaim'd it openly:

'Tis marvaile, but that you are but newly come,

You might have heard it else proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas sir, it is worse for me then so,

For I have bills for mony by exchange

From Florence, and must heere deliver them.

Tra. Well sir, to doe you courtesie,

This will I doe, and this I will advise you.

First tell me, have you ever beene at Pisa?

Ped. I sir, in Pisa have I often beene,

Pisa renowned for grave Citizens.

Tra. Among them know you one Vincensio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:

A Merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father sir, and sooth to say,

In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bion. As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity,

This favor will I doe you for his sake,

And thinke it not the worst of all your fortunes

That you are like to Sir Vincensio.

His name and credite shall you undertake,

And in my house you shall be friendly lodg'd,

Looke that you take upon you as you should,

You understand me sir: so shall you stay

Till you have done your business in the City:

If this be court'sie sir, accept of it.

Ped. Oh sir I doe, and will repute you ever

The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then goe with me, to make the matter good,

This by the way I let you understand,

My father is heere look'd for every day,

To passe assurance of a dowre in marriage

'Twixt me, and one Baptista daughter heere:

In all these circumstances he instruct you,

Goe with me sir to cloath you as becomes you. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Katherine, and Grumio.

Gr. No, no forsooth I dare not for my life.

Kat. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears.

What, did he marry me to famish me?

Beggars that come unto my fathers doore,

Vpon intreaty have a present almes,

If not, elsewhere they meete with charity:

But I, who never knew how to intreate,

Nor never needed that I should intreate,

Am starv'd for meate, giddy for lacke of sleepe:

With oathes kept waking, and with brawling fed,

And that which spights me more then all these wants,

He does it under name of perfect love:

As who should say, if I should sleepe or eate

'Twere deadly sicknesse, or else present death.

I prethee goe, and get me some repast:

I care not what, so it be holtsome foode.

Gr. What say you to a Neats foote?

Kat. 'Tis passing good, I prethee let me have it.

Gr. I feare it is too phlegmaticke a meate.

How say you to a fat Tripe finely broy'd?

Kat. I like it well, good Grumio fetch it me.

Gr. I cannot tell, I feare 'tis chollericke.

What say you to a peece of Beefe and Mustard?

Kat. A dish that I doe love to feede upon.

Gr. I, but the Mustard is too hot a little.

Kat. Why then the Beefe, and let the Mustard rest.

Gr. Nay then I will not, you shall have the Mustard

Or else you get no beece of Grumio.

Kat. Then both or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Gr. Why then the Mustard without the beece.

Kat. Goe get thee gone, thou false deluding slave.

Bouts him.

That feed'st me with the very name of meate,

Sorrow on thee, and all the packe of you

That triumph thus upon my misery:

Goe get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio, and Hortensio with meate.

Petr. How fares my Kate, what sweeting all a mort?

Hor. Mistris, what cheere?

Kat. Faith as cold as can be.

Petr. Plucke up thy spirits, looke cheerefully upon me.

Heere Love, thou seest how diligent I am,

To dresse thy meate my selfe, and bring it thee.

I am sure sweet Kate, this kindnesse merites thanks.

What, not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not:

And all my paines is sorted to no prooffe.

Heere take away this dish.

Kat. I pray you let it stand.

Petr. The poorest service is repaide with thanks,

And so shall mine before you touch the meate.

Kat. I thanke you sir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie you are too blame:

Come Mistris Kate, he beare you company.

Petr. Eate it up all Hortensio, if thou lovest me:

Much good doe it unto thy gentle heart;

Kat. eate apace; and now my hony Love,

Will we returne unto thy Fathers house,

And revell it as bravely as the best,

With silken coats and caps, and golden Rings,

With Ruffes and Cuffes, and Fardingales, and things:

With Scarfes, and Fannes, and double change of brau'ry,

With Amber Bracelets, Beades, and all this knau'ry.

With hast thou din'd? The Tailor stales thy leasure,

The decke thy body with his rustling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come

Come Tailor, let us see these ornaments.

Enter Haberdasher.

Lay forth the gowne. What newes with you sir?

Fel. Heere is the cap your Worship did bespeake.

Pet. Why this was moulded on a porrenger,
A Veluet dish: Fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy,
Why 'tis a cockle or a walnut-shell,
A knacke, a toy, a trick, a babies cap:
Away with it, come let me have a bigger.

Kate. Ile have no bigger, this doth fit the time,
And Gentlewomen weare such caps as these.

Pet. When you ate gentle, you shall have one too,
And not till then.

Hor. That will not be in hast.

Kate. Why sir I trust I may have leave to speake,
And speake I will. I am no child, no babe,
Your betters have indur'd me say my minde,
And if you cannot, best you stop your eares.
My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,
Or else my heart concealing it will breake,
And rather then it shall, I will be free,
Even to the uttermost as I please in words.

Pet. Why thou saist true, it is a paltry cap,
A custard coffen, a bauble, a silken pye,
I love thee well in that thou lik'st it not.

Kate. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap,
And it I will have, or I will have none.

Pet. Thy gowne, why I: come Tailor let us see't,
Oh mercy God, what masking stuffe is heere?
What this? a sleeve? 'tis like a demi cannon,
What, up and downe caru'd like an apple-Tart?
Heeres snip, and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,
Like to a Censor in a barbers shoppe:

Why what a devils name Tailor cal'st thou this?

Hor. I see shees like to have neither cap nor growne.

Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion, and the time.

Pet. Marry and did: but if you be remembred,
I did not bid you marre it to the time.
Goe hop me over every kennell home,
For you shall hop without my custome sir:
Ile none of it: hence, make your best of it.

Kate. I never saw a better fashion'd gowne,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable:
Belike you meane to make a puppet of me.

Pet. Why true, he meanes to make a puppet of thee.

Tai. Shee laves your Worship meanes to make a puppet of her.

Pet. Oh most monstrous arrogance:
Thou lye'st, thou thred, thou thimble,
Thou yard, three quarters, halfe yard, quarter, naile,
Thou Flea, thou Nit, thou winter cricket thou:
Brav'd in mine owne house with a skeine of thred:
Away thou Ragge, thou quantity, thou remnant,
Or I shall so be-mete thee with thy yard,
As thou shalt thinke on prating whil'st thou liv'st:
I tell thee I, that thou hast marr'd her gowne.

Tai. Your worship is deceiv'd, the gowne is made
Iust as my Master had direction:

Grumio gave order how it should be done.

Grn. I gave him no order, I gave him the stuffe.

Tai. But how did you desire it should be made?

Grn. Marry sir with needle and thred.

Tai. But did you not request to have it cut?

Grn. Thou hast fac'd many things.

Tai. I have.

Grn. Face not me: thou hast brav'd many men, brave not me; I will neither be fac'd nor brav'd. I say unto the,
I bid thy Master cut but the gowne, but I did not bid him cut it to peeces. Ergo thou liest.

Tai. Why here is the note of the fashion to testifie.

Pet. Reade it.

Grn. The note lyes in's throte if he say I said so.

Tai. Inprimis, a loose bodied gowne.

Grn. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gowne, sow me in the skirts of it, and beate me to death with a bot-tome of browne thred: I said a gowne.

Pet. Proceed.

Tai. With a small compast cape.

Grn. I confesse the cape.

Tai. With a trunke sleeve

Grn. I confesse two sleeves.

Tai. The sleeves curiously cut.

Pet. I there's the villany.

Grn. Error i'th bill sir, error i'th bill? I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sow'd up againe, and that Ile prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tai. This is true that I say, and I had thee in place where thou should know it.

Grn. I am for thee straight: take thou the bill, give me thy mete-yard, and spare not me.

Hor. God-a-mercy Grumio, then he shall have no oddes.

Pet. Well sir in breefe the gowne is not for me.

Grn. You are i'th right sir, 'tis for my mistris.

Pet. Goe take it up unto thy masters use.

Grn. Villaine, not for thy life: Take up my Mistresse gowne for thy masters use.

Pet. Why sir, what's your conceit in that?

Grn. Oh sir, the conceit is deeper then you thinke for:
Take up my Mistris gowne to his masters use.
Oh fie, fie, fie.

Pet. Hortensio, say thou wilt see the Tailor paid:
Goe take it hence, be gon, and say no more.

Hor. Tailor, Ile pay thee for thy gowne to morrow,
Take no unkindnesse of his hasty words:

Away I say, commend me to thy Master. Exit Tai.

Pet. Well, come my Kate, we will unto your fathers,
Even in these honest meane habiliments:

Our purses shall be proud, our garments poore:

For 'tis the minde that makes the body rich.

And as the Sunne breakes through the darke'st clouds,
So honor peereth in the meanest habit.

What is the lay more precious then the Larke,

Because his feathers are more beautifull?

Or is the Adder better then the Eele,

Because his painted skin contents the eye?

Oh no good Kate: neither art thou the worse

For this poore furniture, and meane array.

If thou accountedst it shame, lay it on me,

And therefore frolicke, we will hence forthwith:

To feast and sport us at thy fathers house,

Goe call my men, and let us straight to him,

And bring our horses unto Long-lane end,

There will we mount, and thither walke on foote.

Let's see, I thinke 'tis now some seven a clocke,

And well we may come there by dinner time.

Kate. I dare assure you sir, 'tis almost two,

And 'twill be supper time ere you come there:

Pet. It shall be seven ere I goe to horse:

Looke what I speake, or doe, or thinke to doe;

You

You are still crossing it, first let's alone,
I will not goe to day, and ere I doe,
It shall be what a clocke I say it is.
Hor. Why so: this gallant will command the sunne.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant drest like Vincentio.

Tra. Sirs, this is the house, please it you that I call.

Ped. I what else, and but I be deceived,
Signior Baptista may remember me
Neere twenty yeeres agoe in Genoa.

Tra. Where we were lodgers, at the Pegasus,
Tis well, and hold your owne in any case
With such austeritie as longeth to a father.

Enter Biondello.

Ped. I warrant you: but first here comes your boy,
'Twere good he were schoold.

Tra. Feare you not him: first Biondello,
Now doe your duty throughly I advise you:
Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.

Bion. Tut, feare not me.

Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

Bion. I told him that your father was at Venice,
And that you look't for him this day in Padua.

Tra. Th'art a tall fellow, hold thee that to drinke, Heere comes Baptista: set your countenance fir.

Enter Baptista and Lucentio: and Pedant booted and bare headed.

Tra. Signior Baptista you are happily met:
Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of,
I pray you stand good father to me now,
Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft son: first by your leave, having come to Padua
To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio
Made me acquainted with a waighy cause
Of love betweene your daughter and himselfe:
And for the good report I heare of you,
And for the love he beareth to your daughter,
And she to him; to stay him not too long,
I am content in a good fathers care
To have him matcht, and if you please to like
No worse then I fir upon some agreement
Me shall you find most ready and most willing
With one consent to have her so bestowed:
For curious I cannot be with you
Signior Baptista, of whom I heare so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say,
Your plainnesse and your shortnesse please me well:
Right true it is your sonne Lucentio here
Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections:
And therefore if you say no more then this,
That like a Father you will deale with him,
And passe my daughter a sufficient dower,
The match is made, and all is done,
Your sonne shall have my daughter with consent.

Tra. I thanke you sir, where then doe you know best
We be assid and such assurance tane,
As shall with either parts agreement stand.

Bap. Not in my house Lucentio, for you know
Pitchers have eares, and I have many servants,
Besides old Gremio is harkning still,
Ann haply we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, and it like you sir
There doth my father ly: and there this night

Weele passe the businesse privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My Boy shall fetch the Scrivener presently,
The worst is this that at so slender warning,
You are like to have a thin and slender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well:

Cambio hie you home, and bid Bianca make her ready straight:

And if you will tell what hath hapned,
Lucentio Father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio wife.

Bion. I pray the gods she may with all my heart:

Exit.

Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone.

Enter Peter.

Signior Baptista, shall I leade the way,
We come, one messe is like to be your cheere,
Come sir, we will better it in Pisa.

Bap. I follow you.

Exeunt.

Enter Lucentio and Biondello.

Bion. Cambio.

Luc. What saist thou Biondello?

Biond. You saw my Master winke and laugh upon
you?

Luc. Biondello, what of that?

Biond. Faith nothing: but has left me here behind to expound the meaning or morrall of his signes and tokens.

Luc. I pray thee moralize them.

Bion. Then thus: Baptista is safe talking with the deceiving Father of a deceitfull sonne.

Luc. And what of him?

Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.

Luc. And then?

Bion. The old Priest at Saint Lukes Church is at your command at all houres.

Luc. And what of all this?

Bion. I cannot tell, except they are busied about a counterfeit assurance: take you assurance of her, Cum privilegio ad imprimendum solum, to th' Church take the Priest,
Clarke, and some sufficient honest witnesses:
It this be not that you looke for, I have no more to say,
But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

Luc. Hear'st thou Biondello?

Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoone as she went to the Garden for Parsetey to stufte a Rabit, and so may you sir: and so adew sir, my Master hath appointed me to goe to Saint Lukes to bid the Priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix.

Exit.

Luc. I may and will, if she be so contented:
She will be pleas'd, then wherefore should I doubt:
Hap what hap may, Ile roundly goe about her:
It shall goe hard if Cambio goe without her.

Exit.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Hortensio.

Pet. Come on a Gods name, once more toward our fathers:

Good Lord how bright and goodly shines the Moone:

Kate. The Moone, the Sunne: it is not Moonelight
now.

Pet. I say it is the Moone that shines so bright.

Kat. I know it is the Sunne that shines so bright.

Pet. Now by my mothers sonne, and thar's my selfe,

It

It shall be moone, or starre, or what I I list,
Or ere I journey to your Fathers house:
Goe on, and fetch our horses backe againe,
Evermore croft and croft, nothing but croft.

Hor. Say as he sayes, or we shall never goe,

Kat. Forward I pray, since we have come so farre,
And be it moone, or sunne, or what your please:
And if you please to call it a rush Candle,
Henceforth I vowe it shall be so for me.

Pet. I say it is the Moone.

Kat. I know it is the Moone.

Pet. Nay then you lye: it is the blessed Sunne.

Kate. Then God be blest, it is the blessed sunne,
But sunne it is not, when you say it is not.
And the Moone changes even as your mind:
What you will have it nam'd, even that it is,
And so it shall be so for Katherine.

Hort. Petruchio, goe thy wayes, the field is won.

Pet. Well, forward, forward, thus the bowle should
And not unluckily against the Bias: (run,
But soft, Company is comming here.

Enter Vincentio.

Good morrow gentle Mistris, where away:
Tell me sweet Kate, and tell me truly too,
Hast thou beheld a fresher Gentlewoman:
Such warre of white and red within her cheekes:
What starres doe spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face?
Faire lovely Maide, once more good day to thee:
Sweet Kate embrace her for her beauties sake.

Hort. A will make the man mad to make a woman of him.

Kat. Yong budding Virgin, faire, and fresh, and sweet,
Whither away, or where is thy aboad?
Happy the Parents of so faire a child;
Happier the man whom favourable stars
Alots thee for his lovely bedfellow.

Pet. Why how now Kate, I hope thou art not mad,
This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered,
And not a Maiden, as thou saist he is.

Kate. Pardon old father my mistaking eyes,
That have beene so bedazled with the sunne,
That every thing I looke on seemeth Greene:
Now I perceive thou art a reverent Father:
Pardon I pray thee for my mad mistaking.

Pet. Doe good old grandfire, and withall make known
Which way thou travellest, if along with us,
We shall be joyfull of thy company.

Vin. Faire Sir, and you my merry Mistris,
That with your strange encounter much amasde me:
My name is call'd Vincentio, my dwelling Pisa,
And bound I am to Padua, there to visite
A sonne of mine, which long I have not scene.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Lucentio gentle sir.

Pet. Happily met, the happier for thy sonne:
And now by Law, as well as reverent age,
I may intitle thee my loving father;
The sister to my wife, this Gentlewoman,
Thy Sonne by this hath married: wonder not,
Nor be not grieved, she is of good esteeme,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;
Beside, so qualified, as may beseme
The Spouse of any noble Gentleman:
Let me imbrace with old Vincentio,

And wander we to see thy honest sonne,
Who will of thy arrivall be full joyous.

Vin. But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travailors to breake a jest
Vpon the company you overtake?

Hor. I doe assure thee father so it is.

Pet. Come goe along and see the truth hereof.
For our first merriment hath made thee jealous. Exeunt.

Hor. Well Petruchio, this has put me in heart:
Have to my Widdow, and if she be froward,
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward. Exit.

Enter Biondello, Lucentio and Bianca, Gremio is out before.

Bion. Softly and swiftly sir, for the Priest is ready.

Luc. I flye Biondello, but they may chance to need thee at home, therefore leave us. Exit.

Bion. Nay faith, Ile see the Church a your backe, and then come backe to my mistris as soone as I can.

Gre. I marvaile Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Vincentio, Gremio with Attendants.

Pet. Sir heeres the doore, this is Lucentio house,
My Fathers beares more toward the Market-place,
Thither must I, and here I leave you sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drinke before you goe,
I thinke I shall command your welcome here?
And by all likelyhood some cheere is toward. Knocke.

Grem. They're busie within, you were best knocke lowder.

Pedant looks out of the window.

Ped. What's he that knockes as he would beat downe the gate?

Vin. Is Signior Lucentio within sir?

Ped. He's within sir, but not to be spoken withall.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merry withall.

Ped. Keepe your hundred pounds to your selfe, he shall need none so long as I live.

Petr. Nay, I told you your sonne was well beloved in Padua: doe you heare sir, to leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you tell signior Lucentio that his Father is come from Pisa, and is here at the doore to speake with him.

Ped. Thou liest, his Father is come from Padua, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. I sir, so his mother sayes, if I may beleieve her.

Pet. Why how now gentleman: why this is flat kna-very to take upon you another mans name.

Peda. Lay hands on the villaine, I beleieve a meanes to cofen some body in this City under my countenance.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. I have scene them in the Church together, God send'em good shipping: but who is heere? mine old Master Vincentio: now we are undone and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither crack hempe.

Bion. I hope I may choole Sir.

Vin. Come hither you rogue, what have you forget me?

Bion. Forgot you, no sir: I could not forget you, for
I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villaine, didst thou never see thy Masters father, Vincentio?

Bion.

Bion. What my old worshipfull old master? yes marry sir, see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Ist so indeed? He beates Biondello.

Bion. Helpe, helpe, helpe, here's a mad man will murder me.

Peda. Helpe, sonne, helpe signior Baptista.

Pet. Prethee Kate let's stand aside and see the end of this controversie.

Enter Pedant with servants, Baptista, Tranio.

Tra. Sir, what are you that offer to beate my servant?

Vin. What am I sir: nay what are you sir: oh immortal Goddes: oh fine villaine, a filken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloake, and a copataine hat: oh I am undone, I am undone: while I play the good husband at home, my sonne and my servant spend all at the vniuersity.

Tra. How now, what's the matter?

Bap. What is the man lunaticke?

Tra. Sir, you seeme a sober ancient Gentleman by your habit: but your words shew you a mad man: why sir, what concernes it you, if I weare Pearle and gold: I thanke my good father, I am able to maintaine it.

Vin. Thy father! oh villaine, he is a Saile-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake sir, you mistake sir, pray what doe you thinke is his name?

Vin. His name, as if I knew not his name: I have brought him up ever since he was three yeeres old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away mad asse, his name is Lucentio, and he is mine onely sonne and heire to the Lands of me signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! oh he hath murdered his Master; lay hold on him I charge you in the Dukes name: oh my sonne, my sonne: tell me thou villaine, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer: Carry this mad knave to the laile: father Baptista, I charge you see that he bee forth comming.

Vin. Carry me to the laile?

Gre. Stay officer, he shall not goe to prison.

Bap. Talke not signior Gremio: I say he shall goe to prison.

Gre. Take heede signior Baptista, least you be conicatcht in this businesse: I dare sweare this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Sweare if thou dar'st.

Gre. Nay, I dare not sweare it.

Tra. Then thou wert best say that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard, to the laile with him.

Enter Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca.

Vin. Thus strangers may be haild and abusd: oh monstrous villaine.

Bion. Oh we are spoil'd, and yonder he is, deny him, forswear him, or else we are all done.

Exit Biondello, Tranio, and Pedant as fast as may be.

Luc. Pardon sweet father.

Vin. Lives my sweet sonne?

Bia. Pardon deere father.

Bap. How hast thou offended, where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, right sonne to the right Vincentio.

That have by marriage made thy daughter mine.

While counterfeit supposes bleer'd thine eie.

Gre. Here's packing with a witnesse to deceive us all.

Vin. Where is that damned villaine Tranio?

That fac'd and braved me in this matter to?

Bap. Why, tell me is not this my Cambio?

Bion. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio,

While he did beare my countenance in the towne,

And happily I have arriv'd at last

Vnto the wished haven of my blisse:

What Tranio did, my selfe ensorft him to;

Then pardon him sweet Father for my sake.

Vin. Ile slit the villaines nose that would have sent me to the laile.

Bap. But do you heare sir, have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vin. Feare not Baptista, we will content you, goe to: but I will in to be reveng'd for this villanie. Exit.

Bap. And I to sound the depth of this knavery. Exit.

Luc. Looke not pale Bianca, thy father will not frowne. Exeunt.

Gre. My cake is dough, but Ile in among the rest, Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Kat. Husband let's follow, to see the end of this adoe.

Pet. First kisse me Kate, and we will.

Kat. What in the midst of the streete?

Pet. What art thou asham'd of me?

Kat. No sir, God forbid, but asham'd to kisse.

Pet. Why then let's home againe: Come Sirra let's away.

Kat. Nay, I will give thee a kisse, now pray thee Love stay.

Pet. Is not this well? come my sweet Kate.

Better once then never, for never too late. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, and Bianca, Tranio, Biondello, Gremio, and Widdow:
The Serving men with Tranio bringing in a Banquet.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree,
And time it is when raging warre is come,
To smile at scapes and perils overblowne:
My faire Bianca bid my father welcome,
While I with selfe same kindnesse welcome thine:
Brother Petruchio, sister Katerina,
And thou Hortentio with thy loving Widdow:
Feast with the best, and welcome to my house,
My Banket is to close our stomackes up
After our great good cheere: pray you sit downe,
For now we sit to chat as well as eate.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eate and eate.

Bap. Padua affords this kindnesse, sonne Petruchio.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.

Pet. Now for my life Hortentio leaves his Widdow.

Hor. Then never trust me if I be affoord.

Pet. You are very fencible, and yet you misse my fence:

I meane Hortentio is afeard of you.

Wid.

Wid. He that is giddy thinkes the world turnes round.

Pet. Roundly replied.

Kat. Mistris, how meane you that ?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him.

Pet. Conceives by me, how likes Hortensio that?

Hor. My Widdow sayes, thus she conceives her tale.

Petr. Very well mended: kisse him for that good Widdow.

Kat. He that is giddy thinkes the world turnes round.

I pray you tell me what you meant by that.

Wid. Your husband being troubled with a shrew, Measures my husbands sorrow by his woe :

And now you know my meaning.

Kate. A very meane meaning.

Wid. Right, I meane you.

Kat. And I am meane indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her Kate.

Hor. To her Widdow.

Pet. A hundred markes, my Kate doe put her downe.

Hor. That's my office.

Pet. Spoke like an Officer : ha to thee lad.

Drinke to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Gremio these quicke witted folkes ?

Gre. Beleeve me sir, they But together well:

Bian. Head, and but an hasty witty body,

Would say your Head and But were head and horne.

Vin. I Mistris Bride, hath that awakened you ?

Bian. I, but not frighted me, therefore Ile sleepe againe.

Petr. Nay that you shall not since you have begun : Have at you for a better jest or too.

Bian. Am I your Bird, I meane to shift my bush,

And then pursue me as you draw your Bow.

You are welcome all.

Exit Bianca.

Pet. She hath prevented me, here signior Tranio,

This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not,

Therefore a health to all that shot and mist.

Tri. Oh sir, Lucentio slipt me like his Gray-bound,

Which runnes himsele, and catches for his Master,

Pet. A good swift simile, but something curriish.

Tra. 'Tis well sir that you hunted for your selfe :

'Tis thought your Deere does hold you at a bay.

Bap. Oh, oh Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thanke thee for that gird good Tranio.

Hor. Confesse, confesse, hath he not hit you here ?

Pet. A has a little gald me I confesse :

And as the left did glance away from me,

'Tis ten to one it maim'd you too out right.

Bap. Now in good sadnesse sonne Petruchio,

I thinke thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore for assurance,

Let's each one send unto his wife,

And he whose wife is most obedient,

To come at first when he doth send for her,

Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content, what's the wager ?

Luc. Twenty crownes.

Pet. Twenty crownes.

Ile venture so much of my Hawke or Hound,

But twenty times so much upon my Wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Pet. A match, 'tis done.

Hor. Who shall begin ?

Luc. That will I.

Goe Biondello, bid your Mistris come to me:

Bio. I goe.

Bap. Sonne, Ile be your halfe, Bianca comes.

Luc. Ile have no halves : Ile beare it all my selfe,

Enter Biondello.

How now, what newes ?

Bio. Sir, my Mistris sends you word

That she is busie, and she cannot come.

Pet. How ? she's busie, and she cannot come : is that an answer ?

Gre. I, and a kinde one too :

Pray God sir your wife send you not a worfe.

Pet. I hope better.

Hor. Sirra Biondello, goe and intreat my wife to come to me forthwith.

Exit Biondello.

Petr. Oh ho, intreate her, nay then she must needs come.

Hor. I am affraid sir, do what you can,

Enter Biondello.

Yours will not be entreated : Now, where's my wife ?

Bion. She sayes you have some goodly left in hand,

She will not come : she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worfe and worfe, she will not come:

Oh vild, intollerable, not to be indur'd :

Sirra Gremio, goe to your Mistris,

Say I command her come to me.

Exit.

Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. What ?

Hor. She will not.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katerina.

Bap. Now by my hollidam heere comes Katerina,

Kat. What is your will sir, that you send for me ?

Pet. Where's your sister, and Hortensio's wife ?

Kate. They sit conferring by the Parlor fire.

Pet. Goe fetch them hither, if they denie to come,

Swindge me them soundly forth unto their husbands :

Away I say, and bring them hither straight.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talke of a wonder.

Hor. And so it is : I wonder what it boads.

Pet. Marry peace it boads, and love, and quiet life,

An awfull rule, and right supremacy :

And to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy.

Bap. Now faire befall thee good Petruchio ;

The wager thou hast won, and I will adde

Vnto their losses twenty thousand crownes,

Another dowry to another daughter,

For she is chang'd as she had never becne.

Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet,

And show more signe of her obedience,

Her new built vertue and obedience.

Enter Kate, Bianca, and Widdow.

See where she comes, and brings your froward Wives

As prisoners to her womanly perswasion :

Katerine, that Cap of yours becomes you not,

Off with that bable, throw it underfoote.

Wid. Lord let me never have a cause to sigh,

Till I be brought to such a silly passe.

Bian. Fye what a foolish duty call you this ?

Luc. I would your duty were as foolish too :

The wisdom of your duty faire Bianca,

Hath cost me five hundred crownes since supper time.

Bian. The more foole you for laying on my duty.

Pet. Katerine I charge thee tell these head-strong women, what duty they doe owe their Lords and husbands.

Wid. Come,

Wid. Come, come, your mocking: we will have no telling

Pet. Come on I say, and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Pet. I say she shall, and first begin with her.

Kate. Fie, fie, unknit that threatening unkinde brow,
And dart not scornfull glances from those eyes,
To wound thy Lord, thy King, thy governour.
It blots thy beauty, as frosts bite the meads,
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake faire buds,
And in no fence is meet or amiable.

A woman mov'd, is like a fountaine troubled,
Muddie, ill seeming, thicke, bereft of beauty,
And while it is so, none so dry or thirstie
Will daigne to sip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy Lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy soveraigne: One that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance. Commits his body
To painfull labour, both by sea and land:
To watch the night in stormes, the day in cold
Whil'ft thou ly'st warme at home, secure and safe,
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, faire looks, and true obedience;
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such dutie as the subject owes the Prince,
Even such a woman oweth to her husband:
And when she is froward, peevish, fullen, sowre,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a foule contending Rebell,
And gracelesse Traitor to her loving Lord?
I am asham'd that women are so simple,

To offer warre, where they should kneele for peace:
Or seeke for rule, supremacie, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Why are our bodies soft, and weake, and smooth,
Vnapt to toyle and trouble in the world,
But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our externall parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable wormes,
My minde hath bin as bigge as one of yours,
My heart is great, my reason haply more,
To bandie word for word, and frowne for frowne;
But now I see our Latines are but straws:
Our strength as weake, our weakenesse past compare,
That seeming to be most, which we indeed least are.
Then vail your stomackes, for it is no boote,
And place your hands below your husbands foote:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is readie, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why there's a weach: Come on, and kisse me Kate.

Luc. Well go thy wayes old lad, for thou shalt ha't.

Win. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.

Pet. Come Kate, wee'll to bed,

We three are married, but you two are sped.

'Twas I wonne the wager, though you hit the white,
And being a winner, God give you good night.

Exit Petruchio.

Hort. Now go thy wayes, thou hast tam'd a curst Shrow.

Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tam'd so.

FJNJS.

All's

ALL'S VVell, that Ends VVell:

Actus primus. Scena Prima.

Enter young Bertram Count of Rossilion, his Mother, and Helena, Lord Lafew, all in blacke.

Mother.

IN delivering my sonne from mee, I burie a second husband.

Ref. And in going Madam, weepe ore my fathers death anew; but I must attend his majesties command, to whom I am now in Ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the King a husband Madame, you sir a father. He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessitie hold his vertue to you, whose worthinesse would stirre it up where it wanted, rather then lacke it where there is such abundance.

Mo. What hope is there of his Majesties amendment?

Laf. He hath abandon'd his Phisitions Madam, under whose practises he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the proceffe, but onely the losing of hope by time.

Mo. This young Gentlewoman had a Father, O that had! how sad a passage tis, whose skill was almost as great as his honestie, had it stretch'd so far, would have made nature immortall, and death should have play for lacke of worke. Would for the Kings sake hee were living, I thinke it would be the death of the Kings disease.

Laf. How call'd you the man you speake of Madam?

Mo. He was famous sir in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed Madam, the King very lately spoke of him admiringly, and mourningly: he was skilfull enough to have liv'd still, if knowledge could be set up against mortallitie.

Ref. What is it (my good Lord) the King languishes of?

Laf. A Fistula my Lord.

Ref. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this Gentlewoman the Daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Mo. His sole childe my Lord, and bequeathed to my over looking. I have those hopes of her good, that her education promises her dispositions she inherits, which makes faire gifts fairer: for where an uncleane mind carries vertuous qualities, there commendations goe with pittie, they are vertues and traitors too: in her they are the better for their simplenesse, she derives her honestie, and atcheeves her goodnesse.

Lafew. Your commendations Madam get from her teares.

Mo. 'Tis the best brine a Maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approches her heart, but the tirany of her sorrowes takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this Helena, goe too, no more least it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, then to have——

Hel. I doe affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentations is the right of the dead, excessive griefe the enemy to the living.

Mo. If the living be enemy to the griefe, the excesse makes it soone mortall.

Ref. Madam I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that?

Mo. Be thou blest Bertrams, and succeed thy father In manners as in shape: thy blood and vertue Contend for Empire in thee, and thy goodnesse Share with thy birth-right. Love all, trust a few, Doe wrong to none: be able for thine enemy Rather in power then use and keepe thy friend Under thy owne lifes key. Be cheekt for silence, But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will, That thee may furnish, and my prayers plucke downe, Fall on thy hand. Farewell my Lord, 'Tis an unseason'd Courtier, good my Lord Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best That shall attend his love.

Mo. Heaven bleffe him: Farewell Bertram, Exit.

Ref. The best wishes thrt can be forg'd in your thoughts be servants to you: be comfortable to my mother, your Mistris, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell prettie Lady, you must hold the credit of your father.

Hel. O were that all, I thinke not on my father, And these great teares grace his remembrance more Then those I shed for him. What was he like? I have forgot him. My imagination Carries no favour in't but Bertrams. I am undone, there is no living, none, If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one, That I should love a bright particular starre, And thinke to wed it, he is so above me In his bright radience and collaterall light,

Must

Must I be comforted, not in his sphere;
Th'ambition in my love thus plagues it selfe:
The hinde that would be mated by the Lion
Must die for love. 'I was pretty, though a plague
To see him every houre to sit and draw
His arched browes, his hawking eye, his curls
In our hearts table: heart too capable
Of every line and tricke of his sweet fauour.
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancie
Must sanctifie his Reliques. Who come here?

Enter Parrolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake,
And yet I know him a notorious Liar,
Thinke him a great way foole, folie a coward,
Yet these fixt evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when Vertue's steely bones
Lookes bleake i'th cold wind: withall, full oft we see
Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folie.

I. Save you faire Queene.

Hel. And you Monarch.

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you mediatting on virginitie?

Hel. I: you have some staine of souldier in you: I et me aske you a question. Man is enimie to virginitie, how may we barrocado it against him?

Par. Keepe him out.

Hel. But heaſailes, and our virginitie though valiant, in the defence yet is weake: unfold us some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none: Man setting downe before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Blesse our poore Virginity from Vnderminers, and blowers up. Is there no Military policy how Vir-gins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blowne downe, Man will quicklier be blowne up: marry in blowing him downe againe, with the breach yourselvemade, you lose your City. It is not politicke, in the common-wealth of Nature, to preserve virginitie. Losse of Virginitie, is rationall en-crease, and there was never virgin got, till virginitie was first lost. That you were made of, is mettall to make Vir-gins. Virginitie; by being once lost, may be ten times found: by being ever kept it is ever lost: 'tis too cold a companion: Away with't.

Hel. I will stand for't a little, though therefore I die a Virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in't, 'tis against the rule of Nature. To speake on the part of virginitie, is to accuse your Mothers; which is most infallible disobedieence. He that hangs himselfe is a Virgin: Virginitie murthers it selfe, and should be buried in highwayes out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate Offendresse against Nature. Virginitie breeds mites, much like a Cheese, consumes it selfe to the very paying, and so dyes with feeding his owne stomacke. Besides, Virginitie is pecuious, proud, ydle, made of selfe-love, which is the most inhabited sinne in the Cannon. Keepe it not, you cannot choose but loose by't. Out with't: within ten yeares it will make it selfe two, which is a goodly increase, and the principall it selfe not much the worse. Away with't.

Hel. How might one doe sir, to loose it to her owne liking?

Par. Let me see. Marry ill, to like him that ne're it likes. 'Tis a comoditie will lose the glosse with lying:
The longer kept, the lesse worth: Off with't while 'tis vendible. Answer the time of request, Virginitie like an olde Courtier, weares her cap out of fashion, richly futed, but unfuteable, just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which were not now: your Date is better in your Pye and your Porredge, then in your cheek: and your virginitie, your old virginitie, is like one of our French wither'd peares, it looks ill, it eates drily, marry 'tis a wither'd peare: it was formerly better, marry yet 'tis a wither'd peare, Will you any thing with it?

Hel. Not my virginitie yet:

There shall your master have a thousand loves,
A Mother, and a Mistresse, and a friend,
A Phenix, Captaine, and an enemy,
A guide, a Goddesse, and a soveraigne,
A Counsellor, a Traitresse, and a Deare:
His humblest ambition, proud humility:
His farring, concord: and his discord, dulcet:
His faith, his sweet disaster: will a world
Of pretty fond adoptious christendomes
That blinking Cupid gossip. Now shall he:
I know not what he shall, God send him well,
The Courts a learning place, and he is one.

Par. What one yfaith?

Hel. That I wish well, 'tis pitty.

Par. What's pitty?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't,
Which might be felt, that we poorer borne,
Whose baser starres do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And shew what we alone must thinke, which never Returnes us thanks.

Enter Page.

Page. Monsieur Parrolles,
My Lord calls for you.

Par. Little Helles farewell, if I can remember thee, I will thinke of thee at Court.

Hel. Monsier Parolles, you were borne under a charitable starre.

Par. Under Mars I.

Hel. I especially thinke, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. The warres hath so kept you under, that you must needes be borne under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde I thinke rather.

Par. Why thinke you so?

Hel. You go so much back ward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away,

When feare proposes the saf:tye, and the valour
But the composition that your valour and feare makes in you, is a vertue of a good wing, and I like the weare
well.

Parol. I am so full of businesse, I cannot answer thee acutely: I will returne perfect Courtier, in the which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of the Courtiers counsell, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee, else thou dye'st in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away, farewell: When thou hast leisure, say thy praisers: when thou hast none, remember thy Friends:

Get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee:
So farewell.

Exit.

Hel. Our remedies oft in our selves do lye,
Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated skye
Gives us free scope, onely doth backward pull
Our slow designs, when we our selves are dull.
What power is it, which mounts my love so hye,
That makes me see, and cannot feede mine eye?
The mightiest space in fortune, Nature brings
To joyne like, likes; and kisse like native things.
Impossible be strange attempts to those
That weigh their paines in sence, and do suppose
What hath beene, cannot be. Who ever stroue
To shew her merit, that did misse her love?
(The Kings disease) my project may deceive me,
But my intents are fixt, and will not leave me.

Exit.

Flourish Cornets.

Enter the King of France with Letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and *Senoy*s are by th'cares,
Have fought with equall fortune, and continue
A braving warre.

1. Lo. G. So tis reported sir.

Kim. Nay tis most credible, we heere receive it,
A certainty vouch'd from our Cofin Austria,
With caution, that the Florentine will move us
For speedy aide: wherein our dearest friend
Prejudicates the businesse, and would seeme
To have us make deniall.

1. Lo. G. His love and wisdom
Approv'd so to your Majesty, may pleade
For amplest credence.

Kim. He hath answ'rd our answer,
And Florence is deny'd before he comes:
Yet for our Gentlemen that meane to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.

2. Lo. E. It well may serve
A nursery to our Gentry, who are sicke
For breathing, and exploit.

King. What's he comes heere.

Enter Bertram, Lafew, and Parolles.

1. Lo. G. It 'tis the Count Rosillion my good Lord, Yong Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy Fathers face,
Franke Nature rather curious then in halt.
Hath well compos'd thee: Thy Fathers morall parts
Maist thou inherit too: Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your Majesties.

Kim. I would I had that corporall soundnesse now,
As when thy father, and my selfe, in friendship
First tride our souldier ship: he did looke farre
Into the service of the time, and was Discipl'd of the bravest. He lasted long,
But on us both did haggish Age steale on,
And wore us out of act: It much repaires me:
To talke of your good father; in his youth
He had the wit, which I can well observe
To day in our yong Lords; but they may jest
Till their owne scorne returne to them unnoted
Ere they can hide their levitie in honours:
So like a Courtier, contempt nor bitterness

Were in his pride, or sharpnesse; if they were;
His equall had awak'd them, and his honour
Clocke to it selfe, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speake, and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand. Who were below him,
He us'd as creatures of another place,
And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humiility,
In their poore praise he humbled: Such a man
Might be a copie to these yonger times;
Which followed well, would demonstrate them now
But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance sir
Lies richer in your thoughts, then on his tombe:
So in approofe lives not his Epitaph,
As in your royall speech.

King. Would I were with him: he would alwaies say,
(Me thinks I heare him now) his plausive words
He scatter'd not in cares, but grafted them
To grow there and to beare: Let me not live,
This his good melancholly oft began
On the Catastrophe and heele of pastime
When it was out: Let me not live (quoth hee)
After my flame lackes oyle, to be the snuffe
Of yonger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
All but new things disdain; whose judgements are Meere fathers of their garments: whose constancies
Expire before their fashions: this he wish'd.
I after him, do after him wish too:
(Since I nor wax nor honie can bring home,)
I quickly were dissolved from my hive
To give some Labourers roome.

L. 2. E. You'r loved Sir,

They that least lend it you shall lacke you first.

Kim. I fill a place I know't, how long ist Count
Since the Phyitian at your fathers died?
He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six moneths since my Lord.

Kim. If he were living, I would try him yet,
Lend me an arme: the rest have worne me out
With severall applications: Nature and sicknesse Debate it at their leisure. Welcome Count,
My sonne's no deerer.

Ber. Thanke your Majesty.

Exit.

Flourish.

Enter Countesse, Steward, and Clowne.

Con. I will now heare, what say you of this gentle-
woman.

St. Maddam the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the Kalender of my past endeavours, for then we wound our Modestie, and make foule the cleannesse of our deservings, when of our selves
we publish them.

Con. What doe's this knave heere? Get you gone sirra:
the complaints I have heard of you I do not all beleve,
'tis my shewnesse that I do not: For I know you lacke not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaveries yours.

Cl. 'Tis not unknowne to you Madam, I am a poore fellow.

Con. Well sir.

Cl. No maddam,

'Tis not so well that I am poore, though manie
of

of the rich are damn'd, but if I have your Ladiships good will to goe to the world, Isbell the woman and I will doe as we may.

Con. Wilt thou needes be a begger?

Clo. I doe beg your good wil in this case.

Con. In what case?

Clo. In Isbells case and mine owne: service is no heritage, and I thinke I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue a my bodie: for they say bearnes are blessings.

Con. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marrie?

Clo. My poore body Madam requires it, I am driven on by the flesh, and he must needes goe that the divell drives.

Con. Is this all your worships reason?

Clo. Faith Madam I have other holie reasons, such as they are.

Con. May the world know them?

Clo. I have beene Madam a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are, and indeede I doe marrie that I may repent.

Con. Thy marriage sooner then thy wickednesse.

Clo. I am out a friends Madam, and I hope to have friends for my wives sake.

Con. Such friends are thine enemies knave.

Clo. Y'are shallow Madam in great friends, for the knaves come to doe that for me which I am a wearie of: he that cares my Land, spares my teame, and gives mee leave to Inne the crop: if I bee his Cuckold, hee's my drudge; he that comforts my wife, is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherisheth my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend: it men could bee contented to be what they are, there were no feare in marriage, for yong Charbon the Puritan, and olde Poyam the Papist, how somere their hartes are feuer'd in Religion, their heades are both one, they may joule hornes together like any Deare i'th Herd.

Con. Wilt thou ever be a foule mouth'd and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet I Madam, and I speake the truth the next way, for I the Ballad will repeate, which men full true shall finde, your marriage comes by destiny, your Cuckow sings by kinde.

Con. Get you gone sir, Ile talke with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you Madam, that hee bid Hellen come to you, of her I am to speake.

Con. Sirra tell my gentewoman I would speake with her, Hellen I meane.

Clo. Was this faire face the cause, quoth she,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy,
Fond done, done, fond was this King Priams joy,
With that she sigh'd as she stood, bis
And gaue this sentence then, among nine bad if one be good, among nine bad if one be good, there's yet one good inten.

Con. What, one good in tenne? you corrupt the song sirra.

Clo. One good woman in ten Madam, which is a purifying ath' song: would God would serue the world so all the yeere, weed finde no fault with the tithe woman if I were the Parson, one in ten quoth a? and wee might have a good woman borne but ore every blazing starre, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the Lotterie well, a man may draw his heart out ere a plucke one.

Con. Youle be gone sir knave, and doe as I command you?

Clo. That man should be at a womans command, and yet nō hurt done, though honestie be no Puritan, yet it will doe no hurt, it will weare the Surplis of humilitie over the blacke-Gowne of a bigge heart: I am going forth, the businesse is for Hellen to come hither.

Exit.

Con. Well now.

Stew. I know Madam you love your Gentewoman intirely.

Con. Faith I doe: her Father bequeath'd her to me, and she her selfe without other advantage, may lawfullie make title to as much love as she findes, there is more owing her then is paid, and more shall be paid her then shee demand.

Stew. Madam, I was verie late more neere her then I thinke she wisht me, alone she was, and did communicate to her selfe her owne words to her owne eares, shee thought, I dare vow for her, they toucht not any stranger sence, her matter was, she loved your Sonne; Fortune she sayd was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates: Love no god, that would not extend his might onely, where qualities were levell, Quene of Virgins, that would suffer her poore Knight surpris'd without rescue in the first assault or ransom afterward: This she deliver'd in the most bitter touch of sorrow that ere I heard Virgin exclaime in, which I held my dutie speedily to acquaint you withall, sithence in the losse that may happen, it concernes you something to know it.

Con. You have discharg'd this honestie, keepe it to your selfe, manie likelihoods inform'd mee of this before, which hung so tottring in the baillance, that I could never beleeeve nor misdoubt: pray you leave mee, stall this in your bosome, and I thanke you for your honest care: I will speake with you further anon.

Exit Steward.

Enter Hellen.

Old, Con. Even so it was with me when I was young: If ever we are natures these are ours, this thorne Doth to our Rose of youth rightlie belong Our blood to us, this to our blood is borne, It is the show, and seale of natures truth, Where loves strong passion is imprest in youth, By our remembrances of daies forgon, Such were our faults, or then we thought them none, Her eie is sicke on't, I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure Madam?

Ol. Con. You know Hellen I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honorable Mistris.

Ol. Con. Nay a mother, why not a mother? when I fed a mother.

Me thought you saw a serpent, what's in mother That you start at it? I say I am your mother, And put you in the Catalogue of those That were enwomb'd mine, 'tis often seene Adoption strives with nature, and choise breeds A native slip to us from forraine seedes: You ne're oppress me with a mothers groane, Yet I expresse to you a mothers care, (Gods mercie maiden) doe it curd thy blood To say I am thy mother? what's the matter, That this distemper'd messenger of wet,

The manie colour'd Iris rounds thine eye?

—— Why, that you art my daughter?

Hell. That I am not.

Old. Con. I say I am your Mother.

Hell. Pardon Madam.

The Count Rosillion cannot be my brother :
I am from humble, he from honoured name :
No note upon my Parents, his all noble,
My Master, my deere Lord he is, and I
His servant live, and will his vassall die :
He must not be my brother.

Ol. Con. Nor I your Mother.

Hell. You are my mother Madam, would you were
So that my Lord your sonne were not my brother,
Indeed my mother, or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for, then I doe for heaven,
So I were not his sister, cant no other,
But I your daughter, he must be my brother.

Old. Con. Yes Hellen, you might be my daughter in law,
God shield you meane it not, daughter and mother
So strive upon your pulse; what pale agen?
My feare hath catcht your fondnesse I now I see
The mistrie of your lovelinesse, and finde
Your salt teares head, now to all fence 'ts grosse :
You love my sonne, invention is asham'd
Against the proclamation of thy passion
To say thou dost not : therefore tell me true,
But tell me then 'tis so, for looke, thy cheekes
Confesse it 'ton to th'other, and thine eyes
See it is so grossly shovne in thy behaviors,
That in their kinde they speake it, onely sinne
And hellish obstinacie tye thy tongue
That truth should be suspected, speake, ist so?
If it be so, you haue wound a goodly clewe :
If it be not, forswear't how ere I charge thee,
As heaven shall worke in me for mine availe
To tell me truly.

Hell. Good Madam pardon me.

Con. Do you lioue my Sonne?

Hell. Your pardon noble Mistris.

Con. Love you my Sonne?

Hell. Doe not you love him Madam?

Con. Goe not about; my love hath in't a bond
Whereof the world takes note : Come, come, disclose :
The state of your affection, for your passions
Have to the full appeach'd.

Hell. Then I confesse

Here on my knee, before high heavens and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your Sonne :

My frinds were poore but honest, so's my love :
Be not offended, for it hurts not him
That he is lov'd of me ; I follow him not
By any token of presumptuous suite,
Nor would I have him, till I doe deserve him,
Yet never know how that desert should be :
I know I love in vaine, strive against hope :
Yet in this captious, and intenable Sive.
I still poure in the waters of my love
And lacke not to loose still ; thus Indian like Religious in mine error, I adore
The Sunne that lookes upon his worshipper,
But knowes of him no more. My deere Madam,
Let not your hate incounter with my love
For loving where you doe ; but if your selfe,
Whose aged honor cites a vertuous youth,

Did ever, in so true a flame of living,
Wish chastly, and love deere,ly, that your Dian
Was both her selfe and love, O then give pittie
To her whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and give where she is sure to loose ;
That seekes not to finde that, search implies,
But riddle like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Con. Had you not lately an intent, speake truly,
To goe to Paris?

Hell. Madame I had.

Con. Wherefore? tell true.

Hell. I will tell true, by grace it selfe I sweare :
You know my Father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading
And manifest experience, had collected
For generall soveraigntie : and that he will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More then they were in note : Amongst the rest,
There is a remedie, approv'd, set downe,
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The King is render'd lost.

Con. This was your motive for Paris, was it, speake?

Hell. My Lord, your sonne, made me to thinke of this;
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the King,
Had from the conversation of my thoughts,
Happily beene absent then.

Con. But thinke you Hellen,
If you should tender your supposed aide,
He would receive it? He and his phisitions
Are of a minde; he, that they cannot helpe him :
They, that they cannot helpe, how shall they credit
A poore unlearned Virgin, when the Schooles
Embowel'd of their doctrine, have lef off
The danger to it selfe.

Hell. There's something in't
More then my Fathers skill, which was the great'st
Of his profession, that his good receipt,
Shall for my legacie be sanctified
Byth' luckiest stars in heaven, and would your honor
But give me leave to succeffe, I'd venture
The well lost life of mine, on his Graces cure, by such a day, and houre.

Con. Doo'st thou beleev'e't?

Hell. I Madam knowingly.

Con. Why Hellen thou shalt have my leave and love,
Meanes and attendants, and my loving greetings
To those of mine in Court, Ile stay at home
And pray Gods blessing into thy attempt :
Begon to morrow, and be sure of this;
What I can helpe thee to, thou shalt not misse. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

*Enter the King with divers young Lords, taking leave for the Florentine warre : Count Rosse, and

King. Farewell yong Lords, these warlike principles
Doe not throw from you, and you my Lords farewell :
Share the advice betwixt you, if both gaine, all
The guift doth stretch it selfe as 'tis receiv'd,
And is enough for both.

Lord. G. 'Tis our hope fir,

After

After well entred souldiers, to returne
And finde your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confesse he owes the mallady
That doth my life besiege: farwell yong Lords,
Whether I live or die, be you the sonnes
Of worthy French men: let higher Italy
(Those bated that inherit but the fall
Of the last Monarchy) see that you come
Not to woore honour, but to wed it, when
The bravest question shrinkes: finde what you seeke,
That fame may cry you loud: I say farewell.

L.G. Health at your bidding serue your Maiesty.

King. Those girles of Italy, take heed of them,
They say our French, lacke language to deny
If they demand: beware of being Captiues
Before you serue.

Bo. Our hartes receiue your warnings.

King. Farewell, come hether to me. (us.

1. Lo. G. Oh my sweet Lord that you will stay behind

Parr. 'Tis not his fault the sparke.

2. Lo. E. Oh 'tis braue warres.

Parr. Most admirable, I have seene those warres.

Rossil. I am commanded here, and kept acoyle with,
Too young, and the next yeere, and 'tis too early.

Parr. And thy minde stand too't boy,
Steale away brauely.

Rossil. I shall stay here the for-horse to a smocke,
Creeking my shooes on the plaine Mafonry,
Till honour be bought up, and no sword worne
But one to dance with: by heauen, Ile steale away.

1. Lo. G. There's honour in the theft.

Parr. Commit it Count.

2. Lo. E. I am your accessary, and so farewell.

Ros. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortur'd body.

1. Lo. G. Farewell Captaine.

2. Lo. E. Sweet Monier Parolles.

Par. Noble Heroes; my sword and yours are kinne, good sparkes and lustrous, a word good mettals. You shall finde in the Regiment of the Spinij, one Captaine Spinio his Cicatrice, with an Embleme of warre heere on his sinister cheek; it was this very sword entrench'd it:
say to him I live, and obserue his reports for me.

Lo. G. We shall noble Captaine.

Par. Mars doate on you for his novices, what will ye doe?

Ros. Stay: the King.

Par. Vle a more spaciou ceremonie to the Noble Lords, you have restrain'd your selfe within the List of too cold an adieu: be more expresse to them; for they weare themselves in the cap of the time, there do muster true gate; eat, speake, and more under the influence of the most receiv'd starre, and though the diuell leade the measure, such are to be followed: after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ros. And I will doe so.

Par. Worthy fellows, and like to prooue most sinewie sword-men. Exeunt.

Enter Lafew.

L. Laf. Pardon my Lord for me and for my tidings. ¶

King. Ile see thee stand up. (pardon,

L. Laf. Then heres a man stands that hath brought his
I would you had kneel'd my Lord to aske me mercy,
And that at my bidding you could so stand up.

King. I would I had, so I had broke thy pate

And askt thee mercy for't.

Laf. Goodfaith a-crosse, but my good Lord 'tis thus,
Will you be cur'd of your infirmity?

King. No.

Laf. O will you eate no grapes my royall foxe?
Yes but you will, my noble grapes, and if
My royall foxe could reach them: I have seene a medicine
That's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken a rocke, and make you dance Canary
With sprightly fire and motion, whose simple touch
Is powerfull to araise King Pippen, nay
To give great Charlemaine a pen in's hand
And write to her a love-line.

King. What her is this?

Laf. Why doctor she: my Lord, there's one arriv'd,
If you will see her: now by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may convoy my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that in her sexe, her yeeres, profession,
Wisedome and constancy, hath amaz'd me more
Then I dare blame my weakenesse: wil you see her?
For that is her demand, and know her businesse?
That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now good Lafew.

Bring in the admiration, that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wondring how thou took't it.

Laf. Nay, Ile fit you,

And not be all day neither.

King. Thus he his speciall nothing ever prologues.

Laf. Nay, come your wayes.

Enter Hellen.

King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your wayes,

This is his Majestie, say your minde to him,
A traitor you doe looke like, but such traitors
His Majestie seldome feares, I am Cressida Vncle,
That dare leave two together, fare you well. Exit.

King. Now faire one, do's your busines follow us?

Hel. I my good Lord.

Gerard de Narbon was my father,
In what he did professe, well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him,
Knowing him is enough: on's bed of death,
Many receipts he gave me, chieflie one,
Which as the dearest issue of his practice
And of his old experience, th'onelie darling,
He bad me store up, as a triple eye,
Safer then mine owne two: more deare I have so,
And hearing your high Majestie is toucht
With that malignant cause, wherein the honour
Of my deere fathers gift, stands cheefe in power,
I come to tender it, and my appliance,
With a ll bound humbleness.

King. We thanke you maiden,
But may not be so credulous of cure,
When our most learned Doctors leave us, and
The congregated Colledge have concluded,
That labouring art can never ransome nature
From her inaydible estate: I say we must not
So staine our judgement, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malladie
To empericks, or to disservice so
Our great selfe and our credit, to esteeme
A sencelesse helpe, when helpe past fence we deeme.

Hel. My

Hell. My dutie then shall pay me for my paines :
I will no more enforce my office on you,
Humbly intreating from your royall thoughts,
A modest one to beare me backe againe.

King. I cannot give thee lesse to be cal'd gratefull :
Thou thoughtst to helpe me, and such thanks I give,
As one neer death to those that wish him live :
But what at full I know, thou knowst no part,
I knowing all my perill, thou no Art.

Hell. What I can doe, can doe no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedie :
He that of greatest workes is finisher.
Oft does them by the weakest minister :
So holy Writ, in babes hath judgement shew'd,
When Iudges have bin babes ; great flouds have flow'd
From simple fources : and great Seas have dried
When Miracles have by the great 't beene denied.
Oft expectation failes, and most oft there
Where most it promises : and oft it hits,
Where hope is coldest, and despaire most shifts.

King. I must not heare thee, fare thee well kind maide,
Thy paines not us'd, must by thy selfe be paid,
Proffers not tooke, reape thanks for their reward.

Hell. Inspired Merit so by breath is bard,
It is not so with him that all things knowes
As 'tis with us, that square our guesse by shewes :
But most it is presumption in us, when
The helpe of heaven we count the act of men.
Deare sir, to my endeavors give consent,
Of heaven, nor me, make an experiment.
I am not an Impostrue, that proclaime
My selfe against the levill of mine aime,
But know I thinke, and thinke I know most sure,
My Art is not past power, nor you past cure,

King. Art thou so confident ? Within what space
Hopt thou my cure ?

Hell. The greatest grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sunne shall bring
Their fire torcher his diurnall ring.
Ere twice in murke and occidentall dampe
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd her sleepy Lampe :
Or foure and twentie times the Pylots glasse
Hath told the theevish minutes, how they passe :
What is infirme, from your sound parts shall flie,
Health shall live free, and sicknesse freely dye.

King. Vpon thy certainty and confidence,
What dar'st thou venture ?

Hell. Taxe of impudencie,
A strumpets boldnesse, a divulged shame
Traduc'd by odious ballads : my maidens name
Seard otherwise, no worse of worst extended
With vildest torture, let my life be ended.

King. Me thinkes in thee some blessed spirit doth speak
His powerfull sound, wherein an organ weake :
And what impossibility would slay
In common sense, sence saves another way :
Thy life is deere, for all that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate :
Youth, beauty, wisdome, courage, all
That happinesse and prime, can happie call :
Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate
Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate :
Sweet practiser, thy Physicke I will try,
That ministers thine owne death if I die,

Hell. If I breake time, or flinch in propriety
Of what I spoke, unpittied let me die,

And well deseru'd : not helping, death's my fee,
But if I helpe, what doe you promise me.

King. Make thy demand.

Hell. But will you make it even ?

King. I by my Scepter, and my hopes of helpe.

Hell. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand
What husband in thy power I will command :
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royall bloud of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state :
But such a one thy vassall, whom I know
Is free for me to aske, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand, the premises observ'd,
Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd :
So make the choice of thine owne time, for I
Thy resolv'd Patient, on thee still relye :
More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know, could not be more to trust :
From whence thou cam'st, how tended on, but rest
Vnquestion'd welcome, and undoubted blest.
Give me some helpe here ho, if thou proceed,
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

Exeunt.

Enter Countesse and Clowne.

Lady. Come on sir, I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clown. I will shew my selfe highly fed, and lowly taught, I know my businesse is but to the Court.

Lady. To the Court, why what place make you speciall, when you put off that with such contempt, but to the Court ?

Clown. Truly Madam, if God have lent a man any manners, hee may easilie put it off at Court : he that cannot make a legge, put off's cap, kisse his hand, and say nothing, has neither legge, hands, lippe, nor cap ; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the Court, but for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Lady. Marry that's a bountifull answer that fits all questions.

Clown. It is like a Barbers chaire that fits all buttockes, the pin buttocke, the quatch-buttocke, the brawn buttocke, or any buttocke.

Lady. Will your answer serve fit to all questions ?

Clown. As fit as ten groates is for the hand of an Attorney, as your French Crowne for your taffety punke, as Toby rush for Toms forefinger, as a pancake for Shrovetuesday, a Morris for May-day, as the naile to his hole, the Cuckold to his home, as a scolding queane to a wrangling knave, as the Nuns lip to the Friars mouth, nay as the pudding to his skin.

Lady. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitnesse for all questions ?

Clown. From below your Duke, to beneath your Constable, it will fit any question.

Lady. It must bee an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Clown. But a trifle neither in good faith, if the learned should speake truth of it : heere it is, and all that belongs to't. Aske mee if I am a Courtier, it shall doe you no harme to learne.

Lady. To bee young againe if we could : I will bee a foole in question, hoping to bee the wiser by your answer.

Lady.

La. I pray you fir, are you a Courtier?

Clo. O Lord fir theres a simple putting off: more, more, a hundred of them.

La. Sir I am a poore friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord fir, thicke, thicke, spare not me.

La. I thinke fir, you can eate none of this homely meate.

Clo. O Lord fir; nay put me too'r, I warrant you.

La. You werelately whipt fir as I thinke.

Clo. O Lord fir, spare not me.

La. Doe you cry O Lord fir at your whipping, and spare not me? Indeed your O Lord fir, is very sequent to your whipping: you would answere very well to a whipping if you were but bound too'r.

Clo. I ne're had worfe lucke in my life in my O Lord fir: I see things may serue long, but not serve ever.

La. I play the noble hufwife with the time, to entertaine it so merrily with a foole.

Clo. O Lord fir, why there't serves wellagen.

La. And end fir to your businesse: give Hellen this, And urge her to a present answer backe, Commend me to my kinsmen, and my sonne, This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

La. Not much employment for you, you understand me.

Clo. Most fruitfully, I am there, before my legges.

La. Hast you agen.

Exiunt.

Enter Count, Lafew, and Parolles.

Ol. Laf. They say miracles are past, and we have our Philosophicall persons, to make moderne and familiar things supernaturall and causelesse. Hence is it, that wee make trifles of terrours, enconcing our selves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit our selves to an unknowne feare.

Par. Why 'tis the rarest argument of wonder, that hath shot out in our latter times.

Raf. And so 'tis.

Ol. Laf. To be relinquisht of the Artists.

Par. So I say both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Ol. Laf. Of all the learned and authenticke fellowes.

Par. Right so I say.

Ol. Laf. That gave him out incurable.

Par. Why there 'tis, so say I too.

Ol. Laf. Not to be help'd.

Par. Right, as 'twere a man assur'd of a——

Ol. Laf. Uncertaine life, and sure death.

Par. Inst you say well: so would I have said.

Ol. Laf. I may truly say, it is a noveltie to the world.

Par. It is indeed if you will have it in shewing, you shall reade it in what do ye call there.

Ol. Laf. A shewing of a heavenly effect in an earthly Actor.

Par. That's sit, I would have said, the very same.

Ol. Laf. Why your Dolphin is not lustier: for mee I speake in respect——

Par. Nay 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the breefe and the tedious of it, and he's of a most facinorouse spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the——

Ol. Laf. Very hand of heaven.

Par. I, so I say.

Ol. Laf. In a most weake——

Par. And debile minister great power, great transcendence, which should indeed give us a further use to be made, then onely the recou'ry of the king, as to be——

Ol. Laf. Generally thankfull.

Enter King, Hellen, and attendants.

Par. I would have said it, you said well: heere comes the King,

Ol. Laf. Lustique, as the Dutchman sayes: Ile like a maide the better while I have a tooth in my head: why he's able to leade her a Carranto.

Par. Mor du vinager, is not this Helen?

Ol. Laf. Fore God I thinke so.

King. Goe call before me all the Lords in Court, Sit my preferuer by thy patients side, And with this healthfull hand whose banisht sence Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receyue The confirmation of my promis'd guift, Which but attends thy naming.

Enter 3 or 4 Lords.

Fairs Maide send forth thine eye, this youthfull parcell Of Noble Batchellors, stand at my bestowing, Ore whom both Soueraigne power, and fathers voice I have to vse; thy franke election make, Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you, one faire and vertuous Mistris; Fall when love please, marry to each but one.

Old Fal. I'de give bay curtall, and his furniture, My mouth no more were broken then these boyes, And writ as little beard.

King. Peruse them well:

Not one of those, but had a Noble father.

She addresses her to a Lord.

Hel. Gentlemen, heaven hath through mee, restor'd the king to health.

All. We understand it, and thanke heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple Maide, and therein wealthiest That I protest, I simply am a maide: Please it your majestie. I have done already: The blushes in my cheekes thus whisper me, We blush that thou shouldst choose, but be refused; Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever, Wee'l neere come there againe.

King. Make choise and see,

Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me.

Hel. Now Dian from thy Altar do I fly, And to imperiall love, that God most high Do my sighes streame: Sir, will you heare my suite?

1. Lo. And graunt it.

Hel. Thankes fir, all the rest is mute.

Ol. Laf. I had rather be in this choise, then throw A deauf-ace for my life.

Hel. The honour fir that flames in your faire eyes, Before I speake too threateningly replies: Love make your fortunes twentie times above Her that so wishes, and her humble love.

2. Lo. No better if you please.

Hel. My wish receive,

Which great love grant, and so I take my leave.

Ol. Laf. Do all they denie her? And they were sons of mine, I'de have them whip'd, or I would send them to'th Turke to make Eunuches of.

Hel. Be not afraid that I your hand should take, Ile never do you wrong for your owne sake: Blessing upon your vowes, and in your bed Finde fairer fortune, if you ere wed.

Old Laf. These boyes are boyes of Ice, they'le none have have her : sure they are bastards to the English, the French ne're got em.

La. You are to young, too happie, and too good To make your selfe a sonne out of my blood.

4. Lord. Faire one, I thinke not so.

Ol. Lord. There's one grape yet, I am sure my father drunke wine. But if thou be'st not an asse, I am a youth of fourteene : I have knowne thee already.

Hel. I dare not say I take you, but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live Into your guiding power : This is the man.

King. Why then young Bertram take her shee's thy wife.

Ber. My wife my Leige ? I shall beseech your highnesse In such a busines, give me leave to use The helpe of mine owne eyes.

King. Know'st thou not Bertram what shee ha's done for me ?

Ber. Yes my good Lord, but never hope to know why I should marrie her.

King. Thou know'st shee ha's rais'd mee from my sickly bed.

Ber. But followes it my Lord, to bring me downe Must answer for your raising ? I know her well : Shee had her breeding at my fathers charge : A poore Physitians daughter my wife ? Disdaine Rather corrupt me ever.

King. Tis onely title thou disdaint in her, the which I can build up : strange is it that our bloods Of colour, waight, and heat; pour'd all together, Would quite confound distinction : yet stands off In differences of mightie. If she be All that is vertuous (save what thou dislik'st) A poore physitians daughter, thou dislik'st Of vertue for the name : but doe not so : From lowest place, whence vertuous things proceed, The place is dignified by th' doers deede. Where great addition I well's, and vertue none, It is a dropied honour, Good a lone, Is good without a name ? Vilenesse is so : The propertie by what it is, should go, Not by the title. She is young, wife, faire, In these, to Nature she's immediate heire : And these breed honour : that is honours scorne, Which challenges it selfe as honours borne, And is not like the fire : Honours best thrine, When rather from our acts we them derive Then our fore-goers : the meere words a slave Deboish'd on every tombe, on every grave : A lying Trophee, and as oft is dumbe, Where dust, and damn'd oblivion is the Tombe. Of honour'd bones indeed, what should be said ? If thou canst like this creature, as a maide, I can create the rest : Vertue, and shee Is her owne dower : Honour and wealth, from me.

Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to doo't.

King. Thou wrong'st thy selfe, if thou should'st strive to choos'e.

Hel. That you are well restor'd my Lord, I'me glad : Let the rest go.

King. My Honor's at the stake, which to defeat I must produce my power. Heere, take her hand, Proud scornefull boy, unworthie this good gift, That do'st in vile misprision shackle up My love, and her desert : that canst not dreame, We poizing us in her defective scale,

Shall weigh thee to the beame : That wilt not know, It is in Vs to plant thine Honour, where

We please to have it grow. Checke thy contempt :

Obeys Our will, which travailes in thy good :

Beleeve not thy disdaine, but presently

Do thine owne fortunes that obedient right

Which both thy dutie owes, and our power claimes.

Or I will through thee from my care for ever

Into the staggers and carelesse lapse

Of youth and ignorance : both my revenge and hate

Loosing upon thee, in the name of justice,

Without all termes of pittie. Speake, thine answer.

Ber. Pardon my gracious Lord : for I submit

My fancie to your eyes, when I consider

What great creation, and what dole of honour

Flies where you bid it : I finde that she which late

Was in my nobler thoughts, most base : is now

The praised of the King, who so ennobled,

Is as 'twere borne so.

King. Take her by the hand.

Aud tell her she is thine : to whom I promise

A counterpoize : If not in thy estate,

A ballance more repleat.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favour of the King

Smile upon the contract : whose Ceremonie

Shall seeme expedient on the now borne brieve,

And be perform'd to night : the solemne Feast

Shall more attend upon the coming space,

Expecting absent friends. As thou lov'st her,

Thy love's to me Religious : else, do's erre

Parolles and Lafew stay behind, commencing of this wedding.

Laf. Doe you heare Monsieur ? A word with you.

Par. Your pleasure sir.

Laf. Your Lord and Master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation ? My Lord ? my master ?

Laf. I : Is it not a Language I speake ?

Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloudie succeding. My Master ?

Laf. Are you companion to the count Resilian ?

Par. To any Count, to all Counts : to what is man.

Laf. To what is counts man : Counts maister is of another stile.

Par. You are too old sir : Let it satisfie you, you are too old.

Laf. I must tell thee sirrah, I write Man : to which tilde age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did thinke thee for two ordinaries : to bee a pretie wise fellow, thou didst make tollerable vent of thy travel, it might passe : yet the scarffes and the bannerets about thee, did manifoldly dissuade me from beleeving thee a vessell of too great a burthen. I have now found thee, when I lose thee againe, I care not : yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that th' ourt scarce worth.

Par. Hadst thou not the priviledge of Antiquitie upon thee,

Laf. Doe not plunge thy selfe too farre in anger, least thou hasten thy triall : which if, Lord have mercie on thee for a hen, so my good window of Lattice fare thee well, thy casement I neede not open, for I looke through the. Give me thy hand.

Par. My Lord, you give me most egregious indignity.

Laf.

Laf. I with all my heart, and thou art worthy of it.

Par. I have not my Lord deserv'd it.

Laf. Yes good faith, ev'ry dramme of it, and I will not bare thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Ev'n as soone as thou can'st, for thou hast to pull at a smacke a'th contrarie. If ever thou bee'st bound in thy skarfe and beaten, thou shalt finde what it isto be proud of thy bondage, I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say in the default, he is a man I know.

Par. My Lord you do me most insupportble vexation.

Laf. I would it were hell paines for thy sake, and my poore doing eternall: for doing I am past, as I will by thee, in what motion age will giue me leave. Exit.

Par. Well, thou hast a sonne shall take this disgrace off me; scuruy, old, filthy, scuruy Lord: Well, I must be patient, there is no fettering of authoritie. Ile beate him (by my life) if I can meete him with any convenience, and he were double and double a Lord. Ile have no more pittie of his age then I would have of — Ile beate him, and if I could but meet him agen.

Enter Lafew.

Laf. Sirra, your Lord and Master's married, there's newes for you: you have a new Mistris.

Par. I most unfaindly beseech your Lordshippe to make some reservation of your wrongs. He is my good Lord, whom I serue above is my Master.

Laf. Who? God.

Par. I sir.

Laf. The diuell it is; that's thy master. Why doeest thou garter up thy armes a this fashion? Dost make hose of thy sleeves? Do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine Honour, if I were but two houres yonger, I'de beate thee: meethink'st thou art a generall offence, and every man should beate thee: I thinke thou wait created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure my Lord.

Laf. Go to sir, you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernell out of a Pomgranar, you are a vagabond, and no true traveller: you are more sawcie with Lords and honourable personages, then the Commission of your birth and vertue gives you Heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'de call you knave. I leave you. Exit.

Enter Count Rossillion.

Par. Good, very good, it is so then: good, very good, let it be conceal'd awhile.

Ros. Vndone, and forfeited to cares for ever.

Par. What's the matter sweet-heart?

Rosill. Although before the solemne Priest I have sworne, I will not bed her.

Par. What? what sweet heart?

Ros. O my Parrolles, they have married me: Ile to the Tuscan warres, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits, The tread of a mans foot: too'th warres.

Ros. There's letters from my mother: What th'import is, I know not yet.

Par. I that would be knowne: too'th warres my boy, too'th warres:

He weares his honour in a boxe unseene,
That hugges his kickie wickie here at home,
Spending his manlie marrow in her armes
Which should sustaine the bound and high curvet
Of Maries sicrie steed: to other Regions,
France is a stable, we that dwell in't lades,
Therefore too'th warre.

Ros. It shall be so, Ile send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am fled: Write to the King
That which I durst not speake. His present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields
Where noble fellows strike: Warre is no strife
To the darke house, and the detested wife.

Par. Will this Caprichio hold in thee, art sure?

Ros. Go with me to my chamber, and advize me.
Ile send her straight away: To morrow,
Ile to the warres, she to her single sorrow.

Par. Why these bals bound, ther's noife in it. Tis hard
A young man married, is a man that's mard:
Therefore away, and leave her bravely: go,
The King ha's done you wrong: but hush 'tis so, Exit.

Enter Helena and Clowne.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly, is she well?

Cl. She is not well, but yet she has her health, she's very merrie, but yet she is not well: but thanks be given she's very well, and wants nothing i'th world: but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what do's she ayle, that she's not very well?

Cl. Truly she's very well indeed, but for two things.

Hel. What two things?

Cl. One that she is not in heaven, whither God send her quickly: the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Blesse you my fortunate Ladie.

Hel. I hope sir I have your good will to have mine owne good fortune.

Par. You had my prayersto leade them on, and to keepe them on, have them still. O my knaue, how do's my old Ladie?

Cl. So that you had her wrinkles and I her money, I would she did as you say.

Par. Why I say nothing.

Cl. Marry you are the wiser man: for many a mans tongue shakes out his masters undoing: to say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away, th'art a knaue.

Cl. You should have sayd sir before a knave, th'art a knave, that's before me th'art a knave: this had beene truth sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a wittie foole, I have found thee.

Cl. Did you finde me in your selfe sir, or were you taught to finde me?

Cl. The search sir was profitable, and much Foole may you find in you, even to the worlds pleasure, and the encrease of laughter.

Par. A good knave i'faith, and well fed.
Madam, my Lord will go away to night,

A verie ferrious businesse call's on him :
The great prerogative and rite of love,
Which as your due time claimes, he do's acknowledge,
But puts it off to a compell'd restraint:
Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets
Which they distill now in the curbed time,
To make the comming houre oreflow with joy,
And pleasure drowne the brim.

Hel. What's his will else ?

Par. That you will take your instant leave a'th king,
And make this hast as your owne good proceeding,
Strengthened with what Apologie you thinke
May make it probable neede.

Hel. What more commands hee ?

Par. That having this obtain'd, you presently
Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I waite upon his will.

Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you come firrah.

Exit Par.

Exit.

Enter Lafew and Bertram.

Laf. But I hope your Lordshippe thinkes not him a souldier.

Ber. Yes my Lord, and of verie valiant approofe.

Laf. You have it from his owne deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimonie.

Laf. Then my Diall goes not true, I tooke this Larke for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you my Lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinn'd against his experience, and transgressed against his valour, and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot find in my hart to repent : Heere he comes, I pray you make us friends, I will pursue the amitie.

Enter Parolles.

Par. These things shall be done sir.

Laf. Pray you sir who's his Tailor ?

Par. Sir ?

Laf. O I know him well, I sir, he sir's a good worke-man, a very good Tailor.

Ber. Is she gone to the king ?

Par. Shee is.

Ber. Will she away to night ?

Par. As you'll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, casketted my treasure,
Given order for our horse, and to night,
When I should take possession of the Bride,
And ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is some thing at the latter end of a dinner, but on that lies three thirds, and uses a knowne truth to passe a thousand nothings with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten. God save your Captaine.

Ber. Is there any unkindnesse betwene my Lord and you Monsieur ?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my Lords displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into't, bootes and spurres and all : like him that leapes into the Custard, and out of it you'll runne againe, rather then suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be you have mistaken him my Lord.

Laf. And shall doe so ever, though I tooke him at's prayers. Fare you well my Lord, and beleeve this of me, there can be no kernell in this light Nut : the soule of this man is his clothes : Trust him not in matter of heavie consequence : I have kept of them tame, and know their natures. Farewell Monsieur, I have spoken better of you, then you have or will deserve at my hand, but we must do good against evill.

Par. An idle Lord, I sweare.

Ber. I thinke so.

Par. Why do you not know him ?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well, and common speech
Gives him a worthy passe. Here comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have fir as I was commanded from you
Spoke with the King, and have procur'd his leave
For present parting, onely he desires
Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must must not marvelle Helena at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministration, and required office
On my particular. Prepar'd I was not
For such a businesse, therefore am I found
So much unsetled : This drives me to intreate you,
That presently you take your way for home,
And rather muse then aske why I intreate you,
For my respects are better then they seeme,
And my appointments have in them a neede
Greater then shewe's it selfe at the first view,
To you that know them not. This to my mother,
'Twill be two daies ere I shall see you, so
I leave you to your wisedome.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall

With true observance seeke to ecke out that Wherein toward me my homely starres have faild
To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that goe : my haste is very great. Farewell :
Hie home.

Hel. Pray sir your Pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say ?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,
Nor dare I say 'tis mine : and yet it is,
But like a timorous theefe, most faine would steale
What law does vouch mine owne.

Ber. What would you have ?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much : nothing indeed,
I would not tell you what I would my Lord : Faith yes,
Strangers and foes doe sunder, and not kisse.

Ber. I pray you stay not, but in hast to horse,

Hel. I shall not breake your bidding, good my Lord :
Where are my other men ? Monsieur : farewell. Exit.

Ber. Go thou toward home, where I will never come,
Whil't I can shake my sword, or heare the drumme :
A way, and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, Coragio.

Adus Tertius.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, the two Frenchmen, with a troupe of Souldiers.

Duke. So that from point to point, now have you heard
The

The fundamentall reasons of this warre,
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth
And more thirsts after.

1. Lord. Holy seemes the quarrell
Vpon your Graces part : blacke and fearfull
On the opposer.

Duke. Therefore we mervaille much our Cofin France
Would in so just a businesse, shut his bosome
Against our borrowing prayers.

French E. Good my Lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yeelde,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a Counsaile frames,
By selfe unable motion, therefore dare not Say what I thinke of it, since I have found
My selfe in my incertaine grounds to faile
As often as I guest.

Du. Be it his pleasure.

Fren. G. But I am sure the yonger of our nature,
That surfet on their ease, will day by day
Come heere for Physicke.

Du. Welcome shall they bee:
And all the honors that can flye from us,
Shall on them settle: you know your places well,
When better fall, for your availes they fell.
To morrow to the field.

Enter Countesse and Clowne.

Count. It hath happen'd all, as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Cl. By my troth I take my young Lord to be a very melancholy man.

Con. By what observance I pray you?

Cl. Why he will looke upon his boote, and sing: mend the Ruffe and sing, aske questions and sing, picke his teeth, and sing: I know a man that had this trick of melancholy hold a goodly Mannor for a song.

Lad. Let me see what he writes, and when he meanes to come.

Cl. I have no mind to Isbell since I was at Court. Our old Ling and our Isbella's Country, are nothing like your old Ling & your Isbella's Court: the brains of my Cupid's knock'd out, and I beginne to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomacke.

Lad. What have we heere?

Cl. In that have you there.

Exit.

A Letter.

I have sent you a daughter-in-Law, shee hath recovered the King, and undone me: I have wedded her, not bedded her, and sworne to make the not eternall. You shall heare I am runne away, know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

Your unfortunate sonne, Bertram.

This is not well (rash and vnbridled boy,)
To flye the favours of so good a King,
To plucke his indignation on thy head,
By the misprising of a Maide too vertuous
For the contempt of Empire.

Enter Clowne.

Cl. O Madam, yonder is heavy newes within between two souldiers, and my yong Lady.

La. What is the matter.

Cl. Nay there is some comfort in the newes, some comfort, your sonne will not be kild so soone as I thought he would.

La. Why should he be kill'd?

Cl. So say I Madame, if he runne away, as I heare he does, the danger is in standing too't; that's the losse of men, though it be the getting of children. Heere they come will tell you more. For my part I onely heare your sonne was run away.

Enter Helen and two Gentlemen.

French E. Save you good Madam.

Hel. Madam, my Lord is gone, for ever gone.

Fren. G. Do not say so.

La. Thinke upon patience, pray you Gentlemen;
I have felt so many quirkes of joy and greefe,
That the first face of neither on the start
Can woman me vntoo't. Where is my sonne I pray you?

Fren. G. Madam he's gone to serve the Duke of Florence,

We met him thitherward, for thence we came:
And after some dispatch in hand at Court,
Thither we bend againe.

Hel. Looke on his Letter Madam, here's my Passport.

When thou canst get the Ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and shew me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a (then) I write a Never.

This is a dreadfull sentence.

La. Brought you this Letter Gentlemen?

1. G. I Madam, and for the Contents sake are sorry for our paines.

Old La. I prethee Lady have a better cheere,
If thou engross'st, all the greefes are thine,
Thou rob'st me of a moiety: He was my sonne,
But I do wash his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my childe. Towards Florence is he?

Fren. G. I Madam.

La. And to be a souldier!

Fren. G. Such is his noble purpose, and beleev't
The Duke will lay upon him all the honor
That good convenience claimes.

La. Returne you thither?

Fren. E. I Madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France,
'Tis better.

La. Finde you that there?

Hel. I Madame.

Fren. E. 'Tis but the boldnes of his hand happily, which his heart was not consenting too.

Lad. Nothing in France, until he have no wife:
There's nothing heere that is too good for him
But onely she, and she deserves a Lord
That twenty such rude boyes might tend upon,
And call her hourly Mistris. Who was with him?

Fren. E. A servant onely, and a Gentleman: which I have sometime knowne.

La. Parolles was it not?

Fren. E. I my good Lady, hee.

La. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickednesse,
My sonne corrupts a well derived nature
With his inducement.

Fren. E. Indeed good Lady the fellow has a deale of that, too much, which holds him much to have.

La. Yare welcome Gentlemen, I will intreate you when you see my sonne, to tell him that his sword can never winne the honor that he looses: more Ile intreate you written to beare along.

Fren. G. We serve you Madam in that and all your worthiest affaires.

La. Not so, but as we change our courtesies, Will you draw neere?

Exit.

Hel. Till I have no wife I have nothing in France.

Nothing in France untill he has no wife:

Thou shalt have none Rossillion, none in France,

Then halt thou all againe: poore Lord, is't I

That chafe thee from thy Countrie, and expose

Those tender limbes of thine, to the event

Of the none-sparing warre? And is it I,

That drive thee from the sportive Court, where thou

Was't shot at with faire eyes, to be the marke

Of smoakie Muskets? O you leaden messengers,

That ride upon the violent speede of fire,

Fly with false ayme, move the still-piercing aire

That stings with piercing, do not touch my Lord:

Who ever shoots at him, I set him there.

Who ever charges on his forward brest,

I am the Caitiffe that do hold him too't,

And though I kill him not, I am the cause

His death was so effected: Better 'twere

I met the ravine Lyon when he roar'd

With sharpe constraint of hunger: better 'twere,

That all the miseries which nature owes

Were mine at once. No come thou home Rossillion,

Whence honor but of danger winnes a scarre,

As oft it looses all. I will be gone:

My being heere it is, that holds thee hence,

Shall I stay heere to doo't? No, no, although

The ayre of Paradise did fan the house,

And Angels offic'd all: I will be gone,

That pittifull rumour may report my flight

To consolats thine care. Come night, end day,

For with the darke (poore theefe) Ile steale away. Exit.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Rossillion, drum and trumpets, soldiers, Parrolles.

Duke. The Generall of our horse thou art, and we Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence Vpon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir it is

A charge too heavy for my strength, but Wee'l strive to beare it for your worthy sake, To th'extreme edge of hazard.

Du. Then go thou forth, And fortune play upon thy prosperous helme As thy auspicious mistris.

Ber. This very day

Great Mars I put my selfe into thy file, Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove A lover of thy drumme, hater of love. Exeunt omnes

Enter Countesse & Steward.

La. Alas! and would you take the letter of her: Might you not know she would do, as she has done, By sending me a Letter. Reade it agen.

Letter.

I am S. Iaquet Pilgrim, whither gone: Ambitious love hath so in me offended, That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon With fainting vow my faults to have amended.

Write, write, that from the bloody course of warre, My dearest Maister your deare sonne may live, Blesse him at home in peace. Whilst I from farre, His name with zealous fervour sanctifie: His taken labours bid him me forgive: I his despitfull Iuno sent him forth, From Courtly friends, with Camping foes to live, Where death and danger dogs the beeles of warre. He is too good and faire for death, and me, Whom I my selfe embrace, to set him free.

Ah what sharpe stings are in her mildest words?

Rynaldo, you did never lacke advice so much,

As letting her passe so: had I spoke with her,

I could have well diverted her intents,

Which thus she hath prevented.

Ste. Pardon me Madam,

If I had given you this at over-night,

She might have bene ore-tane: and yet she writes

Pursuite would be but vaine.

La. What Angell shall

Blesse this unworthy husband, he cannot thrive,

Vnlesse her prayers, whom heaven delights to heare

And loves to grant, repreeve him from the wrath

Of greatest Iustice. Write, and write Rynaldo,

To this unworthy husband of his wife,

Let every word waigh heavy of her worth,

That he does waigh too light: my greatest greefe,

Though little he doe feele it, set downe sharply.

Dispatch the most convenient messenger,

When haply he shall heare that she is gone,

He will returne, and hope I may that shee

Hearing so much, will speed her foote againe,

Led hither by pure love: which of them both

Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sence

To make distinction: provide this Messenger:

My heart is heavy, and mine age is weake,

Greefe would have teares, and sorrow bids me speake. Exeunt.

A Tucket afarre off.

Enter old Widdow of Florence, her daughter, Violenta and Mariana, with other Citizens.

Widdow. Nay come, For if they do approach the Citty, We shall loose all the fight.

Dia. They say, the French Count has done Most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported, That he has taken their great'st Commander, And that with his owne hand he slew The Dukes brother: we haue lost our labour, They are gone a contrary way: harke, You may know by their Trumpets.

Maria. Come lets returne againe, And suffice our selves with the report of it. Well Diana, take heed of this French Earle, The honor of a Maide is her name, And no Legacie is so rich As honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour How you have bene solicited by a Gentleman His Companion.

Maria

Maria. I know that knave, hang him, one Parrolles a filthy Officer he is in those suggestions for the young Earle, beware of them Diana; their promises, entisements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maide hath beene seduced by them, and the misery is example, that so terrible shewes in the wracke of maiden-hood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twiggess that threatens them. I hope I neede not to advise you further, but I hope your owne grace will keepe you where you are, though there were no further danger knowne, but the modestie which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not neede to feare me.

Enter Helan.

Wid. I hope so: looke here comes a pilgrim, I know she will lye at my house, thither they send one another, Ile question her. God save you pilgrim, whither are you bound?

Hel. To S. Jaques la grand.

Where do the Palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the S. Francis heere beside the Port.

Hel. Is this the way?

A march afaire.

Wid. I marry ist. Harke you, they come this way:

If you will tarry holy Pilgrime:

But till the the troopes come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd,

The rather for I thinke I know your hostesse

As ampie as my selfe.

Hel. Is it your selfe?

Wid. If you shall please so Pilgrime.

Hel. I thanke you, and will stay upon your leisuere.

Wid. You came I thinke from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Heere you shall see a Countiman of yours

That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name I pray you?

Dia. The Count Rossillion: know you such a one?

Hel. But by the eare that heares most nobly of him:

His face I know not.

Dia. What somere his is

He's bravely taken heere. He stole from France

As 'tis reported: for the King had married him

Against his liking. Thinke you it is so?

Hel. I surely, mere the truth, I know his Lady.

Dia. There is a Gentleman that serves the Court,

Reports but courtesly of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Dia. Monsieur Parrolles.

Hel. Oh I beleewe with him,

In argument of praise, or to the worth

Of the great Count himselfe, she is too meane

To have her name repeated, all her deserving

Is a reserved honesty, and that

I have not heard examin'd.

Dia. Alas poore Lady,

'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife

Of a detesting Lord.

Wid. I right good creature, wherefoere she is,

Her hart waighes sadly: this yong maid might do her

A shrewd turne if she pleas'd.

Hel. How do you meane?

May be, the amorous Count solicites her

In the unlawfull purpose.

Wid. He does indeede,

And brokes with all that can in such a suite

Corrupt the tender honour of a Maide:

But she is arm'd for him, and keepes her guard

In honestest defence.

Drumme and Colours.

Enter Count Rossillion, Parrolles, and the whole Army.

Ma. The goddes forbid else.

Wid. So, now they come:

That is Antonio the Dukes eldest sonne,

That Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dia. Hee,

That with the plume, 'tis a most gallant fellow,

I would he lov'd his wife: if he were honest

He were much goodlier. Is't not a handsome Gentleman?

Hel. I like him well.

Dia. 'Tis pittie he is not honest: yonds that same knave

That leads him to these places: were I his Lady,

I would poison that vile Rascall.

Hel. Which is he?

Dia. That lacke an-apes with scarfes. Why is he melancholly?

Hel. Perchance he s'hurt i'th battaile.

Par. Loose our drum? Well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vext at something. Looke he has spyed us.

Wid. Marry hang you.

Mar. And your curtesie, for a ring-carrier. Exit.

Wid. The troope is past: Come pilgrim, I wil bring

You, Where you shall host: Of injoynd penitents

There's foure or five, to great S. Jaques bound,

Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thanke you:

Please it this Matron, and this gentle Maide

To eate with us to night, the charge and thanking

Shall be for me, and to requite you further,

I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,

Worthy the note.

Beb. Wee'll take your offer kindly. Exeunt.

Enter Count Rossillion and the Frenchmen, as at first.

Cap. E. Nay good my Lord put him toot't: let him have his way.

Cap. G. If your Lordship finde him not a Hilding, hold me no more in your respect,

Cap. E. On my life my Lord a bubble.

Ber. Do you thinke I am so farre

Deceived in him?

Cap. E. Beleewe it my Lord, in mine owne direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speake of him as my kinsman, hee's a most notable Coward, an infinite and endlesse Lyar, an houely promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality, worthy your Lordships entertainment.

Cap. G. It were fit you knew him, least reposing too farre in his vertue which he hath not, he might at some great and trustie businesse, in a maine daunger, fayle you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particlar action to try him.

Cap. G. None better then to let him fetch off his drumme, which you heare him so confidently undertake to do.

G. E. I with a troop of Florentines will sodainly surprize prize him ; such I will have whom I am sure he knowes not from the enimie : wee will binde and hoodwinke him so , that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the Leager of the adversaries , when we bring him to our owne tents : bee but your Lordship present at his examination , if he do not for the promise of his life , and in the highest compulsion of base feare , offer to betray you , and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you , and that with the divine forfeite of his soule upon oath , never trust my judgement in any thing.

Cap. G. O for the love of laughter , let him fetch his drumme , he sayes he has a stratagem for't : when your Lordship sees the bottome of this successe in't , and to what mettle this counterfeyt lump of ours will be melted , if you give him not Iohn drummes entertainment , your inclining cannot be removed. Heere he comes.

Enter Parolles.

Cap. E. O for the love of laughter hinder not the honor of his designe , let him fetch off his drumme in any hand.

Ber. How now Monsieur ? This drumme sticks forely in your disposition.

Cap. G. A pox on't , let it go , 'tis but a drumme.

Par. But a drumme ! Ift but a drumme ? A drum so lost. There was excellent command , to charge in with our horse upon our owne wings , and to rend our owne souldiers.

Cap. G. That was not to be blam'd in the command of the service : it was a disaster of warre that Cesar himselfe could not have prevented , if he had beene there to command.

Ber. Well , wee cannot greatly condemne our successe : some dishonor wee had in the losse of that drum , but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have beene recovered.

Ber. It might , but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered , but that the merit of service is sildome attributed to the true and exact performer , I would have that drumme or another , or hic jacet.

Ber. Why if you have a stomacke : too't Monsieur : if you thinke your mysterie in stratagem ; can bring this instrument of honour againe into his native quarter , bee magnanimous in the enterprize and go on , I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit : if you speede well in it , the Duke shall both speake of it , and extend to you what further becomes his greatnesse , even to the vtmost syllable of your worthinesse.

Par. By the hand of a souldier I will undertake it.

Ber. but you must not now slumber in it.

Par. Ile about it this evening , and I will presently pen downe my dilemma's , encourage my selfe in my certainty , put my selfe into my mortall preparation : and by midnight looke to heare further from me.

Ber. May I bee bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it.

Par. I know not what the successe will be my Lord , but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know th'art valiant ,
And to the possibility of thy souldiership ,
Will subscribe for thee : Farewell.

Par. I love not many words.

Exit.

Cap. E. No more then a fish loves water. Is not this a strange fellow my Lord , that so confidently seemes to undertake this businesse , which he knowes is not to bee done , damnes himselfe to do , & dares better be damnd , then to doo't.

Cap. G. You do not know him my Lord as wee doe , certaine it is that he will steale himselfe into a mans favour , and for a weeke escape a great deale of discoveries , but when you finde him out , you have him ever after.

Ber. Why do you thinke hee will make no deede at all of this that so seriously hee dooes addresse himselfe unto?

Cap. E. None in the world , but returne with an invention , and clap upon you two or three probable lies : but wee have almost imboist him , you shall see his fall to night ; for indeede hee is not for your Lordshippes respect.

Cap. G. Weele make you some sport with the Foxe ere wee case him. He was first smoak'd by the old Lord Lafew ; when his disguise and he is parted , tell me what a sprat you shall finde him , which you shall see this very night.

Cap. E. I must go looke my twigges ,
He shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.

Cap. G. As't please your Lordship , Ile leave you.

Ber. Now will I leade you to the house , and shew you The Lasse I spoke of.

Cap. E. But you say sh's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault : I spoke with hir but once , And found her wondrous cold , but I sent to her By this same Coxcombe that we have i'th winde Tokens and Letters , which she did send , And this is all I have done : She's a faire creature , Will you go see her?

Cap. E. With all my heart my Lord.

Exeunt.

Enter Hellen , and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not shee , I know not how I shall assure you further , But I shall loose the grounds I worke upon.

Wid. Though my estate be false , I was well borne , Nothing acquainted with these businesse , And would not put my reputation now In any staining act.

Hel. Mor would I wish you.

First give me trust , the Count he his my husband , And what to your sworne counsaile I have spoken , Is so from word to word : and then you cannot By the good ayde that I of you shall borrow , Erre in bestowing it.

Wid. I should beleeeve you ,
For you have shew'd me that which well approves Y'are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of Gold ,
And let me buy your friendly helpe thus farre ,
Which I will over-pay , and pay againe
When I have found it. The Count he woos your daughter ,

Layes downe his wanton sledge before her beauty ,
Resolves to carry her : let her in fine consent
As wee'l direct her how 'tis best to beare it :
Now his important blood will naught deny ,
That shee'l demand : a ring the County weares ,
That downward hath succeeded in his house
From sonne to sonne , some foure or five descents ,

Since

Since the first father wore it. This Ring he holds
In most rich choice: yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seeme too deere,
How ere repented after.

Wid. Now I see the bottome of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawfull then, it is no more,
But that your daughter ere she seemes as wonne,
Defies this Ring; appoints him an encounter,
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Her selfe most chastly absent: after this
To marry her, He adde three thousand Crownes
To what is past already.

Wid. I have yeelded:

Instruct my daughter how she shall perseuer,
That time and place with this deceit so lawfull
May prove coherent. Every night he comes
With Múfickes of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her vnworthinesse: It nothing steeds us
To chide him from our eues, for he persists
As if his life lay on't.

Hel. Why then to night

Let us assay our plot, which if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawfull deede;
And lawfull meaning in a lawfull act,
Where both not sinne, and yet a sinfull fact.
But let's about it.

Actus Quartus.

Enter one of the Frenchmen, with five or six other souldiers in ambúsh.

1. Lord E. He can come no other way but by this hedge corner; when you fall upon him, speake what terrible Language you will: though you understand it not your seives, no matter: for we must not seeme to understand him, unlesse some one among us, whom we must produce for an Interpreter.

1. Sol. Good Captaive, let me be th' Interpreter.

Lor. E. Art not acquainted with him? knowes he not thy voice?

1. Sol. No sir I warrant you.

Lo. E. But what linie wolsty hast thou to speake to us again?

1. Sol. E'n such as you speake to me.

Lo. E. He must thinke us some band of strangers, i'th adversaries entertainment. Now he hath a smacke of all neighbouring Languages: therefore we must every one be a man of his owne fancy, not to know what we speake one to another: so we seeme to know, is to know straight our purpose: Choughs language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you interpreter, you must seeme very politicke. But couch hoa, heere he comes, to beguile two houres in a sleepe, and then to returne & sweare the lies he forges.

Enter Parrolles.

Par. Ten a clocke: Within these three houres 'twill be time enough to goe home. What shall I say I have done? It must bee a very plausible invention that carries it. They beginne to smoake mee, and disgraces have of late, knock'd too often at my doore: I finde my tongue is too foole-hardy, but my heart hath the feare of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

Lo. E. This is the first truth that ere thine own tongue was guilty of.

Par. What the divell should move mee to undertake the recovery of this drumme, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give my selfe some hurts, and say I got them in exploit: yet slight ones will not carry it. They will say, came you off with so little? And great ones I dare not give, wherefore what's the instance. Tongue, I must put you into a Butter-womans mouth, and buy my selfe another of Bajazets Mule, if you prattle mee into these perils.

Lo. E. Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is.

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turne, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Lo. E. We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring of my beard, and to say it was in stratagem.

Lo. E. 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drowne my cloathes, and say I was stript.

Lo. E. Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leapt from the window of the Citadell.

Lo. E. How deepe?

Par. Thirty fadome.

Lo. E. Three great oathes would scarce make that be beleev'd.

Pa. I would I had any drumme of the enemies, I would sweare I recover'd it.

Lo. E. You shall heare one anon.

Par. A drumme now of the enemies.

Alarm within.

Lo. E. Throca movensuz, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, villianda par corbo, cargo.

Par. O ransome, ransome,

Do not hide mine eyes.

Inter. Baskas thromuldo baskas.

Par. I know you are the Muskys Regiment,
And I shall loose my life for want of language.
If there be heere German or Dane, Low Dutch,
Italian, or French, let him speake to me,
He discover that, which shall undo the Florentine.

Int. Baskas vavvado, I understand thee, and can speake thy tongue: Kerehybonto sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seventeene ponyards are at thy bosome.

Par. Oh.

Int. Oh pray, pray, pray,
Mancha revansa dulce.

Lo. E. Ofcearhidulohor volivoro.

Int. The Generall is content to spare thee yet,
And hoodwink't as thou art, will leade thee on
To gather from thee. Haply thou mayst informe
Something to save thy life.

Par. O let me live,
And all the secrets of our campe He shew,
Their force, their purposes: Nay, He speake that,
Which you will wonder at.

Int. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damne me.

Int. Acardo linta.

Come on, thou art granted space.

Exit.

A fure Alarm within.

X 3

Lo. E.

L. E. Go tell the Count Rossillion and my brother,
We have caught the woodcocke, and will keepe him
Till we do heare from them. (mused)

Sol. Captaine I will.

L. E. A will betray us all unto our selves,
Inferme on that.

Sol. So I will fir.

L. E. Till then Ile keepe him darke and safely lockt.
Exit.

Enter Bertram, and the Maid called Diana.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fentybell.

Dia. No my good Lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled Goddesse,

And worth it with addition: but faire soule,
In your fine frame hath love no quality?
If the quicke fire of youth light not your minde,
You are no Maiden but a monument:
When you are dead you should be such a one
As you are now: for you are cold and sterne,
And now you should be as your mother was
When your sweet selfe was got.

Dia. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

Dia. No:

My mother did but duty, such (my Lord)
As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more a that:

I prethee do not strive against my vowes:
I was compell'd to her, but I love thee
By loves owne sweet constraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. I so you serve us

Till we serve you: But when you have our Roses,
You barely leave our thornes to pricke our selves,
And mocke us with our barenesse.

Ber. How have I sworne.

Dia. 'Tis not the many oathes that make the truth,
But the plaine single vow, that is vow'd true:
What is not holy, that we sweare not by,
But take the high't to witnesse: then pray you tell me,
If I should sweare by Loves great attribute,
I lov'd you deerely, would you beleve my oathes,
When I did love you ill? This ha's no holding
To sweare by him whom I protest to love
That I will worke against him. Therefore your oathes
Are words and poore conditions, but unfeald
At least in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it:

Be not so holy cruell: Love is holy,
And my integrity ne're knew the crafts
That you do charge men with: Stand no more off,
But give thy selfe unto my sicke desires,
Who then recover's. Say thou art mine, and ever
My love as it beginnes, shall so perfever.

Dia. I see that men make rope's in such a scarre,
That wee'l forsake our selves. Give me that Ring.

Ber. Ile lend it thee my deere, but have no power
To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not my Lord?

Ber. It is an honour longing to our house,
Bequeathed downe from many Ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquy i'th world,
In me to loofe.

Dia. Mine Honors such a Ring,
My chastities the Jewell of our house,

Bequeathed downe from many Ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquie i'th world,
In mee to loofe. Thus your owne proper wisdome
Brings in the Champion honor on my part,
Against your vaine assault.

Ber. Heere, take my Ring,
My house, mine honor, yea my life be thine,
And Ile be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knocke at my chamber window:

Ile order take, my mother shall not heare.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yet maiden-bed,
Remaine there but an houre, nor speake to me:
My reasons are most strong, and you shall know them,
When backe againe this Ring shall be deliver'd:
And on your finger in the night, Ile put Another Ring, that what in time proceeds,
May token to the future, our past deeds.
Adieu till then, then faile not: you have wonne
A wife of me, though there my hope be done.

Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee. Ex.

Di. For which, live long to thanke both heaven & me,
You may so in the end.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she fate in's heart. She sayes, all men
Have the like oathes: He had sworne to marry me
When his wife's dead: therefore Ile lye with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braide, Marry that will, I live and die a Maid:
Onely in this disguise, I think't no sinne,
To cosen him that would unjustly winne. Exit.

Enter the two French Captaines, and some two or three Souldiours.

Cap. G. You have not given him his mothers letter.

Cap. E. I have deliv'ed it an houre since, there is som thing in't that things his nature: for on the reading it, he chang'd almost into another man.

Cap. G. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a Lady.

Cap. E. Especially, hee hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the King, who had even tun'd his bounty to sing happinesse to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

Cap. G. When you have spoken it 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Cap. E. Hee hath perverted a young Gentlewoman heere in Florence, of a most chaste renown, and this night he fleshes his will in the spoyle of her honour: hee hath given her his monumentall Ring, and thinkes himselfe made in the unchaste composition.

Cap. G. Now God delay our rebellion as we are our selves, what things are we.

Cap. E. Meerely our owne traitours. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveale themselves, till they attaine to their abhor'd ends: so he that in this action contrives against his owne Nobility in his proper streame, ore-flows himselfe.

Cap. G. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be Trum-peters of our unlawfull intents? We shall not then have his company to night?

Cap. E. Not till after midnight: for hee is dieted to his houre.

Cap. G. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him see his company anathomiz'd, that hee might take a measure of his owne judgements, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

Cap. E. We wil not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.

Cap. G. In the meane time; what heare you of those Warres?

Cap. E. I heare there is an overture of peace.

Cap. G. Nay, I assure you a peace concluded.

Cap. E. What will Count Rossillion do then? Will hee travaile higher, or returne againe into France?

Cap. G. I perceive by this demand, you are not altogether of his councill.

Cap. E. Let it be forbid sir, so should I be a great deale of his act.

Cap. G. Sir, his wife some two months since fledde from his house, her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Iaques le grand; which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony she accomplisht: and there residing, the tendernesse of her Nature, became as a prey to her griefe: in fine; made a groane of her last breath, & now she sings in heaven.

Cap. E. How is this justified?

Cap. G. The stronger part of it by her owne Letters, which makes her story true, even to the poynt of her death: her death is selfe, which could not be her office to say, is come: was faithfully confirm'd by the Rector of the place.

Cap. E. Hath the Count all this intelligence?

Cap. G. I, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

Cap. E. I am heartily sorry that hee'l bee gladd of this.

Cap. G. How mightily sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses.

Cap. E. And how mightily some other times, wee drowne our gaine in teares, the great dignity that his valour hath here acquir'd for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

Cap. G. The webbe of our life, is of a mingled yarne, good and ill together: our vertues would bee proud, if our faults whipt them not, and our crimes would despair if they were not cherish'd by our vertues.

Enter a Messenger.

How now? Where's your maister?

Ser. He met the Duke in the street sir, of whom hee hath taken a solemne leave: his Lordshippe will next morning for France. The Duke hath offered him Letters of commendations to the King.

Cap. E. They shall bee no more then needfull there, if they were more then they can commend.

Enter Count Rossillion.

Ser. They cannot be too sweete for the Kings tartnesse, heere's his Lordship now. How now my Lord, it's not after midnight?

Ser. I have to night dispatch'd sixteene businesses, a moneths lenght a peece, by an abstract of successe: I have congied with the Duke, done my adieu with his neereft; buried a wife, morn'd for her, writ to my Lady mother, I am returning, entertain'd my Convoy, and betweene these maine parcels of dispatch, affected many nicer needs: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

Cap. E. If the businesse bee of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires hast of your Lordship.

Ser. I meane the businesse is not ended, as fearing to heare of it hereafter: but shall we have this dialogue betweene the Foole and the Soldiour. Come, bring forth this counterfet module, has deceiv'd mee, like a double-meaning Prophetier.

Cap. E. Bring him forth, ha's fate it's stockes all night poore gallant knave.

Ser. No matter, his heeles have deserv'd it, in usurping his spurres so long. How does he carry himselfe?

Cap. E. I have told your Lordship already: The stockes carrie him. But to answer you as you would be under stood, he weepes like a wench that had shed her milke, he hath confest himselfe to Morgan, whom hee supposes to be a Friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his letting it's stockes: and what thinke you he hath confest?

Ser. Nothing of me, ha's a?

Cap. E. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face, if your Lordship be in't, as I beleeeve you are, you must have the patience to heare it.

Enter Parrolles with his Interpreter.

Ser. A plague upon him, muffeld; he can say nothing of me: hush.

Cap. G. Hoodman comes: Portoartarossa.

Int. He calles for the tortures, what will you say without em.

Par. I will confesse what I know without constraint, If ye pinch me like a Pasty, I can say no more.

Int. Bosko Chimurcho.

Cap. Babilindo chisnurmarco.

Int. You are a mercifull Generall: Our Generall bids you answer to what I shall aske you out of a Note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

Int. First demand of him, how many horse the Duke is strong. What say you to that?

Par. Five or sixe thousand, but very weake and unserviceable: the troopes are all scattered, and the Commanders very poore rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

Int. Shall I set downe your answer so?

Par. Do, Ile take the Sacrament on't, how and which way you will: all's one to him.

Ser. What a past-saving slave is this?

Cap. G. Y'are deceiv'd my Lord, this is Monsieur Parrolles the gallant militarist, that was his owne phrase, that had the whole theoricke of warre in the knot of his scarfe and the practise in the chape of his dagger.

Cap. E. I will never trust a man againe, for keeping his sword cleane, nor beleeeve hee can have every thing in him, by wearing his apparell neatly.

Int. Well, that's set downe.

Par. Five or six thousand horse I sed, I will say true, or thereabouts set downe, for Ile speake truth.

Cap. G. He's very neere the truth in this.

Ser. But I con him no thanks for't in the nature hee delivers it.

Par. Poore rogues, I pray you say.

Int. Well, that's set downe.

Par. I humbly thanke you sir, a truth's a truth, the Rogues are marvailous poore.

Int. Demand of him of what strength they are a foot. What say you to that?

Par. By my troth sir, if I were to live this present houre, I will tell true. Let me see, Spurio a hundred and fifty, fifty, Sebastian so many, Corambus so many, Iaques so many: Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowicke, and Gratij, two hundred fifty each: Mine owne Company, Chisopher, Dummond, Bemij, two hundred fifty each: so that the muster file, rotten and sound, upon my life amounts not to fiftene thousand pole, halfe of the which, dare not shake the snow from off their Cassocks, least they shake themselves to peeces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?

Cap. G. Nothing, but let him have thanks. Demand of him my conditions: and what credite I have with the Duke.

Int. Well that's set downe: you shall demaund of him, whether one Captaine Dumaine beitt'h Campe, a Frenchman: wh at his reputation is with the Duke, what his valour, honesty, and expertnesse in warres; or whet her he thinkes it were not possible with-wellwaighing summes of gold to corrupt him to a revolt. What say you to this? What do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you let me answer to the particular of theintergatories. Demand them singly.

Int. Do you know this Captaine Dumaine?

Par. I know him, a was a Butchers Prentize in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the Shrieves fool with childe, a dumbe innocent that could not say him nay.

Ber. Nay, by your leave hold your hands, though I know his braines are forfeite to the next tile that fals.

Inter. Well, is this Captaine in the Duke of Florences campe?

Par. Vpon my knowledge he is, and lowfie.

Cap. G. Nay looke not so upon me: we shall heare of your Lord anon.

Int. What is his reputation with the Duke?

Par. The Duke knowes him for no other, but a poore Officer of mine, and writ to me this other day, to turne him out a'th band. I thinke I have his Letter in my pocket.

Int. Marry we'll search.

Par. In good sadnesse I do not know, either it is there, or it is upon a file with the Dukes other Letters, in my Tent.

Int. Heere'tis, heere's a paper, shall I reade it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our Interpreter do's it well.

Cap. G. Excellently.

Int. Diana, the Countess afoote, and full of gold.

Par. That is not the Dukes letter sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maide in Florence, one Diana, to take heede of the allurement of one Count Rossillion, a foolish idle boy: but for all that very ruttish. I pray you sir put it up againe.

Int. Nay, Ile reade it first by your favour.

Par. My meaning in't I protest was very honest in the behalfe of the maide: for I knew the young Count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to Virginitie, and devours up all the fry it finds.

Ber. Damnable both-sides rogue.

Int. Let when he swears oathes, bid him drop gold, and take it:

After he swears, he never payes the score:

Halfewon is match well made, match and well make it,

He now payes after-debts, take it before,

And say a souldier (Dian) said shee this:

Adon are to melt with, boyes are not to kis.

For count of this, the Count a Foole I know it,
Who payes before, but not when he does owe it.

Thine as he vow'd to thee in thine care,
Parrolles.

Ber. He shall bee whipt through the Amy with this rime in's forehead.

Cap. E. This is your devoted friend sir, the manifold Linguist, and the army-potent souldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a Cat, and he's a Cat to me.

Int. I perceive sir by your Generals lookes, wee shall be faine to hang you.

Par. My life sir in any case: Not that I am afraide to dye, but that my offences beeing many, I would repent out the remainder of Nature. Let me live sir in a dungeon, i'th stockes, or any where, so I may live:

Int. Wee'll see what may bee done, so you confesse freely: therefore once more to this Captaine Dumaine: you have answer'd to his reputation with the Duke, and to his valour. What is his honesty?

Par. He will steale sir an Egge out of a Cloister: for rapes and ravishments he paralels Nessus. Hee professes not keeping of oaths, breaking em he is stronger then Hercules. He will lye sir, with such volubility, that you would thinke truth were a foole: drunkennesse is his best vertue, for he will be swine-drunke, and in his sleepe he does little harme, save to his bed-cloathes about him: but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say sir of his honesty, he ha's everie thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

Cap. G. I begin to love him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him for me, he's more and more a Cat.

Int. What say you to his expertnesse in warre?

Par. Faith sir, ha's led the drumme before the English Tragedians: to belie him I will not, and more of his souldiership I know not, except in that Country, he had the honour to be the Officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the doubling of files. I would doe the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certaine.

Cap. G. He hath out-villain'd villany so farre, that the raritie redeemes him.

Ber. A pox on him, he's a Cat still.

Int. His qualities being at this poore price, I need not to aske you, if Gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a Carduec he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it, and cut th'intaille from all remainders, and a perpetuall succession for it perpetually.

Int. What's his Brother, the other Captain Dumaine?

Cap. E. Why do's he aske him of me?

Int. What's he?

Par. E'ne a Crowat'h same nest: not altogether so great as the first in goodnesse, but greater a great deale in evill. He excels his Brother for a coward, yet his Brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat hee outrunnes any Lackey, marry in comming on, hee ha's the Crampe.

Int. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. I, and the Captaine of his horse, Count Rossillion.

Int. Ile whisper with the Generall, and knowe his pleasure.

Par. Ile no more drumming, a plague of all drummes, only to seeme to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition sition of that lascivious yong boy the Count, have I run into this danger: yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?

Int. There is no remedy sir, but you must dye: the Generall sayes, you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use: therefore you must dye. Come headesman, off with his head.

Par. O Lord sir let me live, or let mee see my death.

Int. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends:

So looke about you, know you any heere?

Count. Good morrow noble Captaine.

Lo. E. God blesse you Captaine Parolles.

Cap. G. God save you noble Captaine.

Lo. E. Captaine, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafew? I am for France.

Cap. G. Good Captaine will you give me a Copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalfe of the Count Rossillion, and I were not a very Coward, I'de compell it of you, but fare you well. Exeunt.

Int. You are undone Captaine all but your scarfe, that has a knot on't yet.

Par. Who cannot be crush'd with a plot?

Int. If you could finde out a Country where but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent Nation. Fare yee well sir, I am for France too, we shall speake of you there. Exit.

Par. Yet am I thankfull: if my heart were great 'Twould burst at this: Captaine Ile be no more, But I will eate, and drinke, and sleepe as soft As Captaine shall. Simply the thing I am Shall make me live: who knowes himselfe a braggart Let him feare this; for it will come to passe, That every braggart shall be found an Ass. Rust sword, coole blushes, and Parolles live Safest in shame: being fool'd, by fool'ry thrive; There's place and meanes for every man alive. Ile after them.

Enter Helen, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,

One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall be my surety: for whose throne 'tis needfull Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneele. Time was I did him a desired office Deere almost as his life, which gratitude Through flinty Tartars bosome would peepe forth, And answer thanks. I duly am inform'd, His grace it Marsellis, to which place We have convenient convoy: you must know I am supposed dead, the Army breaking, My husband hies him home, where heaven ayding, And by the leave of my good Lord the King, Wee'll be before our welcome.

Wid. Gentle Madam,

You never had a servant to whose trust Your busines was more welcome.

Hel. Nor your Mistris

Ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labour To recompence your love: Doubt not but heaven Hath brought me up to be your daughters dower, As it hath fated her to be my motive

And helper to a husband. But O strange men, That can such sweet use make of what they hate, When sawcy trusting of the cosin'd thoughts Defiles the pitchy night, so lust doth play With what it loathes, for that which is away, But more of this heereafter: you Diana, Under my poore instructions yet must suffer Something in my behalfe.

Dia. Let death and honesty

Go with your impositions, I am yours Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet I pray you:

But with the word the time will bring on summer, When Briars shall have leaves as well as thornes, And be as sweet as sharpe: we must away, Our Wagon is prepar'd, and time revivues us, All's well that ends well, still that fines the Crowne; What ere the course, the end is the renowne. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne, old Lady, and Lafew.

Laf. No, no, no, your sonne was misled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbak'd and dowy youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had beene alive at this houre, and your sonne heere at hom, more aduanc'd by the King, then by that red-rail'd humble Bee I speake of.

La. I would I had not knowne him, it was the death of the most vertuous gentlewoman, that ever Nature had praise for creating. If she had partaken of my flesh and cost mee the deereft groanes of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

La. 'Twas a good Lady, 'twas a good Lady. We may picke a thousand fallers ere wee light on such another hearbe.

Cl. Indeed sir she was the sweete Margerom of the faller, or rather the hearbe of grace.

Laf. They are not hearbes you knave, they are nose-hearbes.

Cl. I am no great Nabuchadnezzar sir, I have not much skill in grace.

La. Whether dost thou professe thy selfe, a knave or a foole?

Cl. A foole sir at a womans service, and a knave at a mans.

La. Your distinction.

Cl. I would coufen the man of this wife, and do his service.

La. So you were a knave at his service indeed.

Cl. And I would give his wife my bauble sir to do her service.

La. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and foole.

Cl. At your service.

La. No, no, no.

Cl. Why sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

La. Whose that, a Frenchman?

Cl. Faith sir a has an English maine, but his fisnomy is more hotter in France then there.

La. What prince is that?

Cl. The blacke prince sir, alias the prince of darkenesse alias the divell.

La. Hold thee, there's my purse, I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talk'st off, serve him still.

Clow.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow sir, that alwaies loved a great fire, and the maister I speake of ever keeps a good fire, but sure he is the Prince of the world, let his Nobilitie remaine in's Court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to bee too little for pompe to enter: some that humble themselves may, but the many will be too chill and tender, and theyle bee for the flowrie way that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

La. Go thy waies, I begin to bee a weary of thee and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy wayes, let my horses be well look'd to, without any trickes.

Clo. If I put any trickes upon em sir, they shall bee Iades trickes, which are their owne right by the law of Nature. Exit.

Laf. A shrewd knave and an unhappy.

Lady. So a is. My Lord that's gone made himselfe much sport out of him, by his authority hee remaines here, which he thinkes is a patten for his sawcinesse, and indeed he has no pace, but runnes where he will.

Laf. I like him well, 'tis not amisse: and I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good Ladies death, and that my Lord your sonne was upon his returne home. I moved the King my maister to speake in the behalfe of my daughter, which in the minprity of them both, his Majesty out of a selfe gracious remembrance did first propose, his Highnesse hath promis'd me to doe it, and to stoppe up the displeasure he hath conceived against your sonne, there is no fitter matter. How do's your Ladyship like it?

La. With very much content my Lord, and I wish it happily effected.

La. His Highnesse comes post from Marcellis, of as able body as when he number'd thirty, a will be heere to morrow, or I am deceiv'd by him that in such intelligence hath feldome fail'd.

La. I rejoyces me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my sonne will be heere to night: I shal beseech your Lordship to remaine with mee, till they meete together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what Manners I might safely be admitted.

La. You neede but pleade your honourable priviledge.

La. Lady of that I have made a bold charter, but I thanke my God, it holds yet.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. O Madam, yonders my Lord your sonne with a patch of veluet on's face, whether there be a scar under't or no, the Veluet knowes, but 'tis a goodly patch of Velvet, his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a halfe, but his right cheek is worne bare.

La. A scarre nobly got:
Or a noble scarre, is a good liv'ry of honor,
So belike is that.

Clo. But it is your carbinado'd face.

La. Let us go see
Your sonne I pray you, I long to talke
With the yong noble souldier.

Clo. Faith there's a dozen of em, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at every man.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus,

Enter Hellen, Widdow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding positing day and night,
Must wear your spirits low, we cannot helpe it.
But since you have made the daies and nights as one,
To weare your gentle limbes in my affaires,
Be bold you do to grow, in my requitall,
As nothing can unroote you. In happy time,

Enter a gentle Asstranger.

This man may helpe me to his Majesties eare,
If he would spend his power. God save you sir!

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seene you in the Court of France.

Gent. I have beene sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume sir, that you are not false.
From the report that goes upon your goodnesse,
And therefore goaded with most sharpe occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your owne vertues, for the which
I shall continue thankfull.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you
To give this poore petition to the King,
And ayde me with that store of power you have
To come into his presence.

Gent. The Kings not heere.

Hel. Not heere sir?

Gent. Not indeed,
He hence remov'd last night, and with more hast
Then is his use.

Wid. Lord how we loose our paines.

Hel. All's well that ends well yet,
Though time seeme so adverse, and meanes unfit:
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marrie as I take it to Rossillion, Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you sir,
Since you are like to see the King before me,
Commend the paper to his gracious hand,
Which I presume shall render you no blame,
But rather make you thanke your paines for it:
I will come after you with what good speede
Our meanes will make us meanes.

Gent. This Ile do for you.

Hel. And you shall finde your selfe to be well thank what e're falles more. We must to horse againe, Go, go, provide. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne and Parrolles.

Par. Good M. Lavatch give my Lord Lafew this letter, I have ere now sir beene better knowne to you, when I have held familiaritie with fresher cloathes: but I am now sir mudded in fortunes mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Col. Truly, Fortunes displeasure is but stuttish if it smell so strongly as thou speak'st of: I will henceforth eate no Fish of Fortunes butt'ring. Prethee allow the winde.

Par. Nay you neede not to stop your nose sir: I speake but by a Metaphor.

Clo. Indeed sir, if your Metaphor stinke, I will stop my nose, or against any mans Metaphor. Prethee get thee further. Pa.

Par. Pray you deliver me this paper.

Cla. Foh, prethee stand away: a paper from fortunes close-stoole, to give to a Nobleman. Looke heere hee comes himselfe.

Enter Lafew.

Cla. Heere is a purre of Fortunes sir, or of Fortunes Cat, but not a Mulcat, that ha's falne into the uncleane fish-pond of her displeasure, and as he sayes is muddied withall. Pray you sir, use the Carpe as you may, for hee lookes like a poore decayed, ingenious, foolish, rascally knave. I do pittie his distresse in my smiles of comfort, and leave him to your Lordship.

Par. My Lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too late to paire her nailes now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune that she should scratch you, who of her seife is a good Lady, & would not have knaves thrive long under her? There's a Cardeme for you: Let the lustices make you and fortune friends; I am for other businesse.

Par. I beseech your honour to heare mee one single word.

Laf. You begge a single peny more: Come you shall ha't, save your word.

Par. My name my good Lord is Perelles.

Laf. You begge more then word then. Cox my passion, give me your hand: How does your drumme?

Par. O my good Lord, you were the first that found mee.

Laf. Was I insooth? And I was the first that lost thee.

Par. It lies in you my Lord to bring me in some grace for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee knave, dost thou put upon mee at once both the office of God and the diel: one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. The King's comming I know by his Trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me, I had talke of you last night, though you are a foole and a knave, you shall eate, go to, follow.

Par. I praise God for you.

Flourish. Enter King, old Lady, Lafew, the two French Lords, with attendants.

Kim. We lost a Jewell of her, and our esteeme Was made much poorer by it: but your sonne, As mad in folly, lack'd the fence to know Her estimation home.

Old La. 'Tis past my Liege, And I beseech your Majesty to make it Naturall rebellion, done i'th blade of youth, When oyle and fire, too strong for reasons force, Ore-bears it, and burnes on.

Kim. My honour'd Lady, I have forgiven and forgotten all, Though my revenges were high bent upon him, And watch'd the time to shoote.

Laf. This I must say, But first I begge my pardon: the yong Lord Did to his Majesty, his Mother, and his Lady, Offence of mighty note; but to himselfe The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes: whose words all eares tooke captive, Whose deere perfection, hearts that scorn'd to serve, Humbly call'd Mistris.

Kim. Praising what is lost, Makes the remembrance deere. Well, call him hither, We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill All repetition: Let him not aske our pardon, The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper then oblivion, we do burie Th' incensing reliques of it. Let him approach A stranger, no offender; and informe him So 'tis our will he should Gent. I shall my Liege.

Kim. What sayes he to your daughter, Have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is, hath reference to your Highnes.

Kim. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me, that sets him high in fame.

Enter Count Bertram.

Laf. He lookes well on't

Kim. I am not a day of season, For thou maist see a sun-shine, and a haile In me at once: But to the brightest beames Distracted clouds give way, so stand thou forth, The time is faire againe.

Bar. My high repented blames Deere Sovereigne pardon to me.

Kim. All is whole, Not one word more of the consumed time, Let's take the instant by the forward topt For we are old, and on our quick't decrees Th' inaudible, and noiselesse foot of time Steales, ere we can effect them. You remember The daughter of this Lord?

Bar. Admiringly my Liege, at first I stucke my choice upon her, ere my heart Durst make too bold a herauld of my tongue: Where the impression of mine eye enfixing, Contempt his scornfull Perspective did lend me, Which warpt the line of every other favour, Scorn'd a faire colour, or exprest it stolne, Extended or contracted all proportions To a most hideous object Thence it came. That she whom all men prais'd, and whom my selfe, Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye The dust that did offend it.

Kim. Wel excus'd: That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away From the great compt: but love that comes too late, Like a remorsefull pardon slowly carried To the great sender, turnes a sower offence, Crying, that's good that's gone: Our rash faults, Make triuiall price of serious things we have, Not knowing them, untill we know their grave. Oft our displeasures to our selves unjust, Destroy our friends, and after weepe their dust: Our owne love waking, cries to see what's done, While shamefull hate sleepes out the afternoone. Be this sweet Helens knell, and now forget her. Send forth your amorous token for faire Maudlin, The maine consents are had, and heere we'll stay To see our widdowers second marriage day: Which better then the first, O deere heaven blesse, Or, ere they meete in me, O Nature cease.

Laf. Come on my sonne, in whom my houses name Must be digested: give a favour from you To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,

That

That she may quickly come. By my old beard,
And ev'ry haire that's on't, Helen that's dead
Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,
The last that ere I tooke her leave at Court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

Kin. Now pray you let me see it. For mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd too't:
This Ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen,
I bad her if her fortunes ever stooode
Necessitied to helpe, that by this token
I would relevee her. Had you that craft to reave her
Of what should stead her most?

Ber. My gracious Sovereigne,
How ere it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Old La. Sonne, on my life
I have seene her weare it, and she reckon'd it
At her lives rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her weare it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd my Lord, she never saw it:
In Florence was it from a casement throwne mee,
Wrap'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it: Noble she was, and thought
I stood inag'd, but when I had subscrib'd
To mine owne fortune, and inform'd her fully,
I could not answer in that course of Honour
As she had made the overture, she ceast
In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the Ring againe.

Kin. Plains himselfe,
That knowes the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in natures mylerie more science,
Then I have in this Ring. 'Twas mine, 'twas Helen,
Who ever gave it you: then if you know
That you are well acquainted with your selfe,
Confesse 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call'd the Saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Vnlesse she gave it to you selfe in bed,
Where you have never come: or sent it us
Vpon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

Kin. Thou speak'st it falsely: as I love mine Honor,
And mak'st conjecturall feares to come into me,
Which I would faine shut out, if it should prove
That thou art so inhumane, 'twill not prove so.
And yet I know not, thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead, which nothing but to close
Her eyes my selfe, could win me to belevee,
More then to see this Ring. Take him away,
My fore-past proofes, how ere the matter fall
Shal taxe my feares of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little. Away with him,
Wee'l sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall prove
This Ring was ever hers, you shall as easie
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was.

Enter a Gentleman.

Kin. I am wrap'd in dismall thinkings.

Gen. Gracious Sovereigne.

Whether I have beene too blame or no, I know not,
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath for foure or five removes come short,
To tender it her selfe. I undertooke it,

Vanquish'd thereto by the faire grace and speech
Of the poore suppliant, who by this I know
Is heere attending: her businesse looks in her
With an importing visage, and shee told me
In a sweet verball breefe, it did concerne
Your Highnesse with her selfe.

A Letter.

*Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he wonne me. Now is the Count Ref.
sitten a Widower, his vowe is forfeited to mee, and my honors payed to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his Countrey for Justice: Grant it me, O King, in you it best lies, otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poore Maid is undone.*

Diana Capilet,

Laf. I will buy me a sonne in Law in a feare, and toke him for this. He none of him.

Kin. The heavens have thought well on thee Lafes,
To bring forth this discoury, seeke these tutors:
Go speedily, and bring againe the Count.

Enter Bertram.

I am a-feard the life of Helen (Lady)
Was fowly snatcht.

Old La. Now justice on the doers.

Kin. I wonder sir, wives are such monsters to you,
And that you flye them as you sweare them Lordship,
Yet you desire to marry. What woman's that?

Enter Widow, Diana, and Parrolles.

Dia. I am my Lord a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capilet,
My suite, as I do understand, you know,

And therefore know how farre I may be pittied
Wid. I am her Mother sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedie.

Kin. Come hither Count, do you know these Women?

Ber. My Lord, I neither can nor will denie,
But that I know them, do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you looke so strange upon your wife?

Ber. She's none of mine my Lord.

Dia. If you shall marrie

You give away this hand, and that is mine,
You give away heavens vowe, and those are mine:
You give away my selfe, which is knowne mine:
For I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you, must marrie me,
Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation comes too short for my daughter, you are no husband for her.

Ber. My Lord, this is a fond and desperate creature,
Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: Let your highnes
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour,
Then for to thinke that I would sinke it heere.

Kin. Sir for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend,
Till your deeds gaine them fairer: prove your honor,
Then in my thought it lies.

Dia. Good my Lord,
Aske him upon his oath, if he do's thinke
He had not my virginity.

Kin. What saist thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent my Lord,
And was a common gamester to the Campe:

Dia. He do's me wrong my Lord: If I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price.

Doe not beleeeve him. O behold this Ring,
Whose high respect and rich validity
Did lacke a Paralell: yet for all that
He gave it to a Commoner a'th Campe
If I be one.

Bona. He blushes, and 'tis hit:
Of fixe preceding Ancestors, that Iemme
Confer'd by testament to 'th sequent issue
Hath it beene owed and worne. This is his wife,
That Rings's a thousand proofes.

Kin. Me thought you said
You saw one heere in Court could witnesse it.
Dia. I did my Lord, but loath am to produce
So bad an instrument, his name's Parrolles.

Laf. I saw the man to day, if man he be.

Kin. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ref. What of him?
He's quoted for a most perfidious slave
With all the spots a'th world, taxt and debosh'd,
Whose nature sickens: but to speake a truth,
Am I, or that or this, for what he'll utter,
That will speake any thing.

Kin. She hath that Ring of yours.

Ref. I thinke she has; certaine it is I lik'd her,
And boarded her i'th wanton way of youth:
She knew her distance, and did angle of me,
Madding my eagernesse with her restraint,
As all impediments in tancies course
Are motives of more fancy, and in fine,
Her insuit comming with her moderne grace,
Subdu'd me to her rate, she got the Ring
And I had that which any inferiour might
At Market price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient:
You that have turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly dyet me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lacke vertue, I will lose a husband)
Send for your Ring, I will returne it home,
And give me mine againe.

Ref. I have it not.

Kin. What Ring was yours I pray you?

Dia. Sir much like the same upon your finger.

Kin. Know you this Ring, this Ring was his of late.

Dia. And this was it I gave him being a bed.

Kin. The story then goes false, you threw it him
Out of a Casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth. Enter Parolles.

Ref. My Lord, I doe confesse the ring was hers.

Kin. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you:
Is this the man you speake of?

Dia. I, my Lord.

Kin. Tell me firrah, but tell me true I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master:
(Which on your just proceeding, Ile keepe off)
By him and by this woman heere, what know you?

Par. So please your Majesty, my master hath beene an honorable Gentlemen. Trickes hee hath had in him, which Gentlemen have.

Kin. Come, come, to'th purpose: Did he love this woman?

Par. Faith sir he did love her, but how!

Kin. How I pray you?

Par. He did love her sir, as a Gent. loves a Woman.

Kin. How is that?

Par. He lov'd her sir, and lov'd her not.

Kin. As thou art a Knave and no Knave, what an equivocall Companion is this?

Par. I am a poore man, and at your 'Majesties command.

Laf. He's a good drumme my Lord, but a naughty Orator.

Dia. Doe you know he promist me marriage?

Par. Faith I know more then Ile speake.

Kin. But wilt thou not speake all thou know'st?

Par. Yes to please your Majesty: I did goe betweene them as I said, but more then that he loved her, for indeed he was madde for her, and talkt of Sathan, and of Limbo, and of Furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would derive me ill will to speake of, therefore I will not speake what I know.

Kin. Thou hast spoken all already, unlesse thou canst say they are married, but thou art too fine in thy evidence, therefore stand aside. This Ring you say was yours.

Dia. I my good Lord.

Kin. Where did you buy it? Or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

Kin. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither.

Kin. Where did you find it then?

Dia. I found it not.

Kin. If it were yours by none of all these wayes,
How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easie glove my Lord, she goes off and on at pleasure.

Kin. This Ring was mine, I gave it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours or hers for ought I know.

Kin. Take her away, I doe not like her now,
To prison with her: and away with him,
Vnlesse thou tell me where thou hadst this Ring,
Thou diest within this houre.

Dia. Ile never tell you.

Kin. Take her away.

Dia. Ile put in baile my liedge.

Kin. I thinke thee now some common Customer.

Dia. By love if ever I knew man 'twas you.

Kin. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty:

He knowes I am no Maid, and he'll sweare too't:

Ile sweare I am a Maid, and he knowes not.

Great King I am no strumpet, by my life,

I am either Maid, or else this old mans wife.

Kin. She does abuse our eares, to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother fetch my bayle. Stay Royall sir,
The Jeweller that owes the Ring is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this Lord,
Who hath abus'd me as he knowes himselfe,
Though yet he never barn'd me, heere I quit him.
He knowes himselfe my bed he hath defil'd,
And at that time he got his wife with child:
Dead though she be, she feelles her yong one kicke:
So there's my riddle, one that's dead is quicke,
And now behold the meaning.

Enter Hellen and Widdow.

Kin. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer Office of mine eyes?
Is't reall that I see?

Hel. No my good Lord,

Y

'Tis

'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name, and not the thing.

Ref. Both, both, O pardon.

Hel. Oh my good Lord, when I was like this Maid,
I found you wondrous kind, there is your Ring,
And looke you, heere's your letter : this it sayes,
When from my finger you can get this Ring,
And is by me with child, &c. This is done,
Will you be mine now you are doubly wonne ?

Ref. If she my Liege can make me know this clearly,
He love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

Hel. If it appeare not plaine; and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce step betweene me and you.
O my deere mother, doe I see you living ?

Laf. Mine eyes smell Onions, I shall weepe anon :
Good Tom Drumme lend me a handkercher.
So I thanke thee, waite on me home, He make sport with thee : Let thy curtisies alone, they are scurvy ones.

King. Let us from point to point this story know,
To make the even truth in pleasure flow :
If thou beest yet a fresh uncropped flower,
Chooſe thou thy husband, and he pay thy dower.
For I can guesſe, that by thy honest ayde,
Thou keepst a wife her selfe, thy selfe a Maide.
Of that and all the progresse more and lesse,
Refoldv'dly more leasure shall expresse :
All yet seemes well, and if it end so meete,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

Flourish.

THe Kings a Begger, now the play is done.
All is well ended, if this suite be wonne,
That you expresse Content : which we will pay,
Wish strife to please you, day exceeding day :
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts,
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts. Exeunt omni.

FJNJS.

Twelfth Night, Or what you will.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Orsino Duke of Illyria, Curio, and other Lords.

Duke.

IF Musicke be the food of Loue, play on,
Give me excesse of it : that surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so dye.
That straine agen, it had a dying fall :

O, it came ore my eare, like the sweet sound
That breathes upon a banke of Violets ;
Stealing, and giving Odour. Enough, no more,
'Tis not so sweet now, as it was before.
O spirit of Love, how quicke and fresh art thou,
That notwithstanding thy capacity,
Receiveth as the Sea . Nought enters there,
Of what validity, and pitch so ere,
But fallies into abatement, and low price,
Even in a minute ; so full of shap'es is fancy,
That it alone is high fantastickall.

Cur. Will you goe hunt my Lord ?

Du. What Curio ?

Cur. The Hart.

Du. Why so I doe, the Noblest that I have :
O when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Me thought she purg'd the ayre of pestilence ;
That instant was I turn'd into a Hart,
And my desires like fell and cruell hounds,
Ere since pursue me. How now what newes from her ?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my Lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid doe returne this answer :
The Element it selfe, till seven yeares heate,
Shall not behold her face at ample view :
But like a Cloytresse she will vailed walke,
And water once a day her Chambers round
With eye-offending brine : all this to season
A brothers dead love, which she would keepe fresh
And lasting, in her sad remembrance.

Du. O she that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flocke of all affections else
That live in her. When Liver, Braine, and Heart,
These soveraigne thrones, are all supply'd and fill'd
Her sweet perfections with one selfe same king :
Away before me, to sweet beds of Flowres,
Love-thoughts lye rich, when canopy'd with bowres.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Viola, a Captaine, and Saylor's.

Vio. What Country (Friends) is this ?

Cap. This is Illyria Lady.

Vio. And what should I doe in Illyria ?

My brother he is in Elizium,
Perchance he is not drown'd : What thinke you saylors ?

Cap. It is perchance that you your selfe were saved.

Vio. O my poore brother, and so perchance may he be.

Cap. True Madam, and to comfort you with chance.
Assure your selfe, after our ship did split,
When you, and those poore number saved with you,
Hung on our driving boate : I saw your brother
Most provident in perill, binde himselfe,
(Courage and hope both teaching him the practise)
To a strong Maile, that liv'd upon the sea :
Where like Orion on the Dolphines backe,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so, there's Gold :
Mine owne escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereto thy speech serves for authority
The like of him. Know'st thou this Country ?

Cap. I Madam well, for I was bred and borne
Not three houres travaile from this very place ?

Vio. Who governs heere ?

Cap. A noble Duke in nature, as in name.

Vio. What is his name ?

Cap. Orsino.

Vio. Orsino ! I have heard my father name him.
He was a Batchellor then.

Cap. And so is now, or was so very late :
For but a moneth ago I went from hence,
And then 'twas fresh in murmure (as you know What great ones doe, the lesse will prattle of)
That he did seeke the love of faire Olivia.

Vio. What's she ?

Cap. A vertuous maid, the daughter of a Count,
That did some twelvemonth since, then leaving her
In the protection of his sonne, her brother,
Who shortly also did : for whose deere love
(They say) she had abjur'd the sight
And company of men.

Vio. O that I serv'd that Lady,
And might not be delivered to the world

Y 2

Till

Till I had made mine owne occasion mellow
What my estate is.

Cap. That were hard to compasse,
Because she will admit no kind of suite,
No not the Dukes.

Vio. There is a faire behaviour in thee Capitaine,
And though that nature, with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution: yet of thee
I will beleve thou hast a mind that suites
With this thy faire and outward character.
I prethee (and Ile pay thee bounteously)
Conceale me what I am, and be my ayde,
For such disguise as haply shall become
The forme of my intent. Ile serve this Duke,
Thou shalt present me as an Eunuch to him,
It may be worth thy paines: for I can sing,
And speake to him in many sorts of Musicke,
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap, to time I will commit,
Onely shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Cap. Be you his Eunuch, and your Mute Ile be,
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

Vio. I thanke thee: Lead me on,

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague meanes my Neece to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth sir Toby, you must come in earlier a nights: youe Cousin, my Lady, takes great exceptions to your ill houres.

To. Why let her except, before excepted.

Mar. I, but you must confine your selfe within the modest limits of order.

To. Confine? Ile confine my selfe no finer then I am:
these cloathes are good enough to drinke in, and so be these boots too: and they be not, let them hang themselves in their owne straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undoe you: I heard my Lady talke of it yesterday: and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here, to be her

To. Who, Sir Andrew Ague-cheeke? (wooe.

Ma. I be.

To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Ma. What's that to th' purpose?

To. Why he ha's three thousand ducats a yeere.

Ma. I, but he'll have but a yeare in all these ducats:
He's a very foole, and a prodigall.

To. Fye, that you'll say so: he playes o'th Viol-de-gam-boys, and speakes three or foure languages word for word without booke, & hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath indeed, almost naturall: for besides that he's a foole, he's a great quarreller: and but that he hath the gift of a Coward, to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Tob. By this hand they are scoundrels and subtrac-tors that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that adde moreover, he's drunke nightly in your company.

To. With drinking healths to my Neece: Ile drinke to her as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drinke in Illyria: he's a Coward and a Coystrill that will not drinke to my Neece, till his braines turne o'th toe, like a parish top. What wenich? Castiliano vulgo: for here comes Sir Andrew Ague face.

Enter Sir Andrew.

And. Sir Toby Belch. How now Sir Toby Belch?

To. Sweet sir Andrew.

And. Blesse you faire Shrew.

Mar. And you too sir.

Tob. Accost Sir Andrew, accost,

And. What's that?

To. My Neece's Chamber-maid.

An. Good Mistris accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Ma. My name is Mary sir.

And. Good mistris Mary, accost.

To. You mistake knight: Accost, is front her, boord her, wooe her, assaile her.

An. By my troth I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of Accost?

Mar. Fareyouwell Gentlemen.

To. And thou let part so Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword agen.

And. And you part so mistris, I would I might never draw sword agen; Faire Lady, doe you thinke you have fooles in hand?

Ma. Sir, I have not you by'th hand.

An. Matry but you shall have, and heeres my had.

Mar. Now sir, thought is free: I pray you bring your hand to'th Buttry barre, and let it drinke.

An. Wherefore (sweet-heart?) What's your Metaphor?

Mar. It's dry sir.

An. Why I thinke so: I am not such an asse, but I can keepe my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Ma. A dry jest Sir.

And. Are you full of them?

Ma. I Sir, I have them at my fingers ends: marry now
I let goe your hand, I am barren.

Exit Maria.

Tob. O knight, thou lack'st a cup of Canary: when did I see thee so put downe?

And. Never in your life I thinke, unlesse you see Canary put downe: me thinkes sometimes I have no more wit then a Christian, or an ordinary mans ha's: but I am a great eater of beefe, and I beleve that does harme to my wit.

To. No question.

An. And I thought that, I'de forswear it. Ile ride home to morrow sir Toby.

To. Pur-quoy my deere knight?

An. What is purquoy? Doe, or not doe? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues, that I have in fencing dancing, and beare-bayting: O had I but followed the Arts.

To. Then hadst thou had an excellent head of haire.

An. Why, would that have mended my haire?

To. Past question, for thou seest it will not coole my

An. But it becomes me well enough, dost not? (nature

To. Excellent, it hangs like flax on a distaffe: and I hope to see a hufwife take thee between her legs, & spin it off.

An. Faith Ile home to morrow sir Toby, your niece will not be seene, or if she be it's four to one, she'll none of me:
the Count himselfe here hard by, wooes her.

To. She'll none o'th Count, she'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, yeares, nor wit: I have heard her swear. Tut there's life in't man.

And.

And. He stay a moneth longer. I am a fellow o'th strangest mind i'th world: I delight in Maskes and Revels sometimes altogether.

To. Art thou good at these kicke-chawfes Knight?

And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters, and yet I will not compare with an old man.

To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

And. Faith, I can cut a caper.

To. And I can cut the Mutton too't.

And. And I thinke I have the backe-tricke, simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

To. Wherefore are these things hid? Wherefore have these gifts a Curtaine before 'em? Are they like to take dust, like Mistris Mals picture? Why dost thou not goe to Church in a Galliard, and come home in a Carranto? My very walke should be a Tigge: I would not so much as make water but in a Sinke-a-pace: What doest thou meane? Is it a world to hide vertues in? I did thinke by the excellent constitution of thy legges, it was form'd under the starre of a Galliard.

And. I, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a dam'd colour'd stocke. Shall we sit about some Revels?

To. What shall we doe else: were we not borne under Taurus?

And. Taurus? That sides and heart.

To. No sir, it is legges and thighes: let me see thee caper. Ha, higher: ha, ha, excellent. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentino, and Viola in mans attire.

Val. If the Duke continue these favours towards you Cesario, you are like to be much advanc'd, he hath known you but three dayes, and already you are no stranger.

Vis. You either feare his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. Is he inconstant sir, in his favours?

Val. No beleve me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Vis. I thanke you: here comes the Count.

Duk. Who saw Cesario hoa?

Vis. On your attendance my Lord heere.

Du. Stand you a-while aloofe. Cesario, Thou knowst no lesse, but all: I have unclasp'd To thee the booke even of my secret soule. Therefore good youth, addresse thy gate unto her, Be not deny'd access, stand at her doores, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow Till thou have audience.

Vis. Sure my Noble Lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Du. Be clamorous, and leape all civill bounds, Rather then make unprofitable returne.

Vis. Say I doe speake with her (my Lord) what then?

Duk. O then, unfold the passion of my love, Surprize her with discourse of my deere faith; It shall become thee well to act my woes: She will attend it better in thy youth, Then in a Nuntio's of more grave aspect.

Vis. I thinke not so, my Lord:

Duk. Deere Lad, beleve it;

For they shall yet belye thy happy yeeres, That say thou art a man: Diana lip Is not more smooth, and rubious: thy small pipe Is as the maidens organ, shrill, and found, And all is semblative a womans part. I know thy constellation is right apt For this affaire: some foure or five attend him, All if you will: for I my selfe am best When least in company: prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy Lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Vis. He doe my best

To wooe your Lady: yet a barre full strife, Where I wooe, my selfe would be his wife. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Maria, and Clowne.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast bin, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter, in way of thy excuse: my lady wil hang thee for thy absence.

Cl. Let her hang me: he that is well hang'd in this world, needs to feare no colours.

Ma. Make that good.

Cl. He shall see none to feare.

Mar. A good lenton answer: I can tell thee where that saying was borne, of I feare no colours.

Cl. Where good mistris Mary?

Mar. In the warres, and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Cl. Well, God give them wisdome that have it: and those that are fooles, let them ute their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hang'd for being so long absent, or be turn'd away: is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Cl. Many a good hanging, prevents a bad marriage: and for turning away, let summer beare it out.

Mar. Your are resolute then?

Cl. Not so neither, but I am resolv'd on two points.

Mar. That if one breake, the other will hold: or if both breake, your gaskins fall.

Cl. Apt in good faith, very apt: well goe thy way, if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eves flesh, as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace you rogue, no more o'that: here comes my Lady: make your excuse wisely, your were best.

Enter Lady Olivia, with Malvolio.

Cl. Wit, and't be thy will, put me into good fooling: those wits that thinke they have thee, do very oft prove fooles: and I that am sure I lacke thee, may passe for a wise man. For what sayes Pyriapalus, Better a witty foole, then a foolish wit. God blesse thee Lady.

Ol. Take the foole away.

Cl. Doe you not heare fellowes, take away the Lady.

Ol. Goe too, y'are a dry foole: He no more of your besides you grow dishonest.

Cl. Two faults Madona, that drinke and good counsell will amend: for give the dry foole drinke, then is the foole not dry: bid the dishonest man mend himselfe, if he mend, he is no longer dishonest: if he cannot, let the Roacher mend him; any thing that's mended, is but patch'd: vertue that transgresses, is but patcht with sinne, and sin that amends, is but patcht with vertue. If that this simple Sillogisme will serve, so: if it will not, what remedy?

As there is no true Cuckold but calamity, so beautie's a flower; The Lady had take away the foole, therefore I say againe, take her away.

Ol. Sir, I bad them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree. Lady, Cucullus non facit monachum: that's as much to say, as I weare not morley in my braine: good Madona, give me leave to prove you a foole.

Ol. Can you doe it?

Clo. Dexteriously, good Madona.

Ol. Make your prooffe.

Clo. I must catechize you for it Madona, Good my Mouse of vertue answer me.

Ol. Well sir, for want of other idlenesse, Ile bide your prooffe.

Clo. Good Madona, why mournst thou?

Ol. Good foole, for my brothers death.

Clo. I thinke his foule is in hell, Madona.

Ol. I know his foule is in heaven, foole.

Clo. The more foole (Madona) to mourne for your Brothers foule, being in heaven. Take away the foole, Gentlemen.

Ol. What thinke you of this foole Malvolio, doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and shall doe, till the pangs of death shake him: Infirmitie that decaies the wife, doth ever make the better foole.

Clo. God send you sir, a speedy Infirmitie, for the better increasing your folly: Sir Toby will be sworne that I am no Fox, but he will not passe his word for twopence that you are no foole.

Ol. How say you to that Malvolio?

Mal. I marvell your Ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascall: I saw him put downe the other day, with an ordinary foole, that has no more braine then a stone. Looke you now, he's out of his gard already: unlesse you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gag'd. I protest I take these Wifemen, that crow so at these set kind of foolles, no better then the foolles Zanies.

Ol. O you are sicke of selfe-love Malvolio, and taste with a dissemper'd appetite. To be generous, guilelesse, and of free disposition, is to take those things for Bird-bolts, that you deeme Cannon bullets: There is no slander in an allow'd foole, though he doe nothing but rayle; nor no rayling, in a knowne discreet man, though he doe nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury indue thee with leasing, for thou speak'st well of foolles.

Enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate, a young Gentleman, much desires to speake with you.

Ol. From the Count Orsino, is it?

Ma. I know not (Madam) 'tis a faire young man, and well attended.

Ol. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Ma. Sir Toby Madam, your kinsman.

Ol. Fetch him off I pray you, he speakes nothing but madman: Eye on him. Goe you Malvolio; if it be a suite from the Count, I am sicke, or not at home. What you will, to dismisse it. Exit Malvo.

Now you see sir, how your fooling growes old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us (Madona) as if thy eldest sonne should be a foole: whose scull, love cramme with braines, for heere he comes. Enter Sir Toby.

One of thy kin has a most weake Pia-water.

Ol. By mine honor halfe drunke. What is he at the gate Cofin?

To. A Gentleman.

Ol. A Gentleman? What Gentleman?

To. 'Tis a Gentleman here. A plague o' these pickle herring: How now Sot.

Clo. Good Sir Toby.

Ol. Cofin, Cofin, how have you come so carely by this Lethargy?

Tob. Letchery, I desie Letchery: there's one at the gate.

Ol. I marry, what is he?

To. Let him be the divell and he will, I care not: give me faith say I. Well, it's all one. Exit.

Ol. What's a drunken man like, foole?

Clo. Like a drown'd man, a foole, and a mad man: One draught about heate, makes him a foole, the second maddes him, and a third drownes him.

Ol. Goe thou and seeke the Crowner, and let him sit o'my Coz: for he's in the third degree of drinke: he's drown'd: goe looke after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet Madona, and the foole shall looke to the madman.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, yond young fellow sweares hee will speake with you. I told him you were sicke, he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speake with you. I told him you were asleepe, he seemes to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speake with you. What is to be said to him Lady, he's fortified against any deniall.

Ol. Tell him, he shall not speake with me.

Mal. Ha's beene told so: and he sayes he'll stand at your doore like a Sheriffes post, and be the supporter to a bench, but he'll speake with you.

Ol. What kind o'man is he?

Mal. Why of mankind.

Ol. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner: he'll speake with you, will you, or no.

Ol. Of what personage, and yeeres is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor yong enough for a boy: as a squash is before tis a pescod, or a Codling when tis almost an Apple: Tis with him in standing water, betwene boy and man. He is very well-favour'd, and he speakes very shrewishly: One would thinke his mothers milke were scarce out of him.

Ol. Let him approach: Call in my Gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my Lady calls. Exit.

Enter Maria.

Ol. Give me my vaille: come throw it ore my face, We'll once more heare Orsino's Embassie.

Enter Viola.

Vis. The honorable Lady of the house, which is she?

Ol. Speake to me, I shall answer for her: your will.

Vis. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty. I pray you tell me if this be the Lady of the house, for I never saw her. I would be loath to cast away my speech: for besides that it is excellently well pend, I have taken great paines to con it. Good Beauties, let me so-staine no scorn; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister vface.

Ol. Whence came you sir?

Vis. I can say little more then I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance, if you be the Lady of the house, that I may proceede in my speech.

Ol. Are you a Comedian?

Vio. No my profound heart: and yet (by the very phangs of malice, I swear) I am not that I play. Are you the Lady of the house?

Ol. If I doe not usurpe my selfe, I am.

Vio. Most certaine, if you are she, you doe usurp your selfe: for what is yours to bestow, is, not yours to reserve. But this is from my Commission: I will on with my speech in your praise, and then shew you the heart of my message.

Ol. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas, I tooke great paines to study it, and tis Poëticall.

Ol. It is the more like to be feigned, I pray you keepe it in. I heard you were sawcy at my gates, and allowd your approach rather to wonder at you, then to heare you. If you be not mad, be gon: if you have reason, be breefe: 'tis not that time of Moone with me, to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Ma. Will you boyft sayle sir, here lyes your way.

Vio. No good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Some mollification for your Giant, sweet Lady; tell me your mind, I am a messenger.

Ol. Sure you have some hiddeous matter to deliver, when the curtesie of it is so fearefull. Speake your office.

Vio. It alone concernes your eare: I bring no overture of warre, no taxation of homage; I hold the Olyffe in my hand: my words are as full of peace, as matter.

Ol. Yet you began rudely. What are you? What would you?

Vio. The rudenesse that hath appear'd in me, have I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as a maiden-heard: to your eares, Divinity; to any others, prophanation.

Ol. Give us the place alone.

We will heare this divinity. Now sir, what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet Lady.

Ol. A comfortable doctring, and much may be said of it. Where lyes your Text?

Vio. In Oryfines bosome.

Ol. In his bosome? In what chapter of his bosome?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Ol. O, I have read it: it is heresie. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good Madam, let me see your face.

Ol. Have you any Commission from your Lord, to negotiate with my face: you are now out of your Text: but we will draw the Curtaine, and shew you the picture. Look you sir, such a one I was this present: list not well done?

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Ol. 'Tis in graine sir, 'twill endure winde and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white, Natures owne sweet, and cunning hand laid on: Lady, you are the cruell'st she alive, If you will lead these graces to the grave, And leave the world no copy.

Ol. O sir, I will not be so hard-hearted: I will give out divers scedules of my beauty. It shall be Inventoried and every particle and vtenfile labell'd to my will: As, Item two lippes indifferent red, Item two grey eyes, with lids to them: Item one necke, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see you what you are, you are too proud:

But if you were the divell, you are faire:

My Lord, and master loves you: O such love Could be but recompenc'd, though you were crown'd The non-pareill of beauty.

Ol. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertill teares, With groanes that thunder love, with sighes of fire.

Ol. Your Lord does know my mind, I cannot love him Yet I suppose him vertuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainelesse youth; In voyces well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant, And in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gracious person; But yet I cannot love him: He might have tooke his answer long agoe.

Vio. If I did love you in my masters flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life: In your deniall, I would find no sence, I would not understand it.

Ol. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow Cabine at your gate, And call upon my soule within the house, Write loyall Cantons of contemned love, And sing them lowd even in the dead of night: Hollaw your name to the reverberate hilles, And make the babbling Gossip of the ayre, Cry out Olivia: O you should not rest Betweene the elements of ayre, and earth, But you should pity me.

Ol. You might doe much:

What is your Parentage?

Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a Gentleman.

Ol. Get you to your Lord: I cannot love him: let him send no more, Vnlesse (perchance) you come to me againe, To tell me how he takes it; Fare you well: I thanke you for your paines: spend this for me.

Vio. I am no feede-poast, Lady; keepe your purse, My Master, not my selfe, lackes recompence. Love make his heart of flint, that you shall love. And let your fervour like my Masters be, Plac'd in contempt: Farwell sayre cruelty.

Exit.

Ol. What is your Parentage?

Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a Gentleman. He be sworne thou art, Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbes, actions, and spirit, Doe give thee five-fold blazon: not too fast: soft, soft, Vnlesse the Master were the man. How now? Even so quickly may one catch the plague? Methinkes I feele this youths perfections With an invisible, and subtle stealth To creepe in at mine eyes. Well, let it be. What hoa, Malvolio.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. Heere Madam, at your service.

Ol. Runne after that same peevish Messenger The Counts man: he left this Ring behind him, Would I, or not: tell him, He none of it. Desire him not to flatter with his Lord, Nor hold him up with hopes, I am not for him: If that the youth will come this way to morrow, He give him reasons for't: bye thee Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Exit.

Ol. I doe I know not what, and feare to find Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind:

Fate

Fate, shew thy force, our selves we doe not owe.
What is decreed, must be : and be this so.

Finis, Actus primi.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Antonio, and Sebastian.

An. Will you stay no longer : nor will you not that I goe with you?

Seb. By your patience, no : my starres shine darkely over me ; the malignancy of my fate, might perhaps distemper yours, therefore I shall crave of you your leave, that I may beare my evils alone. It were a bad recompence for your love, to lay any of them on you.

An. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No sooth sir, my determinate voyage is meere extravagancy. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me, what I am willing to keepe in : therefore it charges me in manners, the rather to expresse my selfe : you must know of mee then Antonio, my name is Sebastian (which I call'd Rodrigo) my father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him, my selfe, and a sister, both borne in an houre : if the Heavens had beene pleas'd, would we had so ended. But you sir, alter'd that, for some houre before you tooke me from the breach of the sea, was my sister drown'd.

An. Alas the day!

Seb. A Lady sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautifull : but though I could not with such estimable wonder over-farre believe that, yet thus farre I will boldly publish her, she bore a mind that envy could not but call faire : Shee is drown'd already sir with salt water, though I seeme to drowne her remembrance againe with more.

An. Pardon me sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

An. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undoe what you have done, that is kill him, whom you have recover'd, desire it not. Fare ye well at once, my bosome is full of kindnesse, and I am yet so neere the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me : I am bound to the Count Orsino's Court, farewell. Exit.

An. The gentlenesse of all the gods goe with thee :

I have many enemies in Orsino's Court,

Else would I very shortly see thee there :

But come what may, I doe adore thee so,

That danger shall seeme sport, and I will goe : Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Viola, and Malvolio, at severall doors.

Mal. Were not you eu'n now, with the Countesse Olivia?

Viola. Even now sir, on a moderate pace, I have since arriv'd but hither.

Mal. She returns this Ring to you (sir) you might have saved me my paines, to have taken it away your selfe. She adds moreover, that you should put your Lord into a desperate assurance, she will none of him. And one thing more, that you be never so hardy to come againe in his affaires, unless it be to report your Lords taking of this : receive it so.

Viola. She tooke th: Ring of me, Ile none of it.

Mal. Come sir, you peevishly threw it to her : and her will is, it should be so return'd : If it be worth stooping for, there it lyes, in your eye : if not, be it his that finds it. Exit.

Viola. I left no Ring with her: what meanes this Lady?

Fortune forbid my out-side have not charm'd her :

She made good view of me, indeed so much,

That sure me thought her eyes had lost her tongue,

For she did speake in starts distractedly.

She loves me sure, the cunning of her passion

Invites me in this churlish messenger :

None of my Lords Ring? Why he sent her none?

I am the man, if it be so as tis,

Poore Lady, she were better love a dreame :

Disguise, I see thou art a wickednesse,

Wherein the pregnant enemy does much.

How easie is it, for the proper false

In womens waxen hearts to set their formes :

Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we,

For such as we are made, if such we be :

How will this fadge? My master loves her deerely,

And I (poore monster) fond as much on him :

And she (mistaken) seemes to dote on me :

What will become of this? As I am man,

My state is desperate for my maisters love ;

As I am woman (now alas the day)

What thriftlesse sighes shall poore Olivia breathe?

O time, thou must untangle this, not I,

It is too hard a knot for me t'untie.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Toby. Approach Sir Andrew : not to be a bed after midnight, is to be up betimes, and Dilculo surgere, thou know'st.

And. Nay by my troth I know not : but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

To. A false conclusion : I hate it as an unfill'd Canne, To be up after midnight, and to goe to bed then is early : so that to goe to bed after midnight, is to goe to bed betimes. Does not our lives consist of the foure Elements?

An. Faith so they say, but I thinke it rather consists of eating and drinking.

To. Th'art a scholler ; let us therefore eate and drinke, Marian I lay, a stoope of wine.

Enter Clowne.

And. Heere comes the foole yfaith.

Clo. How now my hearts: Did you never see the Picture of we three?

To. Welcome asse, now let's have a catch.

And. By my troth the foole has an excellent breast. I had rather then forty shillings I had such a legge, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the foole has. Insooth thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spok'st of Pigrogromitus, of the Vapiani passing the Equinoctiall of Queenbus : twas very good yfaith : I sent thee sixpence for for thy Lemon, hadst it?

Clo. I did impetico thy gratillity: for Malvolios nose is no Whip-stocke. My Lady has a white hand, and the Mermaidons are no bottle-ale houses.

An. Excellent: Why this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now a song.

To. Come on, there is sixe pence for you. Let's have a song.

An. There's a tetrill of me too: if one knight give a-

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

To. A love song, a love song.

An. I, I. I care not for good life.

Clowne sings.

O Mistress mine where are you roming?

O stay and heare, your true loves coming,

That can sing both high and low.

Trip no further pretty sweeting.

Journeys end in lovers meeting.

Every wise mans some doth know.

An. Excellent good, ifaith.

To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love, 'tis not heereafter,

Present mirth, hath present laughter:

What's to come, is still unsure.

Indelay there lies no plenty,

Then come kisse me sweet and sweetly:

Tonshs a stufte will not endure.

An. A mellifluous voyce, as I am true knight.

To. A contagious breath.

An. Very sweet, and contagious ifaith.

To. To heare by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion.

But shall we make the Welkin dance indeed? Shall we rowze the night-Owle in a Catch that will drawe three foules out of one Weaver? Shall we doe that?

And. And you love me, let's doo't: I am dogge at a Catch.

Clo. Byrlady sir, and some dogs will catch well.

And. Most certaine: Let our Catch be, Thou Knaue.

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou Knaue knight. I shall be constrain'd in't, to call thee Knaue, Knight.

An. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin foole: it begins, Hold thy peace.

Clo. I shall never begin if I hold my peace.

An. Good ifaith: Come begin.

Catch sung.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catterwallowing doe you keepe heere? If my Lady have not call'd up her Steward Malvolio, and bid him turne you out of doores, never trust me.

To. My Lady's a Catayan, we are politicians, Malvolios a Peg-a-ramfic, and Three merry men be we. Am not I contanguinous? Am I not of her blood: tilly vally. Lady! There dwelt a man in Babylon, Lady, Lady.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

An. I, he do's well enough if he be dispos'd, and so doe I too: he does it with a better grace, but I doe it more naturall.

To. O the twelfth day of December.

Mar. For the love o' God peace.

Enter Malvolio,

Mal. My masters are you mad? Or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Doe yee make an Ale-house of my Ladies house, that ye squeak out your Cozi-ers Catches without any mitigation or remorse of voyce? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?

To. We did keepe time fir in our Catches. Snecke up.

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My Lady bad me tell you, that though she harbors you as her kinsman; she's nothing ally'd to your disorders. If you can separate your selfe and your mildemeanors, you are welcome to the house: if not, and it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

To. Farewell deere heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay good Sir Toby.

Clo. His eyes doe shew his dayes are almost done.

Mal. Is't even so?

To. But I will never dye.

Clo. Sir Toby there you lye.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

To. Shall I bid him goe?

Clo. What and if you doe?

To. Shall I bid him goe, and spare not?

Clo. O no, no, no, no, you dare not.

To. Out o'tune sir, ye lye: Art any more then a Steew. ard? Dost thou thinke because thou art vertuous, there shall be no more Cakes and Ale?

Clo. Yes by S. Anns, and Ginger shall be hot y'th mouth too.

To. Th'art i'th right. Goe sir, rub your Chaine with crums. A slope of Wine Maria.

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you priz'd my Ladyes favour at any thing more then contempt, you would not give meanes for this uncivill rule; she shall know of it by this hand.

Exit.

Mar. Goe shake your eares.

An. 'Twere as good a deed as to drinke when a mans a hungry, to challenge him the field, and then to breake promise with him, and make a foole of him.

To. Doo't knight, Ile write thee a Challenge: or Ile deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby be patient for to night; Since the youth of the Counts was to day with my Lady, she is much out of quiet. For Mounseur Malvolio, let me alone with him: If I doe not gull him into an ayword, and make him a common recreation, doe not thinke I have wit enough to lye straight in my bed: I know I can doe it.

To. Possesse us, possesse us, tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritane.

An. O, if I thought that, Ide beate him like a dogge.

To. What for being a Puritan, thy exquisite reason; deere knight.

An. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The div'll a Puritane that he is, or any thing constantly but a time-pleaser, an affection'd Affe, that Cons State without booke, and utters it by great swarths. The best perswaded of himselfe: so cram'd (as he thinkes) with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all that looke on him, love him: and on that vice in him, will my revenge find notable cause to worke.

To. What wilt thou doe?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure Epistles of love, wherein by the colour of his beard, the shape of his legge, the manner of his gate, the expresseure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himselfe most feelingly personated. I can write very like my Lady your Neece, on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

To. Excellent, I smell a device.

An. I hav't in my nose too.

To. He shall thinke by the Letters that thou wilt d that they come from my Neece, and that she's in love with him.

To

Mar. My purpose is indeed a horse of that colour,

An. And your horse now would make him an Ass.

Mar. Ass, I doubt not.

An. O twill be admirable.

Mar. Sport royall I warrant you : I know my Physicke will worke with him, I will plant you two, and let the Foole make a third, where he shall find the Letter : observe this construction of it : For this night to bed, and dreame on the event. Farewell. Exit.

To. Good night Penthesilea.

An. Before me she's a good wench.

To. She's a beagle, true bred, and one that adores me; what o' that?

An. I was ador'd once too.

To. Let's to bed knight : Thou hadst neede send for more money.

An. If I cannot recover your Neece, I am a foule way out.

To. Send for money knight, if thou hast her not i'th end, call me Cut.

An. If I doe not, never trust me, take it how you will.

To. Come, come, Ile goe burne some Sacke, tis too late to goe to bed now : Come knight, come knight. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Du. Give me some Musicke; Now good morrow, friends Now good Cesario, but that peece of song, That old and Anticke song we heard last night ; Me thought it did releeve my passion much, More then light ayres, and recollected termes Of these most briske and giddy-paced times. Come, but one verse.

Cur. He is not here (to please your Lordship) that should sing it.

Du. Who was it?

Cur. Feste the Iester my Lord, a foole that the Lady Olivias Father tooke much delight in. He is about the house.

Du. Seeke him out, and play the tune the while. Musicke plays.

Come hither Boy, if ever thou shalt love In the sweet pangs of it, remember me ; For such as I am, all true Lovers are, Vnstaide and skittish in all motions else, Save in the constant image of the creature That is belov'd. How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very eccho to the feare Where love is thron'd.

Du. Thou dost speake masterly, My life upon't, yong though thou art, thine eye Hath staide upon some favour that it loves : Hath it not boy?

Vio. A little, by your favor.

Du. What kind of woman ist?

Vio. Of your complexion.

Du. She is not worth thee then. What yeares ifaith?

Vio. About your yeares my Lord.

Du. Too old by heaven: Let still the woman take

An elder then her selfe, so weares she to him : So swayes she leuell in her husbands heart : For boy, however we doe praise our selves, Our fancies are more giddy and unfirme, More longing, wavering, sooner lost and worne, Then womens are.

Vio. I thinke it well my Lord.

Du. Then let thy Love be yonger then thy selfe, Or thy affection cannot hold the bent : For women are as Roses, whose faire flowre Being once displaid, doth fall that very houre.

Vio. And so they are : alas, that they are so : To dye, even when they to perfection grow.

Enter Curio, and Clowne.

Du. O fellow come, the song we had last night : Marke it Cesario, it is old and plaine ; The Spinners and the Knitters in the Sun, And the free maids that weave their thred with bones, Doe use to chant it : it is silly sooth, And dallies with the innocence of love, Like the old age.

Clow. Are you ready Sir?

Du. I prethee sing.

Musicke.

The Song.

*Come away, come away death,
And in sad cypresse let me be laid,
Flye away, flye away breath,
I am slaine by a faire cruell maid.*

*My shroud of white, stucke all with Em, O prepare
My part of death no one so true did share it. (u.)*

Not a flower, not a flower sweet

On my blacke coffin, let there be strowne :

Not a friend, not a friend greet

My poore corpes, where my bones shall be throwne :

A thousand thousand sighes to save, lay me O where

Sad true lover never find my grave, to weepe there.

Du. There's for thy paines.

Clow. No paines sir, I take pleasure in singing sir.

Du. Ile pay thy pleasure then.

Clow. Truly sir, and pleasure will be paid one time, or another.

Du. Give me now leave, to leave thee.

Du. Now the melancholly God protect thee, and the Tailor make thy doublet of changeable Taffata, for thy mind isa very Opall. I would have men of such constancy put to Sea, that their businesse might be every thing, and their intent every where, for that's it, that alwayes makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. Exit.

Du. Let all the rest give place : Once more Cesario, Get thee to yond same soveraigne cruelty :

Tell her my love (more noble then the world)

Prizes not quantity of dirty lands,

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,

Tell her I hold as giddily as Fortune :

But 'tis that miracle, and Queene of Iems

That nature pranks her in, attracts my soule.

Vio. But if she cannot love you sir.

Du. It cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. Sooth but you must.

Say that some Lady, as perhappes there is,

Hath for your love as great a pang of heart

As you have for Olivia : you cannot love her :

You tell her so : Must she not then be answer'd?

Du. There is no womans sides

Can bide the beating of so strong a passion,
As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So bigge, to hold so much, they lacke retention.
Alas! their love may be call'd appetite,
No motion of the Liver, but the Gallar,
That suffer surfet, cloyment, and revolt,
But mine is all as hungry as the Sea,
And can digest as much, make no compare
Betweene that love a woman can beare me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. I but I know.

Du. What dost thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith they are as true of heart, as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man
As it might be perhaps, were I a woman
I should your Lordship.

Du. And what's her history?

Vio. A blanke my Lord: she never told her love,
But let concealment like a worne i'th budde
Feede on her damaske cheek: she pin'd in thought,
And with a Greene and yellow melancholly,
She sat like Patience on a Monument,
Smiling at griefe. Was not this love indeed?
We men may say more, sweare more, but indeed
Our shewes are more then will: for still we prove
Much in our vowes, but little in our love.

Du. But did thy sister of her love my Boy?

Vio. I am all the daughters of my Father's house,
And all the brothers too: and yet I know not.
Sir, shall I to this Lady?

Du. I thinke'st the Theme,

To her in haste? give her this Jewell: say,
Thy love can give no place, bide no deny. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

To. Come thy wayes Signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay Ile come: if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boy'd to death with Melancholly.

To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly
Rascally sheepe-biter, come by some notable shame?

Fa. I would exult man; you know he brought me out of favour with my Lady, about a Beare-baiting here.

To. To anger him wee'd have the Beare againe, and we will foole him blacke and blew, shall we not sir An- drew?

An. And we doe not, it is pittie of our lives.

Enter Maria.

To. Heere comes the little villaine: How now my Nettle of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box tree: Malvolio's comming downe this walke, he has bene yonder i'th Sunne practising behaviour to his owne shadow this halfe houre: observe him for the love of Mockery: for I know this Letter will make a contemplative Ideot of him. Close in the name of jesting, lyethou there: for heere comes the Trowt, that must be caught with tickling. Exit.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but Fortune, all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me, and I have heard her selfe come thus neere, that should she fancy, it should be one of my completion. Besides she uses me with a more exalted respect, then any one else that followes her. What should I thinke on't?

To. Heere's an over-weening rogue.

Fa. Oh peace: Contemplation makes a rare Turkey
Cocke of him, how he jets under his advanc'd plumes.

And. Slight I could so beate the Rogue.

To. Peace I say.

Mal. To be Count Malvolio.

To. Ah Rogue.

An. Pistoll him, pistoll him.

To. Peace, peace.

Mal. There is example for't: The Lady of the Strachy, married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

An. Fye on him Iezabel.

Fa. O peace, now he's deeply in: looke how imagination blowes him.

Mal. Having bene three moneths married to her, sitting in my state.

To. O for a stone-bow to hit him in the eye.

Mal. Calling my Officers about me, in my branch'd Velvet gowne: having come from a day bed, where I have left Olivia sleeping.

To. Fire and Brimstone.

Fa. O peace, peace.

Mal. And then to have the humor of state: and after a demure travaile of regard: telling them I know my place, as I would they should doe theirs: to aske for my kinsman Toby.

To. Boltes and shackles.

Fa. Oh peace, peace, peace, now, now.

Mal. Seaven of my people with an obedient start, make out for him: I frowne the while, and perchance winde up my watch, or play with my some rich Jewell:
Toby approaches; eurties there to me.

To. Shall this fellow live?

Fa. Though our silence be drawne from us with cares, yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus: quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of controull.

To. And do's not Toby take you a blow o'the lippes?
then?

Mal. Saying, Cofine Toby, my Fortunes having cast me on your Neece, give me this prerogative of speech:

To. What, what?

Mal. You must amend your drunkenesse.

To. Out scab.

Fab. Nay patience, or we breake the sinewes of our plot?

Mal. Besides you waste the treasure of your time, with a foolish knight.

And. That's me I warrant you:

Mal. One sir Andrew.

And. I knew 'twas I, for many doe call me foole.

Mal. What employment have we heere?

Fa. Now is the Woodcocke neere the gin.

To. Oh peace, and the spirit of humors intimate reading aloud to him.

Mal. By my life this is my Ladies hand: these be her very C's, her V's, and her T's, and thus makes she her great P's. It is in contempt of question her hand.

An. Her C's, her V's, and her T's: why that?

Mal. To the unknowne belov'd, this, and my good Wishes:
Her very Phrases: By your leave wax. Soft, and the impression her Lucrece, with which she uses to scale: tis my Lady: To whom should this be?

Fab. This winnes him, Liver and all.

Mal.

Mal. Love knows I love, but who, Lips doe not move, no man must know. No man must know. What follows? The numbers alter'd: No man must know, If this should be thee Malvolio?

To. Marry hang thee brocke.

Mal. I may command where I adore, but silence like a Lover's knife,
With bloodlesse stroke my heart doth gore, M.O. A. I. doth sway my life.

Fa. A fustian riddle.

To. Excellent Wench, say I.

Mal. M.O. A. I. doth sway my life. Nay but first let me see, let me see, let me see.

Fab. What dish a poyson has she drest him?

To. And with what wing the stallion checkes at it?

Mal. I may command, where I adore: Why she may command me: I serve her, she is my Lady. Why this is evident to any formall capacity. There is no obstruction in this, and the end; What should that Alphabeticall position portend, if I could make that resemble something in me? Softly, M.O. A. I.

To. O I, make up that, he is now at a cold seat.

Fab. Sowter will cry upon't for all this, though it be as ranke as a Fox.

Mal. M. Malvolio, M. Why that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I say he would worke it out, the Curte is excellent at faults.

Mal. M. But then there is no consonancy in the sequell that suffers under probation: A. should follow, but O. does.

Fa. And O shall end, I hope.

To. I, or Ile cudgell him, and make him cry O.

Mal. And then I. comes behind.

Fab. I, and you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heeles, then Fortunes before you.

Mal. M.O. A. I. This simulation is not as the former: and yet to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these Letters are in my name. Soft, here follows prose: If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my Starres I am above thee, but be not affraid of greatnesse: Some are become great, some atcheeve greatnesse, and some have greatnesse thrust upon em. Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them, and to inure thy selfe to what thou art like to be: cast thy humble slough, and appeare fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants: Let thy tongue tang arguments of State; put thy selfe into the trickes of singularity. Shee thus advises thee, that sighes for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wish'd to see thee ever crosse garter'd: I say remember, goe too, thou art made if thou desir'st to be so: If not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch Fortunes fingers Farwell. Shee that would alter services with thee, the fortunate unhappy daylight and champion discovers not more: This is open, I will be proud, I will reade politicke Authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off grosse acquaintance, I will be point devise, the very man. I doe now foole my selfe, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this, that my Lady loves me. Shee did commend my yellow stockings of late, shee did praise my legge being crosse-garter'd, and in this she manifests her selfe to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thanke my starres, I am happy: I will be strange, stout, in yellow stocking, and crosse garter'd even with the swiftnesse of putting on. Love, and my starres be praised. Heere is yet a postscript. Thou canst not chuse but know who I am. If thou entertainst my love, I will appear in thy smiling, thy smiles become thee well. Therefore in my presence still smile, deare my sweet, I prethee. Love I thanke thee, I will smile, I will doe every thing that thou wilt have me.

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.

To. I could marry this wench for this device.

An. So could I too.

To. And aske no other dowry with her, but such another jest.

Enter Maria.

An. Nor I neither.

Fab. Heere comes my neble gull-catcher.

To. Wilt thou set thy foote o' my necke?

An. Or o' mine either?

To. Shall I play my fredome at tray-trip, and become thy bondslave?

An. Ifaith, or I either?

To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dreame, that when the image of it leaves him, he must run mad.

Ma. Nay but say true, do's it worke upon him?

To. Like Aqua-vita with a Midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, marke his first approach before my Lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhorres, and crosse garter'd, a fashion she detests: and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholly, as she is, that it cannot but turne him into a notable contempt: if you will see it, follow me.

To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent divell of wit.

And. Ile make one too.

Exeunt.

Finis Actus Secundi.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Viola, and Clowne.

Vis. Save thee Friend and thy Musicke: dost thou live by the Tabor?

Cl. No sir, I live by the Church.

Vis. Art thou a Churchman?

Cl. No such matter sir, I doe live by the Church: for, I doe live at my house, and my house doth stand by the Church.

Vis. So thou maist say the King lyes by a begger, if a begger dwell neer him: or the Church stands by thy Tabor, if thy Tabor stand by the Church,

Cl. You have said sir: To see this age! A sentence is but a chev'rill glove to a good witte, how quickly the wrong side may be turn'd outward.

Vis. Nay that's certaine: they that dally nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.

Cl. I would therefore my sister had had no name Sir.

Vis. Why man?

Cl. Why sir, her name's a word, and to dally with that word, might make my sister wanton: But indeed words are very Rascals, since bonds disgrac'd them.

Vis. Thy reason man?

Cl.

Clo. Troth fir, I can yeeld you none without words, and words are growne so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and car'st for nothing.

Clo. Not so fir, I doe care for something: but in my conscience fir, I doe not care for you: if that be to care for nothing fir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's foole?

Clo. No indeed fir, the Lady Olivia has no folly, shee will keepe no foole fir, till she be married, and fooles are as like husbands, as Pilchers are to Herrings, the husbands the bigger, I am indeed not her foole, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.

Clo. Foolery fir, does walke about the Orbe like the Sunne, it shines every where. I would be sorry fir, but the Foole should be as oft with your Master, as with my Mistress: I thinke I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, and thou passe upon mee, Ile no more with thee. Hold there's expences for thee.

Clo. Now love in his next commodity of haire, send thee a beard.

Vio. By my troth Ile tell thee, I am almost sicke for one, though I would not have it grow on my chinne. Is thy Lady within.

Clo. Would not a paire of these have bred fir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to use.

Clo. I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia fir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Vio. I understand you fir, 'tis well begg'd.

Clo. The matter I hope is not great fir; begging, but a begger: Cressida was a begger. My Lady is within fir. I will conster to them whence you come, who you are, and what you would is out of my Welkin, I might say Element, but the word is over-worne. Exit.

Vio. This fellow is wise enough to play the foole, And to doe that well, craves a kinde of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he jests, The quality of persons, and the time: And like the Haggard, checke at every Feather That comes before his eye. This is a practice, As full of labour as a Wife-mans Art: For folly that he wisely shewes, is fit: But Wife mens folly false, quite taint their wit.

Enter fir Toby and Andrew.

To. Save you Gentleman.

Vio. And you fir.

And. Dieu vous guard Monsieur.

Vio. Et vous, ausie vostre serviteure.

And. I hope fir, you are, and I am yours.

To. Will you encounter the house, my Neece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your Neece fir, I meane she is the list of my voyage.

To. Taste your legges fir, put them to motion.

Vio. My legges doe better understand me fir, then I understand what you meane by bidding me taste my legges.

To. I meane to goe fir, to enter.

Vio. I will answer you with gate and entrance, but wee are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Gentlewoman.

Most excellent accomplish'd Lady, the heavens raine Odours on you.

And. That youth's a rare Courtier, raine Odours, well.

Vio. My matter hath no voyce Lady, but to your owne most pregnant and vouchsafed care.

And. Odours, pregnant, and vouchsafed: Ile get 'em all three already.

Ol. Let the Garden doore be shut, and leave me to my hearing. Give me your hand fir.

Vio. My duty Madam, and most humble service.

Ol. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servants name, faire Princess.

Ol. My servant fir? 'Twas never merry world, Since lowly feigning was call'd complement: y'are servant to the Count Orsino (youth.)

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours: your servants servant, is your servant Madam.

Ol. For him, I thinke not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blankes, rather then fill'd with me.

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts On his behalfe.

Ol. O by your leave I pray you.

I bad you never speake againe of him;

But would you undertake another suite

I had rather heare you, to solicit that,

Then Musicke from the spheares.

Vio. Deere Lady.

Ol. Give me leave, beseech you: I did send,

After the last enchantment you did heare,

A Ring in chace of you. So did I abuse

My selfe, my servant, and I feare me you:

Vnder your hard construction must I sit,

To force that on you in a shamefull cunning

Which you knew none of yours. What might you thinke?

Have you not set mine Honor at the stake,

And baited it with all th'unmazed thoughts

That tyrannous heart can thinke? to one of your receiuing

Enough is shewne, a Cipresse, not a bosome,

Hides my poore heart: so let me heare you speake.

Vio. I pittie you.

Ol. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No not a grice: for tis a vulgar prooffe

That very oft we pittie enemies.

Ol. Why then me thinks 'tis time to smile agen:

O world, how apt the poore are to be proud?

If one should be a prey, how much the better

To fall before the Lion, then the Wolfe?

Clacke strikes.

The clocke upbraides me with the waste of time.

Be not affraid good youth, I will not have you;

And yet when wit and youth is come to harvest,

Your wife is like to reape a proper man:

There lyes your way, due West.

Vio. Then Westward hoe:

Grace and good disposition attend your Ladyship:

You'l nothing Madame to my lord, by me:

Ol. Stay: I prethee tell me what thou thinkest of me?

Vio. That you doe thinke you are not what you are.

Ol. If I thinke so, I thinke the same of you.

Vio. Then thinke you right: I am not what I am.

Ol. I would you were, as I would have you be.

Vio. Would it be better Madam, then I am?

I wish it might, for now I am your foole.

Ol. O what a deale of scorne, lookes beautifull?

In the contempt and anger of his lip,

A murderous guilt shewes not it selfe more soone,

Then love that would seeme hid: Loves night, is noone.

Cesario, by the Roses of the Spring,

By maid-hood, honor, truth, and every thing.

I love thee so, that managre all thy pride,

Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide :
 Doe not extort thy reasons from this clause,
 For that I wooe, thou therefore hast no cause :
 But rather reason thus, with reason fetter ;
 Love fought, is good : but given unfought, is better.

Uio. By innocence I sweare, and by my youth,
 I have one heart, one bosome, and one truth,
 And that no woman has, nor never none
 Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.
 And so adieu good Madam, never more,
 Will I my Masters teares to you deplore.

Ol. Yet come againe: for thou perhaps mayst move
 That heart which now abhorres, to like his love.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

And. No faith, Ile not stay a jot longer :

Tob. Thy reason deere venom, give thy reason.

Fabian. You must needs yeeld your reason, Sir Andrew.

And. Marry I saw your Neece doe more favours to the Counts Serving-man, than ever she bestow'd upon me :
 I saw't i'th Orchard.

Tob. Did she see the while, old boy, tell me that ?

And. As plaine as I see you now.

Fabi. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

And. S'light ; will you make an Ass of me ?

Fabi. I prove it legitimate sir, upon the Oathes of judgement, and reason.

Tob. And they have beene grand Jury men, since before
Noah was a Saylor.

Fabi. Shee did shew favour to the youth in your fight, onely to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour to put fire in your Heart, and brimstone in your Liver :
 you should then have accosted her, and with some excellent jests (fire-new from the mint) you should have bang'd the youth into dumbnesse : this was look'd for at your hand, and this was baulkt : the double guilt of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now faild into the North of my Ladies opinion, where you will hang like an yfickle on a Dutchmans beard, unless you doe re-deeme it, by some laudable attempt, either of valour or policy.

And. And't be any way, it must be with Valour, for policy I hate : I had as lief be a Brownist, as a Politician.

Tob. Why then build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the Count's youth to fight with him hurt him in eleven places, my Neece shall take note of it, and assure thy selfe, there is no love-Broker in the world, can more prevaile in mans commendation with woman,
 than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this sir Andrew.

And. Will either of you beare me a chalenge to him ?

Tob. Go, write it in a martiall hand, be curst and briefe:
 it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the license of Inke: if thou thou'lt him some thrice, it shall not be amisse, and as many Lyes, as will lye in thy sheete of paper, although the sheete were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em downe, goe about it. Let there be gall enough in thy inke, though thou write with a Goose-pen, no matter : about it.

And. Where shall I find you ?

Tob. We'll call thee at the Cubiculo : Goe

Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a deere Mamakin to you Sir Toby.

Tob. I have beene deere to him lad, some two thousand strong, or so.

Fa. We shall have a rare Letter from him ; but you'll not deliver't.

Tob. Never trust me then : and by all meanes stirre on the youth to an answer. I thinke Oxen and waine-ropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were open'd and you find so much blood in his Liver, as will clog the foot of a flea, Ile eate the rest of th'anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite the youth beares in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Tob. Looke where the yongest Wren of mine comes.

Mar. If you desire the spleene, and will laugh your selves into stitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turn'd Heathen, a very Renegatho; for there is no christian that meanes to be saved by beleeving rightly, can ever belevee such impossible passages of grossnesse. Hee's in yellow stockings.

Tob. And crosse garter'd ?

Mar. Most villanously : like a Pedant that keepes a Schoole i'th Church : I have dogg'd him like his murthe-rer. He does obey every point of the Letter that I drop, to betray him : He does smile his face into more lynes, then is in the new Mappe, with the augmentation of the Indies : you have not seene such a thing as tis : I can hardly forbear hurling things at him, I know my Lady will strike him : if she doe, he'll smile, and take't for a great favour.

Tob. Come bring us, bring us where he is.

Exeunt Omnes.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sebastian and Anthonio.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you,
 But since you make your pleasure of your paynes,
 I will no further chide you.

Anth. I could not stay behind you : my desire
 (More sharpe than filed Steele) did spur me forth,
 And not all love to see you (though so much)
 As might have drawne one to a longer voyage)
 But jealousy, what might befall your travell,
 Being skilless in these parts : which to a stranger,
 Vnguided, and unfriended, often prove
 Rough, and unhospitable. My willing love,
 The rather by these arguments of feare
 Set forth in your pursuite.

Seb. My kind Anthonio,
 I can no other answer make, but thanks;
 But were my worth, as is my conscience firme,

You

You should find better dealing : what's to doe ?
Shall we goe see the reliques of this Towne ?

Ant. To morrow sir, best first goe see your Lodging.

Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night,
I pray you let us satishie our eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame
That doe renowne this City.

Ant. Would you'd pardon me :

I doe not without danger walke these streetes.
Once in a sea-fight 'gainst the Count his gallies,
I did some service, of such note indeed,
That were I tane heere, it would scarce be answer'd.

Seb. Belike you slew great number of his people.

Ant. Th' offence is not of such a bloody nature,
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrell
Might well have given us bloody argument :
It might have since beene answer'd in repaying
What we tooke from them, which for Traittiques sake
Most of our City did. Onely my selfe stood out,
For which if I be lapsed in this place
I shall pay deere.

Seb. Doe not then walke too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me : hold sir, here's my purse.
In the South Suburbs at the Elephant
Is best to lodge : I will bespeake our dyer,
Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge
With viewing of the Towne, there shall you have me.

Seb. Why I your purse ?

Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase : and your store
I thinke is not for idle Markets, sir.

Seb. Ile be your purse-bearer, and leave you
For an houre.

Ant. To th' Elephant.

Seb. I doe remember.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Olivia, and Maria.

Ol. I have sent after him, he sayes he'll come :
How shall I feast him ? What bestow of him ?
For youth is bought more oft, then begg'd, or borrow'd.
I speake too loud : Where's Malvolio, he is sad, and civill,
And suites well for a servant with my fortunes,
Where is Malvolio ?

Mar. He's comming Madam :
But in very strange manner. He is sure posselt Madam.

Ol. Why what's the matter, does he rave ?

Mar. No Madam, he does nothing but smile : your Ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come, for sure the man is tainted in's wits.

Ol. Goe call him hither.

Enter Malvolio.

I am as mad as he,
If sad and mercy madnesse equall be.

Ol. How now Malvolio ?

Mal. Sweet Lady, ha, ha.

Ol. Smil'st thou ? I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.

Mal. Sad Lady, I could be sad :
This does make some obstruction in the blood :
This crosse-gartering, but what of that ?

If it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true
Sonnet it : Please one, and please all.

Ol. Why how dost thou man ?

What is the matter with thee ?

Mal. Not blacke in my mind, though yellow in my legges : It did come to his hands, and Commands shall be executed. I thinke we doe know the sweet Roman hand.

Ol. Wilt thou goe to bed Malvolio ?

Mal. To bed ? I sweet heart, and Ile come to thee.

Ol. God comfort thee : Why dost thou smile so, and kisse thy hand so oft ?

Mar. How doe you Malvolio.

Mal. At your request :

Yes Nightingales answer Dawes.

Mar. Why appeare you with this ridiculous boldnesse before my Lady ?

Mal. Be not afraid of greatnesse : 'twas well writ.

Ol. What meanest thou by that Malvolio ?

Mal. Some are borne great.

Ol. Ha ?

Mal. Some atcheeve greatnesse.

Ol. What sayst thou ?

Mal. And some have greatnesse thrust upon them.

Ol. Heaven restore thee.

Mal. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings.

Ol. Thy yellow stockings ?

Mal. And with'd to see thee crosse garter'd.

Ol. Crosse garter'd ?

Mal. Goe too, thou art made, if thou desir'st to be so.

Ol. Am I made ?

Mal. If not, let me see thee a servant still.

Ol. Why this is very Midsummer madnesse,

Enter Servants.

Ser. Madam, the yong Gentleman of the Count Orsino's is return'd, I could hardly entreate him backe : he attends your Ladyships pleasure.

Ol. Ile come to him.

Good Maria, let this fellow be look'd too. Where's my Cofin Toby, let some of my people have a speciall care of him, I would not have him miscarry for the halfe of my Dowry.

Exit.

Mal. Oh, ho, doe you come neere me now : no worse man then sir Toby to looke to me. This concutres directly with the Letter, she sends him on purpose, that I may appeare stubborn to him : for she incites me to that in the Letter. Cast thy humble slough sayes she : be opposite with a Kinsman, furly with servants, let thy tongue rang with arguments of state, put thy selfe into the tricke of singularity : and consequently sets downe the manner how : as a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habite of some Sir of note, and so forth. I have lymde her, but it is love doing, and love make me thankfull.
And when she went away now, let this Fellow be look'd to : Fellow ? not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but Fellow. Why every thing adheres together, that no dramme of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance : What can be said ?
Nothing that can be, can come betweene me, and the full prospect of my hopes. Well love, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Enter Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

To. Which way is he in the name of sanctity? If all the devils of hell be drawne in little, and Legion himselfe posselt him, yet Ile speake to him.

Fab. Heere he is, heere he is: how ist with you sir? How ist with you man?

Mal. Goe off, I discard you: let me enjoy my private: goe off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speakes within him; did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my Lady prayes you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah ha, does she so?

To. Goe to, goe to: peace, peace, we must deale gently with him: Let me alone. How doe you Malvolio? How ist with you? What man, desie the divell: consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Doe you know what you say?

Mar. La you, and you speake ill of the divell, how he takes it at heart. Pray God he be not bewitch'd.

Fab. Carry his water to th' wife woman.

Mar. Marry and it shall be done to morrow morning if I live. My Lady would not loofe him for more then ile say.

Mal. How now mistress?

Mar. Oh Lord.

To. Prethee hold thy peace, this is not the way: Doe you not see you move him? Let me alone with him.

Fa. No way but gentleness, gently, gently: the Fiend is rough, and will not be roughly us'd.

To. Why how now my bawcocke? how dost thou Mal. Sir. (chucke?)

To. I biddy, come with me. What man, tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with sathan. Hang him foule Colliar.

Mar. Get him to say his prayers, good sir Toby get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers Minx.

Mar. No I warrant you, he will not heare of godlynesse.

Mal. Goe hang your selves all: you are idle shallow things, I am not of your element, you shall know more hereafter. Exit.

To. Ist possible?

Fab. If this were plaid upon a stage now, I could condemne it as an improbable fiction.

To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device man.

Mar. Nay pursue him now, least the device take ayre, and taint.

Fa. Why we shall make him mad indeed.

Mar. The house well be the quieter.

To. Come, we'll have him in a darke roome and bound. My Neece is already in the belcife that he's mad: we may carry it thus for our pleasure, and his pennance, till our very pastime tyred out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time, we will bring the device to the bar and crowne thee for a finder of madmen: but see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Fa. More matter for a May morning.

And. Heere's the Challenge, reade it: I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fab. Ist so lawcy?

And. I, ist? I warrant him: doe but reade.

To. Give me.

Tout, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow.

Fa. Good and valiant.

To. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind why I doe call thee so, for I will shew thee no reason for't.

(Law)

Fa. A good note, that keeps you from the blow of the To. Thou comst to the Lady Olivia, and in my sight she useth thee kindly: but thou tvest in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for.

Fa. Very breefe, and to exceeding good fence-lesse,

To. I will way-lay thee going home, where if it be thy chance to kill me.

Fa. Good.

To. Thou kilst me like a rogue and a villaine.

Fa. Still you keepe o'th windie side of the Law: good.

To. Fartheewell, and God have mercie upon one of our soules. He may have mercie upon mine, but my hope is better, and so looke to thy selfe. Thy friend as thou v'st him, and thy sworn enemy, Andrew Ague-cheeke.

To. If this Letter move him not, his legges cannot: Ile giv't him.

Mar. You may have verie fit occasion for't: hee is now in some commerce with my Lady, and will by and by depart.

To. Go sir Andrew: scout mee for him at the corner of the Orchard like a bum-Bailly: so soone as ever thou seest him, draw, and as thou draw'st sweare horribly: for it comes to passe oft, that a terrible oath, with a swagging accent sharply twang'd off, gives manhood more approbation, then ever prooffe it selfe would have earn'd him. Away.

And. Nay let me alone for swearing.

Exit.

To. Now will not I deliuer his Letter: for the behaviour of the yong Gentleman, gives him out to be of good capacity, and breeding: his employment betwene his Lord and my Neice, confirms no lesse. Therefore, this Letter being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will finde it comes from a Clodde-pole. But sir, I will deliver his Challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-cheeke a notable report of valor, and drive the Gentleman (as I know his youth will aptly receive it) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, furie, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the looke, like Cockatrices.

Enter Olivia and Viola.

F. Heere he comes with your Neice, give them way til he take leave, and presently after him.

To. I wil meditate the while upon some horrid message for a Challenge. Exeunt.

Ol. I have said too much unto a heart of stone, And laid mine honour too vnchary on't: There's something in me that reproves my fault: But such a head-strong potent fault it is: That it but mockes reproofe.

Vis. With the same haviour that your passion beares, Goes on my Masters griefes.

Ol. Heere, weare this Jewell for me, tis my picture: Refuse it not, it hath no tongue, to vex you: And I beseech you come againe to morrow. What shall you aske of me that Ile deny, That honour (sav'd) may upon asking give.

Vis. Nothing but this, your true love for my maister.

Ol. How with mine honour may I give him that, Which I have given to you?

Vis. I will acquit you.

Ol. Well, come againe to morrow: fare-thee-well, A Fiend like thee might beare my soule to hell. Exit.

Enter Toby and Fabian.

To. Gentleman, God save thee.

Vis.

Vio. And you sir.

To. That defence thou hast, betake thee too't: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him; I know not: but thy interceptor full of despight, bloody as the Hunter, attends thee at the Orchard end: dismount thy tucke, be yare in thy preparation, for thy assaiant is quicke, skillfull, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake sir I am sure, no man hath any quarrell to me: my remembrance is very free and cleere from any image of offence done to any man.

To. You'll find it otherwise I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your gard: for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath, can furnish man withall.

Vio. I pray you sir what is he?

To. He is knight dubb'd with unhatch'd Rapier, and on carpet consideration, but he is a divell in private brail, foules and bodies hath he divorc'd three, and his incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none, but by pangs of death and sepulcher: Hobnob, is his word: giv't or take't.

Vio. I will returne againe into the house, and desire some conduct of the Lady. I am no fighter, I have heard of some kind of men, that put quarrells purposely on others, to taste their valour: belike this is a man of that quirke.

To. Sir, no: his indignation derives it selfe out of a very competent injury, therefore get you on, and give him his desire. Backe you shall not to the house, unlesse you undertake that with me, which with as much safety you might answer him: therefore on, or strippe your sword starke naked: for meddle you must that's certaine, or forswear to weare iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivill as strange. I beseech you doe me this courteous office, as to know of the Knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

To. I will doe so. Signiour Fabian, stay you by this Gentleman, till my returne, Exit Toby.

Vio. Pray you sir, doe you know of this matter?

Fab. I know the knight is incens'd against you, even to amortal arbitrement, but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderfull promise to read him by his forme, as you are like to find him in the prooffe of his valour. He is indeed sir, the most skillfull, bloody, and fatall opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria: will you walke towards him, I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that had rather goe with sir Priest, then sir knight: I care not who knowes so much of my mettle. Exeunt.

Enter Toby, and Andrew.

Tob. Why man he's a very divell, I have not seene such a frago: I had a passe with him, rapier, scabber'd, and all: and he gives me the sticke in with such a mortall motion that it is inevitable: and on the answer, he payes your as surely, as your fecte hits the ground they step on. They say, he has bene Fencer to the Sophy.

And. Pox on't, ile not meddle with him.

To. I but he will not now be pacified, Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

And. Plague on't, and I thought he had bene valiant, and so cunning in Fence, I'de have seene him damn'd ere I'de have challeng'd him. Let him let the matter slip, and

He give him my horse, gray Capilet.

Tob. He make the motion: stand heere, make a good shew on't, this shall end without the perdition of foules, marry He ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Enter Fabian, and Viola.

I have his horse to take up the quarrell, I have perswaded him the youths a divell.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him: and pants, and lookes pale, as if a Beare were at his heeles.

To. There's no remedy sir, he will fight with you for's oath sake: marry he hath better bethought him of his quarrell, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore draw for the supportance of his vow, he protests he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend mee: a little thing would make me tell them how much I lacke of a man.

Fab. Give ground if you see him furious.

To. Come sir Andrew, there's no remedy, the Gentleman will for his honors sake have one bout with you: he cannot by the Duello avoid it: but he has promised me, as he is a Gentleman and a Soldiour, he will not hurt you. Come on, too't.

And. Pray God he keepe his oath.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I doe assure you tis against my will.

Ant. Put up your sword: if this yong Gentleman Have done offence, I take the fault on me: If you offend him, I for him desie you.

Tob. You sir? Why, what are you?

Ant. One sir, that for his love dares yet doe more: Then you have heard him brag to you he will.

Tob. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O good sir Toby hold: heere come the Officers.

Tob. He be with you anon.

Vio. Pray sir, put your sword up if you please.

And. Marry will I sir: and for that I promis'd you I'll be as good as my word. He will beare you easily, and raines well.

1. Off. This is the man, doe thy Office.

2. Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.

Ant. You doe mistake me sir.

1. Off. No sir, no jot: I know your favour well: Though now you have no sea-cap on your head: Take him away, he knowes I know him well.

Ant. I must obey. This comes with seeking you: But there's no remedy, I shall answer it:

What will you doe? now my necessity Makes me to aske you for my purse. It grieves me Much more, for what I cannot doe for you, Then what befalls my selfe: you stand amaz'd, But be of comfort.

2. Off. Come sir away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What money sir?

For the faire kindnesse you have shew'd me here, And part being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my leane and low ability He lend you something: my having is not much, He make division of my present with you: Hold, there's halfe my Coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now, If possible that my deserts to you: Can lacke perswasion? Doe not tempt my misery, Least that it make me so unfound a man As to upbraid you with those kindneses

That I have done for you?

Vio. I know of none.

Nor know I you by voyce, or any feature :
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Then lying, vaineſſe, babling drunkenneſſe,
Or any taint of vice, whoſe ſtrong corruption
Inhabites our fraile blood.

Ant. Oh heavens themſelves !

2. Off. Come ſir, I pray you goe.

Ant. Let me ſpeake a little. This youth that you ſee
I ſnatch'd one halfe out of the jawes of death, (heere,
Reliev'd him with ſuch ſanctity of love ;
And to his image, which me thought did promiſe
Moſt venerable worth, did I devotion:

1. Off. What's that to us, the time goes by : Away.

Ant. But oh, how wilde an idoll proves this god :
Thou haſt Sebastian done good feature, ſhame,
In Nature, there's no blemiſh but the mind :
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind.
Vertue is beauty, but the beateous evill
Are empty trunckes, ore-flouriſh'd by the devill.

1. Off. The man growes mad, away with him :
Come, come ſir.

Ant. Leade me on.

Exit.

Vio. Me thinks his words doe from ſuch paſſion flye
That he beleeves himſelfe, ſo doe not I :
Prove true imagination, oh prove true,
That I deere brother, be now tane for you.

To. Come hither Knight, come hither Fabian : Well whiſper ore a couplet or two of moſt ſage ſawes:

Vio. He nam'd Sebastian : I my brother know
Yet living in my glaſſe : even ſuch, and ſo
In favour was my Brother, and he went
Still in this faſhion, colour, ornament,
For him I imitate : Oh if it prove,

Tempeſts are kind, and ſalt waves freſh in love. Exit.

Tob. A very diſhoneſt paltry boy, and more a coward then a Hare, his diſhoneſty appeares, in leaving his friend heere in neceſſity, and denying him : and for his coward-ſhip aſke Fabian.

Fab. A Coward, a moſt devout Coward, religious in it.

Ant. Slid Ile after him againe, and beate him.

To. Doe, cuſſe him ſoundly, but never draw thy ſword

Ant. And I doe not.

Fab. Come, let's ſee the event.

Tob. I dare lay any mony, twill be nothing yet. Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter Sebastian, and Clowne.

Clow. Will you make me beleeve, that I am not ſent for you ?

Seb. Goe to, goe to, thou art a fooliſh fellow,
Let me be cleere of thee.

Clow. Well held out yfaith : No, I doe not know you, nor I am not ſent to you by my Lady, to bid you come ſpeake with her : nor your name is not Maſter Ceſario, nor this is not my noſe neither : Nothing that is ſo, is ſo.

Seb. I prethee vent thy folly ſome-where elſe, thou know'ſt not me.

Clow. Vent my folly: He haſt heard that word of ſome great man, and now applies it to a foole. Vent my folly : I am affraid this great lubber the World will prove a Cockney : I prethee now ungird thy ſtrangeneſſe, and tell me what I ſhall vent to my Lady? Shall I vent to her that that art comming ?

Seb. I prethee fooliſh greeke depart from me, there's money for thee, if you tarry longer, I ſhall give worſe paiment.

Clow. By my troth thou haſt an open hand : theſe Wiſemen that give fooles money, get themſelves a good report, after fourteene yeares purchaſe.

Enter Andrew, Toby, and Fabian.

And. Now ſir, have I met you againe: there's for you.

Seb. Why there's for thee, and there, and there,
Are all the people mad ?

To. Hold ſir, or Ile throw your dagger ore the houſe.

Clow. This will I tell my Lady ſtraight, I would not be in ſome of your coats for two pence.

To. Come on ſir, hold.

And. Nay let him alone, Ile goe another way to worke with him : Ile have an action of Battery againſt him, if there he any law in Illyria : though I ſtroke him firſt, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let goe thy hand.

Tob. Come ſir, I will not let you go. Come my yong ſouldier put up your yron: you are well fleſh'd : Come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldſt thou now?
If thou dar'ſt tempt me further, draw thy ſword.

To. What, what? Nay then I muſt have an Ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.

Enter Olivia.

Ol. Hold Toby, on thy life I charge thee hold.

Tob. Madam.

Ol. Will it be ever thus? Vngracious wretch,
Fit for the Mountaines, and the barbarous Caves,
Where manner's ne're were preach'd : out of my ſight.
Be not offended, deere Ceſario :

Rudesbey be gone. I prethee gentle friend,
Let thy faire wiſedome, not thy paſſion ſway
In this uncivill, and unjuſt extent

Againſt thy peace. Goe with me to my houſe,
And heare thou there how many fruitleſſe pranks
This Ruſſian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby
Maiſt ſmile at this : Thou ſhalt not chooſe but goe :
Doe not deny, beſhrew his ſoule for me,
He ſtarted one poore heart of mine, in thee.

Seb. What relliſh is in this? How runs the ſtreame ?
Or I am mad, or elſe this is a dreame :

Let fancy ſtill my ſenſe in Lethe ſteape,
If it be thuſto dreame, ſtill let me ſleepe.

Ol. Nay come I prethee, would thou'd'ſt be rul'd by me.

Seb. Madam, I will.

Ol. O ſay ſo, and ſo be.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Maria, and Clowne.

Mar. Nay, I prethee put on this gowne, and this beard, make him beleeve thou art ſir Topas the Curate, doe it quickly. Ile call ſir Toby the whiſt.

Clow. Well, Ile put it on, and I will diſſemble my ſelfe in't, and I would I were the firſt that ever diſſembled in ſuch

such a Gowne. I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor leane enough to be thought a good Student: but to be said an honest man, and a good Housekeeper goes as fairely, as to say, a carefull man, and a great Schooller. The Competitors enter.

Enter Tobie.

To. Iove bleſſe thee M. Parſon.

Clo. Bonus dies ſir Tobie: for as the old Hermit of Prage, that never ſaw Pen and Inke, very wittily ſaid to a Neece of King Gorbodacke, that that is, is: ſo I being M. Parſon, am M. Parſon; for what is that, but that? and is, but is?

To. To him ſir Topas.

Clew. What hoa, I ſay, Peace in this priſon.

To. The Knave counterfeits well: a good Knave.

Malvolio within.

Mal. Who calls there?

Clo. Sir Topas the Curate, who comes to viſite Malvolio the Lunaticke.

Mal. Sir Topas, ſir Topas, good ſir Topas goe to my Ladie.

Clo. Out hyperbolically ſiend, how vexed thou this man? Talkeſt thou nothing but of Ladies?

Tob. Well ſaid M. Parſon.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged, good ſir Topas doe not thinke I am mad: they have layde mee heere in hideous darkneſſe.

Clo. Fye, thou diſhoneſt Sathan: I call thee by the moſt modeſt termes, for I am one of thoſe gentle ones, that will uſe the Divell himſelfe with curteſie: ſayſt thou that houſe is darke?

Mal. As hell ſir Topas.

Clo. Why it hath bay Windowes tranſparant as Baricadoes, and the cleare ſtones toward the South North, are as luſtrous as Ebony: and yet complain'ſt thou of obſtruction?

Mal. I am not mad ſir Topas, I ſay to you this houſe is darke.

Clo. Madman thou erreſt: I ſay there is no darkneſſe but ignorance, in which thou art more puzell'd then the Egyptians in their fogge.

Mal. I ſay this houſe is as darke as ignorance, though Ignorance were as darke as hell; and I ſay there was never man thus abuſ'd, I am no more madde than you are, make the triall of it in any conſtant queſtion.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning Wilde-fowle?

Mal. That the ſoule of our Grandam, might happily inhabite a Bird.

Clo. What think'ſt thou of his opinion?

Mal. I thinke nobly of the ſoule, and no way approve his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well: remaine thou ſtill in darkneſſe, thou ſhalt hold th'opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits, and feare to kill a Woodcocke, leſt thou diſpoſſeſſe the houſe of thy Grandam. Fare thee well.

Mal. Sir Topas, ſir Topas.

To. My molt exquisite ſir Topas.

Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou might'ſt have done this without thy beard and gowne, he ſees thee not.

Tob. To him in thine owne voyce, and bring me word, how thou find'ſt him: I would wee were all rid of this knavery. If hee may be conveniently deliver'd, I would he were, for I am now ſo farre in offence with my Neece, that I cannot purſue with any ſafety this ſport the upshot. Come by and by to my Champer.

Exit.

Clo. Hey Robin, jolly Robin, tell me how thy Lady does.

Mal. Foole.

Clo. My Lady is unkinde, perdie.

Mal. Foole.

Clo. Alas why is ſhe ſo.

Mal. Foole, I ſay.

Clo. She loves another. Who calls, ha?

Mal. Good Foole, as ever thou wilt deſerve well at my hand, helpe me to a Candle, and Pen, Inke, and Paper: as I am a Gentleman, I will live to bee thankfull to thee for't.

Clo. M. Malvolio?

Mal. I good Foole.

Clo. Alas ſir, how fell you beſides your five wits?

Mal. Foole, there was never man ſo notoriously abuſ'd: I am as well in my wits (foole) as thou art.

Clo. But as well: then you are mad indeed, if you bee no better in your wits then a foole.

Mal. They have here propertied me: keepe mee in darkneſſe, ſend Miniſters to mee, Aſſes, and doe all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Advise you what you ſay: the Miniſter is here.

Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens reſtore: endeavour thy ſelfe to ſleepe, and leave thy vaine bibble babble.

Mal. Sir Topas.

Clo. Maintaine no words with him good fellow.

Who I ſir, not I ſir. God buy you good ſir Topas: Marry Amen. I will ſir, I will ſir.

Mal. Foole, foole, foole I ſay.

Clo. Alas ſir be patient. What ſay you ſir, I am ſhent for ſpeaking to you.

Mal. Good foole helpe me to ſome light, and ſome Paper, I tell thee I am as well in my wits, as any man in Illyria,

Clo. Well-a-day, that you were ſir.

Mal. By this hand I am: good foole, ſome Inke, Paper, and Light: and convey what I will ſet downe to my Lady: it ſhall advantage thee more, then ever the bearing of Letter did.

Clo. I will helpe you too't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed, or doe you but counterfeit?

Mal. Believe me, I am not, I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, Ile ne're beleeve a madman till I ſee his I will fetch you light, and paper, and inke. (braines,

Mal. Foole, Ile requite it in the higheſt degree: I prethee be gone.

Clo. I am gone ſir, and anon ſir,

Ile be with you againe:

In a trice, like to the old vice,

your neede to ſuſtaine.

Who with Dagger of Lath, in his rage and his wrath, cryes ah ha, to the Divell:

Like a mad lad, paire thy nayles Dad,

Adieu good man Divell.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the ayre, that is the glorious Sunne, This Pearle ſhe gave me, I doe ſee't, and ſee't, And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,

Yet

Yet 'tis not madnesse. Where's Antonio then?
I could not finde him at the Elephant,
Yet there he was, and there I found this credite,
That he did range the Towne to seeke me out,
His counsell now might doe me golden service,
For though my soule disputes well with my sense,
That this may be some error, but no madnesse,
Yet doth this accident and flood of Fortune,
So farre exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes,
And wrangle with my reason that perswades me
To any other trust, but that I am mad,
Or else the Ladies mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take, and give backe affaires, and their dispatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable-bearing
As I perceive she do's: there's something in't
That is deccivable. But here the Lady comes.

Enter Olivia, and Priest.

Ol. Blame not this haste of mine: if you meane well
Now goe with me, and with this holy man
Into the Chantry by: there before him,
And underneath that consecrated rooffe,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith,
That my most jealous, and too doubtfull soule
May live at Peace. He shall conceale it,
Whiles you are willing it shall come to note,
What time we will our celebration keepe
According to my birth, what doe you say?

Seb. Ile follow this good man, and goe with you,
And having sworne truth, ever will be true.

Ol. Then lead the way good father, and heavens so shine,
That they may fairely note this act of mine. Exeunt.

Fine Actus Quartus.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Clowne and Fabian.

Fab. Now as thou lov'st me, let me see this Letter.

Clow. Good M. Fabian grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Clow. Doe not desire to see this Letter.

Fab. This is to give a Dog, and in recompence desire my dogge againe.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

Clow. I sir, we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well: how dost thou my good Fellow?

Clow. Truly sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Du. Iust the contrary: the better for thy friends.

Clow. No sir, the worse.

Du. How can that be?

Clow. Marry sir, they praise me, and make an Ass of me, now my foes tell me plainly, I am an Ass: so that by my foes sir, I profit in the knowledge of my selfe, and by my friends I am abused: so that conclusions to be as kisses, if your foure negatives make your two affirmatives, why then the worse for my friends, and the better for my foes.

Du. Why this is excellent.

Clow. By my troth sir, no: though it please you to bee one of my friends.

Du. Thou shalt not be the worse for me, there's gold.

Clow. But that it would be double dealing sir, I would you could make it another.

Du. O you give me ill counsell.

Clow. Put your Grace in your pocket sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Du. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double dealer: there's another.

Clow. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good Play, and the olde saying is, the third Payes for all: the triplex sir, is a good tripping measure, or the bels of S. Bennet sir, may put you in minde, one, two, three.

Du. You can foole no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your Lady know I am here to speake with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clow. Marry sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come agen.
I goe sir, but I would not have you to thinke, that my desire of having is the sinne of covetousnesse: but as you say sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. Exit.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Heere comes the man sir, that did rescue me.

Du. That face of his I doe remember well,
Yet when I saw it last, it was besmeard
As blacke as Vulcan, in the smoake of Warre:
A bawbling Vessell was he Captain of,
For shallow draught and Bulke unprizable,
With which such scathfull grapple did he make,
With the most noble bottome of our Fleet,
That very envy, and the tongue of losse
Cride fame and honour on him: What's the matter?

Offi. Orsino, this is that Antonio
That tooke the Phoenix, and her fraught from Candy,
And this is he that did the Tiger board,
When your yong Nephew Tam lost his legge;
Heere in the streets, desperate of shame and state,
In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindnesse sir, drew on my side,
But in conclusion put strange speech upon me,
I know not what 't was, but distraction.

Du. Notable Pyrate, thou salt-water Theefe,
What foolish boldnesse brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou in termes so bloody, and so decre
Hast made thine enemies?

Ani. Orsino: Noble sir,
Beples'd that I shake off these names you give mee:
Antonio never yet was Theefe, or Pyrate,
Though I confesse, on base and ground enough
Orsino's renemie. A witchcraft drew me hither:
That most ingratefull Boy there by your side,
From the rude seas enrag'd and foamy mouth
Did I redeeme: a wracke past hope he was:
His life I gave him, and did thereto adde
My love without retention, or restraint,
All this in dedication. For his sake,
Did I expose my selfe (pure for his love)
Into the danger of this adverse Towne,
Drew to defend him, when he was beset:
Where being apprehended, his false cunning
(Not meaning to partake with me in danger)
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,

And

And grew a twenty yeeres removed thing,
While one would winke: denide me mine owne purse,
Which I had recommended to his use,
Not halfe an houre before.

Vis. How can this be?

Du. When came he to this Towne?

Ant. To day my Lord: and for three monthes before,
No interim, not a minutes vacancie,
Both day and night did we keepe company.

Enter Olivia and attendants.

Du. Heere comes the Countesse, now heaven walkes on earth:

But for thee fellow; fellow thy words are madnesse,
Three monthes this youth hath tended upon me,
But more of that anon. Take him aside.

Ol. What would my Lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seeme serviceable?

Cesario, you doe not keepe promise with me.

Vis. Madam.

Du. Gracious Olivia.

Ol. What doe you say Cesario? Good my Lord.

Vis. My Lord would speake, my dutie hushes me.

Ol. If it be ought to the old tune my Lord,
It is as fat and fullsome to mine care

As howling after Musicke.

Du. Still so cruell?

Ol. Still so constant Lord.

Du. What to perversenesse? you uncivill Lady
To whose ingrate, and unauuspicious Altars
My soule the faithfull'st offerings have breath'd out
That ere devotion tender'd. What shall I doe? (him.)

Ol. Even what it please my Lord, that shall become

Du. Why should I not, (had I the heart to doe it)

Like to the Egyptian Theefe, at point of death

Kill what I love: (a savage jealousie,

That sometime favours nobly) but heare me this:

Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,

And that I partly knowe the instrument

That scrowes me from my true place in your favour:

Live you the Marble-breasted Tyrant still.

But this your Minion, whom I know you love,

And whom, by heaven I sweare, I tender decreely,

Him will I teare out of that cruell eye,

Where he sits crowned in his Masters spight.

Come Boy with me, my thoughts are ripe in mischief:

Ile sacrifice the Lamb that I doe love,

To spight a Ravens heart within a Dove.

Vis. And I most jocond, apt, and willingly,

To doe you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

Ol. Where goes Cesario?

Vis. After him I love,

More then I love these eyes, more then my life,

More by all mores, then ere I shall love wife.

If I doe feigne, you witnesses above

Punish my life, for tainting of my Love.

Ol. Aye me detested, how am I beguil'd?

Vir. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?

Ol. Hast thou forgot thy selfe? Is it so long?

Call forth the holy Father.

Du. Come, away.

Ol. Whither my Lord? Cesario, Husband, stay.

Du. Husband?

Ol. I Husband. Can he that deny?

Du. Her husband, sirrah?

Vis. No my Lord, not I.

Ol. Alas, it is the basenesse of thy feare,

That makes thee strangle thy propriety:
Feare not Cesario, take thy fortunes up,
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.

Enter Priest.

O welcome Father:

Father, I charge thee by thy reverence

Here to unfold, though lately we intended

To keepe in darkenesse, what occasion now

Reveales before 'tis ripe: what thou dost know

Hath newly past, betweene this youth, and me.

Priest. A Contract of eternall bond of love,

Confirm'd by mutuall joyners of your hands,

Attested by the holy clove of lippes,

Strengthened by enterchangement of your Rings,

And all the Ceremony of this compact

Seal'd in my function, by my testimony:

Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave

I have travail'd but two houres.

Du. O thou dissembling Cub: what wilt thou be

When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?

Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,

That thine owne trip shall be thine overthrow?

Farewell, and take her, but direct thy feet,

Where thou, and I (henceforth) may never meet.

Vis. My Lord, I doe protest.

Ol. O doe not sweare,

How little faith, though thou hast too much feare.

Enter Sir Andrew.

And. For the love of God a Surgeon, send one presently to sir Toby.

Ol. What's the matter?

And. H'as broke my head a-crosse, and has given Sir Toby a bloody Coxcombe to: for the love of God your helpe, I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

Ol. Who has done this Sir Andrew?

And. The Counts Gentleman, one Cesario: wee tooke him for a Coward, but he's the very Divell incardinate.

Du. My Gentleman Cesario?

And. Odd's lifelings here he is: you broke my head for nothing, and that that I did, I was set on to doo't by sir Toby.

Vis. Why doe you speake to me, I never hurt you:

You drew your sword upon me without cause,

But I bespake you faire, and hurt you not.

Enter Toby and Clowne.

And. If a bloody Coxcombe be a hurt, you have hurt me: I thinke you set nothing by a bloody Coxcombe, Heere comes sir Toby halting, you shall heare more: but if he had not beene in drinke, hee would have tickel'd you other gates then he did.

Du. How now Gentleman? how ist with you?

To. That's all one, has hurt me, and there's th'end on't.
Sot, didst see Dicke Surgeon sot?

Cl. O he's drunke sir above an houre agoe: his eyes were set at eight i'th morning.

To. Then he's a Rogue after a passy measures Pavin: I hate a drunken Rogue.

Ol. Away with him? Who hath made this havocke with them?

And. Ile helpe you Sir Toby, because we'll be drest together:

To. Will you helpe an Asse-head; and a Coxcombe, and a Knave: a thinn-fac'd Knave, a Gull?

Ol.

Ol. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry Madam I have hurt your kinsman :
But had it beene the brother of my blood,
I must have done no lesse with wit and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I doe perceive it hath offended you :
Pardon me (sweet one) even for the vowes
We made each other, but so late agoe.

Du. One face, one voyce, one habit, and two persons,
A naturall Perspective, that is, and is not.

Seb. Antonio, O my deare Antonio !
How have the houres rack'd, and tortur'd me,
Since I have lost thee ?

Ant. Sebastian are you ?

Seb. Fear'st thou that Antonio ?

Ant. How have you made division of your selfe,
An Apple cleft in two, is not more twin
Then these two creatures. Which is Sebastian ?

Ol. Most wonderfull.

Seb. Doe I stand there ? I never had a brother :
Nor can there be a Deity in my nature
Of here, and every where. I had a sister,
Whom the blinde waves and surges have devour'd :
Of charity, what kinne are you to me ?
What Countryman ? What name ? What Parentage ?

Vio. Of Messaline : Sebastian was my Father,
Such a Sebastian was my brother to :
So went he suited to his watery tombe :
If spirits can assume both forme and suite,
You come to fright us.

Seb. A spirit I am indeed,
But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the Wombe I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the rest goe even,
I should my teares let fall upon your cheekes,
And say, thrice welcome drowned Viola.

Vio. My Father had a Moale upon his brow.

Seb. And so had mine.

Vio. And did that day when Viola from her birth
Had numbred thirteene yeeres.

Seb. O that record is lively in my soule,
He finished indeed his mortall acte
That day that made my sister thirteene yeares.

Vio. If nothing lets to make vs happy both,
But this my masculine usurp'd attyre :
Doe not embrace me, till each circumstance,
Of place, time, fortune, doe co-here and jumpe
That I am Viola, which to confirme,
He bring you to a Captaine in this Towne,
Where lye my Maiden weeds: by whose gentle helpe,
I was preserv'd to serve this noble Count :
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this Lady, and this Lord.

Seb. So comes it Lady, you have beene mistooke :
But Nature to her bias drew in that.
You would have beene contracted to a Maid,
Nor are you therein (by my life) deceiv'd,
You are betroth'd both to a Maid and man.

Du. Be not amaz'd, right noble is his blood :
If this be so, as yet the glasse seemes true,
I shall have share in this most happy wracke.
Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times,
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.

Vio. And all those sayings, will I over-swear,
And all those swearings keepe as true in soule,

As doth that Orbed Continent, the fire,
That fevers day from night.

Du. Give me thy hand,
And let me see thee in thy womans weeds.

Vio. The Captaine that did bring me first on shore,
Hath my Maides garments : he upon some Action
Is now in durance, at Malvolio's suite,
A Gentleman and follower of my Ladies.

Ol. He shall enlarge him : fetch Malvolio hither,
And yet alas, now I remember me,
They say, poore Gentleman, he's much distract.

Enter the Clowne with a Letter, and Fabian.

A most exacting frenzie of mine owne,
From my remembrance, clearly banish his.
How does he sirrah ?

Cl. Truly Madam, he holds Belzebub at the slaves end as well as a man in his case may doe : has beere writ a letter to you, I should have given't you to day morning.
But as a madmans Epistles are no Gospels, so it skills not much when they are deliver'd.

Ol. Open't, and reade it.

Cl. Looke then to be well edified, when the Foole delivers the Madman. By the Lord Madam.

Ol. How now, art thou mad ?

Cl. No Madam, I doe but reade madnesse : and your Ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow Vox.

Ol. Prethee reade i'thy right wits.

Cl. So I doe Madona : but to reade his right wits, is to reade thus : therefore, perpend my Princeesse, and give eare.

Ol. Reade it you, sirrah.

Fab. Reads. By the Lord Madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it : Though you have put mee into darkenesse, and given your drunken Cozen rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your Lady-ship. I have your owne Letter, that induced me to the semblance I put on ; with the which I doubt not, but to doe my selfe much right, or you much shame : Thinke of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of,
and speake out of my injury. The madly us'd Malvolio.

Ol. Did he write this ?

Cl. I Madame.

Du. This favours not much of distraction.

Ol. See him deliver'd Fabian, bring him hither :
My Lord, so please you, these things further thought on,
To thinke me as well a sister, as a wife,
One day shall crowne th'alliance on't, so please you,
Here at my house, and at my proper cost.

Du. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your offer :
Your Master quits you : and for your service done him,
So much against the mettle of your sex,
So farre beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you call'd me Master, for so long :
Here is my hand, you shall from this time bee
Your Masters Mistris.

Ol. A sister, you are she.

Enter Malvolio.

Du. Is this the Madman ?

Ol. I my Lord, this same : How now Malvolio ?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Ol. Have I Malvolio ? No.

Mal. Lady you have, pray you peruse that Letter.
You must not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it if you can, in hand, or phrase,

Or say, 'tis not your seale, not your invention :
 You can say none of this. Well, grant it then,
 And tell me in the modesty of honour,
 Why you have given me such cleare lights of favour,
 Bad me come smiling and crosse-garter'd to to you,
 To put on yellow stockings, and to frowne
 Vpon sir Toby, and the lighter people :
 And acting this in an obedient hope,
 Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
 Kept in a darke house, visited by the Priest,
 And made the most notorious gecke or gull,
 That ere invention plaid on ? Tell me why ?
Ol. Alas Malvolio, this is not my writing,
 Though I confesse, much like the Character :
 But out of question, 'tis Maria's hand.
 And now I doe berthinke me, it was she
 First told me thou wast mad ; then cam'st in smiling,
 And in such formes, which here were presuppos'd
 Vpon thee in the Letter : prethee be content,
 This practise hath most shrewdly past upon thee :
 But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
 Thou shalt be both the Plaintiffe and the Iudge
 Of thine owne cause.

Fab. Good Madam here me speake,
 And let no quarrell, nor no brawle to come,
 Taint the condition of this present houre,
 Which I have wondred at. In hope it shall not,
 Most freely I confesse my selfe, and Toby
 Set this device against Malvolio heere,
 Vpon some stubborne and uncourteous parts
 We had conceiv'd against him. Maria writ
 The Letter, at sir Toby's great importance,
 In recompence whereof, he hath marryed her :
 How with a sportfull malice it was follow'd,
 May rather plucke on laughter than revenge,
 If that the injuries be justly weigh'd,
 That have on both sides past.

Ol. Alas poore Foole how have they baffel'd thee ?

Cl. Why some are borne great, some atchieve great-nesse, and some have greatnesse throwne upon them. I was one sir, in this Enterlude, one sir Topas sir, but that's all one : By the Lord Foole, I am not mad : but doe you remember, Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal, and you smile not hee's gag'd : and thus the whirle-gigge of time, brings in his revenges

Mal. Ile be reveng'd on the whole packe of you.

Ol. He hath beene most notoriously abus'd.

Du. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace :
 He hath not told us of the Captaine yet,
 When that is knowne, and golden time convents,
 A solemne Combination shall be made
 Of our deere soules. Meane time sweet sister,
 We will not part from hence. Cesar come
 (For so you shall be while you are a man :)
 But when in other habites you are scene,
Orsino's Mistris, and his fancies Queene.

Exeunt.

Clowne sings.

When that I was and a little rine Boy,
 with hey, ho, the winde and the raine ;
 A foolish thing was but a toy,
 for the raine it raineth every day.

But when I came to mans estate
 with hey, ho, &c.
 Gainst knaves and theeves men shout their gait,
 for the raine, &c.

But when I came alas to wive,
 with hey, ho, &c.
 By swaggering could I never thrive,
 for the raine, &c.

But when I came unto my beds,
 with hey, ho, &c.
 With Toppots still had drunken heads,
 for the raine, &c.

A great while agoe the world begon,
 with hey, ho, &c.
 But that's all one, our Play is done,
 and wee'll strive to please you every day.

FINIS.

The VVinters Tale:

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Eenter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch.

IF you shall chance (Camillo) to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on-foot, you shall see (as I have said) great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I thinke, this common Summer, the King of Sicilia meanes to pay Bohemia the visitation, which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our Entertainment shall shame us: we will be justified in our Loves: for indeed—

Cam. 'Beleeche you—

Arch. Verely I speake it in the freedome of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say — We will give you sleepy Drinckes, that your Sences (un-intelligent of our insufficiency) may, though they cannot praysie us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deale too deare, for what's given freely.

Arch. 'Beleeve me, I speake as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honestie puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot shew himselfe over-kind to Bohemia: They were trayn'd together in their Child-hoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot chuse but branch now. Since their more mature Dignities, and Royall Necessities, made seperation of their Societie, their encounters (though not Personall) have bene royally attorned with enter-change of Gift, Letters, loving Embassies, that they have seem'd to be together, though absent: shooke hands, as over a Vast Sea, and embrac'd as it were from the ends of opposed Winds. The Heavens continue their Loves.

Arch. I thinke there is not in the World, either Malice or Matter, to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young Prince Mamillius: it is a gentle man of the greatest Promise, that ever came into my Note.

Cam. I very well agree with you, in the hopes of him: it is a gallant Child; one that (indeed) Physicks the Subject, makes old hearts fresh: they that went on Crutches ere he was borne, desire yet their life, to see him a Man.

Arch. Would they else be content to dye?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse, why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the King had no Sonne, they would desire to live on Crutches till he had one. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Eenter Leontes, Hermione, Mamillius, Polixenes, Camillo.

Pol. Nine Changes of the Watty-Starre hath bene

The Shepheards Note, since we have left our Throne Without a Burthen: Time as long againe Would be fill'd up (my Brother) with our Thankes, And yet we should, for perpetuities, Goe hence in debt: And therefore, like a Cypher (Yet standing in rich place) I multiply With one we thanke you, many thousands moe, That goe before it.

Leo. Stay your Thankes a while, And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to morrow:

I am question'd by my feares of what may chance, Or breed upon our absence, that may blow No sneaping Winds at home, to make us say, This is put forth too truly: besides, I have stay'd To tyre your Royaltie.

Leo. We are tougher (Brother) Then you can put us to't.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leo. One Seve'night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to morrow.

Leo. Wee'le part the time betweene's then: and in that Ile no gaine-saying.

Pol. Presse me not ('beseech you) so: There is no Tongue that moves; none, none it'h' Would So soone as yours, could win me: so it should now, Were there necessitie in your request, although 'Twere needfull I deny'd it. My Affaires Doe even drag me home-ward: which to hinder, Were (in your Love) a Whip to me; my stay, To you a Charge, and Trouble: to save both, Farewell (our brother.)

Leo. Tongue-ty'd our Queene? speake you.

Her. I had thought (Sir) to have held my peace, untill You had drawne Oathes from him, not to stay: yea (Sir) Charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are sure All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction, The by-gone-day proclaim'd, say this to him, He's beat from his best ward.

Leo. Well said, Hermione.

Her. To tell, he longs to see his Sonne, were strong: But let him say so then, and let him goe; But let him sweare so, and he shall not stay, Wee'l thwack him hence with Distaffes.

Yet of your royall presence, Ile adventure The borrow of a Weeke. When at Bohemia You take my Lord, Ile give him my Commission, To let him there a Moneth, behind the Gest Prefix'd for's parting: yet (good-heed) Leontes, I love thee not a Iarre o'th' Clock, behind

A a

What

What Lady she her Lord. You'le stay?

Pol. No, Madame.

Her. Nay, but you will?

Pol. I may not verily.

Her. Verily?

You put me off with limber Vowes : but I;
Though you would seek t'unsphere the Stars with Oaths,
Should yet say, Sir, no going : Verely
You shall not goe; a Ladyes Verely is
As potent as a Lords. Will you goe yet?
Force me to keepe you as a Prisoner,
Not like a Guest : so you shall pay your Fees
When you depart, and save your Thankes. How say you?
My Prisoner? or my Guest? by your dread verely,
One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your Guest then Madame :

To be your Prisoner, should import offending;
Which is for me lesse easie to commit,
Then you to punish.

Her. Not your Gaoler then,
But your kind Hostesse, Come, Ile question you
Of my Lords Tricks and yours, when you were Boyes :
You were pretty Lordings then?

Pol. We were (faire Queene)
Two Lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to morrow, as to day,
And to be boy eternail.

Hel. Was not my Lord
The verier Wag o'th' two?

Pol. We were astwyn'd Lambs, that did frisk i'th' Sun
And bleat the one at th' other : what we chang'd,
Was Innocence, for innocence : we knew not
The Doctrine of ill-doing, no nor dream'd
That any did : Had we pursu'd that life,
And our weake Spirits ne're beene higher rear'd
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd Heaven
Boldly, not guilty : the Imposition clear'd, Hereditarie ours.

Hel. By this we gather
You have tript since.

Pol. O my most sacred Lady,
Temptations have since then beene borne to's : for
In those unfledg'd dayes, was my Wife a Girl;
Your precious selfe had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young Play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot :
Of this make no conclusion, least you say
Your Queene and I are Devils : yet goe on,
Th' offences we have made you doe, wee'le answer,
If you first sinn'd with us : and that with us
You did continue fault; and that you slipt not
With any, but with us.

Leo. Is he wonne yet?

Her. Hee'le stay, (my Lord.)

Leo. At my request, he would not :
Hermione (my dearest) thou never spok'st
To better purpose,

Her. Never?

Leo. Never, but once.

Her. What? have I twice said well? when was't before?
I prethee tell me : cram's with praise, and make's
As fat as tame things : One good deed, dying tonguelesse, Slaughters a thousand, wayting upon that.
Our prayes are our Wages, You may ride's
With one soft Kisse a thousand Furlongs, ere
With Spur we heat an Acre. But to th' Goale :

My last good deed was to intreate his stay.

What was my first? it ha's an elder Sister,
Or I mistake you : O, would her name were Grace,
But once before I spok'd to th' purpose? when?
Nay, let me have't : I long.

Leo. Why, that was when
Three crabbed Months had sower'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white Hand :
And clap thy selfe, my Love; then didst thou utter,
I am yours for ever.

Her. 'Tis Grace indeed.
Why lo-you now; I have spok'd to th' purpose twice :
The one for ever earn'd a Royall Husband;
Th' other, for some while a Friend.

Leo. Too hot, too hot :
To mingle friendship farre, is mingling bloods.
I have Tremor Cordis on me : my heart daunces,
But not for joy; not joy. This entertainment
May a free face put on : derives a Libertie
From Heartinesse, from Bountie, fertile Bosome;
And we'll become the Agent : 't may; I graunt :
But to be padding Palmes, and pinching fingers,
As now they are, and making practis'd Smiles
As in a Looking-Glasse : and then to sigh, as 'twere
The Mort o'th' Deere : oh, that is entertainment
My Bosome likes not, nor my Browes. Mamillius,
Art thou my Boy?

Mam. I my good Lord.

Leo. I'ficks :
Why that's my Bawcock : what? has't smutch'd thy Nose?
They say it is a Coppy out of mine. Come Captaine,
We must be neat ; not neat, cleanly Captaine :
And yet the Steere, the Heycer, and the Calfe,
Are all call'd Neate. Still Virginaling
Vpon his palme? How now (you wanton Calfe)
Art thou my Calfe?

Mam. Yes if you will (my Lord.)

Leo. Thou want'st a rough path, & the shootes that I have To be full, like me : yet they say we are Almost as like as Egges ; Women say so,
(That will say any thing,) But were they false
As o're-dy'd Blackes, as Wind, as Waters; false
As Dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No borne 'twixt his and mine ; yet were it true,
To say this Boy were like me. Come (Sir Page)
Looke on me with your Welkin eye : sweet Villaine.
Most dear'st, my Collop : Can thy Dam, may't be Affection? thy intention stabs the Center.
Thou do'st make possible things not be so held,
Communicat'it with Dreames (how can this be?)
With what's unrecall : thou coactive art,
And fellow'st nothing. Then 'tis very credent,
Thou may'st co-joyne with something, and thou do'st,
(And that beyond commission) and I finde it,
(And that to the infection of my Braines,
And hardning of my Browes.)

Pol. What meanes Sicilia?

Her. He something seemes unsetled.

Pol. How? my Lord?

Leo. What cheere? how is't with you, best Brother?

Her. You look as if you held a brow of much distraction,
Are you mov'd (my Lord?)

Leo. No, in good earnest.

How sometimes Nature will betray it's folly?
It's tenderesse? and make it selfe a Pastime
To harder bosomes? Looking on the Lynes

Of my Boyes face, me thoughts I did requoyle
Twentie three yeares, and saw my selfe unbreech'd,
In my greene Velvet Coat; my Dagger muzzel'd,
Least it should bite it's Master, and so prove
(As Ornaments oft do's) too dangerous:
How like (me thought) I then was to this Kernell,
This Squash, this Gentleman. Mine honest frend,
Will you take egges for Money?

Mam. No (my Lord) Ile fight.

Leo. You will: why happy man be's dole. My Brother
Are you so fond of your young Prince, as we Doe seeme to be of ours?

Pol. If at home (Sir)

Hee's all my Exercise, my Mirth, my Matter;
Now my fworne Friend, and then mine Enemy;
My parasite, my Souldier: Statef-man; all:
He makes a Iulyes day, short as December,
And with his varying child-nesse, cures in me
Thoughts, that should thicke my blood.

Leo. So stands this Squire
Offic'd with me: We two will walke (my Lord)
And leave you to your graver steps. Hermione,
How thou lou'st us, shew in our Brothers welcome;
Let what is deare in Sicily, be cheape:
Next to thy selfe, and my young Rover, hee's
Apparant to my heart.

Her. If you would seeke us,
We are yours it'h' Garden: shall's attend you there?

Leo. To your owne bents dispose you: you'le be found,
Be you beneath the Sky: I am angling now,
(Though you perceive me not how I give Lyne)
Goe to, goe to.

How she holds up the Neb? the Byll to him?
And armes her with the boldnesse of a Wife
To her allowing Husband. Gone already,
Ynch-thicke, knee-deepe; ore head and eares a fork'd one.
Goe play (Boy) play: thy Mother playes, and I
Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my Grave: Contempt and Clamor
Will be my Knell. Goe play (Boy) play, there have been (Or I am much deceiv'd) Cuckolds ere now,
And many a man there is (even at this present,
Now, while I (peake this) holds his Wife by th' Arme,
That little thinkes she ha's beene sluy'd in's absence,
And his Pond fish'd by his next Neighbor (by Sir Smile, his Neighbor:) nay, there's comfort in't,
Whiles other men have Gates, and those Gates open'd
(As mine) against their will. Should all despair
That have revolted Wives, the tenth of Mankind
Would hang themselves. Physicke for't, there's none:
It is a bawdy Planet, that will strike
Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powrefull: thinke it:
From East, Weast, North, and South, be it concluded,
No Barricado for a Belly. Know't,
It will let in and out the Enemy,
With bag and baggage: many thousand on's
Have the Disease, and feele't not. How now Boy?

Mam. I am like you they say.

Leo. Why, that's some comfort.
What? Camillo there?

Cam. I, my good Lord,

Leo. Goe play (Camillius) thou'rt an honest man:
Camillo; this great Sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much adoe to make his Anchor hold,
When you cast out, it still came home.

Leo. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not stay at your petitions, made
His businesse more materiall.

Leo. Didst perceive it?

They're here with me already; whisp'ring, rounding:
Sicilia is a so-forth: 'tis farre gone,
When I shall gust it last. How cam't (Camillo)
That he did stay?

Cam. At the good Queenes intreatie.

Leo. At the Queenes be't: Good should be pertinent,
But so it is, it is not. Was this taken
By any understanding pate but thine?
For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in
More then the common Blocks. Not noted, is't,
But of the finer Natures? by some Severalls
Of Head-peece extraordinarie? Lower Messes
Parchance are to this businesse purblind? say.

Cam. Businesse, my Lord? I thinke most understand
Bohemia staves heere longer.

Leo. Ha?

Cam. Staves here longer.

Leo. I, but why?

Cam. To satisfie your Highnesse, and the Entreaties
Of our most gracious Mistris.

Leo. Satisfie?

Th'entreaties of your Mistrisse? Satisfie?
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee (Camillo)
With all the neereft things to my heart, as well
My Chamber-Councels, wherein (Priest-like) thou
Hast cleans'd my Bosome: I, from thee departed
Thy penitent reform'd: but we have beene
Deceiv'd in thy integritie, deceiv'd
In that which seemes so.

Cam. Be it forbid (my Lord.)

Leo. To bide upon't: thou art not honest: or
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a Coward,
Which boxes honestie behind, restrayning
From Course requir'd: or else thou must be counted
A Servant, grafted in my serious Trust,
And therein negligent: or else a Foole,
That seest a Game play'd home, the rich Stake drawne,
And tak'st it all for jeast.

Cam. My gracious Lord,
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearefull,
In every one of these, no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, feare,
Amongst the infinite doing of the World,
Sometime puts forth in your affaires (my Lord.)
If ever I were wilfull-negligent,
It was my folly; if indultiously
I plai'd the foole, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end: if ever fearefull
To doe a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance. 'twas a feare
Which oft infects the wisest: these (my Lord)
Are such allow'd Infirmities that honestie
Is never free of. But beseech your Grace
Be plainer with me, let me know my trespass
By it's owne visage; if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.

Leo. Ha? not you seene Camillo?

(But that's past doubt; you have, or your eye-glasse
Is thicker then a Cuckolds Horne) or heard?
(For to a Vision so apparant, Rumor
Cannot be mute) or thought? (for Cogitation
Resides not in that man, that do's not thinke)

My Wife is slipperie? If thou wilt confesse,
Or else be impudently negative,
To have nor Eyes, nor Eares, nor Thought, then say
My Wife's a Holy-Horfe, deserves a Name
As ranke as any Flax-Wench, that puts to Before her troth-plight: say't, and justify't.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to heare
My Sovereigne Mistresse clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken: 'shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you lesse
Then this; which to reiterate, were sin
As deepe as that, though true.

Leo. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning Cheeke to Cheeke? is meating Noses?
Kissing with in-side Lip? stopping the Cariere
Of Laughter, with a sigh? (a Note infallible
Of breaking honestie) horsing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing Clocks more swift?
Houres, Minutes? the Noone, Mid-night? and all Eyes
Blind with the Pin and Web, but theirs; theirs onely,
That would unseene be wicked? Is this nothing?
Why then the World, and all that's in't, is nothing,
The covering Skie is nothing, Bohemia nothing,
My Wife is nothing, nor Nothing have these Nothings,
If this be nothing.

Cam. Good my Lord, be cur'd
Of this diseases'd Opinion, and betimes,
For 'tis most dangerous.

Leo. Say it be, 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my Lord.

Leo. It is: you lye, you lye:
I say thou lye'st Camillo, and I hate thee,
Pronounce thee a grosse Lowt, a mindlesse Slave,
Or else a hovering Temporizer, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evill,
Inclining to them both: were my wives Liver
Infected (as her life) she would not live
The running of one Glasse.

Cam. Who do's infect her?

Leo. Why he that weares her like her Medull, hanging
About his necke (Bohemia) who, if I
Had Servants true about me, that bare eyes
To see alike mine Honor, as their profits,
(Their owne particular Thrifts) they would doe that
Which should undoe more doing: I, and thou
His Cup-bearer, whom I from meaner forme
Have Bench'd, and rear'd to Worship, who may't see Plainely, as Heaven sees Earth, and Earth sees Heaven,
How I am gall'd, thou might'st be-spice a Cup,
To give mine Enemie a laiting Winke:
Which Draught to me, were cordiall.

Cam. Sir (my Lord)
I could doe this, and that with no rash Potion,
But with a lingring Dram, that should not worke
Maliciously, like Poyson: But I cannot Beleeve this Cracke to be in my dread Mistresse
(So soveraignely being Honorable.)
I have lov'd thee.

Leo. Make that thy question, and goe rot:
Do'st thinke I am so muddy, founsetled,
To appoint my selfe in this vexation?
Sully the puritie and whitenesse of my Sheetes (Which to preferue, is Sleepe: which being spotted,
Is Goades, Thornes, Nettles, Tails of Waspes)
Give scandall to the blood o'th' Prince, my Sonne,
(Who I doe thinke is mine, and love as mine)

Without ripe moving to't? Would I doe this?
Could man so blench?

Cam. I must beleeve you (Sir)
I doe, and will fetch off Bohemia for't:
Provided, that when hee's remov'd, your Highnesse
Will take againe your Queene, as yours at first,
Even for your Sonnes sake, and thereby for sealing
The Injurie of Tongues, in Courts and Kingdomes
Knowne, and ally'd to yours.

Leo. Thou do'st advise me,
Even so as I mine owne course have set downe:
He give no blemish to her Honor, none.

Cam. My Lord,
Goe then; and with a countenance as cleare
As Friendship weares at Feasts, keepe with Bohemia,
And with your Queene: I am his Cup-bearer,
If from me he have wholesome Beveridge,
Account me not your Servant.

Leo. This is all:
Do't, and thou hast the one halfe of my heart;
Do't not, thou splitt'st thine owne.

Cam. He do't, my Lord.

Leo. I will seeme friendly, as thou hast advis'd me. Exit.

Cam. O miserable Lady. But for me!
What case stand I in? I must be the poysoner
Of good Polixenes, and my ground to do't,
Is the obedience to a Master; one,
Who in Rebellion with himselfe, will have
All that are his, so too. To doe this deed,
Promotion follows: If I could find example
Of thousand's that had struck anoynted Kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: But since
Nor Brasse, nor Stone, nor Parchment beares not one, Let Villany it selfe forswert. I must Forake the Court: to do't, or no, is certaine
To me a breake-neck. Happy Starre raigne now, Here comes Bohemia Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange: Me thinkes
Me fauor here begins to warpe. Not speake?
Good day Camillo.

Cam. Hoyle most royall Sir.

Pol. What is the Newes i'th' Court?

Cam. None rare (my Lord.)

Pol. The King hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some Province, and a Region
Lov'd, as he loves himselfe: even now I met him
With customary complement, when he Wasting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A Lippe of much contempt, speedes from me, and
So leaves me, to consider what is breeding,
That changes thus his Manners.

Cam. I dare not know (my Lord.)

Pol. How, dare not? doe not? doe you know, and dare not?
Be intelligent to me, 'tis thereabouts:
For to your selfe, what you doe know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your chang'd complexions are to me a Mirror,
Which shewes me mine chang'd too: for I must be A party in this alteration, finding
My selfe thus alter'd with't.

Cam. There is a sicknes
Which puts some of vs in distemper, but I cannot name the Disease, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.

Pol. How caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the Basilisque.

I look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so : Camillo,
As you are certainly a Gentleman, thereto
Clerke-like expedient, which no lesse adorne
Our Gentry, then our Parents Noble Names,
In whose successe we are gentle : I beseech you,
If you know ought which do's behove my knowledge,
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A Sicknesse caught of me, and yet I well ?
I must be answer'd. Do'st thou heare Camillo,
I conjure thee by all the parts of man,
Which honor do's acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this Suit of mine, that thou declare
What incidencie thou do'st gesse of harme
Is creeping toward me; how farre off, how neere,
Which way to be prevented, if to be :
If not, how best to beare it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you,
Since I am charg'd in Honor, and by him
That I thinke Honorable: therefore marke my counsaile,
Which must be ev'n as swiftly followed, as
I meane to utter it; or both your selfe, and me,
Cry lost, and so good night.

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I appointed him to murder you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo ?

Cam. By the King.

Pol. For what ?

Cam. He thinkes, nay with all confidence he sweares,
As he had seen't, or beene an Instrument
To vice you to't, that you have toucht his Queene Forbiddenly.

Pol. Oh then, my best blood turne
To an infected Gelly, and my Name
Be yoak'd with his, that did betray the Best :
Turne then my freshest Reputation to
A savour, that may strike the dullest Nosthrill
Where I arrive, and my approach be shun'd,
Nay hated too, worse then the great'st infection
That ere was heard, or read.

Cam. Swear his thought over
By each particular Starre in Heaven, and
By all their influences; you may as well
Forbid the Sea for to obey the Moone,
As (or by Oath) remove, or (Counsaile) shake
The Fabrick of his Folly, whose foundation
Is pyld upon his Faith, and will continue
The standing of his Body.

Pol. How should this grow ?

Cam. I know not : but I am sure 'tis safer to Avoid what's growne, then question how 'tis borne.
If therefore you dare trust my honestie,
That lyes enclosed in this Trunke, which you
Shall beare along impawnd, away to Night,
Your Followers I wil whisper to the Businesse,
And will by twos, and threes, at severall Posternes, Cleare them o'th' Citie : For my selfe, Ile put My fortunes to your service (which are here
By this discoverie lost.) Be not uncertaine,
For by the honor of my Parents, I
Have uttered Truth : which if you seeke to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer,
Then one condemned by the Kings owne mouth:
Thereon his Execution sworne.

Pol. Idoe beleve thee :

I saw his heart in's face. Give me thy hand.
Be Pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My Ships are ready, and My people did expect my hence departure
Two dayes agoe. This ielousie
Is for a precious Creature : as shee's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his Person's mightie,
Must it be violent : and, as he do's conceive,
He is dishonor'd by a man, which ever Profes'd to him: why his Revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Feare ore-shades me:
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious Queene, part of his Theame; but nothing
Of his ill-ta'ne suspition. Come Camillo,
I will respect thee as a Father, if Thou bear'st my life off, hence : Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authoritie to command
The Keyes of all the Posternes: Please your Highnesse
To take the urgent houre. Come Sir, away. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, Ladies: Leontes, Antigonus, Lord.

Her. Take the Boy to you : he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

Lady. Come (my gracious Lord)
Shall I be your play-fellow ?

Mam. No, Ile none of you.

Lady. Why (my sweet Lord?)

Mam. You'll kisse me hard, and speake to me, as if I were a Baby still. I love you better.

2. Lady. And why so (my Lord?)

Mam. Not for because
Your Browes are blacker (yet blacke-browes they say
Become some Women best, so that there be not Too much haire there, but in a Semicircle,
Or a halfe-Moone, made with a Pen.)

2. Lady. Who taught this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of Womens faces: pray now,
What colour be your eye-browes?

Lady. Blew (my Lord.)

Mam. Nay, that's a mock : I have seene a Ladies Nose
That ha's beene blew, but not her eye-browes.

Lady. Hearke ye,

The Queene (your Mother) rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine new Prince
One of these dayes, and then you'd wanton with us,
If we would have you.

2. Lady. She is spread of Late

Into a goodly Bulke (good time encounter her.)

Her. What wifdome stirs amongst you? Come Sir, now
I am for you againe : 'Pray you sit by us,
And tell's a Tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall't, be?

Hel. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad Tale's best for Winter :
I have one of Sprights, and Goblins.

Hel. Let's have that (good Sir.)

Come-on, sit downe, come-on, and doe your best,
To fright me with your sprights : you're powrefull at it.

A 3

Mam. There

Mam. There was a man.

Her. Nay, come sit downe: then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a Church-yard: I will tell it softly,
Yond Crickets shall not heare it,

Her. Come on then, and giv't me in mine eare. Enter L.

Leon. Was he met there? his Trainee? Camillo with him?

Lord. Behind the tuft of Pines I met them, never Saw I men scowre so on their way: I eyed them
Even to their Ships.

Leo. How blest am I

In my just Censure? in my true Opinion?
Alack, for lesser knowledge, how accurs'd,
In being so blest? There may be in the Cup
A Spider steep'd, and one may drinke; depart,
And yet partake no venome; (for his knowledge
Is not infected) but if one present
Th'abhor'd Ingredient to his eye, make knowne
How he hath drunke, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent Hefts: I have drunke, and seen the Spider.
Camillo was his helpe in this, his Pander:
There is a plot against my Life, my Crowne;
All's true that is mistrusted: that false Villaine,
Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him:
He ha's discover'd my Designe, and I
Remaine a pinch'd Thing; yea, a very Tricke
For them to play at will: how came the Posternes
So easily open?

Lord. By his great authoritie,
Which often hath no lesse prevail'd, then so,
On your command.

Leo. I know't too well.

Give me the Boy, I am glad you did not nurse him:
Though he do's beare some signes of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.

Her. What is this Sport?

Leo. Beare the Boy hence, he shall not come about her,
Away with him, and let her sport her selfe
With that she's big-with, for 'tis Polixenes
Ha's made thee swell thus.

Her. But I'd say he had not;
And Ile be sworne you would beleve my saying,
How e're you leane to th'Nay-ward.

Leo. You (my Lords)

Looke on her, marke her well: be but about
To say she is a goodly Lady, and
The justice of your hearts will thereto adde
'Tis pittie she's not honest: Honorable;
Prayse her but for this her without-dore-Forme,
(Which on my faith deserves high speech) and straight
The Shrug, the Hum, or Ha, (these Petty-brands
That Calumnie doth use; Oh I am out,
That Mercy do's, for Calumnie will feare
Vertue it selfe) these Shrugs, these Hum's, and Ha's,
When you have said she's goodly, come betweene,
Ere you can say she's honest: But be't knowne
(From him that ha's most cause to grieve it should be) She's an Adulteresse.

Her. Should a Villaine say so,
(The most replenish'd Villaine in the World)
He were as much more Villaine: you (my Lord)
Doe but mistake.

Leo. You have mistooke (my Lady)

Polixenes for Leontes: O thou Thing,
(Which Ile not call a Creature of thy place,
Least Barbarisme (making me the precedent)

Should a like Language use to all degrees,
And mannerly distiguishment leave out,
Betwixt the Prince and Begger:) I have said
Shee's an Adulteresse, I have said with whom:
More; Shee's a Traytor, and Camillo is
A Federarie with her, and one that knowes
What she should shame to know her selfe,
But with her most vild Principall; that she's
A Bed-swarver, even as bad as those
That Vulgars give bold'st Titles; I, and privie
To this their late escape.

Her. No (by my life)

Privy to none of this: how will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? Gentle my Lord,
You scarce can right me throughly, then, to say
You did mistake.

Leo. No: if I mistake

In those Foundations which I build upon,
The Centre is not bigge enough to beare
A Schoole-Boyes Top. Away with her, to Prison:
He who shall speake for her, is a farre-off guiltie,
But that he speakes.

Her. Thsre's some ill planet raignes:

I must be patient, till the Heavens looke
With an aspect more favorable. Good my Lords,
I am not prone to weeping (as our Sex Commonly are) the want of which vaine dew
Perchance shall dry your pitties: but I have
That honorable Griefe lodg'd here, which burnes
Worse then Teares drowne: 'beseech you all (my Lords)
With thoughts so qualified, as your Charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me; and so
The Kings will be perform'd.

Leo. Shall I be heard?

Her. Who is't that goes with me? 'beseech your Highnes
My women may be with me, for you see
My plight requires it. Doe not weepe (good Fooles)
There is no cause: When you shall know your Mistris)
Ha's deserv'd Prison, then abound in Teares,
As I come out; this Action I now goe on,
Is for my better grace. Adieu (my Lord)
I never wish'd to see you sorry, now
I trust I shall: my Women come, you have leave.

Leo. Goe doe our bidding: hence.

Lord. 'Beseech your Highnesse call the Queene againe.

Ant. Be certaine what you do (Sir) least your Iustice
Prove violence, in the which thre: great ones suffer,
Your Selfe, your Queene, your Sonne.

Lord. For her (my Lord)

I dare my life lay downe, and will do't (Sir)
Please you t'accept it, that the Queene is spotlesse
I'th'eyes of Heaven, and to you (I meane
In this, which you accuse her.)

Antig. If it prove

She's other wise, Ile keepe my Stables where
I lodge my Wife, Ile goe in couples with her:
Then when I feele, and see her, no further trust her:
For every ynoch of Woman in the World,
I, every dram of Womans flesh is false,
If she be.

Leo. Hold your peaces,

Lord. Good my Lord.

Antig. It is for you we speake, not for our selves:
You are abus'd, by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't: would I knew the Villaine,

I would

I would Land-damne him : be she honor-flaw'd,
I have three daughters : the eldest is eleven:
The second, and the third, nine : and sonnes five:
If this prove true, they'l pay for't. By mine honor
He gell'd em all : foureteene they shall not see
To bring false generations : they are co-heires,
And I had rather glib my selfe, then they Should not produce faire issue.

Leo. Cease, no more :
You smell this businesse with a sence as cold
As is a dead-mans nose : but I do see't, and feel't,
As you feele doing thus : and see withall
The Instruments that feele.

Ant. If it be so,
We neede no grave to burie honestie;
There's not a graine of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy-earth.

Leo. What? lacke I credit?

Lord. I had rather you did lacke then I (my Lord)
Vpon this ground : and more it would content me
To have her Honor true, then your suspicion
Be blam'd for't how you might.

Leo. Why what neede we Commune with you for this? but rather follow
Our forcefull instigation? Our prerogative
Cals not your Counsailes, but our naturall goodnesse
Imparts this : which, if you, or stupified,
Or seeming so, in skill, cannot, or will not Relish a truth, like us : informe your selves
We neede no more of your advice : the matter,
The losse, the gaine, the ord'ring on't,
Is all properly ours.

Ant. And I wish (my Liege)
You had onely in your silent judgement tride it,
Without more overtur.

Leo. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wer't borne a foole : Camilla's flight
Added to their Familiarity
(Which was as grosse, as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight onely, nought for approbation
But onely seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to'th deed) doth push on this proceeding,
Yet, for a greater confirmation
(For in an act of this importance, 'twere
Most pitious to be wilde) I have dispatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphos, to Apollo's Temple,
Cleomines and Deon, whom you know
Of stuff'd-sufficiency : Now, from the Oracle
They will bring al, whose spirituall counsaile had,
Shall stop, or spurre me. Have I done well?

Lord. Well done (my Lord.)

Leo. Though I am satisfyde, and neede no more
Then what I know, yet shall the Oracle
Give rest to th' mindes of others; such as he Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to th' truth. So have we thought it good
From our free person, she should be confinde,
Least that the treachery of the two, fled hence,
Be left her to performe. Come follow us,
We are to speake in publike : for this businesse
Will raise us all.

Antig. To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth, were knowne.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Paulina, a Gentleman, Gaoler, Emilia.

Paul. The Keeper of the prison, call to him :
Let him have knowledge whom I am. Good Lady,
No Court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison? Now good Sir,
You know me, do you not?

Gao. For a worthy Lady,
And one, whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the Queene.

Gao. I may not (Madam)

To the contrary I have expresse commandment.

Paul. Here's a-do, to locke up honestie and honor from
Th' access of gentle visitors. Is't lawfull pray you
To see her Women? Any of them? Emilia?

Gao. So please you (Madam)
To put a-part these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray you now call her :
With-draw your selves.

Gao. And Madam,

I must be present at your Conference.

Paul. Well : be't so : prethee.

Heere's such a-doe, to make no staine, a staine,
As passes colouring. Deare Gentlewoman,
How fares one gracious Lady?

Emil. As well as one so great, and so forlorne
May hold together : On her frights, and griefes
(Which never tender Lady hath borne greater)
She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe,
Lusty, and like to live : the Queene receives
Much comfort in't : Sayes, my poore prisoner,
I am innocent as you,

Paul. I dare be sworne :
These dangerous, unsafe Lanes i'th' King, beshrew them,
He must be told on't, and he shall : the office
Becomes a woman best. He take't upon me.
If I prove hony-mouth'd, let my tongue blister.
And never to my red-look'd Anger be
The Trumpet any more : pray you (Emilia)
Commend my best obedience to the Queene,
If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew't the King, and undertake to be
Her Advocate to'th lowd'it. We doe not know
How he may soften at the sight o'th' Childe :
The silence often of pure innocence
Perswades, when speaking failes.

Emil. Most worthy Madam,
Your honour, and your goodnesse is so evident,
That your free undertaking cannot misle
A thriving issue : there is no Lady living
So meete for this great errand; please your Ladiship
To visit the next roome, He presently
Acquaint the Queene of your most noble offer,
Who, but to day hammered of this designe,
But durst not tempt a minister of honor
Least she should be deny'd.

Paul.

Paul. Tell her (Emilia)

Ile use that tongue I have : If wit flow from't
As boldnesse from my bosome, le't not be doubted
I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it.

Ile to the Queene : please you come something neerer.

Gao. Madam, if't please the Queene to send the babe,
I know not what I shall incurre, to passe it,
Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not feare it (sir)

This Childe was prisoner to the wombe, and is
By Law and proceffe of great Nature, thence Free'd, and enfranchis'd, not a partie to
The anger of the King, nor guilty of
(If any be) the trespassse of the Queene.

Gao. I do beleeeve it.

Paul. Do not you feare : upon mine honor, I
Will stand betwixt you, and danger.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Leontes, Seruants, Paulina, Antigonus, and Lords.

Leo. Nor night, nor day, no rest : It is but weaknesse
To beare the matter thus : meere weaknesse, if
The cause were not in being : part o'th cause,
She, th' Adulteresse; for the harlot-King
Is quite beyond mine arme: out of the blanke
And leuell of my braine : plot-prooffe : but she,
I can hooke to me : say that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest
Might come to me againe. Whose there ?

Ser. My Lord.

Enter.

Leo. How do's the boy ?

Ser. He tooke good rest to night : 'tis hop'd
His sicknesse is discharg'd.

Leo. To see his Noblenesse,
Conceiving the dishonour of his Mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, tooke it deeply,
Fasten'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himselfe :
Threw-off his Spirit, his Appetite, his Sleepe,
And down-right languish'd. Leave me solely : goe,
See how he fares : Fic, fie, no thought of him,
The very thought of my Revenges that way
Recoyle upon me : in himselfe too mighty,
Vntill a time may serue, For present vengeance
Take it on her : Camillo, and Polixenus
Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow :
They should nor laugh, if I could reach them, nor Shall she, within my powre.

Enter Paulina.

Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay rather (good my Lords) be second to me:
Feare you his tyrannous passion more (alas)
Then the Queenes life ? A gracious innocent soule,
More free, then he is ieaious.

Antig. That's enough.

Ser. Madam ; he hath not slept to night, commanded
None should come at him.

Paul. Not so hot (good Sir)
I come to bring him sleepe. 'Tis such as you

That creepe like shadowes by him, and do fighe
At each his needlesse heauings: such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking. I
Do come with words, as medicinall, as true ;
(Honest, as either;) to purge him of that humor,
That presses him from sleepe.

Leo. What noyse there, hoe ?

Paul. No noyse (my Lord) but needfull conference,
About some Gossips for your Highnesse.

Leo. How ?

Away with that audacious Lady. Antigonus
I charg'd thee that she should not come about me,
I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so (my Lord)

On your displeasures perill and on mine,
She should not visit you.

Leo. What? canst not rule her?

Paul. From all dishonestie he can : in this (Vnlesse he take the course that you have done)
Commit me, for committing honor, trust it,
He shall not rule me :

Ant. La-you now, you heare,
When she will take the raine, I let her run,
But shee'l not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege I come:

And I beseech you heare me: who professes
My selfe your loyall servant, your Phisitian,
Your most obedient Counsaile: yet that dares
Lesse appeare so, in comforting your Evilles,
Then such as most seeme yours. I say, I come
From your good Queene.

Leo. Good Queene?

Paul. Good Queene (my Lord) good Queene,
I say good Queene,
And would by combate, make her good so, were I
A man, the worst about you.

Leo. Force her hence.

Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes
First hand me : on mine owne accord, Ile off,
But first; Ile do my errand. The good Queene
(For she is good) hath brought you forth a daughter,
Heere 'tis : Commends it to your blessing.

Leo. Out :

A mankinde Witch? Hence with her, out o'dore :
A most intelligencing bawd.

Paul. Not so :

I am asignorant in that, as you,
In so entic'ling me : and no lesse honest
Then you are mad : which is enough, Ile warrant
(As this world goes) to passe for honest.

Leo. Traitors ;

Will you not push her out ? Give her the Bastard,
Thou dotard, thou art woman-tyr'd : unroosted
By thy dame Parides heere. Take up the Bastard, Take't up, I say : giue't to the Croane.

Paul. For ever

Vnvenerable be thy hands, if thou
Tak'st up the Princess, by that forced basenesse
Which he ha's put upon't.

Leo. He dreads his Wife.

Paul. So I would you did : then 'twere past all doubt
You'd call your children, yours.

Leo. A nest of Traitors.

Ant. I am none, by this good light.

Paul. Nor I : nor any
But one that's heere : and that's himselfe: for he,

The

The sacred honor of himselfe, his Queenes,
His hopefull Sonnes, his Babes, betrayes to slander,
Whose sting is sharper then the Swords; and will not
(For as the case now stands, it is a Curse
He cannot be compell'd too't) once remove
The Root of his Opinion, which is rotten,
As ever Oake, or stone was found.

Leo. A Callat
Of boundlesse tongue, who late hath beat her husband,
And now baits me: This Brat is none of mine,
It is the Issue of Polixenes.
Hence with it, and together with the Dam,
Commit them to the fire.

Paul. It is yours:
And might we lay th' old Proverb to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worfe. Behold (my Lords)
Although the print be litle, the whole Matter
And Coppy of the Father: (Eye, Nose, Lippe,
The trickes of's Frowne, his Fore-head, nay, the Valley,
The pretty dimples of his Chin, and Cheeke; his Smiles:
The very Mold, and frame of hand, nayle, Finger.)
And thou good Goddess Nature, which hast made it
So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the Mind too; mongst all Colours
No Yellow in't, least she suspect, as he do's,
Her Children, not her Husbands.

Leo. A grosse Hagge:
And Lozell, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her Tongue.

Antig. Hang all the Husbands
That cannot doe that Fear, you'll leave your selfe
Hardly one subje&.

Leo. Once more take her hence.

Paul. A most unworthy, and unnaturall Lord
Can doe no more.

Leo. He ha' thee burnt.

Paul. I care not:
It is an Heretique that makes the fire,
Not she which burnes in't. He not call you Tyrant:
But this most cruell usage of your Queene
(Not able to produce more accusation
Then your owne weake-binding'd Fancy) something favors
Of Tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yea, scandalous to the World.

Leo. On your allegiance,
Out of the Chamber with her. Were I a Tyrant,
Where were her life? she durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her.

Paul. I pray you doe not push me, He be gone.
Look to your Babe (my Lord) 'tis yours: love send her
A better guiding Spirit. What neede these hands?
You that are thus so tender o're his Follyes,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, so: Farewell, we are gone. Exit.

Leo. Thou (Traytor) hast set on thy Wife to this.
My Child? away with't? even thou, that hast
A heart so tender o're it, take it hence,
And see it instantly consum'd with fire.
Even thou, and none but thou: Take it up straight:
Within this houre bring me word 'tis done.
(And by good testimonie) or He seize thy life,
With what thou else call'st chine: if thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my Wrath, say so;
The Bastard-braines with these my proper hands
Shall I dash out, Goe take it to the fire,
For thou set'st on thy Wife.

Antig. I did not, Sir:

These Lords, my Noble Fellowes, if they please,
Can cleare me in't.

Lords. We can; my Royall Liege,
He is not guiltie of her comming hither.

Leo. You're lyers all.

Lord. Beseech your Highnesse, give us better credit:
We have alwayes truly serv'd you, and beseech
So to esteeme of us: and on our knees we begge,
(As recompence of our deare services
Past, and to come) that you doe change this purpose,
Which being so horrible, so bloody, must Leade on to some foule Issue. We all kneele.

Leo. I am a Feather for each Wind that blows:
Shall I live on, to see this Bastard kneele,
And call me Father? better burne it now,
Then curse it then. But be it: let it live.
It shall not neyther. You Sir, come you hither:
You that have beene so tenderly officious
With Lady Margerie, your Mid-wife there,
To save this Bastards life; for 'tis a Bastard,
So sure as this Beard's gray. What will you adventure,
To save this Brats life?

Antig. Anything (my Lord)
That my abilitie may undergoe,
And Noblenesse impose: at last thus much;
He pawne the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent: any thing possible.

Leo. It shall be possible: Swear by this Sword
Thou wilt performe my bidding.

Antig. I will (my Lord.)

Leo. Marke and performe it: see'st thou? for the faile
Of any point in't, shall not onely be Death to thy selfe, but to thy lewd-tongu'd Wife, (Whom for this time we pardon) We enjoyne thee,
As thou art Liege-man to us, that thou carry
This female Bastard hence, and that thou beare it
To some remote and desart place, quite out
Of our Dominions; and that there thou leave it (Without much mercy) to it owne protection,
And fauour of the Climate: as by strange fortune,
It came to us, I doe in Iustice charge thee,
On thy Soules perill, and thy Bodies torture,
That thou commend it strangely to some place,
Where Chance may nurse, or end it: take it up.

Antig. I sweare to doe this: though a present death
Had beene more mercifull. Come on (poore Babe)
Some powerfull Spirit instruct the Kytes and Ravens
To be thy Nurfes. Wolves and Beares, they say,
(Casting their savagenesse aside) have done
Like offices of pittie. Sir, be prosperous
In more then this deed do's require: and blessing
Against this Crueltie, fight on thy side (Poore Thing condemn'd to losse.) Exit.

Leo. No: He not reare

Another's Issue.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please your Highnesse, Folts
From those you sent to th' Oracle, are come
An houre since: Claomines and Dion,
Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both landed,
Hasting to th' Court.

Lord. So please you (Sir) their speed
Hath beene beyond accompt.

Leo. Twentie three dayes
They have beene absent: 'tis good speed: fore-tells
The great Apollo suddenly will have

The truth of this appeare : Prepare you Lords,
Summon a Session, that we may arraigne
Our most disloyall Lady: for as she hath Been publickly accus'd, so shall she have A just and open Triall. While she lives,
My heart will be a burthen to me. Leave me,
And thinke upon my bidding.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cleomines and Dion.

Cle. The Clymat's delicate, the Ayre most sweet,
Fertile the Isle, the Temple much surpassing
The common prayse it beares.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the Celestiall Habits,
(Me thinks I should terme them) and the reverence
Of the grave Wearers. O, the Sacrifice.
How ceremonious, solemne, and un-earthly
It wasi'th' Offering?

Cleo. But of all, the burst
And the eare-deaff'ning Voyce o'th' Oracle,
Kin to Ioues Thunder, so surpriz'd my Sence,
That I was nothing.

Dio. If th'event o'th' Iourney
Prove as successfull to the Queene (O be't so)
As it hath beene to us, rare, pleasant, speedie,
The time is worth the use on't.

Cleo. Great Apollo
Turne all to th' best: these Proclamations,
So forcing faults upon Hermione,
I little like.

Dio. The violent carriage of it
Will cleare, or end the Businesse, when the Oracle
(Thus by Apollo's great Divine seal'd up)
Shall the Contents discover: something rare
Even then will rush to knowledge. Goe: fresh Horses,
And gracious be the issue.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Leontes, Lords, Officers: Hermione (as to her Triall) Ladies: Cleomines, Dion.

Leo. This Sessions (to our great griefe we pronounce)
Even puthes 'gainst our heart. The partie try'd,
The Daughter of a King, our Wife, and one
Of us too much belov'd. Let us be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in Iustice, which shall have due course,
Even to the Guilt, or the Purgation:
Produce the Prisoner.

Officer. It is his Highnesse pleasure, that the Queene Appeare in person, here in Court.

Silence. Enter

Leo. Reade the Indictment.

Officer. Hermione, Queene to the worthy Leontes, King of Sicilia, thou art here accus'd and arraigned of High Treason, in committing Adultery with Polixenes King of Bohemia, and conspiring with Camillo to take away the Life of our Sovereigne Lord the King, thy royall husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstance partly layd open, thou (Hermione) contravert to the Faith and Allegiance of a true Subject, didst consaile and ayde them, for their better safetie, to flye away by Night.

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my Accusation, and
The testimonie on my part, no other
But what comes from my selfe, it shall scarce boot me
To say, Not guiltie: mine integritie
Being counted Falschood, shall (as I expresse it)
Be so receiv'd. But thus, if Powres divine
Behold our humane Actiuns (as they doe)
I doubt not then, but innocence shall make Falsse Accusations blush, and Tyrannie
Tremble at Patience. You (my Lord) best know (Whom least will seeme to doe so) my past life
Hath beene as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Then historie can patterne, though devis'd,
And play'd, to take Spectators. For behold me,
A Fellow of the Royall Bed, which owe
A Moitie of the Throne: a great Kings Daughter,
The Mother to a hopefull Prince, here standing
To prate and talke for Life, and Honor, fore
Who please to come and heare. For life, I prize it
As I weigh Griefe (which I would spare:) For Honor,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And onely that I stand for. I appeale
To your owne Conscience (Sir) before Polixenes
Came to your Court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so: Since he came,
With what encounter so uncourant, I
Have strayn'd't appeare thus; if one jot beyond
The bound of honor, or in act, or will
That way enclining, hardened be the hearts
Of all that heare me, and my neer'st of Kin
Cry sie upon my grave.

Leo. I ne're heard yet,
That any of these bolder Vices wanted
Lesse Impudence to gaine-say what they did,
Then to performe it first.

Her. That's true enough,
Though 'tis a saying (Sir) not due to me.

Leo. You will not owne it.

Her. More then Mistresse of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes
(With whom I am accus'd) I doe confesse
I lov'd him, as in Honor he requir'd:
With such a kind of Love, as might become
A Lady like me; with a Love, even such,
So, and no other, as your selfe commanded:
Which, not to have done, I thinke had beene in me
Both Disobedience, and ingratitude
To you, and toward your friends, whose love had spoke,
Even since it could speake, from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now for Conspiracie,
I know not how it tastes, though it be diu'd
For me to try how: All I know of it,
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your Court, the Gods themselves
(Wotting no more then I) are ignorant.

Leo. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta'ne to doe in's absence.

Her. Sir

Her. Sir,
you speake a Language that I vnderstand not:
My Life stands in the leuell of your Dreames,
Which Ile lay downe.

Leo. Your Actions are my Dreames.
You had a Bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it: As you were past all shame,
(Those of your Fact are so) so past all truth;
Which to deny, concerne more then auails: for as Thy Brat hath beene cast out, like to it selfe,
No Father owning it (which is indeed
More criminall in thee, then it) so thou
Shalt feele our Iustice; in whose easiest passage,
Looke for no lesse then death.

Her. Sir, spare your Threats:
The Bugge which you would fright me with, I seeke:
To me can Life be no commodity,
The crowne and comfort of my Life (your Fauror)
I doe giue lost, for I doe feele it gone,
But know not how it went. My second Ioy,
And first Fruits of my body, from his presence
I am bar'd, like one infectious. My third comfort
(Star'd most unluckily) is from my breast
(The innocent milke in it most innocent mouth)
Hal'd out to murther. My selfe on every Post
Proclam'd a Strumpet: With immodest hatred
The Child-bed priuiledge deny'd, which longs
To Women of all fashion. Lastly, hurried
Here, to this place, i'th' open ayre before
I have got strength of limit. Now (my Liege
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should feare to dye? Therefore proceed:
But yet heare this: mistake me not: no Life,
(I prize it not a straw) but for mine Honor,
Which I would free: if I shall be condemn'd
Vpon surmizes (all proofes sleeping else,
But what your Iealousies awake) I tell you
Tis Rigor, and not Law. Your Honors all,
I doe referre me to the Oracle:

Apollo be my Iudge.

Lord. This your request Enter Dion and Cleomines.
is altogether iust: therefore bring forth
(And in Apollo's Name) his Oracle.

Her. The Emperor of Russia was my Father,
Oh that he were alive, and here beholding
His Daughters Tryall: that he did but see
The flatnesse of my miserie; yet with eyes
Of pittie, not Revenge.

Officer. You heere shall sweare upon the Sword of Iustice,
That you (Cleomines and Dion) have Beene both at Delphos, and from thence have brought
This seal'd-up Oracle, by the Hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's Priest; and that since then,
You have not dar'd to breake the holy Seale,
Nor read the Secrets in't.

Cleo. Dio. All this we sweare.

Leo. Breake up the Seales, and reade.

Officer. Hermione is cast, Polixenes blamelesse, Camillo
atru Subject, Leontes a jealous Tyrant, his innocent Babe truly begotten, and the King shall live without an Heire, if that which is lost, be not found.

Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo.

Her. Praysd.

Leo. Hast thou read truth?

Offic. I (my Lord) even so as it is here set downe.

Leo. There is no truth at all i'th' Oracle:

The Sessions shall proceed: this is meere falsehood.

Ser. My Lord the King: the King?

Leo. What is the businesse?

Ser. O Sir I shall be hated to report it.

The Prince your Sonne, with meere conceit and feare
Of the Queenes speed, is gone.

Leo. How? gone?

Ser. Is dead.

Leo. Apollo's angry, and the heavens themselves
Doe strike at my Injustice. How now there?

Paul. This newes is mortall to the Queene: Look downe
And see what death is doing.

Leo. Take her hence:

Her heart is but o're-charg'd: she will recover.
I have too much beleeu'd mine owne suspicion:
Beseech you tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life. Apollo pardon
My great prophanesse 'gainst thine Oracle.
Ile reconcile me to Polixenes,
New wooe my Queene, recall the good Camillo
(Whom I proclaime a man of Truth, of Mercy:)
For being transported by my Iealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister, to poyson
My friend Polixenes: which had beene done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command: though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he (most humane,
And fill'd with Honor) to my Kingiy Guest
Vnclasp'd my practise, quier his fortunes here
(Which you knew great) and to the certaine hazard
Of all Incertainties, himselfe commended,
No richer then his Honor: How he glitters
Through my darke Rust? and how his Pietie
Do's my deeds make the blacker?

Paul. Woe the while:

O cut my Lace, least my heart (cracking it)
Breake too.

Lord. What fit is this? good Lady?

Paul. What studied torments (Tyrant) hast for me?
What Wheelles? Racks? Fires? What flaying? boyling? Bur-
In Leads, or Oyles? What old, or new torture (ning,
Must I receive? whose very word deserves
To taste of thy most worst. Thy Tyranny (Together working with thy Iealousies,
Fancies too weake for boyes, too greene and idle
For Girles of Nine) O thinke what they have done,
And then run mad indeed: starke-mad: for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices for it.
That thou betrayed'st Polixenes, 'twas nothing,
(That did but shew thee, of a Foole, inconstant,
And damnable ingratefull:) Nor was't much
Thou would'st haue poyson'd good Camillo's Honor,
To have him kill a King: poore Trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The casting forth to Crowes, the Baby-daughter,
To be or none, or little; though a Devill
Would have shed water out of fire, ere don't:
Nor is't directly layd to thee, the death
Of the young Prince, whose honourable thoughts
(Thoughts high for one so tender) cleft the heart
That could conceive a grosse and foolish Sire
Blemish'd his gracious Dam: this is not, no,
Layd to thy answer: but the last: O Lords,
When I have said, cry woe: the Queene, the Queene,

The sweet'st, deer'st creature's dead: & vengeance for't
Not drop'd downe yet.

Lord. The higher powres forbid.

Paul. I say she's dead: Ile swear't. If word, nor oath
Prevaile not, go and see: if you can bring Tincture, or lustre in her lip, her eye
Heate outwardly, or breath within, Ile serve you
As I would do the Gods. But, O thou Tyrant,
Dost not repent these things, for they are heavier
Then all thy woes can stirre: therefore betake thee
To nothing but dispaire. A thousand knees,
Ten thousand yeares together, naked, fasting,
Vpon a barren Mountaine, and still Winter
In storme perpetuall, could not move the Gods
To looke that way thou wer't.

Leo. Go on, go on:

Thou canst not speake too much, I have deserv'd
All tongues to talke their bittrest.

Lord. Say no more,
How ere the businesse goes you have made fault
I'th boldnesse of your speech

Paul. I am sorry for't,
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent: Alas, I have shew'd too much
The rashnesse of a woman: he is toucht
To th' Noble heart. What's gone, and what's past helpe
Should be past griefe: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beseech you, rather
Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Now (good my Liege)
Sir, Royall Sir, forgive a foolish woman:
The love I bore your Queene (Lo, foole againe)
Ile speake of her no more, nor of your Children:
Ile not remember you of my owne Lord,
(Who is lost too:) take your patience to you,
And Ile say nothing,

Leo. Thou didst speake but well,
When most the truth: which I receive much better,
Then to be pittied of thee. Prethee bring me
To the dead bodies of my Queene, and Sonne,
One grave shall be for both: Vpon them shall
The causes of their death appeare (unto
Our shame perpetuall) once a day, Ile visit
The Chappell where they lye, and teares shed there Shall be my recreation. So long as Nature
Will beare up with this exercise, so long
I daily vow to use it. Come, and leade me
To these sorrowes.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Antigonus, a Mariner, Babe, Shippebeard, and Clowne.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath toucht upon
The Desarts of Bohemia.

Mar. I (my Lord) and feare
We have Landed in ill time: the skies looke grimly,
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience
The heavens with that we have in hand, are angry,
And frowne upon's.

Ant. Their sacred wil's be done: get a-board,
Looke to thy barke, Ile not be long before

I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your bestest hast, and go not Too-farre i'th Land: 'tis like to be lowd weather,
Besides this place is famous for the Creatures
Of prey, that keepe upon't,

Antig. Go thou away,

Ile follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart

To be so ridde o'th businesse.

Exit

Ant. Come, poore babe;

I have heard (but not beleeu'd) the Spirits o'th' dead
May walke againe: if such thing be, thy Mother
Appear'd to me last night: for ne're was dreame
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometime her head is on one side, some another,
I never saw a vessell of like sorrow

So fit'd, and so becomming: in pure white Robes
Like very sanctity she did approach

My Cabine where I lay: thrice bow'd before me,
And (gasping to begin some speech) her eyes

Became two spouts; the furie spent, anon
Did this breake from her. Good Antigonus,

Since Fate (against thy better disposition)
Hath made thy person for the Thrower-out

Of my poore babe, according to thine oath,
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,

There weepe, and leave it crying: and for the babe
Is counted lost for ever, Perdita

I prethee call't: For this ungentle businesse

Put on thee, by my Lord, thou ne're shalt see

Thy Wife Paulina more: and so, with shruckles

She melted into Ayre. Affrighted much,

I did in time collect my selfe, and thought

This was so, and no slumber: Dreames, are toyes,

Yet for this once, yea superstitiously,

I will be squar'd by this. I do beleve

Hermione hath suffer'd death, and that

Apollo would (this being indeed the issue

Of King Polexenus) it should heere be laide

(Either for life, or death) upon the earth

Of it's right Father. Blessome, speed thee well,

There lye, and there thy character: there these,

Which may if Fortune please, both breed thee (pretty)

And still rest thine. The storme beginnes, poore wretch,

That for thy mothers fault, art thus expos'd

To losse, and what may follow. Weepe I cannot,

But my heart bleedes: and most accurst am I

To be by oath enjoin'd to this. Farewell,

The day frownes more and more: thou'rt like to have

A lullabie too rough: I never saw

The heavens so dim, by day. A savage clamor?

Well may I get a-board: This is the Chace, barke.

I am gone for ever. Exit pursued by a Beare. Enter a Ship-

Shep. I would there were no age betweene ten and three and twentie, or that youth would sleepe out the rest:
for there is nothing (in the betweene) but getting wenches with childe, wronging the Auncientry, stealing, fighting, harke you now: would any but these boyde-braines of nineteene, and two and twentie hunt this weather? They have scarr'd away two of my best Sheepe, which I feare the Wolfe will sooner finde then the Majster; if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, brou-zing of luy. Good-lucke (and 't be the will) what have we heere? Mercy on's, a Barne? A very pretty barne; A boy, or a Childe I wonder? (A pretty one, a very prettie one) sure some Scape: Though I am not bookish, yet I can can reade Waiting-Gentlewoman in the scape: this has beene some staire-worke, some Trunke-worke, some behind-doore worke: they were warmer that got this, then the poore thing is here. Ile take it up for pitty, yet Ile tarry til my sonne come: he hallow'd but even now. Whoa-ho-hoa.

Enter Clowne.

Cl. Hillos, loa.

Shep. What? art so neere? If thou'lt see a thing to talke on, when thou art dead and rotten, come hither: what ayl'lt thou, man?

Cl. I have seene two such sights, by Sea and by Land: but I am not to say it is a Sea, for it is now the skye, betwixt the Firmament and it, you cannot thrust a bodkins point.

Shep. Why boy, how is it?

Cl. I would you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the shore, but that's not to the point: Oh, the most pittous cry of the poore soules, sometimes to see'em, and not to see'em; Now the Shippe boaring the Moone with her maine Mast, and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'ld thrust a Corke into a hog-head. And then for the Land-service, to see how the Beare tore out his shoulder bone, how he cride to me for helpe, and said his name was Antigonus a Nobleman: But to make an end of the Ship, to see how the Sea flap-dragon'd it: but first, how the poore soules roared, and the sea mock'd them: and how the poore Gentleman roared, and the Beare mock'd him, both roaring lowder then the sea, or weather.

Shep. Name of mercy; when was this boy?

Cl. Now, now: I have not wink'd since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the Beare halfe dia'd on the Gentleman: he's at it now.

Shep. Would I had beene by, to have help'd the old man.

Cl. I would you had beene by the ship side, to have help'd her; there your charity would have lack'd footing.

Shep. Heavy matters, heavy matters: but looke thee here boy. Now blesse thy selfe; thou met'st with things dying, I with things new borne. Here's a sight for thee: Looke thee, a bearing-cloath for a Squires child: looke thee heere, take up, take up (Boy) open't: so, let's see, it was told me I should be rich by the Fairies. This is some Changeling: open't: what's within boy?

Cl. You're a mad old man; If the sinnes of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold, all Gold.

Shep. This is Faicry Gold boy, and 'twill prove so: up with't, keepe it close: home, home, the next way. We are lucky (boy) and to be so still requires nothing but secrecy. Let my sheepe goe: Come (good boy) the next way home.

Cl. Goe you the next way with your Findings. Ile go see if the Beare be gone from the Gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry: if there be any of him left, Ile bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed: if thou mayest diserne by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to th' sight of him.

Cl. Marry will I: and you shall helpe to put him i'th ground.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy, and we'll doe good deeds on't.

Exeunt

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Tim. I that please some, try all: both joy and terror Of good, and bad: that makes, and unfolds error. Now take upon me (in the name of Time) To use my wings: Impute it not a crime To me, or my swift passage, that I slide Ore sixteene yeeres, and leave the growth untride Of that wide gap, since it is in my powre To orethrow Law, and in one seife-borne houre To plant, and orewhelme Custom. Let me passe The same I am, ere ancient't Order was, Or what is now receiv'd. I witnesse to The times that brought them in, so shall I doe To th' freshest things now reigning, and make stale The glistering of this present, as my Tale Now seemes to it: your patience this allowing, I turne my glasse, and give my Scene such growing As you had slept betweene: Leontes leaving Th' effects of his fond jealousies, so greiving That he shuts up himselfe, Imagine me (Gentle Spectators) that I now may be In faire Bohemia, and remember well, I mention here a sonne o' th' Kings, which Florizell I now name to you: and with speed so pace To speake of Perdita, now growne in grace Equall with wond'ring. What of her issues I list not prophesie: but let Times newes (daughter Be knowne when 'tis brought forth. A shepheards And what to her adheres, which followes after, Is th' argument of Time: of this allow, If ever you have spent time worse, ere now: If never, yet that Time himselfe doth say, He wishes earenestly, you never may.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Polixenes, and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee (good Camillo) be no more importunate: 'tis a sicknesse denying thee any thing: a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fiftene yeeres since I saw my Countrey: though I have (for the most part) beene ayred abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent King (my Master) hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorowes I might be some allay (or I oreweene to thinke so) which is another spurre to my departure.

Pol. As thou lov'st me (Camillo) wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine owne goodnesse hath made: better not to have had thee, then thus to want thee, thou having made me Businesse, (which none (without thee) can sufficiently manage) must either stay to execute them thy selfe, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done: which if I have not enough considered (as too much I cannot) to be more thankefull to thee, shall be my study, and my profit therein, the heaping friendshippes. Of that fatal Countrey Sicilia, prethee speake no more, whose very naming, punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent (as thou calst him) and reconciled King my brother, whose losse of his most precious Queene and Children, are even now to bee a-fresh lamented. Say to me, when saw'st thou the Prince Florizell my son? Kings are no lesse unhappy, their issue not being gracious, then they are in loosing them, when they have approved their Vertues.

Cam. Sir, it is three dayes since I saw the Prince: what his happier affayres may be, are to me unknowne: but I have (mistakingly) noted, he is of late much retyred from Court, and is lesse frequent to his Princely exercises then formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much (Camillo) and with some care, so farre, that I have eyes under my service, which looke upon his removednesse: from whom I have this Intelligence, that he is seldome from the house of a most homely shepheard: a man (they say) that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbors, is growne into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard (Sir) of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more, then can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my Intelligence: but (I feare) the Angle that pluckes our sonne thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place, where we will (not appearing what we are) have some question with the shepheard; from whose simplicity, I thinke it not uneasie to get the cause of my sonnes resort thither. Prethee be my present partner in this busines, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo, we must disguise our selves. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Autolycus singing.

*When Daffadils begin to peere,
With heigh the Doxy over the dale,
Why then comes in the sweet o' the yeere.
For the red blood raignes in the winters pale.*

*The white sheete bleaching on the hedge,
With hey the sweet birds, O how they sing:
Doth set my pugging tooth an edge,
For a quart of Ale is a dish for a King.*

*The Larks, that tirra-Lyrachants,
With heigh, with heigh the Thrush and the Jay:
Are Summer songs for me and my Aunts
While we lye tumbling in the hay.*

I have serv'd Prince Florizell, and in my time wore three pile, but now I am out of service.

*But shall I goe mourne for that (my deere)
The pale Moone shines by night:
And when I wander here, and there
I then doe most goe right.
If Tinkers may have leave to live,
and beare the Sow-skin Bowger,
Then my account I well may give,
and in the Stockes avouch-it.*

My Trafficke is sheets: when the Kite builds, looke to lesser Linnen. My Father nam'd me Autolycus, who being (as I am) lytter'd under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles: With Dye and drab, I purchas'd Caparison, and my Revennew is the silly Cheate. Gallowes, and Knocke, are too-powerfull on the Highway. Beating and hanging are terrors to me: For the life to come, I sleepe out the thought of it. A prize, a prize.

Enter Clowne.

Cl. Let me see, every Leaven-weather toddes, every told yeeldes pound and odde shilling: fiftene hundred shorne, what comes the wooll too?

Ant. If the sprindge hold, the Cocke's mine.

Cl. I cannot do't without Compters. Let me see, what am I to buy for our Sheepe-shearing-Feast? Three pound of Sugar, five pound of Currence, Rice: What will this sister of mine do with Rice? But my father hath made her Mistris of the Feast, and she layes it on. Shee hath made-me foure and twenty Note-gayes for the shearers (three-man song-men, all, and very good ones) but they are most of them Meanes and Balles; but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings Psalmes to horn-pipes. I must have Saffron to colour the Warden Pies, Mace: Dates, none: that's out of my note: Nutmegges, seven; a Race or two of Ginger, but that I may begge: Foure pound of Prewyns, and as many of Reysons o'th Sunne.

Ant. Oh, that ever I was borne.

Cl. I'th' name of me.

Ant. Oh helpe me, helpe mee: plucke but off these ragges: and then, death, death.

Cl. Alacke poore soule, thou hast need of more raggs to lay on thee, rather then have these off.

Ant. Oh sir, the loathsomnesse of them offends mee, more then the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones and millions.

Cl. Alas poore man, a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Ant. I am rob'd sir, and beaten: my money, and apparel tane from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Cl. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man?

Ant. A footman (sweet sir) a footman.

Cl. Indeed, he should be a footman, by the garments he has left with thee: if this be a horsemans Coate, it hath seene very hot service. Lend me thy hand, Ile helpe thee. Come lend me thy hand.

Ant. Oh good sir, tenderly, oh.

Cl. Alas poore soule.

Ant. Oh good sir, softly, good sir: I feare (sir) my shoulder-blade is out.

Cl. How now? Canst stand?

Ant. Softly, deere sir: good sir, softly: you ha done me a charitable office.

Cl. Doe'st lacke any mony? I have a little mony for thee.

Ant. No, good sweet sir: no, I beseech you sir: I have a Kinsman not past three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going: I shall there have money, or any thing I want: Offer me no money I pray you, that killes my heart.

Cl. What manner of Fellow was he that robb'd you?

Ant. A fellow (Sir) that I have knowne to goe about with Troll-my-dames: I knew him him once a servant of the Prince: I cannot tell good sir, for which of his Vertues it was, but he was certainly Whipt out of the Court.

Cl.

Clo. His vices you would say : there's no vertue whipt out of the Court : they cherish it to make it stay there ; and yet it will no more but abide.

Ant. Vices I would say (Sir.) I know this man well, he hath beene since an Ape-bearer, then a Proceffe-server (a Bayliffe) then he compass a Motion of the Prodigall sonne, and married a Tinkers wife, within a Mile where my Land and living lyes ; and (having flowne over many knavish professions) he settled only in Rogue : some call him Antoliscu.

Clo. Out upon him : Prig, for my life Prig : he haunts Wakes, Fairres, and Bearc-baitings

Ant. Very true sir : he sir he : that's the Rogue that put me into this apparrell.

Clo. Not a more cowardly Rogue in all Bohemia ; If you had but look'd bigge, and spit at him, hee'd have runne.

Ant. I must confesse to you (sir) I am no fighter : I am false of heart that way, and that he knew I warrant him.

Clo. How doe you now ?

Ant. Sweet Sir, much better then I was : I can stand, and walke : I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my Kinsmans.

Clo. Shail I bring thee on the way ?

Ant. No, good fac'd sir, no sweet sir.

Clo. Then farewell, I must goe to buy Spices for our sheepe-shearing. Exit.

Ant. Prosper you sweet sir. Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your Spice : Ile be with you at your sheepe-shearing too : If I make not this Cheat bring out another, and the sheerers prove sheepe, let me be unrold, and my name put in the booke of Vertue.

Song. Jog-on, Jog-on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the stile-a.
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tyres in a Mile-a.

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Florizell, Perdita, Shepherd, Clowne, Polixenes, Camillo, Mopsa, Dorcas, Servants, Antoliscu.

Flo. These your ununsall weeds, to each part of you Do's give a life : no Shepherdesse, but Flora Peering in Aprils front. This your sheepe-shearing, Is as a merry meeting of the petty gods, And you the Queene on't.

Per. Sir : my gracious Lord, To chide at your extreames, it not becomes me : (Oh pardon, that I name them :) your high selfe The gracious marke o'th Land, you have obscur'd With a Swaines wearing : and me (poore lowly Maide) Most goddesse-like prank'd up : But that our Feasts In every Messie, have folly ; and the Feeders Digest it with a Custome, I should blush To see you so attyr'd : sworne I thinke, To shew my selfe a glasse.

Flo. I blasse the time When my good Falcon, made her flight a-crosse Thy fathers ground.

Per. Now love affoord you cause : To me the difference forges dread (your Greatnesse Hath not beene us'd to feare :) even now I tremble To thinke your Father, by some accident Should passe this way, as you did : Oh the Fates, How would he looke, to see his worke, so noble, Vildely bound up ? What would he say ? Or how Should I (in these my borrowed Flaunts) behold The Iternnesse of his presence ?

Flo. Apprehend

Nothing but jollity : the Goddess themselves (Humbling their Deities to love) have taken The shapes of Beasts upon them. Jupiter, Became a Bull, and bellow'd : the Greene Neptune A Ram, and bleated : and the Fire-roab'd God Golden Apollo, a poore humble Swaine, As I seeme now : Their transformations, Were never for a peece of beauty, rarer, Nor in a way so chaste : since my desires Runne not before mine honor : nor my Lusts Burne hotter then my Faith.

Perd. O but deere sir,

Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis Oppos'd (as it must be) by th'power of the King : One of these two must be necessities, Which then will speake, that you must change this purpose, Or I my life.

Flo. Thou deere Perdita,

With these fogg'd thoughts, I prethee darken not The Mirth o'th Feast : Or Ile be thine (my Faire) Or not my Fathers. For I cannot be Mine owne, nor any thing to any, if I be not thine. To this I am most constant, Though destiny say no. Be merry (Gentle) Strangle such thoughts as these, with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are comming : Lift up your countenance, as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptiall, which We two have sworne shall come.

Perd. O Lady Fortune, Stand you auspicious.

Enter All.

Flo. See, your Guests approach, Adresse your selfe to entertaine them sprightly, And let's be red with mirth.

Shep. Fye (daughter) when my old wife liv'd : upon This day, she was both Pantler, Butler, Cooke, Both Dame and Servant : Welcom'd all : serv'd all, Would sing her song, and dance her turne : now heere At upper end o'th Table ; now, i'th middle : On his shoulder, and his : her face o' fire With labour, and the thing she tooke to quench it She would to each one sip. You are retyred, As if you were a feasted one : and not The Hostesse of the meeting : Pray you bid These unknowne friends to's welcome, for it is A way to make us better Friends, more knowne. Come, quench your blushes, and present your selfe That which you are, Mistris o'th Feast. Come on, And bid us welcome to your sheepe-shearing, As your good flocke shall prosper.

Perd. Sir, welcome :

It is my Fathers will, I should take on me The Hostesseship o'th day, your're welcome sir Give me those Flowres there (Dorcas.) Reverend Sirs, For you, there's Rosemary, and Rue, these keepe Seeming, and favour all the Winter long : Grace, and Remembrance be to you both, And welcome to our Shearing.

Bb 2

Pol.

Pol. Shepherdesse,
(A faire one are you :) well you fit our ages
With flowres of Winter.

Perd. Sir, the yeare growing ancient,
Not yet on summers death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter, the fayrest flowres o'th season
Are our Carnations, and streak'd Gilly-vors,
(Which some call Natures bastards) of that kind
Our rusticke Garden's barren, and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore (gentle Maiden)
Doe you neglect them.

Perd. For I have heard it said,
There is an Art, which in their pidenesse shares
With great creating-Nature.

Pol. Say there be:
Yet Nature is made better by no meane,
But Nature makes that Meane : so over that Art,
(Which you say addes to Nature) is an Art
That Nature makes : you see (sweet Maid) we marry
A gentler Sien, to the wildest Stocke;
And make conceive a barke of safer kind
By bud of Nobler race. This is an Art
Which do's mend Nature : change it rather, but
The Art it selfe, is Nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your Garden rich in Gilly-vors,
And doe not call them bastards.

Per. Ile not put
The Dible in earth, to set one slip of them :
No more then were I painted, I would wish
This youth should say 'twere well : and onely therefore Desire to breed by me. Here's flowres for you :
Hot Lavender, Mints, Savory, Mariorum,
The Mary-gold, that goes to bed with 'Sun,
And with him rises, weeping : These are flowres
Of middle summer, and I thinke they are given
To men of middle age. Y'are very welcome.

Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your flocke,
And onely live by gazing.

Per. Our alas :
You'd be so leane, that blasts of January (Friend,
Would blow you through and through. Now (my first
I would I had some Flowres o'th Spring, that might Become your time of day : and yours, and yours,
That weare upon your Virgin-branches yet
Your Maiden-heads growing : O Proserpina,
For the Flowers now, that (frighted) thou let'st fall
From Dises Waggon : Daffadils,
That come before the Swallow dares, and take
The windes of March with beauty : Violets (dian,
But sweeter then the lids of Juno's eyes,
Or Cytherea's breath) pale Prime-roles,
That dye unmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phœbus in his strength (a Malady Most incident to Maids :) bold Oxlips, and
The Crowne Imperiall : Lillies of all kinds,
(The flowre-de-Luce being one.) O, these I lacke,
To make you Garlands of) and my sweet friend,
To strew him o're, and ore.

Flo. What? like a Coarse?

Per. No, like a banke, for Love to lye, and play on :
Not like a Coarse : or if : not to be buried,
But quicke, and in mine armes. Come, take your flowers,
Me thinks I play as I have seene them doe
In Whitson-Pastorals : Sure this Robe of mine

Do's change my disposition :

Flo. What you doe,
Still betters what is done. When you speake (sweet)
I'd have you doe it ever : When you sing,
I'd have you buy, and sell so : so give Almes,
Pray so : and for the ord'ring your Affayres,
To sing them too. When you doe dance, I wish you
A wave o'th Sea, that you might ever doe
Nothing but that : move still, still so :
And owne no other Function. Each your doing,
(So singular, in each particular)
Crownes what you are doing, in the present deeds,
That all your Actes, are Queenes.

Perd. O Doricles,
Your praises are too large : but that your youth
And the true blood which peepes fairely through't,
Doe plainly give you out an unstain'd Shepherd
With wisdome, I might feare (my Doricles)
You woo'd me the false way.

Flo. I thinke you have
As little skill to feare, as I have purpose
To put you to't. But come, our dance I pray,
Your hand (my Perdita :) so Turtles paire
That never meane to part.

Perd. Ile sweare for 'em,

Pol. This is the prettiest Low-borne Lasse, that ever
Ran on the greene-sord : Nothing she do's, or seemes
But smackes of something greater then her selfe,
Too Noble for this place.

Cam. He tels her something
That makes her blood looke on't : Good sooth she is The Queene of Curds and Creame.

Clo. Come on : strike up.

Dos. Mopsa must be your Mistris : marry Garlicke to mend her kissing with.

Mop. Now in good time,

Clo. Not a word, a word, we stand upon our manners,
Come, strike up.

Heere a Dance of Shepheards and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray good Shepheard, what faire Swaine is this,
Which dances with your daughter ?

Shep. They call him Doricles, and boasts himselfe
To have a worthy Feeding ; but I have it
Vpon his owne report, and I beleve it :
He lookes like sooth : he sayes he loves my daughter,
I thinke so too ; for never gaz'd the Moone
Vpon the water, as he'll stand and reade
As 'twere my daughters eyes : and to be plaine,
I thinke there is not halfe a kisse to choose
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances featly.

Shep. So she do's any thing, though I report it
That should be silent : if yong Doricles
Doe light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreames of.

Enter Servant.

Ser. O Master : if you did but heare the Pedler at the doore, you would never dance againe after : a Tabor and Pipe : no, the Bag-pipe could not move you : he sings severall Tunes, faster then you'll tell money : he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all mens cares grew to his Tunes.

Clo. He could never come better : he shall come in :
I love a ballad but even too well, if it be dolefull matter merrily set downe : or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sung lamentably.

Ser.

Ser. He hath songs for man, or woman, of all sizes : No Milliner can so fit his customers with Gloues : he has the prettiest Love songs for Maids, so without bawdry (which is strange) with such delicate burthens of Dildo's and Fadings : Iump-her, and thump-her ; and where some stretch-mouth'd Rascall, would (as it were) meane mischeefe, and breake a foule gap into the Matter, he makes the maid to answer, Whoope, doe me no harme good man : put's him off, flights him, with Whoop, doe me no harme good man.

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Beleeve me, thou talkest of an admirable conceited fellow, has he any unbraided Warres :

Ser. He hath Ribbons of all the colours i'th Raine-bow, Points, more then all the Lawyers in Bohemia, can learnedly handle, though they come to him by th' grosse : Inckles, Caddysies, Cambricks, Lawnes : why he sings em over, as they were Gods, or Goddesses : you would thinke a Smocke were a she-Angell, he so chants to the sleeve-hand, and the worke about the square on't.

Clo. Prethee bring him in, and let him approach singing.

Perd. Forewarne him, that he vse no scurrilous words in's tunes.

Clo. You have of these Pedlers, that have more in them, then you'd thinke (Sister)

Per. I good brother, or goe about to thinke.

Enter Antoliscus singing.

*Lawne as white as driven Snow,
Cypresse blacke as ere was Crow,
Gloves as sweet as Damasky Roses,
Maskes for faces, and for noses :
Bugle-bracelet, Necke-lace Amber.
Perfume for a Ladies Chamber :
Golden Quaiſes, and Stomachers
For my Lads, to give their deers :
Pins, and poking-sticks of Steele.
What Maids lacke from head to heele :*

*Come buy of me, come : come buy, come buy.
Buy Lads, or else your Lasses cry : Come buy.*

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me, but being enthrall'd as I am, it will also be the bondage of certaine Ribbons and Gloues.

Mop. I was promis'd them against the Feast, but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promis'd you more then that, or there be lyars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promis'd you : 'May be he has paid you more, which will shame you to give him againe.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids ? Will they weare their plackets, where they should bear their faces ? Is there not milking-time ? When you are going to bed ? Or kill-hole ? To whistle of these secrets, but you must be tittle-tatling before all our guests ? 'Tis well they are whispring : clamor your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done ; Come you promis'd me a tawdry-lace, and a paire of sweet Gloues.

Clo. Have I not told thee how I was cozen'd by the way, and lost all my money ?

Ant. And indeed Sir, there are Cozeners abroad, therefore it behooves men to be wary.

Clo. Feare not thou man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Ant. I hope so sir, for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast heere ? Ballads ?

Mop. Pray now buy some : I love a ballet in print, a life, for then we are sure they are true.

Ant. Here's one, to a very dolefull tune, how a Vfurers wife was brought to bed of twenty money bagges at a burthen, and how she long'd to cate Adders heads, and Toads carbonado'd.

Mop. Is it true, thinke you ?

Ant. Very true, and but a moneth old.

Dor. Blesse me from marrying a Vsurer.

Ant. Here's the Midwives name to't : one Mistris Tale-Porter, and five or six honest Wives, that were present. Why should I carry lyes abroad ?

Mop. Pray you now buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by : and let's first see mee Ballads : We'll buy the other things anon.

Ant. Here's another ballad of a Fish, that appeared upon the coast, on wensday the fourscore of Aprill, forty thousand fadom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maides : it was thought she was a Woman, and was turn'd into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that lov'd her : The Ballad is very pittifull, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, thinke you.

Ant. Five Iustices hands at it : and witnesses more then my packe will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too ; another.

Ant. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let's have some merry ones.

Ant. Why this is a passing merry one, and goes to the tune of two maids wooing a man : there's scarce a Maide westward but she sings it : 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it : if thou'lt beare a part, thou shalt heare, 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't, a month agoe.

Ant. I can beare my part, you must know 'tis my occupation : Have at it with you :

Song Get you hence, for I must goe

Aut. Where it fits not you to know.

Dor. Whether ?

Mop. O whether ?

Dor. Whether ?

Mop. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.

Dor. Me too . Let me goe thether :

Mop. Or thou goest to th' Grange, or Mill,

Dor. If to either thou dost ill,

Aut. Neither.

Dor. What neither ?

Aut. Neither :

Dor. Thou hast sworne my Love to be,

Mop. Thou hast sworne it more to me.

Then whether goest ? Say whether ?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by our selves : My father, and the Gent. are in sad talke, and we'll not trouble them : Come bring away thy packe after me, Wenches Ile buy for you both : Pedler let's have the first choyce ; fellow me girles. Ant. And you shall pay well for 'em.

Song. Will you buy any Tape, or Lace for your Caps ?

My dainty Ducke, my deere-a ?

*Any Silke, any Thred, any Toyes for your head
Of the new's't, and fash's't, fash's't weare-a.*

Come to the Pedler, Money's a mealer,

That doth utter all mens ware-a.

Exit.

Ser. Master, there is three Carters, three Shepherds, three Neat-herds, three Swine-herds that have made themselves all men of haire, they call themselves Saltiers, and they have a Dance, which the Wenches say is a galley-maufray of Gambols, because they are not in't: but they themselves are o'th'mind (if it be not too rough for some, that know little but bowling) it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away: We'll none on't; heere has been too much homely foolery already. I know (Sir) we weary you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: pray let's see these foure-threes of Heardsmen.

Ser. One three of them, by their owne report (Sir,) hath danc'd before the King: and not the worst of the three, but jumps twelve foote and a halfe by th'squire.

Shep. Leave your prating, since these good men are pleas'd, let them come in: but quickly now.

Ser. Why, they stay at doore Sir.

Heere a Dance of twelve Satires.

Pol. O Father, you'll know more of that heereafter: Is it not too farre gone? 'Tis time to part them, He's simple, and tels much. How now (faire shepheard) Your heart is full of something, that do's take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was yong, And handed love, as you doe; I was wont To load my Shee with knackes: I would have ranfackt The Pedlers ill-en Treasury, and have pow'r'd it To her acceptance: you have let him goe, And nothing marted with him. If your Lasle Interpretation should abuse, and call this Your lacke of love, or bounty, you were straited For a reply at least, if you make a care Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old Sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are: The gifts she lookes from me, are packt and lockt Vp in my heart, which I have given already, But not deliver'd. O heare me breath my life Before this ancient Sir, who (it should seeme) Hath sometime lov'd: I take thy hand, this hand, As soft as Doves downe, and as white as it, Or Ethiopians tooth, or the fan'd snow, That's bolted by th'Northerne blast, twice ore.

Pol. What followes this? How prettily th'yong Swaine seemes to wash The hand, was faire before? I have put you out, But to your protestation: Let me heare What you professe.

Flo. Doe, and be witnesse too't.

Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And be, and more Than he, and men: the earth, the heavens, and all; That were I crown'd the most Imperiall Monarch Thereof most worthy: were I the fayrest youth That ever made eye swerve, had force and knowledge More than was ever mans, I would not prize them Without her Love; for her, employ them all, Commend them, and condemne them to her service, Or to their owne perdition.

Pol. Fairely offer'd.

Cam. This shewes a sound affection.

She. But my daughter, Say you the like to him.

Per. I cannot speake So well, (nothing so well) no, nor meane better By th'patterne of mine owne thoughts, I cut out The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargain; And friends unknowne, you shall beare witnesse to't: I give my daughter to him, and will make Her Portion, equall his.

Flo. O, that must be I'th Vertue of your daughter: One being dead, I shall have more then you can dreame of yet, Enough then for your wonder: but come-on: Contract us 'fore these Witnesse.

Shep. Come, your hand: And daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft Swaine a-while: beseech you, Have you a Father?

Flo. I have: but what of him?

Pol. Knowes he of this?

Flo. He neither do's, nor shall.

Pol. Me-thinkes a Father, Is at the Nuptiall of his sonne, a guest That best becomes the Table: Pray you once more Is not your Father growne incapable Of reasonable affaires? Is he not stupid With Age, and atring Rheumes? Can he speake? heare? Know man, from man? Dispute his owne estate? Lyes he not bed-rid? And againe, do's nothing But what he did, being childish?

Flo. No good Sir: He has his health, and ampler strength indeed Then most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard, You offer him (if this be so) a wrong Something unfilliall: Reason my sonne Should choose himselfe a wite, but as good reason The Father (all whose joy is nothing else But faire posterity) should hold some counsaile In such a businesse.

Flo. I yeeld all this; But for some other reasons (my grave Sir) Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint My father of this businesse.

Pol. Let him know't.

Flo. He shall not.

Pol. Prethee let him.

Flo. No, he must not.

Shep. Let him (my sonne) he shall not need to greeve At knowing of thy choyce.

Flo. Come, come, he must not: Marke our Contract.

Pol. Marke your divorce (yong Sir) Whom sonne I dare not call: Thou art too base To be acknowledg'd. Thou a Scepters heire, That thus affects a sheepe-hooke? Thou old Traitor, I am sorry, that by hanging thee, I can But shorten thy life one weeke. And thou, fresh peece Of excellent Witchcraft, who of force must know The royall Foole thou coap't with.

Shep. Oh my heart.

Pol. He have thy beauty scratcht with briers and made More homely then thy state. For thee (fond boy) If I may ever know thou dost but sigh, That thou no more shalt never see this knacke (as never I meane thou shalt) we'll barre thee from succession, Not hold thee of our blood, no nor our Kin, Farre than Dencalion off: (marke thou my words) Follow us to the Court. Thou Churle, for this time (Though full of our displeasure) yet we free thee From the dead blow of it: And you Enchantment,

Worthy enough a Heardsman : yea him too,
That makes himselfe (but for our Honor therein)
Vnworthy thee. If ever henceforth, thou
Thesē rural Latches, to his entrance open,
Or hope his body more, with thy embraces,
I will devise a death, as cruell for thee
As thou art tender to't.

Perd. Even heere undone :

I was not much a-fear'd : for once, or twice
I was about to speake, and tell him plainly,
The selfe-same Sun, that shines upon his Court,
Hides not his visage from our Cottage, but Lookes on alike. Wilt please you (Sir) be gon?
I told you what would come of this : Beseech you
Of your owne state take care : This dreame of mine
Being now awake, Ile Queene it no inch farther,
But milke my Ewes, and weepe.

Cam. Why how now Father,
Speake ere thou dyest.

Sh p. I cannot speake, nor thinke,
Nor dare to know, that which I know : O Sir,
You have undone a man of fourescore three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet : yea,
To dye upon the bed my father dy'de,
To lye close hy his honest bones ; but now
Some Hangman must put on my shrowd, and lay me
Where no Priest shovels-in dust. Oh cursed wretch,
That knew't this was the Prince, and wouldst adventure
To mingle faith with him. Vndone, undone :
If I might dye within this houre, I have liv'd
To dye when I desire.

Flo. Why looke you so upon me?
I am but sorry, not affear'd : delaid,
But nothing altdred : What I was, I am :
More straining on, for plucking backe ; not following
My leasunwillingly.

Cam. Gracious my Lord,
You know your Fathers temper : at this time
He will allow no speech : (which I doe ghesse
You doe not purpose to him :) and as hardly
Will he endure your sight, as yet I feare ;
Then till the fury of his Highnesse settle
Come not before him.

Flo. I not purpose it :
I thinke Camillo.

Cam. Even he, my Lord.

Per. How often have I told you 'twould be thus?
How often said, my dignity would last
But till 'twere knowne ?

Flo. It cannot faile, but by
The violation of my faith, and then
Let Nature crush the sides o'th earth together,
And marre the seeds within. Lift up thy lookes :
From my succession wipe me (Father) I
Am heyre to my affection.

Cam. Be advis'd.

Flo. I am : and by my fancy, if my Reason
Will thereto be obedient : I have reason :
If not, my fences better (pleas'd with madnesse)
Doe bid it welcome,

Cam. This is desperate (sir)

Flo. So call it : but it do's fulfill my vow :
It needs must thinke it honesty. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pompe that may Be thereat gleaned : for all that the Sun sees, or
The close earth wombes, or the profound seas hide

Exit.

In unknowne fadomes, will I breake my oath
To this my faire below'd : Therefore, I pray you,
As you have euer bin my Fathers friend,
When he shall misse me, as (in faith I meane not
To see him any more) cast your good counsailes
Vpon his passion : Let my selfe, and Fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know,
And so deliver, I am put to Sea
With her, whom here I cannot hold on shore :
And most opportune to her need, I have
A Vessell rides fast by, but not prepar'd
For this designe. What course I meane to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concerne me the reporting.

Cam. O my Lord,
I would your spirit were easier for aduice,
Or stronger for your need.

Flo. Hearke Perdita,
Ile heare you by and by.

Cam. He's irremoveable,
Resolv'd for flight : Now were I happy, if
His going, I could frame to serue my turne.
Save him from danger, doe him love and honour,
Purchase the sight againe of deere Sicilia,
And that unhappy King, my Master, whom
I so much thirst to see.

Flo. Now good Camillo,
I am so fraught with curious businesse, that
I leave out ceremony.

Cam. Sir, I thinke
You have heard of my poore services, i'th love
That I have borne your Father ?

Flo. Very nobly
Have you deserv'd : It is my Fathers Musicke
To speake your deeds : not little of his care
To have them recompenc'd, as thought on.

Cam. Well (my Lord)
If you may please to thinke I love the King,
And through him, what's neerest to him, which is
Your gracious selfe ; embrace but my direction,
If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration : On mine honor,
Ile point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your Highnesse, where you may Enjoy your Mistris ; from the whom, I see
There's no disunction to be made, but by
(As heavens forefend) your ruine : Marry her,
And with my best endeavours, in your absence,
Your discontenting Father, strive to qualifie
And bring him up to liking.

Flo. How Camillo
May this (almost a miracle) be done?
That I may call thee something more than man,
And after that trust to thee.

Cam. Have you thought on
A place whereto you'll goe ?

Flo. Not any yet :
But as th' unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly doe, so we professe
Our selves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every winde that blowes.

Cam. Then list to me :
This followes, if you will not change your purpose
But undergoe this flight ; make for Sicilia,
And there present your selfe, and your faire Princeffe,
(For so I see she must be) fore Leantes ;

She

She shall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your Bed. Me thinks I see
Leontes opening his free Armes, and weeping
His Welcomes forth : asks thee there Sonne forgiveness,
As 'twere i'th' Fathers person : kisses the hands
Of your fresh Princeesse ; ore and ore divides him,
'Twixt his unkindnesse, and his kindnesse : th'one
He chides to Hell, and bids the other grow
Faster then Thought, or Time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my Visitation, shall I
Hold up before him ?

Cam. Sent by the King your father
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you (as from your Father) shall deliver,
Things knowne betwixt us three, Ile write you downe,
The which shall point you forth at every sitting
What you must say, that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your fathers Bosome there,
And speake his very Heart.

Flo. I am bound to you :
There is some sappe in this.

Cam. A Course more promising,
Then a wild dedication of your selves
To unpath'd Waters, undream'd Shores ; most certaine,
To Miseries enough : no hope to helpe you,
But as you shake off one, to take another :
Nothing so certaine, as your Anchors, who
Doe their best office, if they can but stay you,
Where you'll be loth to be : besides you know,
Prosperitie's the very bond of Love,
Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together,
Affliction alters.

Per. One of these is true :
I thinke Affliction may subdue the Cheeke,
But not take-in the Mind,

Cam. Yea ? say you so ?
There shall not, at your fathers house, these seven yeeres
Be borne another such,

Flo. My good Camillo,
She's as forward, of her Breeding, as
She is i'th' reare 'our Birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pittie
She lackes instructions, for she seemes a Mistresse
To most that teach.

Per. Your pardon Sir, for this.
Ile blush you Thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita.
But O, the Thornes we stand upon : (Camillo)
Preserver of my Father, now of me,
The Medicine of our House : how shall we doe ?
We are not furnish'd like Bohemia's Sonne,
Nor shall appeare in Sicily.

Cam. My Lord,
Feare none of this : I thinke you know my fortunes
Doe all lye there : it shall be so my care,
To have you royally appointed, as if
The Scene yov play, were mine. For instance Sir,
That you may know you shall not want : one word.

Enter Antoliscus.

Aut. Ha ha, what a foole Honesty is ? and Trust (his sworne brother) a very simple Gentleman. I have sold all my Tromperie : not a counterfeite Stone, not a Ribbon, Glasse, Pomander, Browch, Table-booke, Ballad, Knife,
Tape, Glove, Shooe-tye, Bracelet, Horne-Ring, to keepe

my Packe from fasting : they throng who should buy first, as if my Trinkets had bene hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer : by which meanes, I saw whose Purse was best in Picture ; and what I saw, to my good use, I remembered. My Clowne (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grew so in love with the Wenches Song, that he would not stirre his Pettytoes till he had both Tune and Words, which so drew the rest of the Heard to me, that all their other Sences sticke in Eares : you might have pinch'd a Placket, it was senselesse, 'twas nothing to guerd a Cod-piece of a Purse : I would have fill'd Keyes of that hung in Chaynes :
no hearing, no feeling, but my Sirs Song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that in this time of Lethargy, I pick'd and cut most of their Festivall Purfes : And had not the old-man come in with a Whoo-bub against his Daughter, and the Kings Sonne, and scar'd my Chowghes from the Chaffe, I had not left a Purse alive in the whole Army.

Cam. Nay, but my Letters by this meanes being there
So soone as you arrive, shall cleare that doubt.

Flo. And those that you'll procure from King Leontes ?

Cam. Shall satisfie your Father.

Perd. Happy be you :

All that you speake, shewes faire.

Cam. Who have we here ?

We'll make an Instrument of this : omit
Nothing may give us ayde.

Aut. If they have over-heard me now : why hanging.

Cam. How now (good Fellow)

Why shak'st thou so ? Feare not (man)
Here's no harme intended to thee,

Aut. I am a poore fellow, Sir.

Cam. Why, be so still : here's no body will steale that from thee : yet for the out-side of thy poverty, we must make an exchange ; therefore dis-case thee instantly (thou must thinke there's a necessity in't) and change garments with this Gentleman : I thought the penny-worth (on his side) the worst, yet hold thee, there's some boot.

Aut. I am a poore Fellow, Sir : (I know ye well enough.)

Cam. Nay prethee dispatch : the Gentleman is halfe fled already.

Aut. Are you in earnest, Sir ? (I smell the tricke on't.)

Flo. Dispatch, I prethee.

Aut. Indeed I have had earnest, but I cannot with conscience take it.

Cam. Vnbuckle, unbuckle.

Fortunate Mistresse (let my prophecy
Come home to ye :) you must retire your selfe
Into some Covert ; take your sweet-hearts Hat
And plucke it ore your Browes, muffle your face,
Disf mantle you, and (as you can) disliken
The truth of your owne seeming, that you may
(For I doe feare eyes over) to Ship-board
Get undescry'd.

Per. I see the Play so lyes,
That I must beare a part.

Cam. No remedy :

Have you done these ?

Flo. Should I now meet my Father,
He would not call me Sonne.

Cam. Nay, you shall have no Hat :

Come Lady, come : Farewell (my friend.)

Aut. Adieu, Sir.

Flo. O Perdita : what have we twaine forgot ?

'Pray

*Pray you a word.

Cam. What I doe next, shall be to tell the King Of this escape, and whither they are bound ; Wherein, my hope is, I shall so prevaile, To force him after : in whose company I shall re-view Sicilia ; for whose sight, I have a Womans Longing.

Flo. Fortune speed us :

Thus we set on (Camillo) to th' Sea-side.

Cam. The swifter speed, the better.

Exit.

Aut. I understand the businesse, I heare it : to have an open eare, a quicke eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a Cut-purse ; a good Nose is requisite also, to smell out worke for th' other Sences. I see this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been, without boot ? What a boot is here, with this exchange ; Sure the gods doe this yeere connive at us, and we may doe any thing extempore. The Prince himselfe is about a peece of iniquity (stealing away from his Father, with his Clog at his heeles :) if I thought it were a peece of honesty to acquaint the King withall, I would not do't : I hold it the more knavery to conceale it ; and therein am I constant to my Profession.

Enter Clowne, and Shepherd.

Aside, aside, here is more matter for a hot braine : Every Lanes end, every Shop, Church, Session, Hanging, yeelds a carefull man worke.

Clow. See, see : what a man you are now ? there is no other way, but to tell the King she's a Changeling, and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but heare me.

Clow. Nay ; but heare me :

Shep. Goe to then.

Clow. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood ha's not offended the King, and so your flesh and blood is not to be punish'd by him. Shew those things you found about her (those secret things, all but what she ha's with her :) This being done, let the Law goe whistle : I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the King all, every word, yea, and his Sonnes prancks too ; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his Father, nor to me, to goe about to make me the Kings Brother in Law.

Clow. Indeed Brother in Law was the farthest off you could have beene to him, and then your Blood had beene the decrer, by I know how much an ounce.

Aut. Very wisely (Puppies.)

Shep. Well : let us to the King : there is that in this Farthell, will make him scratch his Beard.

Aut. I know not what impediment this Complaint may be to the flight of my Matter.

Clow. Pray heartily he beat Pallace.

Aut. Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance : Let me pocket up my Pedlers excrement. How now (Rustiques) whither are you bound ?

Shep. To th' Pallace (and it like your Worship.)

Aut. Your Affaires there ? what ? with whom ? the Condition of that Farthell ? the place of your dwelling ? your names ? your ages ? of what having ? breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be knowne, discover ?

Clow. We are but plaine fellows, Sir.

Aut. A Lye : you are rough, and hayrie : Let me have no lying ; it becomes none but Tradet-men, and they often give us (Souldiers) the Lye, but we pay them for it with stamped Coyne, not stabbing Steele, therefore they doe not give us the Lye.

Clow. Your Worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken your selfe with the manner.

Shep. Are you a Courtier, and't like you Sir ?

Aut. Whether it like me, or no, I am a Courtier. Seest thou not the ayre of the Court, in these enfoldings ? Hach not my gate in it, the measure of the Court ? Receiv's not thy Nose Court-Odour from me ? Reflect I not on thy Basenesse, Court-Contempt ? Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, or toaze from thee thy Businesse, I am therefore no Courtier ? I am Courtier Cap-a-pe ; and one that will either push-on, or pluck-backe, thy Businesse there : whereupon I command thee to open thy Affaire.

Shep. My businesse, Sir, is to the King.

Aut. What Advocate ha'st thou to him ?

Shep. I know not (and't like you.)

Clow. Advocate's the Court-word for a Pheazant : say you have none.

Shep. None, Sir : I have no Pheazant Cocke, nor Hen.

Aut. How blessed are we, that are not simple men ? Yet Nature might have made me as these are, Therefore I will not disdaine.

Clow. This cannot be but a great Courtier.

Shep. His Garments are rich, but he weares them not handsomely.

Clow. He seemes to be the more Noble, in being fantasticall : a great man, Ile warrant ; I know by the picking on's Teeth.

Aut. The Farthell there ? What's i'th' Farthell ?

Wherefore that Box ?

Shep. Sir, there lyes such secrets in this Farthell and Box, which none must know but the King, and which he shall know within this houre, if I may come to th' speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why Sir ?

Aut. The King is not at the Pallace, he is gone aboard a new Ship, to purge Melancholy, and ayre himselfe : for if thou bee'st capable of things serious, thou must know the King is full of griefe.

Shep. So'tis said (Sir :) about his Sonne, that should have married a Shepherds Daughter.

Aut. If that Shepheard be not in hand-fast, let him flye ; the Curfes he shall have, the Tortures he shall feele, will breake the backe of Man, the heart of Monster.

Clow. Thinke you so, Sir ?

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what Wit can make heavy, and Vengeance bitter ; but those that are Iermaine to him (though remov'd fifty times) shall all come under the Hang-man : which, though it be great pitty, yet it is necessary. An old Sheepe-whistling Rogue, a Ram-tender, to offer to have his Daughter come into grace ? Some say he shall be ston'd : but that death is too soft for him (say I :) Draw our Throne into a Sheep-Coat ? all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easie.

Clow. Ha's the old-man ere a Sonne Sir (doe you heare) and't like you, Sir ?

Aut. He ha's a Sonne : who shall be flayd alive, then 'noynted over with Honey, set on the head of a Wasps Nest, then stand till he be three quarters and a dram dead ; then recover'd againe with Aquavita, or some other hot Infusion : then, raw as he is (and in the hottest day Prognostication proclaymes) shall he be set against a Brick-wall (the Sunne looking with a South-ward eye upon him ; where he is to behold him, with Flyes blowne to death.) But what talke we of these Traitorly-Rascals, whose miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capitall ?

Tell

Tell me (for you seeme to be honest plaine men) what you have to the King : being something gently consider'd, Ile bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalves ; and if it be in man, besides the King, to effect your Suites, here is man shall doe it.

Clo. He seemes to be of great authority : close with him, give him Gold : and though Authority be a stubborn Beare, yet he is oft led by the Nose with Gold : shew the in-side of your Purse to the out-side of his hand, and no more adoe. Remember ston'd, and flay'd alive.

Shep. And't please you (Sir) to undertake the Businesse for us, here is that Gold I have : Ile make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawne, till I bring it you.

Ant. After I have done what I promised?

Shep. I sir.

Ant. Well, give me the Moity : Are you a party in this Businesse?

Clo. In some sort, Sir : but though my case be a pittifull one, I hope I shall not be flayd out of it.

Ant. Oh, that's the case of the Shepheards Sonne : hang him, he'll be made an example.

Clo. Comfort, good comfort : We must to the King, and shew our strange fights : he must know 'tis none of your Daughter, nor my Sister : we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man do's, when the Businesse is performed, and remaine (as he sayes) your pawne till it be brought you.

Ant. I will trust you. Walke before toward the Seaside, goe on the right hand, I will but looke upon the Hedge, and follow you.

Clo. We are blest'd, in this man : as I may say, even blest'd.

Shep. Let's before, as he bids us : he was provided to doe us good. Exeunt.

Ant. If I had a mind to be honest, I see Fortune would not suffer me : she drops Booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion : (gold, and a means to doe the Prince my Master good ; which, who knowes how that may turne backe to my advancement ?) I will bring these two Moales, these blind-ones, aboard him, if he thinke it fit to shoare them againe, and that the Complaint they have to the King, concerns him nothing, let him call me Rogue, for being so farre officious, for I am proove against that Title, and what shame else belongs to't : To him will I present them, there may be matter in it. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Leontes, Cleomines, Dion, Paulina, Servants Florizel, Perdita.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd A Saint-like Sorrow : No fault could you make, Which you have not redeem'd ; indeed pay'd downe More penitence, then done trespass : At the last Doe, as the Heavens have done ; forget your evill, With them, forgive your selfe.

Leo. Whilst I remember Her and her Vertues, I cannot forget

My blemishes in them, and so still thinke of The wrong I did my selfe : which was so much, That Heire-lesse it hath made my Kingdome, and Destroy'd the sweet 't companion, that ere man Bred his hopes out of, true.

Paul. Too true (my Lord :

If one by one, you wedded all the World, Or from the All that are, tooke something good, To make a perfect Woman ; she you kill'd, Would be unparallel'd.

Leo. I thinke so. Kill'd?

She I kill'd ? I did so : but thou strik'st me

Sorely, to say I did : it is as bitter

Vpon thy Tongue, as in my Thought. Now, good now, Say so but seldom.

Cleo. Not at all, good Lady :

You might have spoken a thousand things, that would Have done the time more benefit, and grac'd Your kindnesse better.

Paul. You are one of those

Would have him wed againe.

Dio. If you would not so,

You pity not the State, nor the Remembrance Of his most Sovereigne Name : Consider little, What Dangers, by his Highnesse faile of Issue, May drop upon his Kingdome, and devoure Incertaine lookers on. What were more holy, Then to rejoyce the former Queene is well ?

What holier, then for Royalties repaire, For present comfort, and for future good, To blesse the Bed of Majesty againe With a sweet fellow to't ?

Paul. There is none worthy,

(Respecting her that's gone :) besides the Gods Will have fulfill'n their secret purposes :

For ha's not the Divine Apollo said ?

Is't not the tenor of his Oracle,

That King Leontes shall not have an Heire, Till his lost Child be found ? Which, that it shall, Is all as monstrous to our humane reason, As my Antigonus to breake his Grave, And come againe to me : who, on my life, Did perish with the Infant. 'Tis your counsell, My Lord should to the Heavens be contray, Oppose against their wills. Care not for issue, The Crowne will find an Heire. Great Alexander Left his to th'Worthiest : so his Successor Was like to be the best.

Leo. Good Paulina,

Who hast the memory of Hermione

I know in honor : O, that ever I

Had squar'd me to thy counsell : then, even now,

I might have look'd upon my Queenes full eyes,

Have taken Treasure from her Lippes.

Paul. And left them

More rich, for what they yeelded.

Leo. Thou speak'st truth :

No more such Wives, therefore no Wife : one worse, And better us'd, would make her Sainted Spirit Againe possesse her Corps, and on this Stage (Where we offenders now appeare) Soule-vext, And begin, why to me ;

Paul. Had she such power,

She had just such cause.

Leo. She had, and would incense me To murder her I marryed.

Paul.

Paul. I should so :
Were I the Ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you marke
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in't
You chose her : then I'd shrieke, that even your eares
Should rift to heare me, and the words that follow'd,
Should be, Remember mine.

Leo. Starres, Starres,
And all eyes else, dead coales : feare thou no Wife ;
Ile have no Wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you sweare
Never to marry, but by my free leave ?

Leo. Never (Paulina) so be blest'd my Spirit.

Paul. Then good my Lords, beare witnesse to his Oath.

Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Vnlesse another,
As like Hermione, as is her Picture,
Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good Madam, I have done.

Paul. Yet if my Lord will marry : if you will, Sir ;
No remedy but you will : Give me the office
To chuse you a Queene : she shall not be so young
As was your former, but she shall be such
As (walk'd your first Queenes Ghost) it should take joy
To see her in your armes.

Leo. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou bidst us.

Paul. That
Shall be when your first Queene's againe in breath :
Never till then.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. One that gives out himselfe Prince Florizell, Sonne of Polixenes, with his princeesse (she
The fairest I have yet beheld) desires access
To your high preface.

Leo. What with him ? he comes not Like to his Fathers Greatnesse : his approach
(So out of circumstance, and suddaine) tells us,
'Tis not a Visitation fram'd, but forc'd
By need, and accident. What Trayne ?

Ser. But few,
And those but meane.

Leo. His Princeesse (say you) with him ?

Ser. I : the most peerlesse peece of Earth, I thinke,
That ere the Sunne shone bright on.

Paul. Oh Hermione,
As every present Time doth boast it selfe
Above a better, gone ; so must thy Grave
Give way to what's seene now. Sir, you your selfe
Have said, and writ so ; but your writing now
Is colder then that Theame : she had not bene,
Nor was not to be equall'd, thus your Vesse
Flow'd with her Beauty once, 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seene a better.

Ser. Pardon, Madam :
The one, I have almost forgot (your pardon :)
The other, when she ha's obtain'd your Eye,
Will have your Tongue too. This is a Creature,
Would she begin a Sect, might quench the zeale
Of all Professors else ; make Profelytes
Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How ? not women ?

Ser. Women will love her, that she is a Woman
More worth then any Man : Men, that she is
The rarest of all Women.

Leo. Goe Cleomines,
Your selfe (assisted with your honor'd friends)

Bring them to our embracement. Still 'tis strange,
He thus should steale upon us. Exit.

Paul. Had our Prince.

(Iewell of Children) seene this houre, he had payr'd
Well with this Lord ; there was not full a moneth
Betweene their births.

Leo. 'Prethee no more ; cease : thou know'st
He dyes to me againe, when talk'd-of : sure
When I shall see this Gentleman, thy speech's
Will bring me to consider that, which may Vnfurnish me of Reason. They are come.

Enter Florizell, Perdita, Cleomines, and others.

Your Mother was most true to Wedlocke, Prince,
For she did print your Royall Father off,
Conceiving you, Were I but twenty one,
Your Fathers Image is so hit in you,
(His very ayre) that I should call you Brother,
As I did him, and speake of something wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome,
And your faire Princeesse (Geddesse) oh : alas,
I lost a couple, that 'twixt Heaven and Earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as
You (gracious Couple) doe : and then I lost
(All mine owne Folly) the Society,
Amity too of your brave Father, whom (Though bearing Misery) I desire my life
Once more to looke on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sicilia, and from him
Give you all greetings, that a King (as friend)
Can send his Brother : and but infirmity
(Which waits upon worne times) hath something seiz'd
His wish'd Ability, he had himselfe
The Lands and Waters, 'twixt your Throne and his Measur'd, to looke upon you ; whom he loves
(He bad me say so) more then all the Scepters,
And those that beare them, living.

Leo. Oh my brother,
(Good Gentleman) the wrongs I have done thee, stirre
A fresh within me : and these thy offices
(So rarely kind) are as Interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackenesse. Welcome hither,
As is the Spring to th' Earth. And hath he too
Expos'd this Paragon to th' fearefull usage
(At least ungentle) of the dreadfull Neptune,
To greet a man, not worth her paines ; much lesse,
Th' adventure of her person ?

Flo. Good my Lord,
She came from Libia.

Leo. Where the Warlike Smalus,
That Noble honor'd Lord, is fear'd, and lov'd ?

Flo. Most Royall Sir,
From thence : from him, whose Daughter
His Teares proclaim'd his parting with her : thence (A prosperous South-wind friendly) we have cross'd,
To execute the Charge my Father gave me,
For visiting your Highnesse : My best Train
I have from your Sicilian Shores dismiss'd ;
Who for Bahia bend, to signifie
Not onely my success in Libia (sir)
But my arrivall, and my Wifes, in safety
Here, where we are.

Leo. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our Ayre, whilst you
Doe Clymate here : you have a holy Father,
A gracefull Gentleman, against whose person

(So

(So sacred as it is) I have done sinne,
For which the Heavens (taking angry note)
Have left me Issue-lesse : and your Father's blest'd
(As he from Heaven merits it) with you,
Worthy his goodnesse. What might I have beene, Might I a Sonne and Daughter now have look'd on,
Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most Noble Sir,
That which I shall report, will beare no credit,
Were not the proofe so nigh. Please you (great Sir)
Bohemia greets you from himselfe, by me :
Desires you to attache his sonne, who ha's
(His Dignity, and Duty both cast off)
Fled from his Father, from his Hopes, and with A Shepheards Daughter.

Leo. Where's Bohemia? speake :

Lord. Heere, in your City : I now came from him.
I speake amazedly, and it becomes
My mervaille, and my Message. To your Court
Whiles he was hastning (in the Chase, it seemes,
Of this faire Couple) meets he on the way
The Father of this seeming Lady, and
Her Brother, having both their Country quitted,
With this young Prince.

Flo. Camillo ha's betray'd me ;
Whose honor, and whose honesty till now,
Endur'd all Weathers.

Lord. Lay'st thou to his charge :
He's with the King your Father.

Leo. Who? Camillo?

Lord. Camillo (Sir :) I spake with him : who now
Ha's these poore men in question. Never saw I
Wretches so quake : they kneele, they kisse the Earth ;
Forswear themselves as often as they speake :
Bohemia stops his eares, and threatens them
With divers deaths, in death.

Per. Oh my poore Father :
The Heaven sets Spyes upon us, will not have
Our Contract celebrated.

Leo. You are married?

Flo. We are not (Sir) nor are we like to be :
The Starres (I see) will kisse the Valleyes first ;
The oddes for high and low's alike.

Leo. My Lord,
Is this the Daughter of a King?

Flo. She is,
When once she is my Wife.

Leo. That once (I see) by your good Fathers speed,
Will come on very slowly. I am sorry
(Most sorry) you have broken from his liking,
Where you were ty'd in duty : and as sorry,
Your Choyse is not so rich in Worth, as Beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Deare looke up!
Though Fortune, visible an Enemy,
Should chase us, with my Father : pow're no jot
Hath she to change our Loves. Beseech you (Sir)
Remember, since you ow'd no more to Time
Then I doe now : with thought of such Affections,
Step forth mine Advocate : at your request,
My Father will grant precious things, as Trifles.

Leo. Would he doe so, I'd beg your precious Mistris
Which he counts but a Trifle.

Paul. Sir (my Liege)
Your eye hath too much youth in't : not a month

'Fore your Queene dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Then what you looke on now.

Leo. I thought of her,
Even in these Lookes I made. But your Petition
Is yet un-answer'd : I will to your Father :
Your Honor not o're-throwne by your desires,
I am friend to them, and you : upon which Errand
I now goe toward him : therefore follow me,
And marke what way I make : Con:e good my Lord.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Antoliscus, and a Gentleman.

Ant. Beseech you (Sir) were you present at this Relation?

Gent. 1. I was by at the opening of the Farthell, heard the old Shepheard deliver the manner how he found it :
whereupon (after a little amazement) we were all commanded out of the Chamber : onely this (me thought) I heard the Shepheard say, he found the Child.

Ant. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

Gent. 1. I make a broken delivery of the Businesse :
but the changes I perceived in the King, and Camillo, were very Notes of admiration : they seem'd almost, with staring on one another, to teare the Cases of their Eyes.
There was speech in their dumbnesse, Language in their very gesture : they look'd as they had heard of a World ransom'd, or one destroyed : a notable passion of Wonder appeared in them : but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if th'importance were Joy, or Sorrow ; but in the extremity of the one, it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a Gentleman, that happily knowes more :
The Newes, Requero.

Gent. 2. Nothing but Bonfires : the Oracle is fulfill'd :
the Kings Daughter is found : such a deale of wonder is broken out within this houre, that Ballad-makers cannot be able to expresse it.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes the Lady Paulina's Steward, he can deliver you more. How goes it now (Sir.) This Newes (which is call'd true) is so like an old Tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspition : Ha's the King found his Heire?

Gent. 3. Most true, if ever Truth were pregnant by Circumstance : That which you heare, you'll sweare you see, there is such unity in the proofes. The Mantle of Queene Hermiones : her Jewell about the Necke of it :
the Letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his Character ; the Majesty of the Creature, in resemblance of the Mother : the Affection of Noblenesse, which Nature shewes above her Breeding, and many other Evidences, proclaime her, with all certainty, to be the Kings Daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two Kings?

Gent. 1. No.

Gent. 3. Then have you lost a Sight which was to be scene, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one Joy crowne another, so and in such manner, that it seem'd Sorrow wept to take leave of them : for their Joy waded in teares. There was casting up of Eyes, holding up of hands, with Countenance of such distraction, that they were to be knowne by Garment, not by Favor.

Our

Our King being ready to leape out of himselfe, for joy of his found Daughter; as if that joy were now become a Losse, cries, Oh, thy Mother, thy Mother: then asks Bohemia forgiveness, then embraces his Sonne-in-Law: then againe worries he his Daughter, with clipping her. Now he thanks the old Shepheard (which stands by, like a Weather-bitten Conduit, of many Kings Reignes.) I never heard of such another Encounter; which lames Report to follow it, and undo's description to doe it.

Gent. 2. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the Child?

Gent. 3. Like an old Tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though Credit be asleepe, and not an eare open; he was torne to pieces with a Bear: This avouches the Shepherds Sonne, who ha's not onely his Innocence (which seemes much) to justifie him, but a hand-kerchiefe and Rings of his, that Paulina knowes.

Gent. 1. What became of his Barke, and his Followers?

Gent. 3. Wrackt the same instant of their Masters death, and in the view of the Shepheard: so that all the Instruments which ayded to expose the Child, were even then lost, when it was found. But oh the Noble Combat, that 'twixt Joy and Sorrow was fought in Paulina. She had one Eye declin'd for the losse of her Husband, another elevated, that the Oracle was fulfill'd: She lifted the Princeesse from the Earth, and so lockes her in embracing as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.

Gent. 1. The Dignity of this Act was worth the audience of Kings and Princes, for by such was it acted.

Gent. 3. One of the prettyest touches of all, and that which angl'd for mine Eyes (caught the Water, though not the Fish) was, when at the Relation of the Queenes death (with the manner how she came to't, bravely confesse'd, and lamented by the King) how attentiveness wounded his Daughter, till (from one figue of dolour to another) she did (with an Alas) I would faine say, bleed Teares; for I am sure, my heart wept blood. Who was most Marble, there changed colour: some frownded, all forrowed: if all the World could have seen't, the Woe had beene universall.

Gent. 1. Are they returned to the Court?

Gent. 3. No: The Princeesse hearing of her Mothers Statue (which is in the keeping of Paulina) a Peece many yeeres in doing, and now newly perform'd, by that rare Italian Master, Julio Romano, who (had he himselfe eternity, and could put Breath into his Worke) would beguile Nature of her Custome, to perfectly he is her Ape: He so neere to Hermione, hath done Hermione, that they say one would speake to her, and stand in hope of answer. Thither (with all greedinesse of affection) are they gone, and there they intend to Sup.

Gent. 2. I thought she had some great matter there in hand, for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither, and with our company peece the rejoicing?

Gent. 1. Who would be thence, that ha's the benefit of Access? every winke of an Eye, some new Grace will be borne: our Absence makes us unthrifty to our Knowledge. Let's along.

Exit.

Aut. Now (had I not the dash of my former life in me) would Preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his Sonne aboard the the Prince; told him, I heard them talke of a Farthell, and I know not what: but he at that time over-fond of the Shepherds daughter (so he then tooke her to be) who began to be much Sea-sick, and himselfe little better, extremity of Weather continuing, this Mystery remained undiscover'd. But 'tis all one to me: for had I beene the finder-out of this secret, it would not have rellish'd among my other discredits.

Enter Shepheard, and Clowne.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossomes of their Fortune.

Shep. Come boy, I am 'past more Children: but thy Sonnes and Daughters will be all Gentlemen borne.

Clow. You are well met (Sir); you deny'd to fight with me this other day, because I was no Gentleman borne. See you these Clothes? say you see them not, and thinke me still no Gentleman borne: You were best say these Robes are not Gentlemen borne. Give me the Lye: doe: and try whether I am not now a Gentleman borne.

Aut. I know you are now (Sir) a Gentleman borne.

Clow. I, and have beene so any time these foure houres.

Shep. And so have I, Boy.

Clow. So you have: but I was a Gentleman borne before my Father: for the Kings Sonne tooke me by the hand, and call'd me brother; and then the two Kings call'd my Father brother: and then the Prince (my brother) and the Princeesse (my Sister) call'd my father, father; and so we wept: and there was the first Gentleman-like teares that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live (Sonne) to shed many more.

Clow. I: or else 'twere hard lucke, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you (Sir) to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your Worship, and to give me your good report to the Prince my Master.

Shep. Prethee Sonne doe: for we must be gentle, now we are Gentlemen.

Clow. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. I, and it like your good Worship.

Clow. Give me thy hand: I will sweare to the Prince, thou art as honest a true Fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not sweare it.

Clow. Not sweare it, now I am a Gentleman? Let Boores and Francklins say it, Ile sweare it.

Shep. How if it be false (Sonne)?

Clow. If it be ne're so false, a true Gentleman may sweare it, in the behalfe of his friend: And Ile sweare to the Prince, thou art a tall Fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunke: but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunke: but Ile sweare it, and I would thou would'st be a tall Fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove so (Sir) to my power.

Clow. I, by any meanes prove a tall Fellow: if I doe not wonder, how thou dar'st venture to be drunke, not being a tall Fellow, trust me not. Harke, the Kings and the Princees (our Kindred) are going to see the Queenes Picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good Master. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizell, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina: Hermione (like a Statue:) Lords, &c.

Leo. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort That I have had of thee?

Cc

Paul.

Paul. What (Soveraigne Sir)

I did not well, I meant well : all my Services
You have pay'd home. But that you have vouchsaf'd (With your Crown'd Brother, and these your contracted Heires of your kingdoms) my poore House to visit;
It is a surplus of your Grace, which never
My life may last to answer.

Ler. O Paulina,

We honor you with trouble : but we came
To see the Statue of our Queene. Your Gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities ; but we saw not
That which my Daughter came to looke upon,
The Statue of her Mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerlesse,
So her dead likenesse I doo well beleeve
Excells what ever yet you look'd upon,
Or hand of Man hath done : therefore I keepe it Lovely, apart. But here it is : prepare
To see the Life as lively mock'd, as ever
Still Sleepe mock'd death : behold, and say 'tis well.
I like your silence, it the more shewes off
Your wonder : but yet speake, first you (my Liege)
Comes it not something neere ?

Leo. Her naturall Posture.

Chide me (deare Stone) that I may say indeed
Thou art Hermione ; or rather, thou art she,
In thy not chiding : for she was as tender
As infancy, and Grace. But yet (Paulina)
Hermione was not so much wrinckled, nothing
So aged as this seemes.

Pol. Oh, not by much.

Paul. So much the more our Carvers excellence.
Which lets goe-by some sixteene yeeres, and makes her
As she liv'd now.

Leo. As now she might have done,
So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my Soule. Oh, thus she stood,
Even with such Life of Majesty (warne Life,
As now it coldly stands) when first I woo'd her.
I am asham'd : Do's not the Stone rebuke me,
For being more Stone then it ? Oh Royall Peece :
There's Magicke in thy Majesty, which has
My evils conjur'd to remembrance ; and
From thy admiring Daughter tooke the Spirits,
Standing like Stone with thee,

Perd. And give me leave,
And doe not say 'tis Superstition, that
I kneele, and then implore her Blessing. Lady,
Deere Queene, that ended when I but began,
Give me that hand of yours, to kisse.

Paul. O, patience :

The Statue is but newly fix'd ; the Colour's
Not dry.

Cam. My Lord, your Sorrow was too fore lay'd-on,
Which sixteene Winters cannot blow away,
So many Summers dry : scarce any Ioy
Did ever so long live ; no Sorrow,
But kill'd it selfe much sooner.

Pol. Deere my Brother,
Let him, that was the cause of this, have powre
To take off so much griefe from you, as he Will peece up in himselfe.

Paul. Indeed my Lord,
If I had thought the sight of my poore Image
Would thus have wrought you (for the Stone is mine)

It'd not have shew'd it.

Leo. Doe not draw the Curtaine.

Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't, least your Fancy
May thinke anon, it moves.

Leo. Let be, let be.

Would I were dead, but that me thinks already.
(What was he that did make it ?) See (my Lord)
Would you not deeme it breath'd ; and that those veines
Did verily beare blood ?

Pol. Masterly done.

The very Life seemes warme upon her Lippe.

Leo. The fixure of her Eye ha's motion in't,
As we are mock'd with Art.

Paul. Ile draw the Curtaine :
My Lord's almost so farre transported, that Hee'll thinke anon it lives.

Leo. Oh sweet Paulina,
Make me to thinke for twenty yeeres together :
No setled Sences of the World can match
The pleasure of that madnesse. Let't alone.

Paul. I am sorry (Sir) I have thus farre stir'd you ; but I could afflict you farther.

Leo. Doe Paulina :
For this Affliction ha's a taste as sweet
As any Cordiall comfort. Still me thinkes
There is an ayre comes from her. What fine Chizzell
Could ever yet cut breath ? Let no man mocke me,
For I will kisse her,

Paul. Good me Lord forbear ;
The ruddinesse upon her Lippe, is wet :
You'll marre it, if you kisse it ; staine your owne
With Oyley Painting : shall I draw the Curtaine ?

Leo. No : not these twenty yeeres.

Perd. So long could I Stand by, a looker-on.

Paul. Either forbear ;
Quit presently the Chappell, or resolve your
For more amazement : if you can behold it,
Ile make the Statue move indeed ; descend,
And take you by the hand : but then you'll thinke
(Which I protest against) I am assisted By wicked Powers.

Leo. What you can make her doe,
I am content to looke on : what to speake,
I am content to heare : for 'tis as easie
To make her speake, as move.

Paul. It is requir'd
You doe awake your Faith : then, all stand still :
On : those that thinke it is unlawfull Businesse
I am about, let them depart.

Leo. Proceed :
No foot shall stirre.

Paul. Musicke ; awake her : Strike :
'Tis time : descend : be Stone no more : approach :
Strike all that looke upon with mervaille : Come :
Ile fill your Grave up : stirre : nay, come away :
Bequeath to Death your numnesse : (for from him,
Deare Life redeemes you) you perceive she stirres :
Start not : her Actions shall be holy, as
You heare my spell is lawfull : doe not shun her,
Vntill you see her dye againe ; for then
You kill her double : Nay, present your hand :
When she was young, you woo'd her : now, in age,
Is she become the Suitor ?

Leo. Oh she's warme :
If this be Magicke, let it be an Art

Lawfull as Eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his necke,
If she pertaine to life, let her speake too.

Pol. I, and make it manifest where she ha's liv'd,
Or how stolne from the dead?

Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old Tale: but it appears she lives,
Though yet she speake nor. Marke a little while:
Please you to interpose (faire Madam) kneele,
And pray your Mothers bleissing; turne good Lady,
Our Perdita is found.

Her. You gods looke downe,
And from your sacred Viols poure your graces
Vpon my daughters head: Tell me (mine owne)
Where hast thou bin preserv'd? Where liv'd? How found Thy Fathers Court? For thou shalt heare that I
Knowing by Paulina, that the Oracle
Gave hope thou wast in being, have preserv'd
My selfe, to see the issue.

Paul. There's time enough for that;
Least they desire (upon this push) to trouble
Your joyes, with like Relation. Goe together
You precious winners all: your exultation

Partake to every one: I (an old Turtle)
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My Mate (that's never to be found againe)
Lament, till I am lost.

Leo. O peace Paulina:

Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine a Wife. This is a Match,
And made betweene's by Vowes. Thou hast found mine,
But how, is to be question'd; for I saw her
(As I thought) dead: and have (in vaine) said many
A prayer upon her grave. Ile not seeke farre
(For him, I partly know his minde) to find thee
An honourable husband. Come Camillo,
And take her by the hand: whose worth, and honesty
Is richly noted: and heere justified
By Vs, a paire of Kings. Let's from this place.
What? looke upon my Brother: both your pardons,
That ere I put betweene your holy lookes
My ill suspicion: This your Son-in-law,
And Sonne unto the King, whom heavens directing
Is troth-plight to your daughter. Good Paulina,
Leade us from hence, where we may leysurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of Time, since first
We were dislever'd. Hastily leade away.

Exeunt.

FIN IS.

The life and death of King Iohn.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter King Iohn, Queene Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, and Salisbury, with the Chastillon of France.

King Iohn.

Now say Chastillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus (after greeting) speaks the King of France.

In my behaviour to the Majesty,
The borrowed Majesty of England heere.

Elex. A strange beginning: borrowed Majesty?

King Iohn. Silence (good mother) heare the Embassie.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalfe

Of thy deceased brother, Geffreyes sonne,

Arthur Plantagines, layes most lawfull claime

To this faire Iland, and the Territories:

To Ireland, Poictiers, Anjoue, Lorraine, Maine,

Desiring thee to lay aside the sword

Which swayes usurpingly these severall titles,

And put the same into yong Arthurs hand,

Thy Nephew, and right royall Sovereigne.

King Iohn. What followes if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud controle of fierce and bloudy warre,

To enforce these rights, so forcibly withheld.

K. Iohn. Here have we war for war, & bloud for bloud, Consolment for contolment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my Kings defiance from my mouth,

The farthest limit of my Embassie.

King Iohn. Beare mine to him, and so depart in peace,

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;

For ere thou canst report, I will be there:

The thunder of my Cannon shall be heard.

So hence: be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

And fullen presage of your owne decay:

An honorable conduct let him have,

Pembroke looke too't: farewell Chastillon.

Exit Chat. and Pem.

Elex. What now my sonne, have I not ever said

How that ambitious Constance would not cease

Till she had kindled France and all the world,

Vpon the right and party of her sonne?

This might have bene prevented, and made whole

With very easie arguments of love,

Which now the marriage of two kingdomes must

With fearefull bloudy issue arbitrate.

K. Iohn. Our strong possession, and our right for us,

Elex. Your strong possession much more than your right

Or else it must goe wrong with you and me,

So much my conscience whispers in your eare,

Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall heare:

Enter a Sheriffe.

Essex. My Leige, here is the strangest controversie

Come from the Country to be judg'd by you

That ere I heard: shall I produce the men?

K. Iohn. Let them approach:

Our Abbies and our Priories shall pay

This expeditions charge. What men are you?

Enter Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip.

Philip. Your faithfull subject, I a Gentleman,

Borne in Northamptonshire, and eldest sonne

As I suppose, to Faulconbridge,

A Souldier by the Honor-giving-hand

Of Cordelion, Knighted in the field.

K. Iohn. What art thou?

Robert. The son and heire to that same Faulconbridge.

K. Iohn. Is that the elder, and art thou the heyre?

You came not of one mother then it seemes.

Philip. Most certaine of one mother, mighty King,

That is well knowne, and as I thinke one father:

But for the certaine knowledge of that truth,

I put you o're to heaven, and to my mother;

Of that I doubt, as all mens children may.

Elex. Out on thee rude man, thou dost shame thy mother,

And wound her honor with this diffidence.

Phil. I Madame? No, I have no reason for it,

That is my brothers plea, and none of mine,

The which if he can prove, a pops me out,

At least from faire five hundred pound a yeere:

Heaven guard my mothers honor, and my Land.

K. Iohn. A good blunt fellow: why being yonger borne

Doth he lay claime to thine inheritance?

Phil. I know not why, except to get the land;

But once he slandered me with bastardy:

But where I be as true begot or no,

That still I lay upon my mothers head,

But that I am as well begot my Leige

(Faile fall the bones that tooke the paines for me)

Compare our faces, and be judge your selfe

If old Sir Robert did beget us both,

And were our father, and this sonne like him:

O old Sir Robert father, on my knee

I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee.

K. Iohn. Why what a mad-cap hath heaven lent us here?

Elex. He hath a trick of Cordelions face,

The accent of his tongue affecteth him:

Do you not reade some tokens of my sonne

In the large composition of this man?

K. Iohn. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard: sirra speake,
What doth move you to claime your brothers land?

Philip. Because he hath a halfe face like my father,
With halfe that face would he have all my Land;
A halfe-fac'd groat, five hundred pound a yeare?

Rob. My gracious Leige, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much.

Phil. Well sir, by this you cannot get my land,
Your tale must be how he imploi'd my mother.

Rob. And once dispatch'd him in an Embassie
To Germany, there with the Emperor
To treat of high affaires touching that time:
Th' advantage of his absence tooke the King,
And in the meane time sojourn'd at my fathers;
Where how he did prevaile, I shame to speake:
But truth is truth, large lengths of seas and shores
Betwene my father, and my mother lay,
As I have heard my father speake himselve
When this same lusty Gentleman was got:
Vpon his death bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me, and tooke it on his death
That this my mothers sonne was none of his;
And if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteene weekes before the course of time:
Then good my Lidge let me have what is mine,
My fathers land, as was my fathers will.

K. Iohn. Sirra, your brother is Legitimate,
Your fathers wife did after wedlocke beare him:
And if she did play false, the fault was hers,
Which fault lyes on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives: tell me, how if my brother
Who as you say, tooke paines to get this sonne,
Had of your father claim'd this sonne for his,
Insooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This Caste, bred from his Cow from all the world:
Insooth he might: then if he were my brothers,
My brother might not claime him, nor your father
Being none of his, refuse him: this concludes,
My mothers sonne did get your fathers heire,
Your fathers heire must have your fathers land.

Rob. Shall then my fathers Will be of no force,
To dispossesse that child which is not his?

Phil. Of no more force to dispossesse me Sir,
Then was his will to get me, as I thinke.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,
And like thy brother to enjoy thy land:
Or the reputed sonne of Cordelion,
Lord of thy presence, and no lund beside.

Bast. Madam, and if my brother had my shape
And I had his, Sir Roberts hislike him,
And if my legs were two such riding rods,
My armes, such eeleskins stuf, my face so thin,
That in mine eare I durst not sticke a rose,
Left men should say, looke where three farthings goes,
And to his shape were heire to all this land,
Would I might never stirre from off this place,
I would give it every foot to have this face:
I would not be sir nobbe in any case.

Eli. I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a fouldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, Ile take my chance;
Your face hath got five hundred pound a yeere,
Yet sell your face for five pence and 'tis deere.
Madame, ile follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you goe before me thither.

Bast. Our Country manners giue our betters way.

K. Iohn. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip my Liege, so is my name begun,
Philip, good old Sir Roberts wives eldest sonne.

K. Iohn. From henceforth beare his name
Whose forme thou bearest:

Kneele thou downe Philip, but rise more great,
Arise Sir Richard, and Plantagenet.

Bast. Brother by th' mothers side, give me your hand,
My father gave me honor, yours gave land,
Now blessed be the houre by night or day
When I was got, Sir Robert was away.

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet:
I am thy grandame Richard, call me so.

Bast. Madam by chance, but not by truth, what tho;
Something about a little from the right,
In at the window, or else ore the hatch:
Who dares not stirre by day, must walke by night,
And have is have, how ever men doe catch:
Neere or farre off, well wonne is still well shot,
And I am I, how ere I was begot.

K. Iohn. Goe Faulconbridge, now hast thou thy desire,
A landlesse Knight, makes thee a landed Squire:
Come Madam, and come Richard, we must speed
For France, for France, for it is more then need.

Bast. Brother-adieu, good fortune come to thee,
For thou wast got i'th way of honesty.

Exeunt all but bastard.

Bast. A foot of honor better then I was,
But many a many foot of Land the worse.
Well, now can I make any Joane a Lady;
Good denne Sir Richard, Godamercy fellow,
And if his name be George, ile call him Peter;
For new made honor doth forget mens names:
'Tis too respective, and too sociable
For your conversion, now your traveller,
He and his tooth-picke at my worships messe,
And when my knightly stomacke is suffis'd,
Why then I sticke my teeth, and catechize
My picked man of Countries: my deare sir,
Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,
I shall beseech you; that is question now,
And then comes answer like an Absey booke:
O sir, sayes answer, at your best command,
At your employment, at your service sir:
No sir, sayes question, I sweet sir at yours,
And so ere answer knowes what question would,
Saving in Dialogue of Complement,
And talking of the Alpes and Appenines,
The Pyrennean and the river Poe,
It drawes toward supper in conclusion so.
But this is worshipfull society,
And fits the mounting spirit like my selfe;
For he is but a bastard to the time
That doth not smooke of observation,
And so am I whether I smacke or no:
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior for me, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet payson for the ages tooth,
Which though I will not practice to deceive,
Yet to avoyd deceit I meane to learne;
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising:
But who comes in such haste in riding robes?

What

What woman post is this? hath she no husband
That will take paines to blow a horne before her?
O me, 'tis my mother: how now good Lady,
What brings you here to Court so hastily?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge, and James Gurney.

Lady. Where is that slave thy brother? where is he?
That holds in chafe mine honor up and downe.

Bast. My brother Robert, old Sir Roberts sonne:
Colbrand the Gyant, that same mighty man,
Is it Sir Roberts sonne that you seeke so?

Lady. Sir Roberts sonne, I thou unreverend boy,
Sir Roberts sonne? why scorn'st thou at Sir Roberts?
He is Sir Roberts sonne, and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave a while?

Gurn. Good leave good Philip.

Bast. Philip, sparrow, James,
There's toys abroad, anon ile tell thee more.

Exit James.

Madame, I was not old Sir Roberts sonne,
Sir Robert might have eate his part in me
Vpon good Friday, and neere broke his fast:
Sir Robert could doe well, marry to confesse
Could get me, Sir Robert could not doe it;
We know his handy-worke, therefore good mother
To whom am I beholding for these limmes?
Sir Robert never holpe to make this legge.

Lady. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,
That for thine owne gaine shouldst defend mine honor?
What means this scorne, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight good mother, Basilisco-like:
What, I am dub'd, I have it on my shoulder:
But mother, I am not Sir Roberts sonne,
I have disclaim'd Sir Robert and my land,
Legitimation, name, and all is gone;
Then good my mother, let me know my father,
Some proper man I hope, who was it mother?

Lady. Hast thou denied thy selfe a Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devill.

Lady. King Richard Cordelion was thy father,
By long and vehement suit I was seduc'd
To make roome for him in my husbands bed:
Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge,
That art the issue of my deere offence
Which was so strongly urg'd past my defence.

Bast. Now by this light were I to get againe,
Madame I would not wish a better father:
Some finnes doe beare their priviledge on earth,
And so doth yours: your fault, was not you folly,
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,
Subjected tribute to commanding love,
Against whose fury and unmatched force,
The awlesse Lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keepe his Princely heart from Richards hand:
He that perforce robs Lions of their hearts,
May easily winne a womans: aye my mother,
With all my heart I thanke thee for my father:
Who lives and dares but say, thou didst not well
When I was got, ile send his soule to hell.
Come Lady I will shew thee to my kinne,
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst said him nay, it had beene sinne;
Who sayes it was, he lyes, I say twas not.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter before Angiers, Philip King of France, Lewis, Dauphin, Austria, Constance, Arthur.

Lewis. Before Angiers well met brave Austria,
Arthur that great forerunner of thy blond,
Richard that rob'd the Lion of his heart,
And fought the holy Warres in Palestine,
By this brave Duke came early to his grave:
And for amends to his posterity,
At our importance hither is he come,
To spread his colours boy, in thy behalfe;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnaturall Vncle, English Iohn,
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cordelions death
The rather, that you give his off-spring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of warre:
I give you welcome with a powerlesse hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love,
Welcome before the gates of Angiers Duke.

Lewis. A noble boy, who would not doe thee right?

Aust. Vpon thy cheeke lay I this zealous kisse,
As seale to this indenture of my love:

That to my home I will no more returne
Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurnes backe the Oceans roaring tides;
And coopes from other lands her Ilanders,
Even till that England hedg'd in with the maine,
That Water-walled Bulwarke, still secure
And confident from forraigne purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the West
Salute thee for her King, till then faire boy
Will I not thinke of home, but follow Armes.

Const. O take his mothers thanks, a widows thanks,
Till your strong hand shall helpe to give him strength,
To make a more requitall to your love.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their swords
In such a just and charitable warre.

King. Well, then to worke our Cannon shall be bent
Against the browes of this resisting towne,
Call for our cheefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantages:
Wee'll lay before this towne our Royall bones,
Wade to the market-place in French-mens blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your Embassie,
Lest unaduis'd you staine your swords with blood:
My lord Chastillon may from England bring
That right in peace which heere we urge in warre,
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Chastillon.

King. A wonder Lady; lo upon thy wist
Our Messenger Chastillon is arriv'd,
What England sayes, say breifely gentle lord,
We coldly pause for thee, Chastillon speake.

Chas. Then turne your forces from this paltry siege,
And stirre them up against a mightier taske:
England impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himsele in Armes, the adverse windes

Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his Legions all as soone as I :
His marches are expedient to this towne,
His forces strong, his souldiers confident :
With him along is come the Mother Queene,
An Ace stirring him to bloud and strife,
With her her Neece, the Lady Blanch of Spaine,
With them a Bastard of the King decaist,
And all th'ansetled humors of the Land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With Ladies faces, and fierce Dragons spleenes,
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birth-rights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazzard of new fortunes here :
In briebe, a braver choise of dauntlesse spirits
Then now the English bottomes have waft o're,
Did never flote upon the swelling tide,
To doe offence and scathe in Christendome :
The interruption of their churlish drummes
Cuts off more circumstance, they are at hand:

Drummes beates.

To parly or to fight, therefore prepare.

King. How much unlook'd for, is this expedition.

Anst. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake indeavour for defence,
For courage mounteth with occasion,
Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter King of England, Bastard, Queene, Blanch, Pembroke, and others.

K. Iohn. Peace be to France : if France in peace permit
Our just and lineall entrance to our owne ;
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven.
Whiles we Gods wrathfull agent doe correct
Their proud contempt that beates his peace to heaven.

Fran. Peace be to England, if that warre returne,
From France to England, there to live in peace :
England we love, and for that Englands sake,
With burden of our armor here we sweat :
This toyle of ours should be a worke of thine,
But thou from loving England art so farte,
That thou hast under-wrought his lawfull King,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Out-faced Infant State, and done a rape
Vpon the maiden vertue of the Crowne :
Looke heere upon thy brother Geffreyes face,
These eyes, these browes, were moulded out of his ;
This little abstract doth containe that large,
Which died in Geffrey : and the hand of time,
Shall draw this breife into as huge a volume :
That Geffrey was thy elder brother borne,
And this his sonne, England was Geffreyes right,
And this is Geffreyes in the Name of God :
How comes it then that thou art call'd a King,
When living blood doth in these temples beat
Which owe the crowne, that thou ore-masterest ?

K. Iohn. From whom hast thou this great commission
To draw my answer from thy Articles ? (France,

Fra. From that supernal judge that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To looke into the blots and staines of right,
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy,
Vnder whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whose helpe I meane to chastise it.

King Ioh. Alacke thou dost usurpe authority.

Fran. Excuse it is to beat usurping downe,

Queen. Who is it thou dost call usurper France ?

Const. Let me make answer : thy usurping sonne,

Queen. Out insolent, thy bastard shall be King,
That thou maist be a Queene, and checke the world.

Const. My bed was ever to thy sonne as true
As thine was to thy husband, and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geffrey

Then thou and Iohn, in manners being as like,
As raine to water, or devill to his damme.

My boy a bastard ? by my soule I thinke

His father never was so true begot,

It cannot be, and if thou wert his mother.

Qu. Theres a good mother boy, that blots thy father.

Const. Theres a good grandame boy
That would blot thee.

Anst. Peace.

Bast. Heare the Cryer.

Anst. What the devill art thou ?

Bast. One that will play the devill fir with you,
And a may catch your hide and you alone:

You are the Hare of whom the Proverbe goes
Whose valour pluckes dead Lyons by the beard ;
He smoake your skin-coat and I catch you right,
Sirra looke too't, yfaith I will, yfaith.

Blan. O well did he become that Lyons robe,
That did disrobe the Lyon of that robe.

Bast. It lyes as sightly on the backe of him

As great Alcides shooes upon an Assie :

But Assie, He take that burthen from your backe,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders cracke.

Anst. What cracker is this same that deafes our eares
With this abundance of superfluous breath ?

King Lewis, determine what we shall doe strait.

Lew. Women and fooles, breake off your conference.

King Iohn, this is the very summe of all :

England and Ireland, Angiers, Toraine, Maine,

In right of Arthur doe I claime of thee :

Wilt thou resigne them, and lay downe thy Armes ?

Iohn. My life as soone : I doe desie thee France.

Arthur of Britaine, yeeld thee to my hand,

And out of my deere love He give thee more,

Then ere the coward hand of France can winne ;
Submit thee boy.

Queen. Come to thy grandame child.

Const. Doe child, goe to it grandame child,
Give grandame kingdome, and it grandame will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a figge,
Theres a good grandame.

Arthur. Good my mother peace,
I would that I were low laid in my grave,
I am not worth this coyle that's made for me. (weepet.

Qu. Mo. His mother shames him so, poore boy he Const. Now shame upon you where she does or no.

His grandames wrongs, and not his mothers shames
Draws those heaven-moving pearles from his poor eies,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee:

I, with these Cristall beads heaven shall be brib'd
To doe him Iustice, and revenge on you.

Qu. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven, and earth.

Const. Thou monstrous Injurer of heaven and earth,
Call not me slanderer, thou and thine usurper
The Domination, Royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed boy ; this is thy eldest sonnes sonne,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee ;

Thy finnes are visited in this poore child,
The Canon of the Law is laid on him.
Being but the second generation
Removed from thy sinne-conceiving wombe.

John. Bedlam have done.

Const. I have but this to say,
That he is not onely plagued for her sinne,
But God hath made her sinne and her, the plague
On this removed issue, plagued for her,
And with her plague her sinne: his injury
Her injury the Beadie to her sinne,
All punish'd in the person of this child,
And all for her, a plague upon her.

Que. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce
A Will, that barres the title of thy sonne.

Const. I who doubts that, a Will: a wicked will,
A womans will, a cankred Grandames will.

Fran. Peace Lady, pause, or be more temperate,
It ill befeemes this presence to cry ay me
To these ill tuned repetitions:
Some Trumpet summon higher to the walles
These men of Angiers, let us heare them speake,
Whose title they admit, Arthurs or Johns.

Trumpet sounds.

Enter a Citizen upon the walles.

Citi. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walles?

Fran. 'Tis France, for England.

John. England for it selfe:

You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects.

Fran. You loving men of Angiers, Arthurs subjects,
Our Trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.

John. For our advantage, therefore heare us first:
These flagges of France that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your Towne,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.
The Canons have their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to spit forth
Their Iron indignation 'gainst your walles;
All preparation for a bloody siege
And merciles proceeding, by these French.
Comfort yours Cities eyes, your winking gates:
And but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waste doth girdle you about
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had beene dishabited, and wide havocke made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But on the sight of us your lawfull King,
Who painefully with much expedient march
Have brought a counter-checke before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your Cities threatened cheekes:
Behold the French amaz'd vouchsafe a parle,
And now instead of bullets wrapt in fire
To make a shaking fever in your walles,
They shoote but calme words, folded up in smoake,
To make a faithlesse error in your eares,
Which trust accordingly kind Citizens,
And let us in. Your King, whose labour'd spirits
Fore-wearied in this action of swift speede,
Craves harbourage within your City walles.

Fran. When I have said, make answer to us both.
Loe in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands yong Plantagenet,
Sonne to the elder brother of this man,

And King ore him, and all that he enjoyes:
For this downe-troden equity, we tread
In warlike march, these greennes before your Towne,
Being no further enemy to you
Then the constraint of hospitable zeale,
In the releife of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
To pay that duty which you truly owe,
To him that owes it, namely, this yong Prince;
And then our Armes, like to a muzled Beare,
Save in aspect, hath all offence seal'd up:
Our Cannons malice vainely shall be spent
Against th'invulnerable clouds of heaven,
And with a blessed and un-vest retire,
With unback'd swords, and Helmets all unbruish'd,
We will beare home that lusty blond againe,
Which heere we came to spout against your Towne,
And leave your children, wives, and you in peace.
But if you fondly passe our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the rounder of your old fac'd walles,
Can hide you from our messengers of Warre,
Though all these English, and their discipline
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference:
Then tell us, Shall your City call us Lord,
In that behalfe which we have challeng'd it?
Or shall we give the signall to our rage,
And stalke in blood to our possession?

Citi. In breife, we are the King of Englands subjects,
For him, and in his right, we hold this Towne.

John. Acknowledge then the King, and let me in.

Citi. That can we not: but he that proves the King
To him will we prove loyall, till that time
Have we ram'd up our gates against the world.

John. Doth not the Crowne of England, prove the King?

And if not that, I bring you Witnesse
Twice fiftene thousand hearts of Englands breed.

Bast. Bastards and else.

John. To verifie our title with their lives.

Fran. As many and as well borne bloods as those.

Bast. Some bastards too.

Fran. Stand in his face to contradict his claime.

Citi. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We for the worthiest hold the right from both.

John. Then God forgive the sinne of all those soules,
That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall shall fleete
In dreadfull triall of our Kingdomes King.

Fran. Amen, Amen, mount Chevaliers to Armes.

Bast. Saint George that swindg'd the Dragon,
And e're since sit's on's horsebacke at mine Hostesse dore,
Teach us some fence. Sirrah, were I at home
At your den sirrah, with your Lyonnesse,
I would set an Oxe-head to your Lyons hide:
And make a monster of you,

John. Peace no more.

Bast. O tremble: for you heare the Lyon rore.

John. Vp higher to the plaine, where we'l set forth
In best appointment all our Regiments.

Bast. Speed then to take advantage of the field.

Fran. It shall be so, and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand. God and our right. Exeunt.

Heere after excursions, Enter the Herald of France with Trumpets to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers open wide your gates,
And let yong Arthur Duke of Britaine in,

Who by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much worke for teares in many an English mother,
Whose sonnes iye scattered on the bleeding ground :
Many a widdowes husband groveling lyes,
Coldly embracing the discoloured earth,
And victory with little losse doth play
Vpon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand triumphantly displayed
To enter Conquerors, and to proclaime
Arthur of Britaine, England's King, and yours.

Enter English Herald with Trumpet.

E. Har. Rejoyce you men of Angiers, ring your bells,
King Iohn, your King and Englands, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day,
Their Armour that march'd hence so silver bright,
Hither returne all gilt with Frenchmens blood :
There sticke no plume in any English Crest,
That is removed by a staffe of France.
Our colours doe returne in those same hands
That did display them when we first marcht forth :
And like a jolly troope of Huntsmen come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dide in the dying slaughter of their foes.
Open your gates, and give the Victors way.

Hub. Heralds, from off our towres we might behold
From first to last, the on-set and retyre,
Of both your Armies, whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured : (blowes :
Blood hath bought blood, and blowes have answered
Strength matcht with strength, and power confronted power.

Both are alike, and both alike we like :
One must prove greatest. While they weigh so even,
We hold our Towne for neither : yet for both.

Enter the two Kings with their powers, at severall doores.

Iohn. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away ?
Say, shall the currant of our right runne on,
Whose passage vext with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and overflow
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores,
Vnlesse thou let his silver Water, keepe
A peacefull progresse to the Ocean.

Fran. England thou hast not sav'd one drop of blood
In this hot triall more than we of France,
Rather lost more. And by this hand I sweare
That swayes the earth this Climate over-lookes,
Before we will lay downe our just borne Armes,
Wee'l put thee downe, 'gainst whom these Armes we
Or adde a royall number to the dead : (beare,
Gracing the scroule that tels of this warres losse,
With slaughter coupled to the name of Kings.

Bast. Ha Majesty : how high thy glory towres,
When the rich blood of Kings is set on fire :
Oh now doth death line his dead chaps with Steele,
The swords of souldiers are his teeth, his phangs,
And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of men
In undetermin'd differences of Kings.
Why stand these royall fronts amazed thus :
Cry havocke kings, backe to the stained field
You equal Potents, fiery kindled spirits,
Then let confusion of one part confirme
The others peace : till then, blowes, blood, and death.

Iohn. Whole party doe the Townesmen yet admit ?

Fran. Speake Citizens for England, who's your King.

Hub. The King of England, when we know the King.

Fran. Know him thus, that here hold up his right.

Iohn. In us, that are our owne great Deputy,
And beare possession of our person here,
Lord of our presence Angiers, and if you.

Fran. A greater powre than We denies all this,
And till it be undoubted, we doe loose
Our former scruple in our strong barr'd gates :
Kings of our feare, untill our feares resolv'd
Be by some certaine King, purg'd and depos'd.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers front you
And stand securely on their battlements, (kings,
As in a Theater, whence they gape and point
At your industrious Scenes and acts of death,
Your Royall presences be rul'd by me,
Doe like the Mutines of Ierusalem,
Be friends a-while, and both conjoyntly bend
Your sharpest Deeds of malice on this Towne.
By East and West let France and England mount
Their battering Canon charged to the mouthes,
Till their soule-fearing clamours have brail'd downe
The flinty ribbes of this contemptuous City,
I'de play incessantly upon these lades,
Even till unfenced desolation

Leave them as naked as the vulgar ayre :
That done, dissever your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once againe,
Turne face to face, and bloody point to point :
Then in a moment Fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy Minion,
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kisse him with a glorious victory :
How like you this wilde counsel mighty States,
Smackes it not something of the policy ?

Iohn. Now by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well. France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground,
Then after fight who shall be king of it ?

Bast. And if thou hast the mettle of a King,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish Towne :
Turne thou the mouth of thy Artillery,
As we wil ours, against these sawcy walles,
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why then desie each other, and pell-mell,
Make worke upon our selves, for heaven or hell.

Fran. Let it be so : say, where will you assault ?

Iohn. We from the West will send destruction
Into this Cites bosome.

Aust. I from the North.

Fran. Our thunder from the South,
Shall raine their drift of bullets on this Towne,

Bast. O prudent discipline ! From North to South :
Austria and France shooe in each others mouth,
He stirre them to it : come, away, away.

Hub. Heare us great Kings, vouchsafe awhile to stay
And I shall shew you peace, and faire-fac'd league :
Win you this City without stroke, or wound,
Rescue thoe breathing lives to dye in beds,
That heere come sacrifices for the field.
Persever not, but heare me mighty Kings.

Iohn. Speake on with favour, we are bent to heare.

Hub. That daughter there of Spaine, the Lady Blanch
Is neere to England, looke upon the yeeres
Of Lewis the Dolphin, and that lovely mayd.
If lusty love should goe in quest of beauty,

Where

Where should he find it fairer, than in Blanch :
 If zealous Love goe in search of vertue,
 Where should he find it purer than in Blanch ?
 If Love ambitious, sought a match of birth,
 Whose veines bound richer bloud then Lady Blanch ?
 Such as she is, in beauty, vertue, birth,
 Is the yong Dolphin every way compleat,
 If not compleat of, say he is not she,
 And she againe wants nothing, to name want,
 If want it be not, that she is not he :
 He is the halfe part of a blessed man,
 Left to be finished by such as she,
 And she a faire divided excellence,
 Whose fulnesse of perfection lyes in him.
 Otwo such silver Currents when they joyne,
 Doe glorifie the bankes that bound them in :
 And two such shores, to two such streames made one;
 Two such controlling bounds shall you be, Kings,
 To these two Princes, if you marry them :
 This vnion shall doe more than battery can,
 To our fast closed gates : for at this match,
 With swifter spleene than powder can enforce,
 The mouth of passage shall we sling wide ope,
 And give you entrance : but without this match,
 The Sea enraged is not halfe so deafe,
 Lyons more confident, Mountaines and Rocks,
 More free from motion, no not death himselfe
 In mortall fury halfe so peremptory,
 As we to keepe this Citie.

Bas. Heere's a stay,
 That shakes the rotten carkasse of old death
 Out of his ragges. Here's a large mouth indeed,
 That spits forth death, and mountaines, rocks, and seas,
 Talkes as familiarly of roaring Lyons,
 As Maids of thirteene doe of Puppie-dogs.
 What Cannoneere begot this luty bloud,
 He speakes plaine Cannon fire, and smoake, and bounce,
 He gives the Bastinado with his tongue :
 Our cares are cudgel'd, not a word of his
 But buffers better than a fist of France :
 Zounds, I was never so bethumpt with words,
 Since I first call'd my brothers father Dad.

Old Qu. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match,
 Give with our Neece a dowry large enough,
 For by this knot, thou shalt so surely tye,
 Thy now unfur'd assurance to the Crowne,
 That yon Greene Boy shall have no Sunne to ripe,
 The bloome that promiseth a mighty fruit,
 I see a yielding in the lookes of France :
 Marke how they whisper, urge them while their foules
 Are capeable of this ambition,
 Least zeale now melted by the windy breath
 Of soft petitions, pitty and remorse,
 Coole and congeale againe to what it was.

Hub. Why answer not the double Majesties,
 This friendly Treaty of our threatned towne?

Fra. Speake England first, that hath been forward first,
 To speake unto this Citie : what say you?

Iohn. If that the Dolphin there thy Princely sonne,
 Can in this booke of beauty reade, I love :
 Her Dowry shall weigh equall with a Queene,
 For Angiers, and faire Toraine, Maine, Poytiers,
 And all that we upon this side the Sea,
 (Except this Citie now by us besiegd)
 Find liable to our Crowne and dignity,
 Shall gild her bridall bed and make her rich.

Intitles, honours, and promotions,
 As she in beauty, education, bloud,
 Holds hands with any Princeesse of the world.

Fra. What say'st thou Boy? looke in the Ladies face.

Dol. I doe my Lord, and in her eye I find,
 A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
 The shadow of my selfe form'd in her eye,
 Which being but the shadow of your sonne,
 Becomes a sonne, and makes your sonne a shadow :
 I doe protest I never lov'd my selfe
 Till now, infixed I beheld my selfe,
 Drawne in the flattering table of her eye.

Whispers with Blanch.

Bas. Drawne in the flattering table of her eye,
 Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow,
 And quarter'd in her heart, he doth espie
 Himselfe Loves traitor, this is pitty now;
 That hang'd and drawne, and quarter'd there should be
 In such a love, so vile a Lout as he.

Blan. My Vncles will in this respect is mine,
 If he see ought in you that makes him like,
 That any thing he see's which moves his liking,
 I can with ease translate it to my will :
 Or if you will, to speake more properly,
 I will enforce it easlie to my love.
 Further I will not flatter you, my Lord,
 That all I see in you is worthy love,
 Than this, that nothing doe I see in you,
 Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your Iudge,

That I can find, should merit any hate.

Iohn. What say these yong-ones? What say you my Neece?

Blan. That she is bound in honour still to doe
 What you in wisdome still vouchsafeto say.

Iohn. Speake then Prince Dolphin, can you love this Lady?

Dol. Nay aske me if I can refraine from love,
 For I doe love her most unfainedly.

Iohn. Then doe I give Volquessen, Toraine, Maine,
Poytiers, and Anjou, these five Provinces
 With her to thee, and this addition more,
 Full thirty thousand Markes of English coyne ;
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withall,
 Command thy sonne and daughter to joyne hands.

Fra. It likes us well young Princes: close your hands.

Anst. And your lippes too, for I am well assur'd,
 That I did so when I was first a slur'd.

Fra. Now Citizens of Angiers ope your gates,
 Let in that amity which you have made,
 For at Saints Maries Chappell presently,
 The rights of marriage shall be solemniz'd.
 Is not the Lady Constance in this troope?
 I know she is not for this match made up,
 Her presence would have interrupted much,
 Where is she and her sonne, tell me, who knowes?

Dol. She is sad and passionate at your Highnesse Tent.

Fra. And by my faith, this league that we have made,
 Will give her sadnesse very little cure :

Brother of England, how may we content
 This widdow Lady? In her right we came,
 Which we God knowes, have turned another way,
 To our owne vantage.

Iohn. We will heale up all,
 For wee'll create yong Arthur Duke of Britaine
 And Earle of Richmond, and this rich faire Towne

We make him Lord of. Call the Lady Constance,
Some speedy Messenger bid her repaire
To our solemnity : I trust we shall,
(If not fill up the measure of her will)
Yet in some measure satisfie her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Goe we as well as hast will suffer us,
To this unlook'd for unprepared pompe.

Exit.

Bast. Mad world, mad kings, mad composition :
Iohn to stop Arthurs Title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part,
And France, whose armour Conscience buckled on,
Whom zeale and charity brought to the field,
As Gods owne souldier, rounded in the eare,
With that same purpose-changer, that slye diuel,
That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith,
That dayly breake-vow, he that winnes of all,
Of kings, of beggers, old men, yong men, maids,
Who having no externall thing to lose,
But the word Maid, cheats the poore Maide of that.
That smooth-fac'd Gentleman, tickling commodity,
Commodity, the byas of the world,
The world, who of it selfe is peysed well,
Made to run even, upon even ground :
Till this advantage, this vile drawing byas,
This swaye of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent.
And this same byas, this commodity,
This Bawd, this Broker, that all-changing-world,
Ciap'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawne him from his owne determin'd ayd,
From a resolv'd and honorable warre,
To a most base and vile concluded peace.
And why raile I on this commodity ?
But for because he hath not wooed me yet :
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his faire Angels would salute my palme,
But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poore begger, raileth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a begger, I will raile,
And say there is no sinne but to be rich,
And being rich, my vertue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but beggery :
Since Kings breake faith upon commodity,
Gaine be my lord, for I will worship thee.

Exit.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married ? Gone to sweare a peace ?
False blood to false blood joyn'd. Gone to be friends ?
Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces ?
It is not so, thou hast mispoke, misheard,
Be well advis'd, tell ore thy tale againe.
It cannot be, thou do'st but say 'tis so.
I trust I may not trust thee, for thy word
Is but the vaine breath of a common man :
Beleeve me, I doe not beleeve thee man,
I have a Kings oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,
For I am sicke, and capeable of feares.

Opprest with wrongs, and therefore full of feares,
A widow, husbandles, subject to feares,
A woman naturally borne to teares ;
And though thou now confesse thou didst but jest
With my vext spirits, I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou meane by shaking of thy head ?
Why dost thou looke so sadly on my sonne ?
What meanes that hand upon that breast of thine ?
Why holdest thine eye that lamentable riewme,
Like a proud river peering ore his bounds ?
Be these sad signes confirmers of thy words ?
Then speake againe, not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true as I beleeve you thinke them false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. Oh if thou teach me to beleeve this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow, how to make me dye,
And let beleeve, and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which in the very meeting fall, and dye.

Lewis marry Blanch ? O boy, then where art thou ?
France friend with England, what becomes of me ?
Fellow be gone : I cannot brooke thy sight,
This newes hath made thee a most ugly man.

Sal. What other harme have I good Lady done,
But spoke the harme, that is by others done ?

Const. Which harme within it selfe so heynous is,
As it makes harmefull all that speake of it.

Arthur. I doe beseech you Madame be content.

Const. If thou that bidst me be content, wert grim
Vgly, and slanderous to thy Mothers wombe,
Full of unpleasing blots, and sightlesse staines,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foule Moles, and eye-offending markes,
I would not care, I then would be content,
For then I should not love thee : no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a Crowne :
But thou art faire, and at thy birth (deere boy)
Nature and Fortune joyn'd to make thee great.
Of Natures gifts, thou mayst with Lillies boast,
And with the halfe blowne Rose. But Fortune, oh,
She is corrupted, chang'd, and wonne from thee,
Sh'adulterates hourly with thine Vnckle Iohn,
And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France
To tread downe faire respect of Sovereignty,
And made his Majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is a Bawd to Fortune, and king Iohn,
That strumpet Fortune, that usurping Iohn :
Tell me thou fellow, is not France forsworne ?
Envenom him with words, or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to under-beare.

Sal. Pardon me Madam,

I may not goe without you to the kings.

Const. Thou mayst, thou shalt, I will not goe with thee,
I will instruct my sorrowes to be proud,
For greif is proud, and makes his owner stoop ;
To me and to the state of my great greife,
Let kings assemble : for my greife's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firme earth
Can hold it up : here I and sorrowes sit,
Here is my Throne, bid kings come bow to it.

Actus

Actus Tertius, Scena prima.

Enter King Iohn, France, Dolphin, Blanch, Elianor, Philip, Austria, Constance.

Fran. 'Tis true (faire daughter) and this blessed day,
Ever in France shall be kept festiuall:
To solemnize this day the glorious sunne
Stayes in his course, and playes the Alchymist,
Turning with splendor of his precious eye
The meager cloddy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it, but a holy day.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day.
What hath this day deseru'd? what hath it done;
That it in golden letters should be set
Among the high tides in the Kalender?
Nay, rather turne this day out of the weeke,
This day of shame, oppression, perjury.
Or if it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray that their burchens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost:
But (on this day) let Sea-men feare no wracke,
No bargaines breake that are not this day made;
This day all things begun, come to ill end,
Yea, faith it selfe to hollow falsehood change.

Fran. By heaven Lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the faire proceedings of this day:
Have I not pawn'd to you my Majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeite
Resembling Majesty, which being touch'd and tride,
Proves valuelesse: you are forsworne, forsworne,
You came in Armes to spill mine enemies blood,
But now in Armes, you strengthen it with yours.
The grappling vigor, and rough frowne of Warre
Is cold in amity, and painted peace,
And our oppression had made up this league:
Arme, arme, you heavens, against these perjur'd Kings,
A widow cries, be husband to me (heavens)
Let not the houres of this ungodly day
Weare out the dayes in peace: but ere Sun-set,
Set armed discord twixt these perjur'd Kings,
Heare me, Oh, heare me.

Aust. Lady Constance, peace.

Const. Warre, warre, no peace, peace is to me a warre:
O Lymoges, O Austria, thou dost shame
That bloody spoile: thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward,
Thou little valiant, great in villany,
Thou ever strong vpon the stronger side;
Thou Fortunes Champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humourous Ladiship is by
To teach thee safety: thou art perjur'd too,
And sooth'st up greatesse. What a foole art thou,
A ramping foole, to brag, and stamp, and sweare,
Vpon my party: thou cold blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Beene sworne my souldier, bidding me depend
Vpon thy starres, thy fortune, and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou weare a Lyons hide? dost it for shame,
And hang a Calves skin on those recreant limbes.

Aust. O that a man should speake those words to me.

Phil. And hang a Calves skin on those recreant limbes.

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so villaine for thy life.

Phil. And hang a Calves skin on those recreant limbes.
Iohn. We like not this, thou dost forget thy selfe.

Enter Pandulph.

Fran. Heere comes the holy Legat of the Pope.

Pau. Haile you annointed deputies of heaven;
To thee King Iohn my holy errand is:
I Pandulph, of faire Millane Cardinall,
And from Pope Innocent the Legate heere,
Doe in his name religiously demand
Why thou against the Church, our holy Mother,
So wilfully dost spurne; and force perforce
Keepe Stephen Langton chosen Archbishop
Of Canterbury from that holy Sea:
This in our foresaid holy Fathers name
Pope Innocent, I doe demand of thee.

Iohn. What earthy name to interrogatories
Can tast the free breath of a sacred King?
Thou canst not (Cardinall) devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous
To charge me to an answer, as the Pope:
Tell him this tale, and from the mouth of England,
Adde thus much more, that no Italian Priest
Shall tythe or toll in our dominions:
But as we, under heaven, are supream head,
So under him that great supremacy
Where we doe reigne, we will alone uphold
Without th'assistance of a mortall hand:
So tell the Pope, all reverence set apart
To him and his usurp'd authority.

Fran. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this.

Iohn. Though you, and all the Kings of Christendome
Are led so grossely by this meddling Priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,
And by the merit of vilde gold, drosse, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who in that sale seles pardon from himselfe:
Though you, and all the rest so grossely led,
This juggling witch-craft with revenue cherish,
Yet I alone, alone doe me oppose
Against the Pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then by the lawfull power that I have,
Thou shalt stand curst, and excommunicate,
And blessed shall he be that doth revolt
From his Allegiance to an heretique,
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized and worshipp'd as a Saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hatefull life.

Const. O lawfull let it be
That I have roome with Rome to curse a while,
Good Father Cardinall, cry thou Amen
To my keene curses; for without my wrong,
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pau. There's law and warrant (Lady) for my curse.

Const. And for mine too, when law can doe no right.
Let it be lawfull, that Law barre no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdome heere;
For he that holds his kingdome, holds the law:
Therefore since Law it selfe is perfect wrong,
How can the Law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on perill of a curse,
Let goe the hand of that Arch-heretique,
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Vnlesse he doe submit himselfe to Rome.

Eli. Look'st thou pale France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that devill, lest that France repent,
And

And by disloyning hands hell lose a soule.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the Cardinall.

Bas. And hang a Calves-skin on his recreant limbes.

Aust. Well ruijian, I must pocket up these wrongs,
Because,

Bas. Your breeches best may carry them.

Iohn. Philip, what faist thou to the Cardinall?

Con. What should he say, but as the Cardinall?

Dolph. Bethinke you father, for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light losse of England, for a friend :
Forgoe the easier.

Bla. That is the curse of Rome.

Con. O Lewis, stand fast, the devill tempts thee heere
In likenesse of a new untrimmed Bride.

Bla. The Lady Constance speakes not from her faith,
But from her need.

Const. Oh, if thou grant my need,
Which onely lives but by the death of faith,
That need, must needs inferre this principle,
That faith would live againe by death of need :
O then tread downe my need, and faith mounts up,
Keepe my need up, and faith is trodden downe.

Iohn. The kind is moved, and answers not to this.

Const. O be remov'd from him, and answer well:

Aust. Doe so king Philip, hang no more in doubt.

Bas. Hang nothing but a Calves-skin most sweet lout.

Fran. I am perplex, and know not what to say.

Fan. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more?
If thou stand excommunicate, and curst?

Fran. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow your selfe?
This royall hand, and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward soules
Married in league, coupled, and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vowes:
The latest breath that gave the sound of words
Was deepe-sworne faith, peace, amity, true love
Betweene our kingdomes and our royall selves,
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royall bargaine up of peace,
Heaven knowes they were besmeared and over-stained
With slaughters pencill; where revenge did paint
The fearefull difference of incensed kings:
And shall these hands so lately purg'd of blood?
So newly joyn'd in love? so strong in both,
Vnyoke this feysure, and this kind regret?
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of our selves
As now againe to snatch our palme from palme:
Vn-swear faith sworne, and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody hoast,
And make a ryot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O holy sir
My reverend father, let it not be so;
Out of your grace, devise, ordaine, impose
Some gentle order, and then we shall be blest
To doe your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All forme is formelesse, Order orderlesse,
Save what is opposite to Englands love.

Therefore to Armes, be Champion of our Church,
Or let the Church our mother breathe her curse,
A mothers curse, on her revolting sonne.

France, thou maist hold a serpent by the tongue,
A cased Lion by the mortall paw,

A fasting Tyger safer by the tooth,
Than keepe in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

Fran. I may disloyne my hand, but not my faith,

Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith,
And like a civill warre setst oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd,
That is, to be the Champion of our Church,
What since thou swor'st, is sworne against thy selfe,
And may not be performed by thy selfe,
For that which thou hast sworne to doe amisse,
Is not amisse when it is truly done:

And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The better Act of purposes mistooke,
Is to mistake againe, though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby growes direct,
And falsehood, falsehood cures, as fire cooles fire
Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd.
It is religion that doth make vowes kept,
But thou hast sworne against religion:
By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st,
And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth,
Against an oath the truth, thou art unsure
To sweare, sweares onely not to be forsworne,
Else what a mockery should it be to sweare?
But thou dost sweare, onely to be forsworne,
And most forsworne, to keepe what thou dost sweare,
Therefore thy later vowes, against thy first,
Is in thy selfe rebellion to thy selfe:
And better conquest never canst thou make,
Than arme thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against these giddy loose suggestions:
Vpon which better part, our prais come in
If thou vouchsafe them. But if not, then know
The perill of our curses light on thee
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off
But in despaire, dye under their blacke weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion.

Bas. Wil't not be?

Will not a Calves-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Daul. Father, to Armes.

Blanch. Vpon thy wedding day?

Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughtered men:
Shall braying trumpets, and loud charlish drums
Clamors of hell, be measures to our pompe?
O husband heare me: aye, alacke, how new
Is husband in my mouth? even for that name
Which till this time my tongue did neere pronounce:
Vpon my knee I beg, goe not to Armes
Against mine Vncle.

Const. O, upon my knee made hard with kneeling,
I doe pray to thee, thou vertuous Daulphin,
Alter not the doome fore-thought by heaven.

Blan. Now shall I see thy love, what motive may Be stronger with thee, than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honor, Oh thine honor, Lewis thine honor.

Dolph. I muse your Majesty doth seeme so celd,
When such profound respects doe pull you on?

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

Fra. I thou shalt not need. England, I will fall from thee.

Const. O faire returne of banish'd Majesty.

Elea. O foule revolt of French inconstancy.

Eng. France, thou shalt rue this hoare within this hoare.

Bas.

Bast. Old Time the clocke fether, that bald sexton Time:
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.

Bla. The Sun's orecaft with blood: faire day adieu,
Which is the fide that I muft goe withall?

I am with both, each Army hath a hand,
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whurle a-funder, and difmember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou maift winne:
Vnkle, I needs muft pray that thou maift lofe:
Father, I may not wifh the fortune thine:
Grandam, I will not wifh thy wifhes thrive:
Who ever winnes, on that fide fhall I lofe:
Affured loffe, before the match be plaid.

Dolph. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.

Bla. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

Iohn. Cofen, goe draw our puifance together,
France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath,
A rage, whole heat hath this condition;
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood and deereft valued blood of France.

Fran. Thy rage fhall burne thee up, and thou fhalt turne
To afhes, ere our blood fhall quench that fire:
Looke to thy felfe, thou art in jeopardy.

Iohn. No more then he that threatens. To Arms! let's hie.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Alarums, Exeufions: Enter Baftard with Austria's head.

Bast. Now by my life, this day grows wondrous hot,
Some ayery devil hovers in the skie,
And pour's downe mifchiefe. Austria head ly there;

Enter Iohn, Arthur, Hubert.

While Philip breathes.

Iohn. Hubert, keepe this boy: Philip make up,
My Mother is affailed in our Tent,
And tang I feare.

Bast. My Lord I refcued her.
Her Highneffe is in fafety, feare you not:
But on my Leige, for very little paines
Will bring this labour to an happy end.

Exit.

Alarums, exeufions. Retreat. Enter Iohn, Eleanor, Arthur, Baftard, Hubert, Lords,

Iohn. So fhall it be: your grace fhall ftay behind
So ftrongly guarded: Cofen, looke not fad,
Thy Grandame loves thee, and thy Vnkle will
As deere be to thee, as thy father was.

Arth. O this will make my mother die with griefe.

Iohn. Cofen away for England, hafte before,
And ere our comming fee thou fhake the bags
Of hoording Abbots, imprifoned angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Muft by the hungry now be fed upon:
Vfe our commiffion in his utmoft force.

Bast. Bell, Booke, and Candle, fhall not drive me backe,
When gold and filver beckes me to come on.

I leave your highneffe: Grandame, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy)

For your faire fafety: fo I kiffe your hand.

Ele. Farewell gentle Cofen.

Iohn. Coz, farewell.

Ele. Come hether little kinfman, harke, a word,

Iohn. Come hether Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much: within this wall of flefh
There is a foule counts thee her Creditor,
And with advantage meanes to pay thy love:
And my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this bofome, deerefy cherished.
Give me thy hand, I had a thing to fay,
But I will fit it with fome better tune.
By heaven Hubert, I am almoft afham'd
To fay what good refpect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your Majefty.

Iohn. Good friend, thou haft no caufe to fay fo yet,
But thou fhalt have: and creepe time neere fo flow,
Yet it fhall come, for me to doe thee good.
I had a thing to fay, but let it goe:

The Sunne is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gawdes.

To give me audience; if the midnight bell
Did with his iron tongue, and brazen mouth
Sound on into the drowzy race of night:

If this fame were a Church-yard where we ftand,
And thou poffeffed with a thoufand wrongs:

Or if that furly fpirit melancholy

Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thicke,
Which elfe runnes tickling up and downe the veins,

Making that idiot laughter keepe mens eyes,
And ftaine their cheekes to idle merriment,

A paffion hatefull to my purpofes:

Or if that thou could'ft fee me without eyes,
Heare me without thine cares, and make reply

Without a tongue, ufyng conceit alone,
Without eyes, cares, and harmefull found of words:

Then, in defpight of brooded watchfull day,
I would into thy bofome poure my thoughts:

But (ah) I will not, yet I love thee well,
And by my troth I thinke thou lou'ft me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my Act,
By heaven I would doe it.

Iohn. Doe not I know thou would'ft?

Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On yon young boy: He tell thee what my friend,

He is a very ferpent in my way,

And wherefoere this foot of mine doth tread,

He lyes before me: doft thou underftand me?

Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And ile keepe him fo,
That he fhall not offend your Majefty.

Iohn. Death.

Hub. My Lord.

Iohn. A Grave.

Hub. He fhall not live.

Iohn. Enough.

I could be merry now, Hubert, I love thee.

Well, He not fay what I intend for thee:

Remember: Madam, fare you well.

He fend thofe powers o're to your Majefty.

Ele. My bleffing goe with thee.

Iohn. For England Cofen, goe.

Hubert fhall be your man, attend on you
With all true duecy: on toward Calice, ho!

Exeunt.

Scena

Scena Tertia.

Enter France, Dolphin, Pandulpho, Attendants.

Fra. So by a roaring Tempest on the flood,
A whole Armado of convicted faile
Is scattered and disioyned from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort, all shall yet goe well.

Fran. What can goe well, when we have runne so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?

Arthur tane prisoner? divers deere friends slaine?
And bloody England into Eng and gone,
Ore-bearing interruption spight of France?

Dol. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read, or heard
Of any kindred-action like to this?

Fran. Well could I beare that England had this praise,
So we could finde some patterne of our shame.

Enter Constance.

Looke who comes here? a grave unto a soule,
Holding th'eternall spirit against her will,
In the wilde prison of afflicted breath:
I prethee Lady goe away with me.

Const. Lo, now: now see the issue of your peace.

Fran. Patience good Lady, comfort gentle Constance.

Const. No, I deſie all counſell, all redreſſe,
But that which ends all counſell, true redreſſe:
Death, death, O amiable, lovely death,
Thou odoriferous ſtench: ſound rottenneſſe,
Arife forth from the couch of laſting night,
Thou hate and terror to proſperity,
And I will kiſſe thy deteſtable bones.
And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty browes,
And ring theſe fingers with thy houſhold wormes,
And ſtop this gap of breath with fulſome duſt,
And be a Carrion Monſter like thy ſelfe;
Come, grin on me, and I will thinke thou ſmil'ſt,
And buſſe thee as thy wife: Miſeric's love,
O come to me.

Fran. O faire affliction, peace.

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:
O that my tongue were in the thunders mouth,
Then with a paſſion I would ſhake the world,
And rowze from ſleepe that fell Anatomy
Which cannot heare a Ladies feeble voyce,
Which ſcornes a moderate invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madneſſe, and not ſorrow.

Const. Thou art holy to belye me ſo,
I am not mad: this haire I teare is mine,
My name is Constance, I was Geſſreys wife,
Yong Arthur is my ſonne, and he is loſt:
I am not mad, I would to heaven I were,
For then 'tis like I ſhould forget my ſelfe:
O, if I could, what griefe ſhould I forget?
Preach ſome Philoſophy to make me mad,
And thou ſhalt be Canoniz'd (Cardinall)
For, being not mad, but ſenſible of griefe,
My reaſonable part produces reaſon
How I may be deliver'd of theſe woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang my ſelfe:
If I were mad, I ſhould forget my ſonne,

Or madly thinke a babe of clowts were he;
I am not mad: too well, too well I feele
The different plague of each calamity.

Fran. Bind up thoſe trefles: O what love I note
In the faire multitude of thoſe her haire;
Where but by chance a ſilver drop hath falne,
Even to that drop ten thouſand wiery ſiends
Doe glew themſelves in ſociable griefe,
Like true, inſeparable, faithfull loves,
Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

Fran. Bind up your haire.

Const. Yeſ that I will: and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds, and cride aloud,
O, that theſe hands could ſo redeeme my ſonne,
As they have given theſe hayres their liberty:
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will againe commit them to their bonds,
Beauſe my poore child is a priſoner.
And father Cardinall, I have heard you ſay
That we ſhall ſee and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I ſhall ſee my boy againe:
For ſince the birth of Caine, the firſt male-child
To him that did but yeſterday ſuſpire,
There was not ſuch a gracious creature borne:
But now will Canker-ſorrow eate my bud,
And chaſe the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will looke as hollow as a Ghoſt,
As dim and meager as an Agues fit,
And ſo hee'll dye: and riſing ſo againe,
When I ſhall meet him in the Court of heaven
I ſhall not know him: therefore never, never Muſt I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heynous a reſpect of griefe.

Const. He talkes to me, that never had a ſonne.

Fran. You are as fond of griefe, as of your child.

Const. Greefe fills the roome up of my abſent child:
Lyes in his bed, walkes up and downe with me,
Puts on his pretty lookes, repeates his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffes out his vacant garments with his forme;
Then, have I reaſon to be fond of griefe?
Fare you well: had you ſuch a loſe as I,
I could give better comfort than you doe.
I will not keepe this forme upon my head,
When there is ſuch diſorder in my wit:
O Lord, my boy, my Arthur, my faire ſonne,
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world:
My widow-comfort, and my ſorrowes cure. Exit.

Fran. I feare ſome outrage, and ile follow her. Exit.

Dol. There's nothing in this world can make me joy.
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull care of a drowſie man;
And bitter ſhame hath ſpoyl'd the ſweet words taſte,
That it yeelds nought but ſhame and bitterneſſe.

Pand. Before the curing of a ſtrong diſeaſe,
Even in the inſtant of repaire and health,
The fit is ſtrongeſt: evils that take leave
On their departure, moſt of all ſhew evill:
What have you loſt by loſing of this day?

Dol. All dayes of glory, joy, and happineſſe.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly you had.
No, no: when Fortune meanes to men moſt good,
Shee lookes upon them with a threatning eye:
'Tis ſtrange to thinke how much King Iohn hath loſt
In this which he accounts ſo clearly wonne:

Are not you griev'd that Arthur is his prisoner?

Dol. As heartily as he is glad he hath him.

Paul. Your mind is all as youthfull as your blood.

Now heare me speake with a prophetick spirit:
For even the breath of what I meane to speake,
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub
Out of the path which shall directly leade
Thy foote to Englands Throne. And therefore marke:
Iohn hath seiz'd Arthur, and it cannot be,
That whiles warme life playes in that infants veines,
The mis-plac'd Iohn should entertaine an houre;
One minute, nay one quiet breath of rest.
A Scepter snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boysterously maintain'd as gain'd.
And he that stands upon a slipp'ry place,
Makes nice of no wilde hold to stay him up:
That Iohn may stand, then Arthur needs must fall,
So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Dol. But what shall I gaine by yong Arthurs fall?

Paul. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claime that Arthur did.

Dol. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Paul. How greene you are, and fresh in this old world?
Iohn layes you plots: the times conspire with you,
For he thā: steapes his safety in true blood,
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrue.

This Act so evilly borne shall coole the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeale,
That none so small advantage shall step forth
To checke his reigne, but they will cherish it.
No naturall exhalation in the skie,
No scope of Nature, no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will plucke away his naturall cause,
And call them Meteors, prodigies, and signes,
Abortives, presages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon Iohn.

Dol. May be he will not touch yong Arthurs life,
But hold himselfe safe in his prisonment.

Paul. O Sir, when he shall heare of your approach,
If that yong Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that newes he dies: and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kisse the lippes of unacquanted change,
And picke strong matter of revolt, and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers ends of Iohn.

Me thinkes I see this hurley all on foot;
And O, what better matter breeds for you;
Than I have nam'd. The bastard Falconbridge
Is now in England ransacking the Church,
Offending Charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in Armes, they would be as a Call
To traineten thousand English to their side;
Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a Mountaine. O noble Dolphine,
Go with me to the King, 'tis wonderfull,
What may be wrought out of their discontent,
Now that their soules are topfull of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the King.

Dol. Strong reasons makes strong actions: let us go,
If you say I, the King will not say no.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hubert and Executioners.

Hub. Heate me these Irons hot, and looke thou stand
Within the Arras: when I strike my foot
Vpon the bosome of the ground, rush forth
And binde the boy, which you shall finde with me
Fast to the chaire: be heedfull: hence and watch.

Exec. I hope your warrant will beare out the deed.

Hub. Vncleanly scruples feare not you: looke too'r.
Yong Lad come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Ar. Good morrow Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow little Prince.

Ar. As little Prince, having so great a Title
To be more Prince, as may be: you are sad.

Hub. Indeed I have beene merrier.

Ar. 'Mercie on me:

Me thinkes no body should be sad but I:
Yet I remember, when I was in Fance,
Yong Gentlemen would be as sad as night
Only for wantonneffe: by my Christendome,
So I were out of prison, and kept Sheepe
I should be as as merrie as the day is long:
And so I would be heere, but that I doubt
My Vnckle practises more harme to me:
He is affraid of me, and I of him:
Is it my fault, that I was Geffreyes sonne?
No indeed it's not: and I would to heaven
I were your sonne, so you would love me, Hubert:

Hub. If I talke to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercie, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sodaine, and dispatch.

Ar. Are you sicke Hubert? you looke pale to day,
Insooth I would you were a little sicke.
That I might sit all night, and watch with you.
I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosome.
Reade here yong Arthur. How now foolish rheume?
Turning dispiteous torture out of doore?
I must be breefe, least resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish teares.
Can you not reade it? Is it not faire writ?

Ar. Too fairely Hubert, for so foule effect,
Must you with hot Irons, burne out both mine eyes?

Hub. Yong Boy, I must.

Ar. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Ar. Have you the heart? When your head did but ake,

I knit my hand-kercher about your browes
(The best I had, a Princess wrought it me)
And I did never aske it you againe:
And with my hand, at midnight held your head;
And like the watchfull minutes, to the houre,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, what lacke you? and where lies your greefe?
Or what good love may I performe for you?
Many a poore mans sonne would haue lyen still,
And ne're have spoke a loving word to you:
But you, at your sicke service had a Prince:
Nay, you may thinke my love was craftie love,
And call it cunning. Do, and if you will,

If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that never did, nor never shall
So much as frowne on you.

Hub. I have sworne to doe it :
And with hot Irons must I burne them out.

Ar. Ah, none but in this Iron Age, would doe it :
The Iron of it selfe, though heate red hot,
Approaching neere these eyes, would drinke my teares,
And quench this fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence :
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harme mine eye :
Are you more stubborne hard, than hammer'd Iron ?
And if an Angell should have come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have beleev'd him : no tongue but Huberts.

Hub. Come forth: Doe as I bid you doe.

Ar. O save me Hubert, save me : my eyes are out
Even with the fierce lookes of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the Iron I say, and bind him heere.

Ar. Alas, what need you be so boistrous rough ?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone still :
For heaven sake Hubert let me not be bound :
Nay heare me Hubert, drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a Lamb.

I will not stirre, nor wince, nor speake a word,
Nor looke upon the Iron angerly :
Thrust but these men away, and Ile forgive you,
What ever torment you doe put me too.

Hub. Goe stand within : let me alone with him.

Exec. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed.

Ar. Alas, I then have chid away my friend,
He hath a sterne looke, but a gentle heart :
Let him come backe, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come (Boy) prepare your selfe.

Ar. Is there no remedy ?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Ar. O heaven : that there were but a moth in yours,
A graine, a dust, a gnat, a wandering haire,
Any annoyance in that precious sense :
Then feeling what small things are boysterous there
Your vilde intent must needs seeme horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? Go too, hold your tongue.

Ar. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues,
Must needs want pleading for a paire of eyes :
Let me not hold my tongue : let me not Hubert,
Or Hubert, if you will cut out my tongue,
So I may keepe mine eyes. O spare mine eyes,
Though to no use, but still to looke on you.
Loe, by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harme me.

Hub. I can heate it, boy.

Ar. No, in good sooth : the fire is dead with griefe,
Being create for comfort, to be us'd
In undeserv'd extreames : See else your selfe,
There is no malice in this burning cole,
The breath of heaven, hath blowne his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it Boy.

Ar. And if you doe, you will but make it blush,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert :
Nay, it perchance will sparkle in your eyes :
And, like a dogge that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his Master that doth tarre him on.

All things that you should use to doe me wrong
Deny their office : onely you doe lacke
That mercy, which fierce fire, and Iron extends,
Creatures of note for mercy, lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live : I will not touch thine eye,
For all the Treasure that thine Vnckle owes,
Yet am I sworne, and I did purpose, Boy,
With this same very Iron, to burne them out:

Ar. O now you looke like Hubert. All this while
You were disguis'd.

Hub. Peace : no more. Adieu,
Your Vnckle must not know but you are dead.
Ile fill these dogged Spies with false reports :
And, pretty child, sleepe doublelesse, and secure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Ar. O heaven ! I thanke you Hubert.

Hub. Silence, no more : goe closely in with me.
Much danger doe I undergoe for thee.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Iohn, Pembroke, Salisbury, and other lords.

Iohn. Heere once againe we sit : once against crown'd
And look'd upon, I hope, with chearefull eyes.

Pem. This once againe (but that your highnesse pleas'd)
Was once superfluous : you were Crown'd before,
And that high Royalty was ne're pluck'd off :
The faiths of men, ne're stained with revolt :
Fresh expectation troubled not the Land
With any long'd-for-change, or better State.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pompe,
To guard a Title, that was rich before ;
To gild refined gold, to paint the Lilly ;
To throw a pertume on the Violet,
To smooth the yce, or adde another hew
Vnto the Raine-bow ; or with Taper-light
To seeke the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wastefull, and ridiculous excesse.

Pem. But that your Royall pleasure must be done,
This acte is as an ancient tale new told,
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this the Anticke, and well noted face
Of plaine old forme, is much disfigured,
And like a shifted winde unto a saile,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles, and frights consideration :
Makes sound opinion sicke, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workemen strive to doe better than wel,
They doe confound their skill in covetousnesse,
And oftentimes excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by th'excuse :
As patches set upon a little breach,
Discredite more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd,

Sal. To this effect, before you were new crown'd
We breath'd our Councell : but it pleas'd your highnesse
To over-beare it, and we are all well pleas'd,
Since all, and every part of what we would Doth make a stand, at what your highnesse will.

Iohn.

Ioh. Some reasons of this double Coronation
I have posselt you with, and thinke them strong.
And more, more strong, then lesse is my feare
I shall indue you with: Meane time, but aske
What you would have reform'd, that is not well,
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both heare, and grant you your requests:

Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these
To found the purposes of all their hearts,
Both for my selfe, and them: but chiefe of all
Your safety: for the which, my selfe and them
Bend their best studies, heartily request
Th' infranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To breake into this dangerous argument.
If what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your feares, which (as they say) attend
The steppes of wrong, should move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choake his dayes
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise,
That the times enemies may not have this
To grace occasions: let it be our suite,
That you have bid us aske his liberty,
Which for our goods, we doe no further aske,
Than, whereupon our weale on you depending,
Counts it your weale: he have his liberty.

Enter Hubert.

Iohn. Let it be so: I doe commit his youth
To your direction: Hubert, what newes with you?

Pem. This is the man should doe the bloody deed:
He shew'd his warrant to a friend of mine,
The image of a wicked heynous fault
Lives in his eye: that close aspect of his,
Doe shew the mood of a much troubled breast,
And I doe fearefully beleieve 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to doe.

Sal. The colour of the King doth come, and goe,
Betweene his purpose and his conscience,
Like Heralds' twixt two dreadfull battailes set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must breake.

Pem. And when it breakes, I feare will issue thence
The foule corruption of a sweet child's death.

Iohn. We cannot hold mortalities strong hand.
Good lords, although my will to give, is living,
The suite which you demand is gone, and dead.
He tels us Arthur is deceas'd to night.

Sal. Indeed we fear'd his sicknesse was past cure.

Pem. Indeed we heard how neere his death he was,
Before the child himselfe felt he was sicke;
This must be answer'd either heere, or hence.

Iohn. Why doe you bend such solemne browes on me?
Thinke you I beare the Sheeres of destiny?
Have I commandement on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparant foule-play, and 'tis shame
That greatnesse should so grossely offer it;
So thrive it in your game, and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet (lord Salisbury) Ile goe with thee,
And find th' inheritance of this poore child,
His little kingdome of a forced grave.
That blood which ow'd the bredth of all this Ile,
Three foot of it doth hold; bad world the while:
This must not be thus borne, this will breake out
To all our sorrowes, and ere long I doubt.

Exeunt.

Iohn. They burne in indignation: I repent: Enter Mes.
There is no sure foundation set on blood:

No certaine life atchiev'd by others death:
A fearefull eye thou hast. Where is that blood,
That I have seene inhabite in those cheekes?
So foule a skie, cleeres not without a storme,
Poure downe thy weather: how goes all in France?

Mes. From France to England, never such a powre
For any forraigne preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land.
The Copy of your speed is learn'd by them:
For when you should be told they doe prepare,
The tydings comes, that they are all arriv'd.

Ioh. Oh where hath our intelligence beene drunke?
Where hath it slept? Where is my Mothers care?
That such an Army could be drawn in France,
And she not heare of it?

Mes. My Leige, her care
Is stopt with dust: the first of Apill di'de
Your noble mother; and as I heare, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenize di'de
Three dayes before: but this from Rumors tongue
I idely heard: if true, or false I know not.

Iohn. Withhold thy speed, dreadfull occasion:
O make a league with me, 'till I have pleas'd
My discontented Peeres. What? Mother dead?
How wildely then walkes my Estate in France?
Vnder whose conduct came those powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'st out are landed heere?

Mes. Vnder the Dolphin.

Enter Bastard, and Peter of Pomfret.

Iohn. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tydings: Now? What sayes the world
To your proceedings? Doe not seeke to stuffe
My head with more ill newes: for it is full.

Bast. But if you be asfeard to heare the worst,
Then let the worst unheard, fall on your head.

Iohn. Beare with me Cosen, for I was amaz'd
Vnder the tide; but now I breath againe
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speake it of what it will.

Bast. How I have sped among the Clergy men,
The summes I have collected shall expresse:
But as I travail'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied,
Posselt with rumors, full of idle dreames,
Not knowing what they feare, but full of feare.
And here's a Prophet that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heeles:
To whom he sung in rude harsh sounding rimes,
That ere the next Ascension day at noone,
Your highnesse should deliver up your Crowne.

Ioh. Thou idle Dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

Pet. Fore-knowing that the truth will fall out so.

Ioh. Hubert, away with him: imprison him,
And on that day at noone, whereon he sayes
I shall yeeld up my Crowne, let him be hang'd.
Deliver him to safety, and returne,
For I must use thee. O my gentle Cosen,
Hear'st thou the newes abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French (my lord) mens mouths are full of it:
Besides I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury
With eyes as red as new enkindled fire,
And others more, going to seeke the grave
Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to night, on your

Iohn. Gentle kinsman, goe (suggestion.)
And thrust thy selfe into their Companies,

I have a way to winne their loves againe :
Bring them before me.

Basf. I will seeke them out.

Iohn. Nay, but make haste : the better foot before.
O, let me have no subjects enemies,
When adverse Forreyners affright my Townes
With dreadfull pompe of stout invasion.
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heeles,
And flye (like thought) from them, to me againe.

Basf. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. Exit.

Iohn. Spoke like a sprightfull Noble Gentleman.
Goe after him : for he perhaps shall need
Some Messenger betwixt me, and the Peeres,
And be thou he.

Mef. With all my heart, my Liege.

Iohn. My mother dead ?

Enter Hubert.

Hub. My lord, they say five Moones were seene to Foure fixed, and the fift did whirle about (night:
The other foure, in wondrous motion.

Iohn. Five Moones ?

Hub. Old men, and Beldames, in the streets
Doe prophesie upon it dangerously :
Yong Arthurs death is common in their mouths,
And when they talke of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the eare.
And he that speaks, doth gripe the hearers wrist,
Whilst he that heares, makes fearefull action
With wrinkled browes, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a Smith stand with his hammer (thus)
The whilst his Iron did on the Anvile coole,
With open mouth swallowing a Taylors newes,
Who with his Sheeres, and Measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feete,
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattailed, and rank'd in Kent.
Another leane, unwash'd Artificer,
Cuts off his tale, and talkes of Arthurs death.

Ioh. Why seek'st thou to possesse me with these feares?
Why urgest thou so oft yong Arthurs death?
Thy hand hath murderd him : I had a mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

H. No had (my lord?) why, did you not provoke me?

Iohn. It is the curse of Kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humors for a warrant,
To breake the bloody house of life,
And on the winking of Authority
To understand a Law ; to know the meaning
Of dangerous Majelty, when perchance it frownes
More upon humor, than advi'd respect.

Hub. Heere is your hand and Seale for what I did.

Ioh. Oh, when the last account twixt heaven and earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and Seale
Witnesse against us to damnation.
How oft the sight of meanes to doe ill deeds,
Make deeds ill done? Had'st not thou beene by,
A fellow by the hand of Nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to doe a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.
But taking note of thy abhorr'd Aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villany :
Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthurs death :
And thou, to be enderred to a King,
Made it no conscience to destroy a Prince.

Hub. My lord.

Ioh. Had'st thou but shooke thy head, or made a pause
When I spake darkely, what I purposed :
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face ;
As bid me tell my tale in expresse words :
Deepe shame had struck me dumbe, made me breake off,
And those thy feares, might have wrought feares in me.
But, thou didst understand me by my signes,
And didst in signes againe parley with sinne,
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart content,
And consequently, thy rude hand to acte
The deed, which both our tongues held vild to name
Out of my sight, and never see me more :
My Nobles leave me, and my State is braved,
Even at my gates, with ranks of forraigne powres ;
Nay, in the body of this fleshy Land,
This kingdom, this Confinde of blood, and breathe
Hostility, and civill tumult reignes
Betweene my conscience, and my Cofins death.

Hub. Arme you against your other enemies :
Ile make a peace betweene your soule, and you,
Yong Arthur is alive : This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden, and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the Crimson spots of blood:
Within this bosome, never entred yet
The dreadfull motion of a murderous thought,
And you have slander'd Nature in my forme,
Which howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fayrer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

Iohn. Doth Arthur live? O hast thee to the Peeres,
Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience.
Forgive the Comment that my passion made
Vpon thy feature, for my rage was blind,
And foule immaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
Oh, answer not ; but to my Closet bring,
The angry Lords, with all expedient hast,
I conjure thee but slowly : run more fast.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Arthur on the walles.

Art. The wall is high, and yet will I leape downe.
Good ground be pitifull, and hurt me not :
There's few or none doe know me, if they did,
This Ship-boyes semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
I am afraide, and yet Ile venture it.
If I get downe, and doe not breake my limbes,
Ile find a thousand shifts to get away ;
As good to dye, and goe ; as dye, and stay.
Oh me, my Vnckles spirit is in these stones,
Heaventake my soule, and England keepe my bones, Die

Enter Pembroke, and Salisbury, and Bigot.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmondsbury,
It is our safety, and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perillous time.

Pem. Who brought that Letter from the Cardinall?

Sal. The Count Melloone, a Noble lord of France,
Whose private with me of the Dolphines love,
Is much more generall, than these lines import.

Bigot.

Big. To morrow morning let us meete him then.
Sal. Or rather then set forward, for 'twill be
 Two long dayes journey (lords) or ere we meete.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Once more to day well met, distemper'd lords,
 The King by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The King hath dispossest himselfe of us,
 We will n ot lyne his thin-bestained clake
 With our pure Honors: nor attend the foote
 That leaves the print of blood where ere it walkes.
 Returne, and tell him so: we know the worst. (best.)

Bast. What ere you thinke, good words I thinke were

Sal. Our greifes, and not our manners reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grieve.

Therefore 'twere reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his priviledge.

Bast. 'Tistrue, to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison: What is he lyes heere?

P. Oh death made proud with pure and princely beuty,
 The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murther, as hating what himselfe hath done,
 Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.

Big. Or when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,
 Found it too precious Princely, for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what thinke you? you have beheld,
 Or have you read, or heard, or could you thinke?

Or doe you almost thinke, although you see,
 That you doe see? could thought, without this object

Forme such another? this is the very top,

The heighth, the Crest: or Crest unto the Crest

Of murthers Armes: this is the bloodiest shame,

The wildest Savagery, the vildest stroke

That ever wall-cy'd wrath, or staring rage

Presented to the teares of soft remorse.

Pem. All murthers past, doe stand excus'd in this:

And this so sole, and so unmatcheable,

Shall give a holinesse, a purity,

To the yet unbegotten sinne of times;

And prove a deadly blood-shed, but a jest,

Exempld by this heynous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned, and a bloody worke,

The gracelesse action of a heavy hand,

If that it be the worke of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the worke of any hand?

We had a kind of light, what would ensue:

It is the shamefull worke of Huberts hand,

The practice, and the purpose of the King:

From whose obedience I forbid my soule,

Kneeling before this ruine of sweet life,

And breathing to his breathlesse excellence

The incense of a Vow, a holy Vow:

Never to taste the pleasures of the world,

Never to be infected with delight,

Nor conversant with Ease, and idlenesse,

Till I have set a glory to this hand,

By giving it the worship of Revenge.

Pem. Big. Our soules religiously confirme thy words.

Enter Hubert

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste, in seeking you,
Arthur doth live, the King hath sent for you.

Sal. Oh he is bold, and blushes not at death:

Avant thou hatefull villaine, get thee gone.

Hub. I am no villaine.

Sal. Must I rob the Law.

Bast. Your sword is bright sir, put it up againe.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murtherers skin.

Hub. Stand backe lord Salisbury, stand backe I say
 By heaven, I thinke my sword's as sharpe as yours.

I would not have you (lord) forget your selfe,

Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;

Least I by marking of your rage, forget

Your Worth, your Greatnesse, and Nobility.

Big. Out dunghill: dar'st thou brave a Nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend

My innocent life against an Emperor.

Sal. Thou art a Murtherer.

Hub. Doe not prove me so:

Yet I am none. Whose tongue so ere speakes false;

Not truly speakes: who speakes not truly, Lies.

Pem. Cut him to peeces.

Bast. Keepe the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gaul you Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wer't better gaul the divel, Salisbury.

If thou but frowne on me, or stirre thy foote,

Or teach thy hasty spleene to doe me shame,

Ile strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime,

Or Ile so maule you, and your tosting-Iron,

That you shall thinke the divel is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou doe, renowned Faulconbridge?

Second a Villaine, and a Murtherer?

Hub. Lord Bigor, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this Prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an houre since I left him well:

I honour'd him, I lov'd him, and will weepe

My date of life out, for his sweet lives losse.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,

For villanie is not without such rheume,

And he, long traded in it, makes it seeme

Like Rivers of remorse and innocency.

Away with me, all you whose soules abhorre

Th'uncleanly savour of a slaughter-house,

For I am stifled with this smell of sionne.

Big. Away, toward Bury, to the Dolphin there.

P. There tell the King, he may inquire us out. Ex. Lords.

Ba. Here's a good world: knew you of this faire worke?

Beyond the infinite and boundlesse reach of mercy,

(If thou didst this deed of death) art thou damn'd Hubert.

Hub. Doe but heare me sir.

Bast. Ha? Ile tell thee what,

Thou'rt damn'd as blacke, nay nothing is so blacke,

Thou art more deepe dam n'd than Prince Lucifer.

There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell

As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Vpon my soule.

Bast. If thou didst but consent

To this most cruell Act: doe but despaire,

And if thou want'st a Cord, the smallest thred

That ever Spider twisted from her wombe

Will serve to strangle thee: A rush will be a beame

To hang thee on. Or wouldst thou drowne thy selfe,

Put but a little water in a spoone,

And it shall be as all the Ocean,

Enough to stife such a villaine up.

I doe suspect thee very greivously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sinne of thought,

Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath

Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,

Let hell want paines enough to torture me:

I left him well.

Bast. Goe, beare him in thine armes:

I am amaz'd me thinkes, and loose my way

Among the thornes, and dangers of this world,

b 3

How

How easie dost thou take all England up,
From forth this morcell of dead Royalty?
The life, the right, and truth of all this Realme
Is fled to heaven: and England now is left
To tug and scamble, and to part by th'teeth
The unow'd interest of proud swelling State:
Now for the bare-pickt bone of Majesty,
Doth dogged warre bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now Powers from home, and discontents at home
Meet in one line: and vast confusion waites
As doth a Raven on a sicke-falne beast,
The imminent decay of wrested pompe.
Now happy he, whose cloake and center can Hold out this tempest. Beare away that child,
And follow me with speed; Ile to the King:
A thousand busineses are brieft in hand,
And heaven it selfe doth frowne upon the Land. Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter King John, and Pandulph, attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yeelded up into your hand
The Circle of my glory.

Pand. Take againe
From this my hand, as holding of the Pope
Your Sovereigne greatnesse and authority.

John. Now keepe your holy word, goe meet the French,
And from his holinesse use all your power
To stop their marches 'fore we are enflam'd:
Our discontented Counties doe revolt:
Our people quarrell with obedience,
Swearing Allegiance, and the love of soule
To stranger-bioud, to forren Royalty;
This inundation of mistempred humor,
Rests by you onely to be qualified.
Then pause not; for the present time's so sicke,
That present medicine must be ministred,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this Tempest up,
Vpon your stubborne usage of the Pope:
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush againe this storme of warre,
And make faire weather in your blustering land:
On this Ascension day, remember well,
Vpon your oath of service to the Pope,
Goe I to make the French lay downe their Armes. Exit.

John. Is this Ascension day? did not the Prophet
Say, that before Ascension day at noone,
My Crowne I should give off? even so I have:
I did suppose it should be on constraint,
But (heav'n be thank'd) it is but voluntary.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yeelded: nothing there holds out
But Dover Castle: London hath receiv'd
Like a kind Host, the Dolphin and his powers.
Your Nobles will not heare you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy:
And wilde amazement hurries up and down
The little number of doubtfull friends.

John. Would not my lords returne to me againe
After they heard yong Arthur was alive?

Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty Casket, where the Jewell of life
By some damn'd hand was rob'd, and tane away.

John. That villaine Hubert told me he did live.

Bast. So on my soule he did, for ought he knew:
But wherefore doe you droope? why looke you sad?
Be great in act, as you have beene in thought:
Let not the world see feare and sad distrust
Governe the motion of a kingly eye:
Be stirring as the time, be fire with fire,
Threaten the threatner, and out-face the brow
Of bragging horror: So shall inferior eyes
That borrow their behaviours from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntlesse spirit of resolution.
Away, and glister like the god of warre
When he intendeth to become the field:
Shew boldnesse and aspiring confidence:
What, shall they seeke the Lyon in his denne,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
Oh let it not be said: forrage, and runne
To meet displeasure farther from the doores,
And grapple with him ere he come so nye.

John. The Legat of the Pope hath beene with mee,
And I have made a happy peace with him,
And he hath promis'd to dismisse the Powers
Led by the Dolphin.

Bast. Oh inglorious league:
Shall we upon the footing of our land,
Send faire-play-orders, and make compromise,
Insinuation, parley, and base truce
To Armes Invasive? Shall a bearded boy,
A cockred-silken wanton brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warre-like soyle,
Mocking the ayre with colours idly spred,
And find no checke? Let us my Leige to Armes:
Perchance the Cardinall cannot make your peace;
Or if he doe, let it at least be said
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away then with good courage: yet I know
Our Party may well meet a powder foe. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter (in Armes) Dolphin, Salisbury, Mel'borne, Pembroke, Bigot, Souldiers.

Dol. My lord Melborne, let this be coppied out,
And keepe it safe for our remembrance:
Returne the president to these lords againe,
That having our faire order written downe,
Both they and we, perusing ore these notes
May know wherefore we tooke the Sacrament,
And keep our faithes firme and inviolable.

Sal. Vpon our sides it never shall be broken.
And Noble Dolphin, albeit we sweare
A voluntary zeale, and an un-urg'd faith
To your proceedings: yet beleve me Prince,
I am not glad that such a fore of time
Should seeke a plaster by condemn'd revolt,
And heale the inveterate Canker of one wound,

By

By making many : Oh it grieues my soule,
That I must draw this mettle from my side
To be a widdow-maker : oh, and there
Where honourable rescue, and defence
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury.
But such is the infection of the time,
That for the health and Physicke of our right,
We cannot deale but with the very hand
Of sterne injustice, and confused wrong:
And is't not pittie, (oh my grieved friends)
That we, the sonnes and children of this Ile,
Were borne to see so sad an houre as this,
Wherein we step after a stranger, march
Vpon her gentle bosome, and fill up
Her enemies ranks? I must withdraw, and weepe
Vpon the spot of this inforced cause,
To grace the Gentry of a Land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours heere:
What heere? O Nation that thou couldst remove,
That Neptunes Armes who clippeth thee about,
Would beare thee from the knowledge of thy selfe,
And cripple thee unto a Pagan shore,
Where these two Christian Armies might combine
The blood of malice, in a veine of league,
And not to spend it so un-neighbourly.

Dolph. A noble temper dost thou shew in this,
And great affections wrastring in thy bosome
Doth make an earth-quake of Nobility:
Oh, what a noble combate hast fought
Betweene compulsion, and a brave respect:
Let me wipe off this honourable dewe,
That silvery doth progresse on thy cheekes:
My heart hath melted at a Ladies teares,
Being an ordinary Inundation:
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This showre, blowne up by tempest of the soule,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seene the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite ore with burning Meteors.
Lift up thy brow (renowned Salisbury)
And with a great heart heave away this storme:
Commend these warres to those baby-eyes
That never saw the giant-world enrag'd,
Nor met with Fortune, other than at feasts,
Full warme of blood, of mirth, of gossiping:
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deepe
Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Lewis himselfe: so (Nobles) shall you all,
That knit your finewes to the strength of mine.

Enter Pandulpho.

And even there, methinkes an Angel spake,
Looke where the holy Legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven,
And on our actions set the name of right
With holy breath.

Pand. Haile noble Prince of France:
The next is this: King Iohn hath reconcil'd
Himselfe to Rome, his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy Church,
The great Metropolis and Sea of Rome:
Therefore thy threatening colours now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wilde warre,
That like a Lyon fostered up at hand,
It may lye gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmefull than in shew.

Dolph. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not backe:

I am too high-borne to be propertyed
To be a secondary at controull,
Or usefull serving-man, and instrument
To any Sovereigne State throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coale of warres;
Betweene this chaltiz'd kingdome and my selfe;
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now tis farre too huge to be blowne out
With that same weake wind, which enkindled it:
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprize into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me Iohn hath made
His peace with Rome? what is that peace to me?
I (by the honor of my marriage bed)
After yong Arthur, claime this land for mine,
And now it is halfe conquer'd, must I backe,
Because that Iohn hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Romes slave? what penny hath Rome borne?
What men provided? what munition sent To under-prop this Action? Is't not I
That under-goethis charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claime are liable,
Sweat in this busynesse, and maintaine this warre?
Have I not heard these Islanders shout out
Uive le Roy, as I have bank'd their Townes?
Have I not heere the best Cards for the game
To winne this easie match, plaid for a Crowne?
And shall I now give ore the yeelded Set?
No, no, on my soule it never shall be said.

Pand. You looke but on the out-side of this worke.

Dolph. Out-side or in-side, I will not returne
Till my attempt so much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promised,
Before I drew this gallant head of warre,
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world
To out-looke Conquest, and to winne renowne
Even in the jawes of danger, and of death:
What lusty Trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter Bastard.

Bast. According to the faire-play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am sent to speake:
My holy lord of Millane, from the King
I come to learne how you have dealt for him:
And, as you answer, I doe know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dolphin is too wilfull opposite
And will not temporize with my intreaties:
He flatly sayes, hee'll not lay downe his Armes.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth sayes well. Now heere our English King,
For thus his Royalty doth speake in me:
He is prepar'd, and reason too he should,
This apish and unmannerly approach;
This harness'd Maske, and unadvised Revell,
This unheard sawcynesse and boyish Troopes,
The King doth smile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish warre, this Pigmy Armes
From out the circle of his Territories:
That hand which had the strength even at your dore,
To cudgell you, and make you take the hatch,
To dive like Buckets in concealed Wells,
To crouch in litter of your stable planks,
To lye like pawnes, lock'd up in chetis and trunckes,
To hug with swine, to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrill and shake,

Even

Even at the crying of your Nations crow,
Thinking this voyce an armed English man.
Shall that victorious hand be feeble heere,
That in your Chambers gave you chastisement?
No: know the gallant Monarch is in Armes,
And like an Eagle, o're his ayery towres,
To fowle annoyance that comes neere his Nest;
And you degenerate, you ingrate Revolts,
You bloody Nero's, ripping up the wombe
Of your deere Mother-England: blush for shame:
For your owne Ladies, and pale-vifag'd Maides,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drummes:
Their thimbles into armed Gantlets change,
Their Needl's to Lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Dol. There end thy brave, and turne thy face in peace,
We grant thou canst out-scold us: fare thee well,
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabler.

Pan. Give me leave to speake.

Bast. No, I will speake.

Dol. We will attend to neither:

Strike up the drummes, and let the tongue of warre
Pleade for our interest, and our being heere.

Bast. Indeed your drummes being beaten, wil cry out;
And so shall you, being beaten: doe but start
An eccho with the clamor of thy drumme,
And even at hand, a drumme is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all, as lowd as thine.
Sound but another, and another shall
(As lowd as thine) rattle the Welkins eare,
And mocke the deepe mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting Legate heere, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport, than need)
Is warlike Iohn: and in his forehead sits
A bare-rib'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Dol. Strike up our drummes, to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it (Dolphin) doe not doubt

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Alarums. Enter Iohn, and Hubert.

Iohn. How goes the day with us? oh tell me Hubert.

Hub. Badly I feare; how fares your Majesty?

Iohn. This Feaver that hath troubled me so long,
Lyes heavy on me: oh, my heart is sicke.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord: your valiant kinsman Faulconbridge,
Desires your Majesty to leave the field,
And send him word by me, which way you goe.

Iohn. Tell him toward Swinsford, to the Abbey there.

Mes. Be of good comfort: for the great supply,
That was expected by the Dolphin heere,
Are wrack'd three nights agoe on Goodwin sands.
This newes was brought to Richard but even now,
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

Iohn. Aye me, this tyraot Feaver burnes me up,
And will not let me welcome this good newes.
Set on toward Swinsford: to my Litter straight,
Weaknesse possesseth me, and I am faint.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and Bigot.

Sal. I did not thinke the King so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Vp once againe: put spirit in the French,
If they miscarry: we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten divell Faulconbridge,
In spight of spight, alone upholds the day.

Pem. They say King Iohn sore sicke, hath left the field.

Enter Meloon wounded.

Mel. Lead me to the Revolts of England heere.

Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Meloon.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Flye Noble English, you are bought and sold,
Vnthred the rude eye of Rebellion,
And welcome home againe discarded faith,
Sceke out King Iohn, and fall before his feet:
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He meanes to recompence the paines you take,
By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he sworne,
And I with him, and many moe with me,
Vpon the Altar at Saint Edmundsbury,
Even on that Altar, where we swore to you
Deere Amity, and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? May this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a forme of waxe
Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceite?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must dye heere, and live hence, by truth?
I say againe, if Lewis doe winne the day,
He is forsworne, if ere those eyes of yours
Behold another day breake in the East:
But even this night, whose blacke contagious breath
Already smoakes about the burning Crest
Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied Sunne,
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated Treachery,
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives:
If Lewis, by your assistance win the day.
Commend me to one Hubert, with your King;
The love of him, and this respect besides
(For that my Grandfire was an Englishman)
Awakes my conscience to confesse all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you beare me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field;
Where I may thinke the remnant of my thoughts
In peace: and part this body and my soule
With contemplation, and devout desires.

Sal. We doe beleeve thee, and beshrew my soule,
But I doe love the favour, and the forme
Of this most faire occasion, by the which
We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankenesse and irregular course,
Stoope low within those bounds we have ore-look'd,
And calmly run on in obedience,
Even to our Ocean, to our great King Iohn.
My arme shall give thee helpe to beare thee hence,

For

For I doe see the cruell pangs of death
Right in thine eye. Away, my friends, new flight,
And happy newnesse that intends old right. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Dolphin, and his Traine.

Del. The Sun of heaven (me thought) was loath to set;
But staid, and made the Westerne Welkin blush,
When Englisb measure backward their owne ground
In faint retyre: Oh bravely came we off,
When with a Volley of our needlesse shot,
After such bloody toyle, we bid good night,
And woon'd our tott'ring colours clearly up,
Lait in the field, and almost Lords of it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Where is my Prince the Dolphin?

Dol. Heere, what newes?

Mes. The Count Meloone is slaine: The Englisb Lords
By his perswasion are at length falne off,
And your supply which you have wish'd so long,
Are cast away, and funke on Goodwin Sands.

Dol. Ah foule shrew'd newes. Bestrew thy very heart:
I did not thinke to be so sad to night
As this hath made me. Who was he that said
King Iohn did fly an houre or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary powres?

Mes. Who ever spoke it, it is true my Lord,

Dol. Well: keep good quarter, and good care to night,
The day shall not be up so soone as I,
To try the faire adventure of to morrow. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Bastard and Hubert severally.

Hub. Whose there? Speake hoa, speake quickly, or I shoot:

Bast. A Friend. What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou goe?

Hub. What's that to thee?

Why may not I demand of thine affaires,
As well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I thinke.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought:
I will upon all hazzards well beleeve
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well:
Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: and if thou please
Thou maist be-friend me so much, as to thinke
I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Vnkinde remembrance: thou, and endlessse night,
Have done me shame: Brave Souldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue,
Should scape the true acquaintance of mine eare.

Bast. Come, come: sans complement, What newes abroad?

Hub. Why here walke I, in the blacke brow of night,
To finde you out.

Bast. Briefe then: and what's the newes?

Hub. O my sweet Sir, newes fitting to the night,
Blacke, fearefull, comfortlesse, and horrible.

Bast. Shew me the very wound of this ill newes,
I am no woman, Ile not fswound at it.

Hub. The King I feare is poyson'd by a Monke,
I left him almost speechlesse, and broke out
To acquaint you with this evill, that you might
The better arme you to the sodaine time,
Than if you had at leisure knowne of this.

Bast. How did he take it? Who did taste to him?

Hub. A Monke I tell you, a resolved Villaine
Whose bowels suddenly burst out: The King
Yet speakes, and peradventure may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his Majesty?

Hub. Why know you not? The Lords are all come backe,

And brought Prince Henry in their company,
At whose request the King hath pardon'd them,
And they are all about his Majestie.

Bast. With-hold thine indignation, mighty heaven,
And tempt us not to beare above our power.

Ile tell thee Hubert, halfe my power this night
Passing these Flets, are taken by the Tide,
These Lincolne-washes have devoured them,
My selfe, well mounted, have escap'd.

Away before: Conduct me to the King,
I doubt he will be dead, ere I come. Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

Hen. It is too late, the life of all his bloud
Istouch'd, corruptibly: and his pure braine
(Which some suppose the foules fraile dwelling house)
Doth by the idle Comments that it makes,
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His Highnesse yet doth speake, and holds beleeve,
That being brought into the open ayre,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poyson which assyleth him.

Hen. Let him be brought into the Orchard heere:
Doth he still rage?

Pem. He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he sung.

Hen. Oh vanity of sicknesse: fierce extreames
In their continuance, will not feele themselves.
Death having prei'd upon the outward parts
Leaves them invisible, and his siege is now
Against the wind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies,
Which in their throng and presse to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'Tis strange that death should sing:
I am the Symet to this pale faint Swan,
Who chaunts a dolefull hymne to his owne death,
And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings
His foule and body their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort (Prince) for you are borne
To set a forme upon that indigest
Which he hath left so shapelesse, and so rude.

Iohn brought in.

Iohn. I marry, now my foule hath elbow-roome,

It would not out at windowes, nor at doores,
There is so hot a Summer in my bosome,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribled forme drawne with a pen,
Vpon a Parchment, and against this fire
Doe I shrinke up.

Hen. How fares your Majestie?

Ioh. Poyson'd, ill fare: dead, forsooke, cast off,
And none of you will bid the Winter come
To thrust his ycie fingers in my maw;
Nor let my Kingdomes Rivers take their course
Through my burn'd bosome: nor intreat the North
To make his bleake windes kisse my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold. I doe not aske you much,
I beg cold comfort: and you are so straight
And so ingratefull, you deny me that.

Hen. Oh that there were some vertue in my teares,
That might relieve you.

Iohn. The salt of them is hot.
Within me is a hell, and there the poyson
Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize,
On unrepreevable condemned blood.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Oh, I am scalded with my violent motion
And spleene off speed, to see your Majestie.

Iohn. Oh Cozen, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart, is crack'd and burnt,
And all the shrowds wherewith my life should faile,
Are turned to one thred, one little haire:
My heart hath one poore string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy newes be uttered,
And then all this thou seest, is but a clod,
And module of confounded Royalty.

Bast. The Dolphin is preparing hither-ward,
Where heaven he knowes how we shall answer him.
For in a night the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the Washes all unwarily,
Devoured by the unexpected flood.

Sal. You breathe these dead newes in as dead an eare
My Liege, my Lord: but now a King, now thus.

Hen. Even so must I runne on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a King, and now is Clay?

Bast. Art thou gone so? I doe but stay behinde
To doe the office for thee, of revenge,
And then my soule shall waite on thee to heaven,

As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now you Stars, that move in your right Spheres,
Where be your powers? Shew now your mended faiths,
And instantly returne with me againe,
To push destruction and perpetuall shame
Out of the weake doore of our fainting Land:
Straight let us seeke, or straight we shall be fought,
The Dolphin rages at our very heeles.

Sal. It seemes you know not then so much as we,
The Cardinall Pandulph is within at rest,
Who halfe an houre since came from the Dolphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace,
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this warre.

Bast. He will the rather doe it, when he sees
Our selves well sinew'd to our defence.

Sal. Nay, 'tis in a manner done already,
For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the Sea-side, and put his caule and quarrell
To the disposing of the Cardinall,
With whom your selfe, my selfe, and other Lords,
If you thinke meete, this afternoone will post
To consummate this businesse happily.

Bast. Let it be so, and you my Noble Prince,
With other Princes that may best be spar'd,
Shall waite upon your Fathers funerall.

Hen. At Worster must his body be interr'd,
For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then,
And happily may your sweet selfe put on
The lineall state, and glory of the Land,
To whom with all submission on my knee,
I doe bequeath my faithfull services
And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make
To rest without a spot for evermore.

Hen. I have a kinde soule that would give thanks,
And knowes not how to doe it, but with teares.

Bast. Oh let us pay the time: but needfull woe,
Since it hath bene beforehand with our griefes.
This England never did, nor never shall Lye at the proud foote of a Conquerer,
But when it first did helpe to wound it selfe.
Now, these her Princes are come home againe,
Come the three corners of the world in Armes,
And we shall shooke them: Nought shall make us rue,
If England to it selfe, doe rest but true.

Exeunt.

FJNJS.

The Life and Death of King Richard the Second.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter King Richard, John of Gaunt, with other Nobles and Attendants.

King Richard.

Ed John of Gaunt, time-honoured Lancaster,
Hast thou according to thy oath and band,
Brought hither Henry Herford thy bold son:
Here to make good the boysterous late ap-
Which then our leasure would not let us heare, (peale,
Against the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have my Liege.

King. Tell me moreover, hast thou sounded him;
If he appeale the Duke on ancient malice;
Or worthily as a good subject should,
On some knowne ground of treachery in him.

Gaunt. As neere as I could sift him on that argument,
On some apparant danger seene in him,
Aym'd at your highnesse, no inveterate malice.

King. Then call them to our prefence face to face,
And frowning brow to brow, our selves will heare
Th'accuser, and the accused, freely speake;
High stomack'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage, deafe as the sea; hasty as fire.

Enter Bullingbrooke and Mowbray.

Bull. Many yeares of happy dayes befall
My gracious Sovereigne, my most loving Liege.

Mow. Each day still better others happinesse,
Vntill the heavens envying earths good hap,
Adde an immortal title to your Crowne.

King. We thanke you both, yet one but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come,
Namely to appeale each other of high treason.
Cousin of Herford what dost thou object
Against the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray?

Bull. First, heaven be the record to my speech,
In the devotion of a subjects love,
Tendring the precious safety of my Prince,
And free from other mis-begotten hate,
Come I appealant to this Princely prefence.
Now Thomas Mowbray doe I turne to thee,
And marke my greeting well: for what I speake,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soule answer it in heaven.
Thou art a Traitor and a miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to live,
Since the more faire and Cristall is the skie,

The uglier seeme the cloudes that in it flye:
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foule traitors name stuffe I thy throat,
And wish (so please my Sovereigne) ere I move, (prove,
What my tongue speaks, my right drawne sword may

Mow. Let not my coole words here accuse my zeale:
Tis not the tryall of a womans warre,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twaine:
The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this.
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husht, and nought at all to say.
First the faire reverence of your highnesse curbes mee,
From giving reines and spurres to my free speech,
Which else would post, untill it had return'd
These tearmes of treason, doubly downe his throat,
Setting aside his high bloods royalty,
And let him be no kinsman to my Liege,
I doe desie him, and I spit at him,
Call him a slanderous Coward, and a Villaine:
Which to maintaine, I would allow him oddes,
And meet him, were I tide to run afoot,
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alpes,
Or any other ground inhabitable,
Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.
Meane time, let this defend my loyalty,
By all my hopes most falsely doth he lye.

Bul. Pale trembling Coward, there I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a King,
And lay aside my high bloods Royalty,
Which feare, not reverence makes thee to except,
If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honours pawne, then stoope.
By that, and all the rights of Knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee arme to arme,
What I have spoken, or thou canst devise.

Mow. I take it up, and by that sword I sweare,
Which gently laid my Knight-hood on my shoulder,
He answer thee in any faire degree,
Or Chivalrous designe of knightly tryall:
And when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight.

King. What doth our Cousin lay to Mowbrayes charge?
It must be great that can inherite us,
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Bul. Looke what I said, my life shall prove it true,
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand Nobles,

In

In name of lendings for your Highnesse Souldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments,
Like a false traitor, and injurious Villaine.
Besides I say, and will in battaile prove,
Or heere, or elsewhere to the furthest Verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,
That all the treasons for these eightene yeares
Complotted and contrived in this Land,
Fetcht from false Mowbray their first head and spring.
Further I say, and further will maintaine
Vpon his shad life, to make all this good,
That he did plot the Duke of Glensters death,
Suggest his soone beleeving aduersaries,
And consequently like a traitor Coward,
Slac'd out his innocent soule through streames of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abels cries,
(Even from the tonguelesse cavernes of the earth)
To me for lustice, and rough chastisement:
And by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arme shall doe it, or this life be spent.

King. How high a pitch his resolution seares:
Thomas of Norfolk, why sayst thou to this?

Mow. Oh let my Sovereigne turne away his face,
And bid his eares a little while be deafe,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God and good men hate so fowle a lyer.

King. Mowbray, impartiall are our eyes and cares,
Were he my brother, nay, our Kingdomes heire,
As he is but my fathers brothers sonne;
Now by my Scepters awe, I make a vow,
Such neighbour-neerentse to our sacred blood,
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unskipping firmenesse of my upright soule.
He is our subject (Mowbray) so art thou,
Free speech and fearelesse, I to thee allow.

Mow. Then Bullingbrooke as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat; thou lyest:
Three parts of that receipt I had for Callice,
Disburst I to his Highnesse souldiers;
The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my Sovereigne Liege was in my debt,
Vpon remainder of a deere account,
Since last I went to France to fetch his Queene:
Now swallow downe that lye. For Glensters death,
I slew him not; but (to mine owne disgrace)
Neglected my sworne duty in that case:
For you my noble Lord of Lancaster,
The honourable Father to my Foe,
Once I did lay an ambush for your life,
A trespassse that doth vex my grieved soule:
But ere I last receiv'd the Sacrament,
I did confesse it, and exactly begg'd
Your Graces pardon, and I hope I had it.
This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a Villaine,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor,
Which in my selfe I boldly will defend,
And interchangeably hurle downe my gage,
Vpon this overweening traitors foot,
To prove my selfe a loyall Gentleman,
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosome.
In haste whereof most heartily I pray
Your Highnesse to assigne our tryall day.

King. Wrath kindled Gentlemen be rul'd by me:
Let's purge this choller without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no Physition.

Deepe malice makes too deepe incision.
Forget, forgive, conclude, and be agreed,
Our Doctors say, this is no time to bleed.
Good Vncle, let this end where it begun,
Wee'l calme the Duke of Norfolke, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age,
Throw downe (my sonne) the Duke of Norfolkes gage.

King. And Norfolke throw downe his.

Gaunt. When Harry when? Obedience bids,
Obedience bids, I should not bid agen.

King. Norfolke, throw downe, we bid; there is no boote.

Mow. My selfe I throw (dread Sovereigne) at thy foot.
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame,
The one my duty owes, but my faire name
Despight of death that lives upon my grave
To darke dishonours use, thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffel'd here,
Pierc'd to the soule with slanders venom'd speare:
The which no blame can cure, but his heart blood
Which breath'd this poysen.

King. Rage must be withstood:
Give me his gage: Lyons make Leopards tame.

Mow. Yea, but not change his spots: take but my shame,
And I resigne my gage. My deere, deere Lord,
The purest treasure mortall times afford,
Is spotlesse reputation: that away,
Men are but gilded loame, or painted clay.
A Jewell in a ten-times barr'd up Chest,
Is a bold spirit in a loyall brest.
Mine honour is my life; both grow in one:
Take honour from me, and my life is done.
Then (deere my Liege) mine honour let me try,
In that I live; and for that will I die.

King. Coofin, throw downe your gage,
Doe you begin.

Bul. Oh heaven defend my soule from such soule sin.
Shall I seeme Crest-falne in my fathers fight,
Or with pale beggar-fearse impeach my hight
Before this out-dar'd dastard? Ere my toong,
Shall wound mine honor with such feeble wrong;
Or sound so base a parle: my teeth shall teare
The slavish motive of recanting feare,
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbrayes face.

Exit Gaunt.

King. We were not borne to sue, but to command,
Which since we cannot doe to make you friends,
Be ready, (as your lives shall answer it)
At Coventree, upon Saint Lamberts day:
There shall your swords and Lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your setled hate:
Since we cannot atone you, you shall see
Iustice designe the Victors Chivalry.
Lord Marshall, command our Officers at Armes,
Be ready to direct these home Alarmes.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Gaunt, and Dutchesse of Gloucster.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Glensters blood,
Doth more sollicite me than your exclames,
To stirre against the Butchers of his life:

But

But since correction lyeth in those hands
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrell to the will of heaven,
Who when they see the houres ripe on earth,
Will raine hot vengeance on offenders heads.

Duc. Findes brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?

Edwards seven tonnes (whereof thy selfe art one)
Were as seven vialles of his Sacred blood.

O seven faire branches springing from one roote:
Some of those seven are dride by natures course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut:

But Thomas, my deere Lord, my life, my Gloster,
One Viall full of Edwards Sacred blood,

One flourishing branch of his most Royall roote
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt;

Is hackt downe, and his summer leaves all vaded
By Enviies hand, and Murders bloody Axe.

Ah Gaunt? His blood was thine, that bed, that wombe,
That mettle, that selfe-mould that fashion'd thee,

Made him a man: and though thou liv'st, and breath'st,
Yet art thou slaine in him: thou doest consent

In some large measure to thy Fathers death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother dye,

Who was the modell of thy Fathers life.
Call it not patience (Gaunt) it is despaire,

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,

Teaching sterne murther how to butcher thee:
That which in meane men we intitle patience

Is pale cold cowardise in noble breasts:
What shall I say, to safegard thine owne life,

The best way is to venge my Glosters death.

Gaunt. Heavens is the quarrell: for heavens substitute
His Deputy annoynt in his sight,

Hath caus'd his death, the which if wrongfully
Let heaven revenge: for I may never list

An angry arme against his Minister.

Duc. Where then (alas) may I complaine my selfe?
Gaunt. To heaven, the widdowes Champion to defence.

Duc. Why then I will: farewell old Gaunt.
Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold

Our Cosine Hereford, and fell Mowbray fight:
O sit my husbands wrongs on Herefords speare,

That it may enter butcher Mowbrayes brest:
Or if misfortune misse the first carriere,

Be Mowbrayes finnes so heavy in his bosome,
That they may breake his foaming Courfers backe,

And throw the Rider headlong in the Lists,
A Caytiffe recreant to my Cosine Hereford.

Farewell old Gaunt, thy sometimes brothers wife
With her companion Greefe, must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister fare well: I must to Couentre,
As much good stay with thee, as go with me.

Duc. Yet one word more: Greefe boundeth where it
Not with the emptie hollownesse, but weight: (falls,

I take my leave, before I have begun,
For sorrow ends not: when it seemeth done.

Commend me to my brother Edward Torky.
Loe, this is all: nay yet depart not so,

Though this be all, do not so quickly goe,
I shall remember more. Bid him, Oh, what?

With all good speed at Plashie visit me.
Alacke, and what shall good old York: there see

But empty lodgings, and unfurnish'd walles,
Vn-peopel'd Offices, untroden stones?

And what heare there for welcome, but my grones?

Therefore commend me, let him not come there,

To seeke out sorrow, that dwels every where:

Defolate, defolate will I hence, and dye,

The last leave of thee, takes my weeping eye. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Marshall, and Aumerle.

Mar. My L. Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all poynts, and longs to enter in.

Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, sprightfull and bold,
Stayes but the summons of the Appeallants Trumpet.

Au. Why then the Champions, are prepar'd, and stay
For nothing but his Majesties approach. Flourish.

Enter King, Gaunt, Bushy, Bagot, Greene, & others: Then Mowbray in Armor, and Harrold.

Rich. Marshall, demand of yonder Champion
The cause of his arrivall heere in Armes,

Aske him his name, and orderly proceed
To sweare him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In Gods Name, and the Kings, say who thou art,
And why thou com'st, thus knightly clad in Armes?

Against what man thou com'st, and what's thy quarrell,
Speake truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,

As so defend thee heaven, and thy valour.

Mow. My name is Tho. Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
Who hither come engaged by my oath

(Which heaven defend a knight should violate)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,

To God, my King, and his succeeding issue,
Againe the Duke of Hereford, that appeales me:

And by the grace of God and this mine arme,
To prove him (in defending of my selfe)

A Traitor to my God, my King, and me,
And as I truly fight, defend me heaven.

Tucker. Enter Hereford, and Harrold.

Rich. Marshall: Aske yonder Knight in Armes,
Both who hee is, and why he commeth hither,

Thus placed in habiliments of warre:
And formally according to our Law

Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name? & wherefore com'st thou hither
Before King Richard in his Royall Lists?

Against whom com'st thou? and what's thy quarrell?
Speake like a true Knight, so defend thee heaven.

Bull. Harry of Hereford, Lancatter, and Derby,
Am I: who ready here do stand in Armes,

To prove by heavens grace, and my bodyes valour,
In Lists, on Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolk,

That he's a Traitor foule and dangerous,
To God of heaven, King Richard, and to me,

And as I truly fight, defend me heaven.

Mar. On paine of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring hardie as to touch the Lists,

Except the Marshall, and such officers
Appointed to direct these faire designses,

Bull. Lord Marshall, let me kisse my Sovereigns hand,
And bow my knee before his Majesty:

For Mowbray and my selfe are like two men,
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage,

Then let us take a ceremonious leave
And loving farewell of our severall friends.

Mar. The Appealant in all duty greets your Highnes,
And craves to kisse your hand, and take his leave.

Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our armes.
Cofin of Hereford as thy cause is just,
So be thy fortune in this Royall fight :
Farewell, my blood, which if to day thou shead,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Bull. Oh let no noble eye prophane a teare
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbrayes speare :
As confident, as is the Falcons flight
Against a bird, doe I with Mowbray fight.
My loving Lord, I take my leave of you,
Of you (my Noble Cofin) Lord Aumerle ;
Not sicke, although I have to doe with death,
But lustie, yong, and cheerefully drawing breath.
Loe, as at English Feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet.
Oh thou the earthy author of my blood,
Whose youthfull spirit in me regenerate,
Doth with atwo-fold vigor lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,
Adde prooffe unto mine Armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steale my Lances point,
That it may enter Mowbrayes waxen Coate,
And furnishe new the name of John a Gaunt,
Even in the lusty haviour of his sonne.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosp'rous,
Be swift like lightning in the execution,
And let thy blowes doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the Caske
Of thy amaz'd pernicious enemy.

Rouse up thy youthfull blood, be valiant, and live.

Bull. Mine innocence, and S. George to thrive.

Mow. How ever heaven or fortune cast my lot,
There lives, or dies, true to King Richards Throne,
A loyall, just, and upright Gentleman :
Never did Captaine with a freer heart,
Cast off his chaines of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soule doth celebrate
This Feast of Battell, with mine adversarie.
Most mighty Liege, and my companion Peeres,
Take from my mouth, the wish of happy yeeres,
As gentle, and as iocond, as to jest,
Go I to fight : Truth, hath a quiet brest.

Rich. Farewell, my Lord, securely I espy
Vertue with Valour, couched in thine eye :
Order the triall Marshall, and begin.

Mar. Harrie of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy Launce, and heaven defend thy right.

Bull. Strong as a towre in hope, I cry Amen.

Mar. Go beare this Lance to Thomas D. of Norfolk.

1. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Stands heere for God, his Sovereigne, and himselfe,
On paine to be found false, and recreant,
To prove the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray,
A Traitor to his God, his King, and him,
And dares him to set forwards to the fight.

2. Har. Here standeth Tho. Mowbray Duke of Norfolk
on paine to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himselfe, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his Sovereigne, and to him disloyall :
Couragiously, and with a free desire,

Attending but the signall to begin. A charge sounded

Mar. Sound trumpets, and set forward Conbatants:
Stay, the King hath throwne his Warder downe.

Rich. Let them lay by their Helmets & their Speares,
And both returne backe to their Chaires againe :
Withdraw with us, and let the Trumpets sound,
While we returne these Dukes what we decree.

A long Flourish.

Draw heere and list
What with our Councell we have done.
For that our kingdomes earth should not be soyl'd
With that deere blood which it hath fostered,
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civill wounds plow'd up with neighbors swords,
Which so rouz'd up with boyltrous untun'd drummes,
With harsh resounding Trumpets dreadfull bray,
And grating shooke of wrathfull yron Armes,
Might from our quiet Confinnes fright faire Peace,
And make us wade even in our kindreds blood :
Therefore, we banish you our Territories.
You Cofin Hereford, upon paine of death,
Till twice five Summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall nor regret our faire dominions,
But treade the stranger pathes of banishment.

Bull. Your will be done : This must my comfort be,
That Sun that warms you heere, shall shine on me :
And those his golden beames to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

Rich. Norfolke : for thee remains a heavier doome,
Which I with some unwillingnesse pronounce,
The flye slow houres shall not determinate
The datelesse limit of thy deere exile :
The hopelesse word, of never to returne,
Breathe I against thee, upon paine of life.

Mow. A heavy sentence, my most Sovereigne Liege,
And all unlook'd for from your Highnesse mouth :
A deerer merit, not so deepe a maim,
As to be cast forth in the common ayre
Have I deserved at your Highnesse hands.
The Language I have learn'd these forty yeares
(My native English) now I must forgo,
And now my tongues use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed Vyoll, or a Harpe,
Or like a cunning Instrument cas'd up,
Or being open, put into his hands
That knowes no touch to tune the harmony.
Within my mouth you have engal'd my tongue,
Doubly percullick with my teeth and lippes,
And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my Gaoler to attend on me :
I am too old to fawne upon a Nurse,
Too farre in yeeres to be a pupill now :
What is thy sentence then, but speechlesse death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?

Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate,
After our sentence, plaining comes to late.

Mow. Then thus I turne me from my countries light
To dwell in solemne shades of endlesse night.

Rich. Returne againe, and take an oath with thee,
Lay on our Royall sword, your banisht hands,
Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven
(Our part therein we banish with your selves)
To keepe the Oath that we administer :
You never shall (so helpe you Truth, and Heaven)
Embrace each others love in banishment,
Nor ever looke upon each others face,

Nor

Nor ever write,regreete,or reconcile
This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate,
Nor ever by advised purpose meete,
To plot,contrive,or complot any ill,
'Gainst Vs,our State,our subjects,or our Land.

Bul. I sweare.

Mow. And I, to keepe all this.

Bul. Norfolke, so farre, as to mineemie,
By this time (had the King permitted us)
One of our soules had wandered in the ayre,
Banish'd this fraile sepulcher of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this Land.
Confesse thy Treasons, ere thou flye this Realme,
Since thou halt farre to go, beare not along
The clogging burthen of a guilty soule.

Mow. No Bullingbrooke: If ever I were Traitor,
My name be blotted from the booke of Life,
And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence :
But what thou art, heaven, thou, and I do know,
And all too soone (I feare) the King shall rue.
Farewell (my Liege) now no way can I stray,
Save backe to England, all the worlds my way.

Rich. Vncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy greaved heart : thy sad aspect,
Hath from the number of his banish'd yeares
Pluck'd foure away : Six frozen Winters spent,
Returne with welcome home, from banishment.

Bul. How long a time lies in one little word :
Foure lagging Winters, and foure wanton Springs
End in a word, such is the breath of Kings.

Gaunt. I thanke my Liege, that in regard of me
He shortens foure yeares of my sonnes exile :
But little vantage shall I reape thereby.
For ere the fixe yeares that he hath to spend
Can change the Moones, and bring their times about,
My oyle-dride Lampe, and time-bewasted light
Shall be extinct with age, and candlelesse night :
My inch of Taper, will be burnt, and done,
And blindfold death, not let me see my sonne.

Rich. Why Vncle, thou hast many yeeres to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute (King) that thou canst give ;
Shorten my dayes thou canst with sudden sorrow,
And plucke nights from me, but not lend a morrow :
Thou canst helpe time to furrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage :
Thy word is currant with him, for my death,
But dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

Rich. Thy sonne is banish'd upon good advice,
Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave,
Why at our Iustice seem'st thou then to lowre ?

Gau. Things sweet to tast, prove in digestion sowre :
You urg'd me as a Iudge, but I had rather
You would have bid me argue like a Father.
Alas, I look'd when some of you should say,
I was too strict to make mine owne away :
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
Against my will, to do my selfe this wrong.

Rich. Cosine farewell : and Vncle bid him so :
Six yeares we banish him, and he shall go.

Exit.

Flourish.

Au. Cosine farewell : what prefence must not know
From where you do remaine, let paper show.

Mar. My Lord, no leave take I, for I will ride
As farre as land will let me, by your side.

Gaunt. Oh to what purpose dost thou hord thy words,
That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends ?

Bul. I have too few to take my leave of you,
when the tongues office should be prodigall,
To breath th'abundant dolour of the heart.

Gau. Thy greefe is but thy absence for a time.

Bul. Ioy absent, greefe is present for that time.

Gau. What is fixe Winters, they are quickly gone ?

Bul. To men in joy, but greefe makes one houre ten.

Gau. Call it a travell that thou tak'st for pleasure.

Bul. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so,
Which findes it an inforced Pilgrimage.

Gau. The sullen passage of thy weary steppes
Esteeme a soyle, wherein thou art to set
The precious Jewell of thy home returne.

Bul. Oh who can hold a fire in his hand
By thinking on the frostie Caucasus ?

Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,

By bare imagination of a Feast ?

Or Wallow, naked in December snow

By thinking on fantasticke Summers heate ?

Oh no, the apprehension of the good

Gives but the greater feeling to the worse :

Fell sorrowes tooth, doth ever ranckle more

Then when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

Gau. Come, come (my son) Ile bring thee on thy way
Had I thy youth, and cause, I would not stay.

Bul. Then Englands ground farewell : sweet foil adieu
My Mother and my Nurse, which beares me yet :
Where ere I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a true-borne Englishman.

Scena Quarta.

Enter King, Aumerle, Greene, and Bagot.

Rich. We did observe. Cosine Aumerle,
How farre brought you high Hereford on his way ?

Aum. I brought high Hereford (if you call him so)
But to the next high way, and there I left him.

Rich. And say, what store of parting teares were shed ?

Aum. Faith none by me : except the Northeast wind
Which then grew bitterly against our face,
Awak'd the sleepeie rhewine, and so by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a teare.

Rich. What said our Cosin when you parted with him ?

Au. Farewell : and for my hart disdain'd y my tongue
Should so prophane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppression of such greefe,
That word seemde buried in my sorrowes grave.
Marry, would the word Farewell, had lengthen'd houres,
And added yeeres to his short banishment ;
He should have had a volume of Farewells,
But since it would not, he had none of me.

Rich. He is our Cosin (Cosin) but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment ;
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends,
Our selfe, and Bushy : heere Bagot and Greene
Observe his Courtship to the common people ;
How he did seeme to dive into their hearts,
With humble, and familiar courtesie,
What reverence he did throw away on slaves ;
wooing poore Craftes-men, with the craft of soules,
And patient under-bearing of his Fortune,
As 'twere to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an Oyster-wench,

A brace of Dray-men bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With thanks my Countrimen, my loving friends,
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects next degree in hope.

Gr. Well, he is gone, & with him goe these thoughts:
Now for the Rebels, which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient mannage must be made my Liege
Ere further leysure, yeeld the futher meanes
For their aduantage, and your highnesse losse.

Rich. We will our selfe in person to this warre,
And for our Coffers, with too great a Court,
And liberall Largesse, are growne somewhat light,
We are inforc'd to farme our royall Realme,
The reuennew whereof shall furnish us
For our affayres in hand: if they come short
Our substitutes at home shall have Blanke-charters:
Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large summes of Gold,
And send them after to supply our wants:
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what newes?

Bu. Old Iohn of Gaunt is verie sicke my Lord, Sodainly taken, and hath sent post haste
To entreat your Majesty to visit him.

Rich. Where lyes he?

Bu. At Ely house.

Rich. Now put it (heaven) in his Physitians minde,
To helpe him to his grave immediately:
The lining of his coffers shall make Coates
To decke our souldiers for these Irish warres.
Come Gentlemen, let's all go visit him:
Pray heaven we may make hast, and come too late, Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gaunt, sicke with Yorke.

Gau. Will the King come, that I may breathe my last
In wholsome counsell to his unstaide youth?

Yor. Vex not your selfe, nor strive not with your breth,
For all in vaine comes counsell to his eare.

Gau. Oh but (they say) the tongues of dying men
Inforce attention like deepe harmony;
Where words are scarce, they are seldome spent in vaine,
For they breath truth, that breath their words in paine.
He that no more must say, is listen'd more,
Then they whom youth and ease have taught to glose,
More are mens ends markt, then their lives before,
The setting Sun, and musicke is the close.
As the last taste of sweetes, is sweetest last,
Writ in remembrance, more then things long past;
Though Richard my lives counsell would not heare,
My deaths sad tale, may yet undeafe his eare.

Yor. No, it is stoppt with other flatt'ring sounds
As prayes of his state: then there are found
Lascivious Meeters, to whose venom sound
The open eares of youth doth alwayes listen.
Report of fashions in proud Italy,
Whose manners still our tardie apish Nation
Limps after in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
So it be new, there's no respect how vile,
That is not quickly buz'd into their eares?
That all too late comes counsell to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wits regard:
Direct not him, whose way himselfe will choose,
Tis breath thou lackst, and that breath wilt thou loose.

Gau. Me thinks I am a Prophet new inspir'd,
And thus expiring do foretell of him,
His rash fierce blaze of Ryot cannot last,
For violent fires soone burne out themselves;
Small showres last long, but sodaine stormes are short,
He tyres betimes, that ipurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choake the feeder:
Light vanity, insatiate cormorant,
Consuming meanes soone preyes upon it selfe.
This royall Throne of Kings, this sceptred Isle,
This earth of Majesty, this seate of Mars,
This other Eden, demy paradise,
This Fortres built by nature for her selfe,
Against infection, and the hand of warre:
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This pecious stone set in the silver Sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a Moate defensive to a house,
Against the enuy of lesse happier Lands,
This blessed plot, this Earth, this Realme, this England,
This Nurse, this teeming wombe of Royall Kings,
Fear'd by their breed, and famous for their birth,
Renowned for their deeds, as farre from home,
For Christian service, and true Chivalrie,
As is the sepulcher in stubborn Iury
Of the worlds ransome, blessed Maries Sonne.
This Land of such deere soules, this deere-deere Land,
Deere for her reputation through the world,
Is now Leas'd out (I dye pronouncing it)
Like to a Tenement or pelting Farme.

England bound in with the triumphant Sea,
Whose rocky shore beates backe the envious sledge
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With Inky blottes, and rotten Parchment bonds.
That England that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shamefull conquest of it selfe.
Ah? would the scandall vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death?

Enter King, Quene, Annerle, Bushy, Greene, Bago, Ros, and Willoughby.

Yor. The King is come, deale mildly with his youth,
For young hot Coats, being rag'd, do rage the more.

Qu. How fares our noble Vncle Lancaster?

Ri. What comfort man? How ist with aged Gau?

Ga. Oh how that name befits my composition:
Old Gau indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me greefe hath kept a tedious fast,
And who abtaines from meate, that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watcht,
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some Fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast, I meane my Childrens looks,
And therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow wombe inherits nought but bones.

Ri. Can sicke men play so nicely with their names?

Gau. No, misery makes sport to mocke it selfe:
Since thou dost seeke to kill my name in mee,

I mocke my name (great King) to flatter thee.

Ric. Should dying men flatter those that live?

Gau. No, no men living flatter those that dye.

Rich. Thou now a dying, sayst thou flatter' st me.

Gau. Oh no, thou dyest, though I the sicker be.

Rich. I am in health, I breathe, I see thee ill.

Gau. Now he that made me, knowes I see thee ill :

Ill in my selfe to see, and in thee, seeing ill,
Thy death-bed is no lesse then the Land,
Wherein thou lyest in reputation sicke,
And thou too care-lesse patient as thou art,
Committ'st thy anointed body to the cure
Of those Physitions, that first wounded thee:
A thousand flatterers sit within thy Crowne,
Whose compasse is no bigger then thy hand,
And yet incaged in 'o small a Verge,
The waste is no whit lesse then thy Land.
Oh had thy Grandfire with a Prophets eye,
Seene how his sonnes sonne, should destroy his sonnes,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,
Deposing thee before thou wert posselt,
Which art posselt now to depose thy selfe.
Why (Cofine) were thou Regent of the world,
It were a shame to let his Land by lease :
But for thy world enjoying but this Land,
Is it not more then shame, to shame it so?
Landlord of England art thou, and not King :
Thy state of Law, is bondslave to the law,
And ———

Rich. And thou, a lunaticke leane-witted foole,
Presuming on an Agues priviledge,
Dart'st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheekes, chasing the Royall blood
With fury, from his native residence?
Now by my Seates right Royall Majestie,
Wert thou not Brother to great Edwards sonne,
This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unreverent shoulders.

Gau. Oh spare me not, my brothers Edwards tonne,
For that I was his Father Edwards sonne :
That blood already (like the Pellican)
Thou hast rapt out, and drunkenly carows'd.
My brother Gloucester, plaine well meaning soule
(Whom faire befall in heaven 'mongst happy soules)
May be a president, and witnesse good,
That thou respect'st it not spilling Edwards blood :
Ioyne with the present sicknesse that I have,
And thy unkindnesse be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither'd flowre.
Live in thy shame, but dye not shame with thee,
These words hereafter, thy tormentors be.
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave.
Love they to live, that love and honor have.

Exit

Rich. And let them dye, that age and tullen have,
For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

Tor. I doe beseech your Maestie impute his words
To wayward sicknesse, and age in him :
He loves you on my life, and holds you deere
As Harry Duke of Hereford, were he heere.

Rich. Right, you say true : as Herefords love, so his;
As theirs, so mine : and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.

Tor. My Liege, old Gaunt commends him to your Majestie.

Rich. What sayes he?

Tor. Nay nothing, all is said :

His tongue is now a stringlesse instrument,
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

Tor. Be Yorke the next, that must be bankrupt so,
Though death be poore, it ends a mortall wo.

Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he,
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be :
So much for that. Now for our Irish warres,
We must supplant those rough rug-headed Kernes,
Which live like venom, where no venom else
But onely they, have priviledge to live.
And for these great affayres do aske some charge
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us
The plate, coyne, and revennewes, and moveables,
Whereof our Vncle Gaunt did stand posselt.

Tor. How long shall I be patient? Oh how long
Shall tender dutie make me suffer wrong?
Not Glousters death, nor Herefords banishment,
Nor Gaunts rebukes, nor Englands private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poore Bullingbrooke,
About his marriage, nor my owne disgrace
Have ever made me fowre my patient cheekes,
Or bend one wrinkle on my Soveraignes face :
I am the last of noble Edwards sonnes,
Of whom thy father Prince of Wales was first;
In warres was never Lyon rag'd more fierce :
In peace, was never gentle Lambe more milde,
Then was that yong and Princely Gentleman :
His face thou hast, for even so look'd he Accomplish'd with the number of thy howers :
But when he frown'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends : his noble hand
Did win what he did spend : and spent not that
Which his triumphant fathers hand had won :
His hands were guiltie of no kindreds blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kinne :
Oh Richard, Yorke is too farre gone with griefe,
Or else he never would compare betweene.

Rich. Why Vncle,
What's the matter?

Tor. Oh my Liege pardon me if you please, if not
I pleas'd not to be pardon'd, am content with all :
Seeke you to seize, and gripe into your hands
The Royalties and Rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heyre?
Is not his heyre a well-deserving sonne?
Take Herefords rights away, and take from time
His Charters, and his customarie rights :
Let not to morrow then insue to day,
Be not thy selfe. For how art thou a King
But by faire sequence and succession?
Now afore God, God forbid I say true,
If you doe wrongfully seize Herefords right,
Call in his Letters Patents that he hath
By his Atturneyes generall, to sue
His Liverie, and denie his offer'd homage,
You plucke a thousand dangers on your head,
You loose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And pricke my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honor and allegiance cannot thinke.

Ric. Thinke what you will : we seise into our hands,
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

Tor. Ile not be by the while : My Leige farewell,

What

What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell,
But by bad courtes may be understood,
That their events can never fall out good.

Exit.

Rich. Go Bushie to the Earle of Wiltshire straight,
Bid him repaire to us to Ely house,
To see this businesse: to morrow next
We will for Ireland, and 'tis time, I trow:
And we create in absence of our selfe
Our Vnckle Yorke, Lord Governor of England:
For he is just, and alwayes lov'd us well.
Come on our Queene, to morrow must we part,
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.

Flourish.

Manet North. Willoughby, and Ross.

Nor. Well Lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.

Ross. And living too, for now his sonne is Duke.

Will. Barely in title, not in revennew.

Nor. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great: but it must break with silence
Er't be disburthen'd with a liberall tongue.

Nor. Nay speake thy mind: & let him ne'r speake more
That ipeakes thy words againe to doe thee harme.

Will. Tends that thou'dst speake to th'Du. of Hereford?
If it be so, out with it boldly man:

Quicke is mine eare to heare of good towards him.

Ross. No good at all that I can doe for him,
Vnlesse you call it good to pitie him,
Bereft and gelded of his patrimonie.

Nor. Now afore heaven, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne,

In him a royall Prince, and many moe
Of noble blood in this declining Land;
The King is not himseife, but basely led
By flatterers, and what they will informe
Meerely in hate 'gainst any of us all,
I hat will the King severely prosecute
'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heires.

Ross. The Commons hath he pill'd with greivous taxes
And quite lost their hearts: the Nobles hath he fin'de
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

Will. And daily new exactions are devis'd,
As blankes, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what o'Gods name doth become of this?

Nor. Wars hath not wasted it, for war'd he hath not,
But basely yielded upon comprimize,
That which his Ancestors archie'd with blowes:
More hath he spent in peace, then they in warres.

Ross. The Earle of Wiltshire hath the realme in Farme.

Will. The King's growne bankrupt like a broken man.

Nor. Reproach, and dissolution hangeth over him.

Ross. He hath not monie for these Irish warres:
(His burthenous taxations notwithstanding)
But by the robbing of the banish'd Duke.

Nor. His noble Kinsman, most degenerate King:
But Lords, we heare this fearefull tempest sing,
Yet seeke no shelter to avoyd the storme:
We see the winde sit fore upon our sailes,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.

Ross. We see the very wracke that we must suffer,
And unvoyded is the danger now
For suffering so the causes of our wracke.

Nor. Not so: even through the hollow eyes of death,
I spie life peering: but I dare not say
How neere the tidings of our comfort is.

Will. Nay let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

Ross. Be confident to speake Northumberland,
We three, are but thy selfe, and speaking so,

Thy words are but as thoughts, therefore be bold.

Nor. Then thus: I have from Port le Blan
A Bay in Britaine, receiv'd intelligence,
That Harry Duke of Hereford, Rainald Lord Cobham,
That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother Archbishop, late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Rainston,
Sir John Norberie, Sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoin,
All these well furnish'd by the Duke of Britaine,
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of warre
Are making hither with all due expedience,
And shortly meane to touch our Northerne shore:
Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the King for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Impe out our drooping Countreies broken wing,
Redeeme from broaking pawne the blemish'd Crowne,
Wipe off the dust that hides our Scepters gilt,
And make high Majestie looke like it selfe,
Away with me in poste to Ravenpurgh,
But if you faint, as fearing to doe so,
Stay, and be secret, and my selfe will go.

Ross. To horse, to horse, urge doubts to them that feare:

Will. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Queene, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bush. Madam, your Majesty is too much sad,
You promis'd when you parted with the King,
To lay aside selfe-harming heavinesse,
And entertaine a cheerefull disposition.

Qu. To please the King, I did: to please my selfe
I cannot doe it: yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as greefe,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard, yet againe me thinkes
Some unborne sorrow, ripe in fortunes wombe
Is coming towards me, and my inward soule
With nothing trembles, at something it greeves,
More than with parting from my Lord the King.

Bush. Each substance of a greefe hath twenty shadows
Which shewes like greefe it selfe, but is not so:
For sorrowes eye, glazed with blinding teares,
Divides one thing intire, to many objects,
Like perspectives, which rightly gaz'd upon
Shew nothing but confusion, eyd awry,
Distinguish forme: so your sweet Majesty
Looking awry upon your Lords departure,
Finde shapes of greefe, more then himseife to waile,
Which look'd on as it is, is nought but shadowes
Of what it is not: then thrice-gracious Queene,
More then your Lords departure weepe not, more's not
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrowes eye, (scene;
Which for things true, weepe things imaginary.

Qu. It may be so: but yet my inward soule
Perswades me it is otherwise: how ere it be,
I cannot but be sad: so heavy sad,
As though on thinking on no thought I thinke,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bush. 'Tis nothing but conceit (my gracious Lady.)

Qu.

Qu. 'Tis nothing lesse : conceit is still deriu'd
From some fore-father greefe, mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something greefe,
Or something, hath the nothing that I greeve,
'Tis in reversion that I doe possesse,
But what it is, that is not yet knowne, what
I cannot name, 'tis namelesse woe I wot.

Enter Greene.

Gree. Heaven save your Majesty, and wel met Gentle-
I hope the King is not yet shipt for Ireland. (men;

Qu. Why hop'st thou so? 'Tis better hope he is:
For his desires crave haste, good hope,
Then wherefore dost thou hope he is not shipt?

Gree. That he our hope, might have retyr'd his power, and driven into despaire an enemies hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this Land,
The banish'd Bullinbrooke repeales himselfe,
And with up-lifted Armes is safe arriu'd
At Ravenesburg.

Qu. Now God in heaven forbid.

Gree. O Madam 'tis too true : and that is worse,
The L. Northumberland, his yong sonne Henry Percie,
The Lords of Rosse, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all their powerfull friends are fled to him.

Bush. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland
And the rest of the revolted faction, Traitors?

Gree. We have : whereupon the Earle of Worcester
Hath broke his staffe, resign'd his Stewardship,
And al the household servants fled with him to Bullenbrook.

Qu. So Greene, thou art the midwife of my woe,
And Bullinbrooke my sorrowes dismall heyre:
Now hath my soule brought forth her prodigie,
And I a gasping new delivered mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow joyn'd.

Bush. Despaire not Madam.

Qu. Who shall hinder me?
I will despaire, and be at enmitie
With couzening hope; he is a flatterer,
A Parasite, a keeper backe of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hopes linger in extremity.

Enter Yorke.

Gree. Heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Qu. With signes of warre about his aged necke,
Oh full of carefull businesse are his lookes :
Vnckle, for heavens sake speake comfortable words.

Yor. Comfort's in heaven, and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, care and greefe :
Your husband he is gone to save farre off,
Whilst others come to make his loose at home :
Heere am I left to underprop his Land,
Who weake with age, cannot support my selfe :
Now comes his sicke houre that his surfer made,
Now shall he try his friends that flattered him.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My Lord, your sonne was gone before I came.

Yor. He was : why so, go all which way it will :
The Nobles they are fled, the Commons they are cold,
And will I feare revolt on Herefords side.
Sirra, get thee to Plashie to my sifter Gloster,
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound,
Hold, take my Ring.

Ser. My Lord, I had forgot
To tell your Lordship, to day I came by, and call'd there,
But I shall greeve you to report the rest.

Yor. What is't knave?

Ser. An houre before I came, the Dutchesse di'de.

Yor. Heav'n for his mercy, what a tide of woes
Come rushing on this wofull Land at once?
I know not what to doe : I would to heaven
(So my untruth had not provok'd him to it)
The King had cut off my head with my brothers.
What are there pottes dispatcht for Ireland?
How shall we doe for mony for these warres?
Come sifter (Cozen I would say) pray pardon me.
Go follow, get thee home, provide some Carts,
And bring away the Armour that is there.
Gentlemen, will you muster men?
If I know how, or which way to order these affaires
Thus disorderly thrust into my hands,
Never beleve me. Both are my kinsmen,
Th'one is my Sovereigne, whom both my oath
And dutie bids defend : th'other againe
Is my kinsman, whom the King hath wrong'd,
Whom conscience, and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do : Come Cozen,
Ile dispose of you. Gentlemen, go muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Barkley Castle :
I should to Plashy too : but time will not permit,
All is uneven, & every thing is left at six and seven. Exit.

Bush. The wind sits faire for newes to go to Ireland,
But none returnes : For us to levy power
Proportionable to th'enemy, is all impossible.

Gri. Besides our neerenesse to the King in love,
Is neere the hate of those love not the King.

Bag. And that's the wavering Commons, for their love
Lies in their purses, and who so empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bush. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

Bag. If judgement lye in them, then so do we,
Because we have beene ever neere the King.

Gree. Well: I will for refuge streight to Bristoll Castle,
The Earle of Wiltshire is already there.

Bush. Thither will I with you, for little office
Will the hateful Commons performe for us,
Except like Curres, to teare us all in peeces :
Will you goe along with us?

Bag. No, I will to Ireland to his Majestie :
Farewell, if hearts prefages be not vaine,
We three here part, that neu'r shall meete againe.

Bu. That's as Yorke thrives to beate backe Bullinbrooke.

Gr. Alas poore Duke, the taske he undertakes
Is numbring sands, and drinking Oceans dric,
Where one on his side fights, thousands will flye.

Bush. Farewell at once, for once, for all, and ever.

Well, me may meete againe.

Bag. I feare me never.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the Duke of Hereford, and Northumberland.

Bul. How farre is it my Lord to Barkley now?

Nor. Beleve me noble Lord,
I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire,
These high wilde hilles, and rough uneven wayes,
Drawes out our miles, and makes them wearisome :
And yet our faire discourse hath beene as sugar,

Making

Making the hard way sweet and delectable :
 But I bethinke me, what a wearie way
 From Ravenspurgh to Courtshold will be found,
 In Rosse and Willoughby, wanting your companie;
 Which I protest hath very much beguild
 The tediousnesse, and processe of my travell :
 But theirs is sweetned with the hope to have
 The present benefit that I possesse :
 And hope to joy, is little lesse in joy,
 Then hope enjoy'd : By this, the wearie Lords
 Shall make their way seeme short, as mine hath done,
 By sight of what I have, your Noble Companie.
Bull. Of much lesse value is my Companie,
 Then your good words : but who comes here ?

Enter H. Percy.

North. it is my Sonne, young Harry Percie,
 Sent from my brother Worcester : Whence soever.
Harry, how fares your Vnckle ?

Percie. I had thought, my Lord, to have learn'd his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the Queene ?

Percie. No, my good Lord, he hath forsooke the Court,
 Broken his Staffe of Office, and disperst
 The Household of the King.

North. What was his reason ?

He was not so resolv'd, when we last spake together.

Percie. Because your Lordship was proclaimed Traitor.
 But hee, my Lord, is gone to Ravenspurgh,
 To offer service to the Duke of Hereford,
 And sent me over by Barkely, to discover
 What power the Duke of Yorke had levied there,
 Then with direction to repaire to Ravenspurgh.

North. Have you forgot the Duke of Hereford (Boy.)

Percie. No, my good Lord ; for that is not forgot
 Which ne're I did remember to my knowledge,
 I never in my life did looke on him.

North. Then learne to know him now : this is the Duke.

Percie. My gracious Lord, I tender you my service,
 Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young,
 Which elder dayes shall ripen, and confirme
 To more approved service, and desert.

Bull. I thank thee gentle Percie, and be sure
 I count my selfe in nothing else so happy,
 As in a Soule remembring my good Friends :
 And as my fortune ripens with thy Love,
 It shall be still thy true Loves recompence,
 My heart this covenant makes, thy hand thus seals it.

North. How farre is it to Barkely ? and what stirre Keepest good old Torke there, with his Men of Warre ?

Percie. There stands the Castle, by yond tuft of Trees,
 Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard,
 And in it are the Lords of Torke, Barkely, and Seymour,
 None else of Name, and noble estimate.

Enter Rosse and Willoughby.

North. Here come the Lords of Rosse and Willoughby,
 Bloody with spurring, fierie red with halte.

Bull. Welcome my Lords, I wot your love pursues
 A banisht Traitor ; all my Treasure
 Is yet but unfelt thanks, which more enrich'd,
 Shall be your love, and labours recompence.

Rosse. Your presence makes us rich, most Noble Lord.

Will. And farre surmounts our labour to attaine it.

Bull. Evermore thanks, th'Exchequer of the poore,
 Which till my infant-fortune comes to yeeres,
 Stands for my Bountie : but who comes here ?

Enter Barkely.

North. It is my Lord of Barkely, as I ghesse.

Bark. My Lord of Hereford, my Message is to you.

Bull. My Lord, my answer is to Lancaster,
 And I am come to seeke that Name in England,
 And I must finde that Title in your Towne,
 Before I make reply to aught you say.

Bark. Mistake me not, my Lord, 'tis not my meaning
 To raze one title of your honour out.
 To you, my Lord, I come (what Lord you will)
 From the most glorious of this Land,
 The Duke of Yorke, to know what pricks you on
 To take advantage of the absent time,
 And fright our Native Peace with selfe-borne Armes.

Enter Torke.

Bull. I shall not need transport my words by you,
 Here comes his Grace in Person. My Noble Vnckle.

Tor. Shew me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
 Whose durie is deceivable, and false.

Bull. My gracious Vnckle.

Tor. Tut, tut, Grace me no Grace, nor Vnckle me,
 I am no Traytors Vnckle ; and that word Grace,
 In an ungracious mouth, is but prophane.

Why have these banish'd, and torbidden Legges,
 Dar'd once to touch a Dust of Englands Ground ?
 But more then why, why have they dar'd to march
 So many miles upon her peacefull Bosome,
 Frighting her pale-fac'd Villages with Warre,
 And ostentation of despised Armes ?

Com'st thou because th'anoyned King is hence ?
 Why foolish Boy, the King is left behind,
 And in my loyal Bosome lyes his power.

Were I but now the Lord of such hot youth,
 As when brave Gaunt, thy Father, and thy selfe
 Rescued the Black Prince, that yong Mars of men,
 From forth the Rankes of many thousand French :
 Oh then, how quickly should this Arme of mine,
 Now Prisoner to the Palsie, chastise thee,
 And minister correction to thy Fault.

Bull. My gracious Vnckle, let me know my Fault,
 On what condition stands it, and wherein ?

Tor. Even in condition of the worst degree,
 In grosse Rebellion, and detested Treason :
 Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come
 Before th'expiration of thy time,
 In braving Armes against thy Sovereigne.

Bull. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford,
 But as I come, I come for Lancaster.

And Noble Vnckle, I beseech your Grace
 Looke on my Wrongs with an indifferent eye :
 You are my Father, for me thinkes in you
 I see old Gaunt alive. Oh then my Father,
 Will you permit, that I shall stand condemn'd
 A wandring Vagabond ; my Rights and Royalties
 Pluckt from my armes perforce, and given away
 To upstart Vnthrifts ? Wherefore was I borne ?
 If that my Cousin King, be King of England,
 It must be graunted, I am Duke of Lancaster.
 You have a Sonne, Aumerle, my Noble Kinsman,
 Had you first died and hee thus trod downe,
 He should have found his Vnckle Gaunt a Father,
 To rowze his Wrongs, and chase them to the bay.
 I am denyde to sue my Liverie here,
 And yet my Letters Patents give me leave :
 My Fathers goods are all distraynd, and sold,
 And these, and all, are all amisse imployd.

What

What would you have me doe? I am a subject,
And challenge Law: Attorneys are denyde me,
And therefore personally I lay my claime
To mine inheritance of free Det cent.

North. The Noble Duke hath beene too much abusd.

Ross. It stands your Grace upon, to doe him right.

Will. Base men by his endowments are made great.

Tork. My Lords of England, let me tell you this,
I have had feeling of my Cosens Wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to doe him right:
But in this kind, to come in brauing Armes,
Be his owne Carver, and cut out his way,
To find our Right with wrongs, it may not be;
And you that doe abet him in this kind,
Cherish Rebellion, and are Rebels all.

North. The Noble Duke hath sworne his comming is
But for his owne; and for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworne to give him ayd,
And let him nev'r see Ioy, that breakes that Oath.

Tork. Well, well, I see the issue of these Armes,
I cannot mend it, I must needs confesse,
Because my power is weake, and all ill left:
But if I could, by him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoope
Vnto the Soueraigne mercy of the King.

But since I cannot, be it knowne to you,
I doe remaine as Neuter. So fare you well,
Vnlesse you please to enter in the Castle,
And there repose you for this Night.

Bull. An offer Vnckle, that we will accept:
But we must winne your Grace to goe with us
To Bristow Castle, which they say is held
By Bushie, Bagot, and their Complices,
The Caterpillers of the Commonweath,
Which I have sworne to weed, and plucke away.

Tork. It may be I will go with you: but yet Ile pawse,
For I am loth to breake our Countries Lawes:
Nor Friends, nor Foes, to me welcome you are,
Things past redresse, are now with me past care. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, and a Captaine.

Capt. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stayd ten dayes,
And hardly kept your Countrey men together,
And yet we heare no tidings from the King;
Therefore we will disperse our selves: fare well.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trustie Welchman,
The King reposeth all his confidence in thee.

Capt. Tis thought the King is dead, we will not stay;
The Bay-trees in our Countrey all are wither'd,
And Meteors fright the fixed Starres of Heaven;
The pale-fac'd Moone looks bloody on the Earth,
And leane lookt Prophets whisper fearefull change;
Rich men looke sad, and Rustians dance and leape,
The one in feare, to lose what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by Rage, and Warre:
These signes fore-run the death of Kings.
Farewell, our Countrey men are gone and fled,
As well assur'd Richard their King is dead. Exit.

Sal. Ah Richard, with eyes of heauie mind,
I see thy Glory, like a shooting Starre,
Fall to the base Earth, from the Firmament:
Thy Sunne sets weeping in the lowly West.
Witnessing Stormes to come, Woe, and Vnrest:
Thy Friends are fled, to wait upon thy Foes,
And crossely to thy good, all fortune goes. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Tork, Northumberland, Ross, Percie, Willoughby, with Bushie and Greene Prisoners.

Bull. Bring forth these men:

Bushie and Greene, I will not vex your soules,
(Since presently your soules must part your bodyes)
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no Charitie: yet to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have mis-led a Prince, a Royall King,
A happy Gentleman in Blood, and Lineaments,
By you unhappied, and disfigur'd cleane:
You have in manner with your sinfull houres
Made a Divorce betwixt his Queene and him,
Broke the possession of a Royall Bed,
And stayn'd the beautie of a faire Queenes Cheekes,
With teares drawn from her eyes, with your foule wrongs.
My selfe a Prince, by fortune of my birth,
Neere to the King in blood, and neere in love,
Till you did make him mis-interpret me,
Have stoopt my necke under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in forraine Clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
While you have fed upon my Seignories,
Dispark'd my Parkes and fell'd my Forrest Woods;
From mine owne Windowes torne my Household Coat,
Raz'd out my Impresse, leaving me no signe,
Save mens opinions, and my living blood,
To shew the world I am a Gentleman.
This, and much more, much more then twice all this,
Condemnes you to the death: see them delivered over
To execution, and the hand of death.

Bushie. More welcome is the stroke of death to me,
Then Bullingbrooke to England.

Gre. My comfort is, that Heaven will take our soules,
And plague Iniustice with the paines of Hell.

Bull. My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd:
Vnckle, you say the Queene is at your House,
For Heavens sake fairly let her be entreated,
Tell her I send to her my kind commends;
Take speciall care my Greetings be deliver'd.

Tork. A Gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd
With Letters of your love, to her at large.

Bull. Thankes gentle Vnckle: come Lords away,
To fight with Glendoure, and his Complices;
A while to worke, and after holliday. Exeunt.

Scena

Scena Secunda.

Drums: Flourish, and Colours.Enter Richard, Aumerle, Carlisle, and Souldiers.Rich. Barkloughly Castle call you this at hand?An. Yea, my Lord: how brooks your Grace the ayre,
After your late tossing on the breaking Seas?Rich. Needes must I like it well: I weepe for ioy
To stand upon my Kingdome once againe.
Deere Earth, I doe salute thee with my hand,
Though Rebels wound thee with their Horses hooves:
As a long parted Mother with her Child,
Plays fondly with her teares, and smiles in meeting;
So weeping, smiling, greet I thee the Earth,
And doe thee fauor with my Royall hands.
Feed not thy Sovereignes Foe, my gentle Earth,
Nor with thy sweetes, comfort his ravenous sence;
But let thy Spiders that sucke up thy Venome,
And heauie-gated Toades lye in their way,
Doing annoyance to the trecherous feete,
Which with usurping steps doe trample thee.
Yield stinging Nettles to mine Enemies;
And when they from thy Bosome plucke a Flower,
Guard it I prethee with a lurking Adder,
Whose double tongue may with a mortall touch
Throw death upon thy Sovereignes Enemies:
Mocke not my sencelesse Conjuratiō: Lords;
This Earth shall have a feeling, and these Stones
Prove armed Souldiers, ere her Native King
Shall falter under foule Rebellious Armes.Car. Feare not my Lord, that Power that made you King
Hath power to keepe you King, in spite of all.Anm. He meanes, my Lord, that we are too remisse,
Whilest Bullingbrooke through their security,
Growes strong and great, in substance and in friends.Rich. Discomfortable Cousin, knowest thou not,
That when the searching Eye of heaven is hid
Behind the Globe, that lights the lower World,
Then Theeves and Robbers raunge abroad unscene,
In Murthers and in out-rage bloody here:
But when from under this Terrestriall Ball
He fires the prowd tops of the Easterne Pines,
And darts his Lightning through ev'ry guiltie hole,
Then Murthers, Treasons and detested sinnes
(The Cloake of Night being pluckt from off their backs)
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves.
So when this Theefe, this Traytor Bullingbrooke,
Who all this while hath revell'd in the Night,
Shall see us rising in our Throne, the East,
His Treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of Day;
But selfe-affrighted, tremble at his sinne.
Not all the water in the rough rude Sea
Can wash the Balme from an anoynted King;
The breath of wordly men cannot depose
The Deputie elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bullingbrooke hath prest,
To lift shrewd Steele against our Golden Crowne,
Heaven for his Richard hath in heavenly payA glorious Angell: then if Angels fight, Weake men must fall, for Heaven still guards the right.Enter Salisbury.

Welcome my Lord, how farre off lyes your Power?

Salisb. Nor neere, nor farther off, my gracious Lord,
Then this weake arme; discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speake of nothing but despaire:
One day too late, I feare (my Noble Lord)
Hath clouded all my happie dayes on Earth:
Oh call backe Yester day, bid time returne,
And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men:
To day, to day, unhappie day too late
Orethrowes thy Ioyes, Friends, Fortune, and thy tate.
For all the Welchmen hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bullingbrooke, disperst, and fled.Anm. Comfort my Liege, why lookes your Grace so pale?Rich. But now the blood of twentie thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled,
And till so much blood thither come againe,
Have I not reason to looke pale, and dead?
All soules that will be safe, flye from my side,
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.Anm. Comfort my Liege, remember who you are.Rich. I had forgot my selfe. Am I not King?
Awake thou sluggard Majestie, thou sleepest:
Is not the Kings Name fortie thousand Names?
Arme, arme my Name: a punie subject strikes
At thy great glory. Looke not to the ground,
Ye Favorites of a King: are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know my Vnckle York
Hath Power enough to serve our turne,
But who comes here?Enter ScroopeScroope. More health and happinesse betide my Leige,
Then can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him.Rich. Mine care is open, and my heart prepar'd:
The worst is worldly losse, thou canst unfold:
Say, Is my Kingdome lost? why 'twas my Care:
And what losse is it to be rid of Care?
Strives Bullingbrooke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be: If he serve God,
Wee'll serve him too, and bee his Fellow so.
Revolt our subjects? That we cannot mend,
They breake their Faith to God as well as us:
Cry Woe, Destruction, Ruine, Losse, Decay,
The worst is Death, and death will have his day.Scroope. Glad am I, that your Highnesse is so arm'd
To beare the tidings of Calamitie.Like an unseasonable stormie day,
Which make the silver Rivers drowne their Shores,
As if the World were all dissolv'd to teares:
So high, above his Limits, swells the Rage
Of Bullingbrooke, covering your fearefull Land
With hard bright Steele, and hearts harder then Steeles:
White Beares have arm'd their thin & hairelesse Scalps
Against thy Majesty, and Boyes with Womens Voyces,
Strive to speake bigge, and clap their female joynts
In stiffe unwieldie Armes: against thy Crowne
Thy very Beadf-men learne to bend their Bowes
Of double fatall Eugh: against thy state
Yea Distaffe-Women manage rustie Bills:
Against thy Seat both young and old rebell,
And all goes worse then I have power to tell.Rich. Too well, too well thou tell'st a Tale so ill.
Where is the Earle of Wiltshire? where is Bago?
What is become of Bulbin? where is Greene?

That

That they have let the dangerous Enemy
Measure our Confines with such peacefull steps ?
If we prevaile, their hands shall pay for it.

I warrant they have made peace with Bullingbrooke.

Scroope. Peace have they made with him indeede (my Lord.)

Rich. Oh Villains, Vipers, damn'd without redemption,
Dogges, easily won to fawne on any man,
Snakes in my heart blood warm'd, that sting my heart,
Three Iudas'es, each one thrice worse then Iudas,
Would they make peace ? terrible Hell make warre
Vpon their spotted Soules for this Offence.

Scroope. Sweet Love (I see) changing his property,
Turnes to the fowrest, and most deadly hate :
Againe incurse their Soules ; their peace is made
With Heads, and not with Hands : those whom you curse
Have felt the worst of Deaths destroying hand,
And lye full low, grav'd in the hollow ground.

Ann. Is Bushie, Greene, and the Earle of Wiltshire dead ?

Scroope. Yea, all of them at Bristow lost their heads.

Ann. Where is the Duke my Father with his Power ?

Rich. No matter where, of comfort no man speake :

Let's talke of Graves, of Wormes, and Epitaphs,
Make Dust our Paper, and with Rainy eyes
Write Sorrow in the Bosome of the Earth.
Let's chuse Executors, and talke of Wills :
And yet not so ; for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposted bodyes to the ground ?

Our Lands, our lives and all are Bullingbrookes,
And nothing can we call our owne, but Death,
And that small Modell of the barren Earth,
Which serves as paste, and Cover to our Bones :
For Heavens sake let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of Kings :

How some have beene depos'd, some slaine in warre,
Some haunted by the Gholts they have depos'd,
Some poyson'd by their Wives some sleeping kill'd,
All murder'd. For within the hollow Crowne
That rounds the mortall Temples of a King,
Keepes Death his Court, and there the Antique sits
Scoffing his State, and grinning at his pompe,

Allowing him a breath, a little Scene,
To Monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with lookes,
Infusing him with selfe and vaine conceit,
As if this Flesh, which walls about our Life,
Were Brasse impregnable : and humor'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little Pinne
Boares through his Castle Walls, and farewell King.
Cover your heads, and mocke not flesh and blood
With solemne Reverence : throw away Respect,
Tradition, Forme, and Ceremonious dutie,
For you have but mistooke me all this while :
I live with bread like you, feeble Want,
Taste Griefe, need Friends : subjected thus,
How can you say to me, I am a King ?

Col. My Lord, wife men ne're waile their present woes,
But presently prevent the wayes to waile :

To feare the Foe, since feare oppresseth strength,
Gives in your weakenesse, strength unto your Foe ;
Feare, and be slaine, no worse can come to fight,
And fight and die, is death destroying death.

Where fearing, dying, payes death servile breath.

Ann. My Father hath a Power, enquire of him,
And learne to make a Body of a Limbe.

Rich. Thou chid'st me well: proud Bullingbrooke I come

To change blowes with thee, for our day of Doome;

This ague fit of feare is over-blowne,

An easie taske it is to winne our owne.

Say Scroope, where lyes our Vnckle with his Power?

Speake sweetely man, although thy lookes be fowre.

Scroope. Men judge by the complexion of the Skie

The state and inclination of the day,

So may you by my dull and heavie Eye :

My tongue hath but a heavier Tale to say:

I play the Torturer, by small and small

To lengthen out the worst, that must be spoken.

Your Vnckle Torke is joyn'd with Bullingbrooke,

And all your Northerne Castles yeilded up,

And all your Southerne Gentlemen in Armes

Vpon his Faction.

Rich. Thou hast sayd enough.

Beshrew this Cousin, which didst leade me forth

Of that sweet way I was in, to despaire :

What say you now ? What comfort have we now ?

By heaven Ile hate him everlastingly,

That bids me be of comfort any more.

Goe to Flint Castle, there Ile pine away,

A King, Woes slave, shall Kingly Woe obey :

That Power I have, discharge, and let 'em goe

To eare the Land, that hath some hope to grow;

For I have none. Let no man speake againe

To alter this, for counsaile is but vaine.

Ann. My Liege, one word.

Rich. He does me double wrong,

That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.

Discharge my followers : let them hence away,

From Richards Night, to Bullingbrooke faire Day,

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Bullingbrooke, Torke, Northumberland, Attendants.

Bull. So that by this intelligence we learne
The Welchmen are dispers'd, and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the King, who lately landed
With some few private friends, upon this Coast.

North. The newes is very faire and good, my Lord,
Richard not farre from hence, hath hid his head.

Tor. It would befeme the Lord Northumberland,
To say King Richard : alacke the heavie day,
When such a sacred King should hide his head.

North. Your Grace mistakes : onely to be brieve, Left I his Tide out.

Tor. The time hath beene,
Would you have beene so brieve with him, he would
Have beene so brieve with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head; your whole heads length.

Bull. Mistake not (Vnckle) farther than you should.
Tor. Take not (good Cousin) farther than you should,
Least you mistake the heavens are ore your head.

Bull. I know it (Vnckle) and oppose not my selfe Againe their will. But who comes here?

Enter Prercie.

Welcome Harry : what, will not this Castle yeeld ?

Per. The Castle royally is mann'd, my Lord,
Against thy entrance.

Bull. Roy-

Bull. Royally? Why, it containes no King?

Per. Yes (my good Lord)

It doth containe a King: Kind Richard lyes
Within the limits of yond Lime and Stone,
And with him, the Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroope, besides a Clergie man
Of holy reverence; who, I cannot learne.

North. Oh, belike it is the Bishop of Carlile.

Bul. Noble Lord,

Goe to the rude Ribs of that ancient Castle,
Through Brazen Trumpet send the breath of Parle
Into his ruin'd Eares, and thus deliver:

Henry Bullingbrooke upon his knees doth kisse
King Richards hand, and sends allegiance
And true faith of heart to his royall Person: hither come
Even at his feet, to lay my Armes and power,
Provided, that my Banishment repeal'd,
And Lands restor'd againe, be freely graunted:
If not, Ile use th' advantage of my power,
And lay the summers dust with showers of blood,
Rayn'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen;
The which, how farre off from the mind of Bullingbrooke
It is, such Crimson Tempest should bedrench
The fresh Greene Lap of faire King Richards Land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall shew.

Goe signifie as much, while here we march
Vpon the Grassie Carpet of this plaine:
Let's march without the noyse of threatning Drum,
That from this Castles tatter'd Battlements
Our faire Appointments may be well perus'd.
Me thinks King Richard and my selfe should meete
With no lesse terror than the Elements
Of Fire and Water, when their thundring smoake
At meeting reares the cloudie Cheekes of Heaven:
Be he the fire, lie be the yeelding Water;
The Rage be his, while on the Earth I raine
My Waters on the Earth, and not on him.
March on, and marke King Richard how he looks.

Pa. le without, and answer within: then a Flourish.

Enter on the Wallis, Richard, Carlile, Aumerle, Scroope, Salisbury.

See, see, King Richard doth himselfe appeare
As doth the blushing discontented Sunne,
From out the fierie Portall of the East,
When he perceives the envious Clouds are bent
To dimme his glory, and to staine the tract
Of his bright passage to the Occident.

Turk. Yet looks he like a King: behold his Eye
(As bright as is the Eagles) lightens forth
Controlling Majestie: alack, alack, for woe,
That any harme should staine so faire a show.

Rich. We are amaz'd, and thus long have we stood
To watch the fearefull bending of thy knee,
Because we thought our selfe thy lawfull King:
And if we be, how dare thy joynts forget
To pay the awfull dutie to our presence?
If we be not, shew us the Hand of God,
That hath dismiss'd us from our Stewardship.
For well we know, no hand of Blood and Bone
Can gripe the sacred Handle of our Scepter,
Vnlesse he doe prophane, steale or usurpe.
And though you thinke, that all, as you have done,
Have torne their soules, by turning them from us,
And we are barren, and bereft of Friends:
Yet know, my Master, God Omnipotent,
Is mustring in his Clouds, on our behalfe,

Armies of Pestilence, and they shall strike
Your Children yet unborne, and unbegot,
That lift your Vassall Hands against my Head,
And threat the Glory of my precious Crowne.
Tell Bullingbrooke, for yond me thinks he is,
That every stride he makes upon my Land,
Is dangerous Treason: he is come to ope
The purple Testament of bleeding Warre;
But ere the Crowne he lookes for, live in peace.
Ten thousand bloody crownes of Mothers Sonnes
Shall ill become the flower of Englands face,
Change the complexion of her Maid-pale Peace
To Scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her Pastors Grassie with faithfull English Blood.

North. The King of Heaven forbid our Lord the King
Should so with civill and uncivill Armes
Be rush'd upon: Thy thrice-noble Cousin,
Harry Bullingbrooke, doth humbly kisse thy hand,
And by the Honorable Tombe he sweares,
That stands upon your Royall Grandfires Bones,
And by the Royalties of both your bloods,
(Currents that spring from one most gracious Head)
And by the buried Hand of Warlike Gaunt,
And by the Worth and Honour of himselfe,
Comprising all that may be sworne, or said,
His comming hither hath no further scope,
Than for his Lineall Royalties, and to begge
Infranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy Royall partie granted once,
His glittering Armes he will commend to Rust,
His barbed Steedes to Stables, and his heart
To faithfull service of your Maiesty:
This sweares he, as he is a Prince, is just,
And as I am a Gentleman, I credit him.

Rich. Northumberland, say thus: The King returnes,
His Noble Cousin is right welcome hither,
And all the number of his faire demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speake to his gentle hearing kind commends.
We doe debate our selfe (Cousin) doe we not,
To looke so poorly, and to speake so faire?
Shall we call back Northumberland and send Defiance to the Traytor and sodie?

Aum. No, good my Lord, let's fight with gentle words,
Till time lend friends, & friends their hopefull Swords.

Rich. Oh God, oh God, that ere this tongue of mine,
That layd the Sentence of dread Banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off againe
With words of sooth? Oh that I were as great
As is my Griefe, or lesser than my Name,
Or that I could forget what I have bene,
Or not remember what I must be now:
Swell't thou proud heart? Ile give thee scope to beate,
Since foes have scope to beate both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes backe from Bullingbrooke.

Rich. What must the King doe now? must he submit?
The King shall doe it: Must he be depos'd?
The King shall be contented: Must he lose
The Name of King? O' Gods Name let it goe.
Ile give my Jewels for a set of beades,
My gorgeous Pallace, for a Hermitage,
My gay Apparrell, for an Almes-mans Gowne,
My figur'd Goblets, for a Dish of Wood;
My Scepter, for a Palmers walking Staffe,

My Subjects, for a payre of carved Saints,
And my large Kingdome, for a little Grave,
A little little Grave, an obscure Grave.
Or Ile be buried in the Kings high-way,
Some way of common Trade, where Subjects feet
May howrely trample on their Sovereignes Head:
For on my heart they tread now, whilest I live;
And buried once, why not upon my Head?
Anmarle, thou weep'st (my tender-hearted Cousin)
Wee'll make foule Weather with despised Teares:
Our sighes, and they, shall lodge the Summer Corne,
And make a Dearth in this revolting Land.
Or shall we play the Wantons with our Woes,
And make some prettie Match with shedding Teares?
As thus: to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a payre of Graves,
Within the Earth: and therein lay'd, their lyes
Two Kinsmen digg'd their Graves with weeping Eyes?
Would not this ill, doe well? Well, well, I see
I taike but idly, and you mocke at me.
Most mightie Prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What sayes King Bullingbrooke? Will his Majestie
Give Richard leave to live, till Richard die?
You make a Legge, and Bullingbrooke sayes I.

North. My Lord, in the bafe Court he doth attend
To speake with you, may it please you to come downe.

Rich. Downe, downe I come, like glist'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly lades.

In the bafe Court? bafe Court where Kings grow bafe,
To come at Traytors Calls, and doe their Grace.

In the bafe Court come down: down Court, down King,
For night-Owls shriek, where mounting Larks should

Bull. What sayes his Majestie? (sing.)

North. Sorrow, and griefe of heart
Makes him speake fondly, like a franticke man:
Yet he is come.

Bull. Stand all apart,
And shew faire dutie to his Majestie.
My gracious Lord.

Rich. Faire Cousin,
You debase your Princely Knee,
To make the bafe Earth proud with kissing it.
Me rather had, my Heart might feele your Love,
Than my unpleas'd Eye see your Courtesie.
Vp Cousin, up, your Heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your Knee be low.

Bull. My gracious Lord, I come but for mine owne.

Rich. Your owne is yours, and I am yours, and all.

Bull. So farre be mine, (my most redoubted Lord,) As my true service shall deserue your love.

Rich. Well you deserv'd:
They well deserue to have,
That know the strong'st, and surest way to get.
Vnckle give me your hand: nay, drie your Eyes,
Teares shew their Love, but want their remedies.
Cousin I am to young too be your Father,
Though you are old enough to be my Heire.
What you will have, Ile give, and willing too,
For doe we must, what force will have us doe,
Set one towards London:

Cousin, is it so?

Bull. Yea, my good Lord.

Rich. Then I must not say, no.

Flourish.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Queens and two Ladies.

Qu. What sport shall we devise here in this Garden,
To drive away the heavie thought of Care?

La. Madame, wee'll play at Bowles.

Qu. 'Twill make me thinke the World is full of Rubs,
And that my fortune runnes against the Byas.

La. Madame, wee'll Dance.

Qu. My Legges can keepe no measure in Delight,
When my poore Heart no measure keepes in Griefe,
Therefore no Dancing (Girle) some other sport.

La. Madame, wee'll tell Tales.

Qu. Of sorrow, or of Griefe?

La. Of eyther, Madame.

Qu. Of neyther, Girle.

For if of Ioy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of Sorrow:

Or if of Griefe, being altogether had,

It addes more Sorrow to my want of Ioy:

For what I have, I need not to repeat;

And what I want, it bootes not to complaine.

La. Madame, Ile sing.

Qu. 'Tis well that thou hast cause:

But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weepe.

La. I could weepe, Madame, would it doe you good.

Qu. And I could sing, would weeping doe me good,
And never borrow any Teare of thee.

Enter a Gardiner, and two Servants.

But stay, heere come the Gardiners,

Let's step into the shadow of these Trees.

My wretchednesse, unto a Rowe of Pinnes,

They'll talke of state: for every one doth so,

Against a Change; Woe is fore-runne with Woe.

Gard. Goe binde thou up yond dangling Apricocks,

Which like unruly Children, make their Syre

Stoupe with oppression of their prodigall weight:

Give some supportance to the bending twiggies.

Goe thou, and like an Executioner

Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprayes,

That looke too loftie in our Common-wealth:

All must be even, in our Governement.

You thus imploy'd, I will goe root away

The noysome weedes, that without profit sucke

The Soyles fertilitie from wholesome flowers.

Ser. Why should wee, in the compasse of a Pale,

Keepe Law and Forme, and due Proportion;

Shewing as in a Modell our firme state?

When our Sea-walled Garden, (the whole Land,)

Is full of Weedes, her fairest Flowers choakt up,

Her Fruit-trees all unpruin'd, her Hedges ruin'd,

Her Knots disorder'd, and her wholesome Hearbes

Swarming with Caterpillers.

Gard. Hold thy peace.

He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd Spring,

Hath now himsele met with the Fall of Lease.

The Weedes that his broad-spreading Leaves did shelter,

That seem'd, in eating him, to hold him up,

Are pull'd up, Root and all, by Bullingbrooke:

I meane, the Earle of Wiltshire, Bushie, Greene,

d

Ser. What

Ser. What are they dead?

Gard. They are,

And Bulls brooke hath seiz'd the wastefull King.
What pittie is it, that he had not trim'd
And dress'd his Land, as we this Garden, at time of yeare;
And wound the Barke, the skin of our Fruit-trees,
Least being over-proud with Sap and Blood,
With too much riches it confound it selfe?
Had he done so, to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to beare, and he to taste
Their fruites of dutie. All superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughes may live:
Had he done so, himselfe had borne the Crowne,
Which waite and idle houres, hath quite thrown downe.

Ser. What thinke you the King shall be depos'd?

Gor. Deprest he is already, and depos'd
'Tis doubted he will be. Letters came last night
To a deere Friend of the Duke of Yorke.
That tell blacke tydings.

Qu. Oh I am prest to death through want of speaking:
Thou old Adams likenesse, set to dresse this Garden:
How dares thy harsh tongue found this unpleasing
What Eve? what serpent hath suggested thee, (newes?)
To make a second fall of curst man?

Why do'st thou say King Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou (thou little better thing then earth)
Divine his downfall? Say where, when, and how Cam'st thou by this ill tydings? Speake thou wretch,

Gard. Pardon me Madam. Little joy have I
To breath these newes; yet what I say, is true;
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bullingbrooke, their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your Lords Scale, is nothing but himselfe,
And some few Vanities, that make him light:
But in the Ballance of great Bullingbrooke,
Besides himselfe, are all the English Peeres,
And with that oddes he weighes King Richard downe.
Poste you to London, and you'll finde it so,
I speake no more, then every one doth know.

Qu. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foote,
Doth not thy Embassage belong to me?
And am I last that knowes it? Oh thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keepe
Thy sorrow in my breast. Come Ladies goe,
To meet at London, Londons King in woe.
What, was I borne to this! that my sad looke,
Should grace the Triumph of great Bullingbrooke!
Gard'ner, for telling me this newes of woe,
I would the Plants thou graft'st, may never grow. Exit.

G. Poore Queene, so that thy state might be no worse,
I would my skill were subject to thy curse:
Heere did she drop a teare, heere in this place
He set a Banke of Rew, (sowre Herbe of Grace)
Rue, eu'n for ruth, heere shortly shall be seene,
In the remembrance of a Weeping Queene. Exit.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter as to the Parliament, Bullingbrooke, Aumerle, Northumberland, Percie, Fitz-Water, Surrey, Calile, Abbot of Westminster. Herald, Officers, and Bagot.

Bullingbrooke, Call forth Bagot.

Now Bagot, freely speake thy minde,
What thou do'st know of Noble Glousters death;
Who wrought it with the King, and who perform'd
The bloody Office of his timelesse end.

Bag. Then set before my face, the Lord Aumerle.

Bull. Cosin, stand forth and looke upon that man.

Bag. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scornes to unsay, what it hath once deliver'd.
In that dead time, when Glousters death was plotted,
I heard you say, Is not my arme of length,
That reacheth from the rest full English Court
As farre as Callis, to my Vnckles head?
Amongst much other talke, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand Crownes,
Then Bullingbrooke returne to England; adding withall,
How blest this Land would be, in this your Cosins death.

Aum. Princes and Noble Lords:

What answer shall I make to this base man?

Shall I so much dishonour my faire Starres,

On equall termes to give him chasticement?

Either I must, or have mine honour spoyld

With th' Atteindor of his slanderous Lippes.

There is my Gage, the manuall Seale of death

That markes thee out for Hell: Thou lyest,

And will maintaine what thou hast said, is false,

In thy heart blood, though being all too base,

To staine the temper of my Knightly sword.

Bul. Bagot forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence, that hath moved me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathies:

There is my Gage, Aumerle, in Gage to thine:

By that faire Sunne, that shewes me where thou stand'st,

I heard thee say (and vantlyngly thou spak'st it)

That thou wer'st cause of Noble Glousters death.

If thou deniest it, twenty times thou lyest,

And I will turne thy falshood to thy heart,

Where it was forged with my Rapiers point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not (Coward) live to see the day.

Fitz. Now by my Soule, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Per. Aumerle, thou lye'st: his Honor is as true
In this appeale, as thou art all unjust:

And that thou art so, there I throw my Gage

To prove it on thee, to th'extremest point

Of mortall breathing. Seize it, if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,

And never brandish more revengefull Steele,

Over the glittering Helmet of my Foe.

Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater:

I do remember well, the very time

Aumerle, and you did talke.

Fitz. My Lord,

'Tis very true: You were in presence then;

And you can witnesse with me, this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven,

As heaven it selfe is true.

Fitz. Surry, thou lye'st.

Surrey. Dishonourable Boy;

That Lye, shall lie so heauy on my Sword,

That it shall render Vengeance and Revenge,

Till thou the Lye-giver, and that Lye, doe lye

In earth as quiet, as thy Fathers Scull.

In prooffe whereof, there is mine Honors pawne,

Engage it to the Triall, if thou dar'st.

Fitz.

Fitzw. How fondly do'st thou spur a forward Horse?
If I dare eate, or drinke, or breath, or live,
I dare meete Surry in a Wilderneſſe,
And ipit upon him, whilst I ſay he Lyes,
And Lyes, and Lyes: there is my bond of Faith;
To tye thee to my ſtrong Correction.
A I intended to thrive in this new World,
Aumerle is guilty of my true Appeale.
Beſides, I heard the baniſh'd Norſolke ſay,
That thou Aumerle didſt ſend two of thy men,
To execute the Noble Duke at Callis.

Ann. Some honeſt Chriſtian truſt me with a Gage,
That Norſolke lyes: here doe I throw downe this,
If he may be repeald, to try his honour.

Bull. Theſe differences ſhall all reſt under Gage,
Till Norſolke be repeal'd: repeal'd he ſhall be;
(And though mine Enemy) reſtor'd againe
To all his Lands and Seignories: when hee's return'd,
Againſt Aumerle we will inforce his Tryall.

Carl. That honorable day ſhall ne're be ſcene.
Many a time hath baniſh'd Norſolke fought
For Jeſu Chriſt, in glorious Chriſtian field
Streaming the Enſigne of the Chriſtian Croſſe
Againſt blacke Pagans, Turkes, and Saracens:
And toyl'd with workes of Warre, retyr'd himſelfe
To Italy, and there at Venice gave
His Body to that pleaſant Countries Earth,
And his pure Soule unto his Captaine Chriſt,
Vnder whoſe Colours he had fought ſo long.

Bull. Why Biſhop, is Norſolke dead?

Carl. Aſſure as I live my Lord.

Bull. Sweet peace conſult his ſweet Soule
To the Boſome of good old Abraham.
Lords Appelants, your differences ſhal all reſt under gage,
Till we aſſigne you to your dayes of Tryall.

Enter Yorke.

Yorke. Great Duke of Lancaſter, I come to thee
From Plume-pluckt Richard, who with willing Soule
Adopts thee Heire, and his high Scepter yeelds
To the poſſeſſion of thy Royall Hand.
Aſcend his Throne, deſcending now from him,
And long live Henry, of that Name the Fourth.

Bull. In Gods Name, Ile aſcend the Regall throne.

Carl. Mary, Heaven forbid.

Worſt in this Royall Preſence may I ſpeake,
Yet beſt beſeeming me to ſpeake the truth.
Would God, that any in this Noble Preſence
Were enough Noble to be upright Iudge
Of Noble Richard; then true Nobleneſſe would Learne him forbearance from ſo foule a Wrong.
What Subject can give Sentence on his King?
And who ſits here, that is not Richards Subject?
Theeves are not judg'd, but they are by to heare,
Although apparant guilt be ſcene in them:
And ſhall the figure of Gods Maieſtie,
His Captaine, Steward, Deputie elect,
Anoynted, Crown'd and planted many yeeres,
Be judg'd by ſubject, and inferior breath,
And he himſelfe not preſent? Oh, forbid it, God,
That in a Chriſtian Climate, Soules refine
Should ſhew ſo heynous, blacke, obſcene a deed.
I ſpeake to Subjects, and a Subject ſpeakes,
Stirr'd up by Heaven, thus boldly for his King.
My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call King,
Is a foule Traytor to prow'd Herefords King.
And if you Crowne him, let me prophecie,

The blood of Engliſh ſhall manure the ground,
And future ages groane for his foule Act.
Peace ſhall goe ſleepe with Turkes and Infidels;
And in this Seat of Peace, tumultuous Warres
Shall Kinne with Kinne, and Kinde with Kinde confound.
Diſorder, Horror, Feare, and Mutinie
Shall here inhabite, and this Land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead mens Sculls.
Oh, if you reare this Houſe, againſt this Houſe
It will the wofulleſt Diviſion prove,
That ever fell upon this curſed Earth.
Prevent it, reſiſt it, let it not be ſo,
Leaſt Child, Childs Children cry againſt you, Woe.

North. Well have you argu'd Sir: and for your paines,
Of Capitall Treason we arreſt you here.

My Lord of Weſtminſter, be it your charge,
To keepe him ſafely, till his day of Tryall.
May it pleaſe you, Lords, to grant the Commons Suit?

Bull. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may ſurrender: ſo we ſhall proceede
Without ſuſpition.

Yor. I will be his Conduſt.

Exit.

Bull. Lords, you that here are under our Arreſt,
Procure your Sureties for your Dayes of Answer:
Little are we beholding to your Love,
And little look'd for at your helping Hands.

Enter Richard and Yorke.

Rich. Alack, why am I ſent for to a King,
Before I have ſhooke off the Regall thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To inſinuate, flatter, bowe, and bend my Knece.
Give Sorrow leave a while, to returne me
To this ſubmiſſion. Yet I will remember
The favors of theſe men: were they not mine?
Did they not ſometime cry, All hayle to me?
So Judas did to Chriſt: but he in twelve,
Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thouſand, none.
God ſave the King: will no man ſay, Amen?
Am I both Prielt and Clarke? well then, Amen.
God ſave the King, although, be not he:
And yet Amen, if Heaven doe thinke him me.
To doe what ſervice, am I ſent for hither?

Yor. To doe that office of thine owne good will,
Which tyred Maieſtie did make thee offer:
The Reſignation of thy State and Crowne
To Henry Bulſingbrooke.

Rich. Give me the Crowne. Here Couſin, ſeize the Crowne:
Here Coſin, on this ſide my Hand, on that ſide thine.
Now is this Golden Crowne like a deepe Well,
That owes two Buckets, filling one another,
The emptier ever dancing in the ayre,
The other downe, unſcene, and full of Waters:
That Bucket downe, and full of Teares am I,
Drinking my Griefes, whilst you mount up on high.

Bul. I thought you had beene willing to reſigne.

Rich. My Crowne I am, but ſtill my Griefes are mine:
You may my Glories and my State depoſe,
But not my Griefes; ſtill am I King of thoſe.

Bull. Part of your Cares you give me with your Crowne.

Rich. Your Cares ſet up, doe not pluck my Cares down.
My Care, is loſſe of Care, by old Care done,
Your Care, is gaine of Care, by new Care wonne:
The Cares I give, I have, though given away,
They tend the Crowne, yet ſtill with me they ſtay:

Bull. Are you contented to reſigne the Crowne?

d 1

Rich. I,

Rich. I, no; no, I : for I must nothing bee :
Therefore no, no, for I resigne to thee.
Now, marke me how I will undoe my selfe.
I give this heavie Weight from off my Head,
And this unwieldie Scepter from my Hand,
The pride of Kingly sway from out my Heart,
With mine owne Teares I Wash away my Blame,
With mine owne Hands I give away my Crowne,
With mine owne Tongue denie my Sacred State,
With mine owne Breath release all dutious Oathes :
All Pompe and Majestie I doe forswear :
My Manors, Rents, Revenues, I forgoe ;
My Acts, Decrees, and Statutes I denie :
God pardon all Oathes that are broke to me,
God keepe all Vowes unbroke are made to thee.
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd,
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd,
Long mayst thou live in Richards Seat to sit,
And soone lye Richard in an Earthie Pit.
God save King Henry, un-King'd Richard sayes,
And send him many yeeres of Sunne-shine dayes.
What more remains ?

North. No more : but that you reade
These Accusations, and these grievous Crymes,
Committed by your Person, and your followers,
Against the State, and Profit of this Land:
That by confessing them, the Soules of men
May deeme, that you are worthily depos'd.

Rich. Must I doe so ? and must I ravell out
My weav'd-up follies ? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy Offences were upon Record,
Would it not shame thee, in so faire a troupe,
To reade a Lecture of them ? If thou would'st,
There should'st thou finde one haynous Article,
Containing the deposing of a King,
And cracking the strong Warrant of an Oath,
Mark'd with a Blot, damn'd in the Booke of Heaven.
Nay, all of you, that stand and looke upon me,
Whil'st that my wretchednesse doth bait my selfe,
Though some of you, with Pilate wash your hands,
Shewing an outward pittie : yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my fowre Crosse,
And Water cannot wash away your sinne.

North. My Lord dispatch, reade o're these Articles.

Rich. Mine Eyes are full of Teares, I cannot see :
And yet salt-Water blindes them not so much,
But they can see a sort of Traytors here.
Nay, if I turne mine Eyes upon my selfe,
I finde my selfe a Traytor with the rest :
For I have given here my Soules consent,
To undeck the pompous Body of a King ;
Made Glory base ; a Sovereigne, a Slave ;
Prowd Majestie, a Subject ; State, a Pefant.

North. My Lord.

Rich. No Lord of thine, thou haught-insulting man ;
No, nor no mans Lord : I have no Name, no Title ;
No, not that Name was given me at the Font,
But 'tis usurpt: alack the heavie day,
That I have worne so many Winters out,
And know not now, what Name to call my selfe.
Oh, that I were a Mockerie, King of Snow,
Standing before the Sunne of Bullingbrooke,
To melt my selfe away in Water-drops.
Good King, great King, and yet not greatly good,
And if my word be Sterling yet in England,
Let it command a Mirror hither straight,

That it may shew me what a Face I have;
Since it is Bankrupt of his Majestie.

Bull. Goe some of you, and fetch a Looking-Glasse.

Nor. Reade o're this Paper, while the Glasfe doth come.

Rich. Fiend, thou torments me, ere I come to Hell.

Bull. Vrge it no more, my Lord Northumberland.

North. The Commons will not then be satisfy'd.

Rich. They shall be satisfy'd : Ile reade enough,
When I doe see the very Booke indeede,
Where all my sinnes are writ, and that's my selfe.

Enter one with a Glasfe.

Give me that Glasfe, and therein will I reade.
No deeper wrinkles yet? hath sorrow stricke
So many Blowes upon this Face of mine,
And made no deeper Wounds? Oh flatt'ring Glasfe,
Like to my followers in prosperitie,
Thou do'st beguile me. Was this Face, the Face
That every day, under his House-hold Roofe,
Did keepe ten thousand men? Was this the Face,
That like the Sunne, did make beholders winke?
Is this the Face, which fac'd so many follies,
That was at last out-fac'd by Bullingbrooke?
A brittle Glory shineth in this Face,
As brittle as the Glory, is the Face,
For there it is, crackt in an hundred shivers.
Marke silent King, the Morall of this sport,
How soone my Sorrow hath destroy'd my Face.

Bul. The shadow of your Sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your Face.

Rich. Say that againe.

The shadow of my Sorrow : ha, let's see,
'Tis very true, my Griefe lyes all within,
And these externall manners of Laments,
Are meere shadows to the unseene Griefe,
That swells with silence in the tortur'd Soule.
There lyes the substance : and I thanke thee King
For thy great bounty, that not onely giv'st
Me cause to waile, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. Ile begge one Boone,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtaine it?

Bul. Name it, faire Cousin.

Rich. Faire Cousin? I am greater than a King :
For when I was a King, my flatterers
Were then but subjects ; being now a subject,
I have a King heere to my flatterer:
Being so great, I have no neede to begge.

Bul. Yet aske.

Rich. And shall I have?

Bul. You shall.

Rich. Then give me leave to goe.

Bul. Whither?

Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.

Bul. Goe some of you, convey him to the Tower.

Rich. Oh good : convey : Conveyers are you all,
That rise thus nimble by a true Kings fall.

Bul. On Wednesday next, we solemnly set downe
Our Coronation : Lords, prepare your selves. Exeunt.

Abbot. A wofull Pageant have we here beheld.

Carl. The Woe's to come, the Children yet unborne,
Shall feele this day as sharpe to them as Thorne.

Aum. You holy Clergie-men, is there no Plot
To rid the Realme of this pernicious Blot?

Abbot. Before I freely speake my minde heerein,
You shall not onely take the Sacrament,
To bury mine intents, but also to effect

What

What ever I shall happen to devise.
I see your Browes are full of Discontent,
Your Heart of Sorrow, and your eyes of Teares;
Come home with me to Supper, Ile lay a Plot
Shall shew us all a merry day. Exiunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Queene, and Ladies.

Qu. This way the King will come : this is the way
To Iulius Casars ill-erected Tower :
To whose flint Bosome, my condemned Lord
Is doom'd a Prisoner, by proud Bullingbrooke.
Here let us rest, if this Rebellious Earth
Have any resting for her true Kings Queene.

Enter Richard and Guard.

But soft, but see, or rather doe not see,
My faire Rose wither : yet looke up ; behold,
That you in pittie may disloive to dew,
And wash him fresh againe with true-love Teares.
Ah thou, the Model where old Troy did stand,
Thou Mapped of Honour, thou King Richards Tombe,
And not King Richard : thou most beauteous Inne,
Why should hard-favor'd Griefe be lodg'd in thee,
When Triumph is become an Ale-house Guest?

Rich. Ioyne not with griefe, faire Woman, do not so,
To make my end too iudgen : learne good Soule,
To thinke our former State a happy Dreame,
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are,
Shewes us but this. I am sworne Brother (sweet)
To grim Necessitie ; and he and I
Will keepe a League till Death. High thee to France,
And Cloyster thee in some Religious House :
Our holy lives must winne a new worlds Crowne,
Which our prophane houres here have thicken downe

Qu. What, is my Richard both in shape and minde Transform'd, and weaken'd? Hath Bullingbrooke
Depos'd thine Intellect? hath he beene in thy Heart?
The Lyon dying thrusteth forth his Paw,
And wounds the Earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o're-powr'd : and wilt thou, Pupill-like,
Take thy Correction mildly, kisse the Rodde,
And fawne on rage with base humility,
Which art a Lyon and a King of Beasts?

Rich. A King of beasts indeed : if aught but Beasts,
I had beene still a happy King of Men.
Good (sometime Queene) prepare thee hence for France :
Thinke I am dead, and that even here thou tak'st,
As from my Death-bed, my last living leave.
In Winters tedious Nights sit by the fire
With good old folkes, and let them tell thee Tales
Of wofull Ages, long agoe betide :
And ere thou bid good-night, to quit their griefe,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their Beds :
For why? the sencelesse Brands will sympathize
The heave accent of my moving Tongue,
And in compassion, weepe the fire out :
And some will mourne in Ashes, some coale-blacke,
For the deposing of a rightfull King.

Enter Northumberland.

North. My Lord, the mind of Bullingbrooke is chang'd.

You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.
And Madame, there is order ta'ne for you :
With all swift speed, you must away to France.

Rich. Northumberland, thou Ladder wherewithall
The mounting Bullingbrooke ascends my Throne,
The time shall not be many houres of age,
More than it is, ere foule sinne, gathering head,
Shall breake into corruption : thou shalt thinke,
Though he devide the Realme, and give thee halfe,
It is too little, helping him to all :
He shall thinke, that thou which know'st the way
To plant unrightfull Kings, wilt know againe,
Being ne're so little urg'd, another way,
To plucke him headlong from th' usurped Throne.
The Love of wicked friends converts to Feare ;
That Feare, to Hate ; and Hate turnes one, or both,
To worthie Danger, and deserved Death.

North. My guilt be on my Head, and there an end :
Take leave, and part, for you must part forthwith.

Rich. Doubly divorc'd? (bad men) ye violate
A two-fold Marriage ; 'twixt my Crowne, and me,
And then betwixt me, and my married Wife.
Let me un-kisse the Oath 'twixt thee and me ;
And yet not so, for with a kisse 'twas made.
Partus Northumberland : I, towards the North,
Where shivering Cold and Sicknesse pines the Clyme :
My Queene to France : from whence, let forth in pompe,
She came adorned hither like sweet May,
Sent backe like Hollowmas, or short'st of day.

Qu. And must wee be divided? must we part?

Rich. I, hand from hand (my Love) and heart fro heart.

Qu. Banish us both, and send the King with me.

North. That were some Love, but little Pollicy.

Qu. Then whither he goes, thither let me goe.

Rich. So two together weping, make one Woe.
Weepe thou for me in France ; I, for thee heere :
Better farre off, than neere, be ne're the neere.
Goe, count thy Way with Sighes ; I, mine with Groanes.

Qu. So longest Way shall have the longest Moanes.

Rich. Twice for one step Ile groane, the way being short,
And peece the way out with a heave heart.
Come, come, in wooing Sorrow let's be brieve,
Since wedding it, there is such length in Griefe :
One Kisse shall stop our mouthes, and dumbely part ;
Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart.

Qu. Give me mine owne againe : 'twere no good part,
To take on me to keepe, and kill thy heart.
So, now I have mine owne againe, be gone,
That I may strive to kill it with a groane.

Rich. We make Woe wanton with this fond delay :
Once more adieu ; the rest let Sorrow say. Exiunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Yorke, and his Duchesse.

Duch. My Lord, you told me you would tell the rest,
When weeping made you breake the story off,
Of our two Cousins comming into London.

Yor. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stoppe, my Lord,
Where rude mis-govern'd hands, from Windowes tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richards head.

d 3

Yor. Then

To. Then, as I sayd, the Duke (great Bullingbrooke,) Mounted upon a hot and fierie Steed,
Which his aspiring Rider seem'd to know,
With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course :
While all tongues cride, God save thee Bullingbrooke.
You would have thought the very windowes spake,
So many greedy lookes of young and old,
Through Casements darted their desiring eyes
Vpon his visage : and that all the walles
With painted Imagery had sayd at once,
Jesu preserve thee, welcome Bullingbrooke.
Whil'st he, from one side to the other turning,
Bare-headed, lower then his proud Steeds necke,
Bespake them thus : I thanke you Countrimen :
And thus still doing, thus he past along.

Dutch. Alas poore Richard, where rides he the whilst?

Yorke. As in a Theater, the eyes of men
After a well grac'd Actor leaves the Stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious :
Even so, or with much more contempt, mens eyes
Did scowle on Richard : no man cride, God save him :
No joyfull tongue gave him his welcome home,
But dust was throwne upon his Sacred head,
Which with such gentle sorrow he shooke off,
His face still combating with teares and smiles
(The badges of his greefe and patience)
That had not God (for some strong purpose) steel'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
And Barbarisme it selfe have pittied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events,
To whose high will we bound our calme contents.
To Bullingbrooke, are we sworne Subjects now,
Whose State, and Honour, I for for aye allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Dut. Heere comes my sonne Aumerle.

Yor. Aumerle that was,
But that is lost, for being Richards Friend.
And Madam, you must call him Rustand now :
I am in Parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting featie in the new-made King.

Dut. Welcome my sonne : who are the Violets now,
That strew the greene lap of the new-come Spring ?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not,
God knowes, I had as lief be none, as one.

Yorke. Well, beare you well in this new-spring of time,
Least you be cropt before you come to prime.

What newes frō Oxford? Hold those Iusts & Triumphs?

Aum. For ought I know my Lord, they do.

Yorke. You will be there I know.

Aum. If God prevent not, I purpose so.

Yor. What Seale is that that hangs without thy bosom?
Yea, look'st thou pale? Let me see the Writing.

Aum. My Lord, 'tis nothing.

Yor. No matter then who sees it,
I will be satisfied, let me see the Writing.

Aum. I do beseech your Grace to pardon me,
It is a matter of small consequence,
Which for some reasons I would not have scene.

Yor. Which for some reasons sir, I meane to see :
I feare, I feare.

Dut. What should you feare?

'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into
For gay apparrell, against the Triumph.

Yor. Bound to him selfe? What doth he with a Bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a foole.

Boy, let me see the Writing.

Aum. I do beseech you pardon me, I may not shew it.

Yor. I will be satisfied, let me see it I say. Snatches it
Treason, foule Treason, Villaine, Traitor, Slave.

Dut. What's the matter, my Lord?

Yorke. Hoa, who's within there? Saddle my horse.
Heaven for his mercy : what treachery is heere?

Dut. Why, what is't my Lord?

Yorke. Give me my boots, I say : Saddle my horse :
Now by my honour, my life, my troth,
I will appeach the Villaine.

Dut. What is the matter?

Yorke. Peace foolish Woman.

Dut. I will not peace. What is the matter Sonne?

Aum. Good Mother be content, it is no more
Then my poore life must answer.

Dut. Thy life answer?

Enter Servant with Boots.

Yor. Bring my Bootes, I will unto the King.

Dut. Strike him Aumerle. Poore boy, thou art amaz'd,
Hence Villaine, never more come in my sight.

Yor. Give me my Bootes I say.

Dut. Why Yorke what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the Trespasse of thine owne?
Have we more Sonnes? Or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunke up with time?
And wilt thou plucke my faire Sonne from mine Age,
And rob me of a happie Mothers name?
Is he not like thee? Is he not thine owne?

Yor. Thou fond mad woman:

Wilt thou conceale this darke Conspiracy?
A dozen of them heere have tane the Sacrament,
And interchangeably set downe their hands
To kill the King at Oxford.

Dut. He shall be none:

Wee'll keepe him here : then what is that to him?

Yor. Away fond woman : where he twenty times my Son, I would appeach him.

Dut. Hadst thou groan'd for him as I have done,
Thou wouldst be more pittifull :
But now I know thy minde; thou do'st suspect
That I have beene disloyall to thy bed,
And that he is a Bastard, not thy Sonne :
Sweet Yorke, sweet husband, be not of that minde:
He is as like thee, as a man may be,
Not like to me, nor any of my Kin,
And yet I love him.

Yor. Make way, unruly Woman. Exit

Dut. After Aumerle. Mount thee upon his horse,
Spurre post, and get before him to the King,
And beg thy pardon, ere he do accuse thee,
He not be long behind : though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as Yorke :
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Bullingbrooke have pardon'd thee : Away, be gone. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Percie, and other Lords.

Bull. Can no man tell of my unthriftie Sonne?
'Tis full three monthes since I did see him last.
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he:
I would to heaven (my Lords) he might be found,
Enquire at London, 'mongst the Tavernes there:

For

For there (they say) he dayly doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose Companions,
Even such (they say) as stand in narrow Lanes,
And rob our Watch, and beate our passengers,
Which he (yong wanton, and effeminate Boy)
Takes on the point of Honour, to support
So dissolute a crew.

Per. My Lord, some two dayes since I saw the Prince,
And told him of these Triumphes held at Oxford.

Bull. And what sayd the Gallant?

Per. His answer was: he would unto the Stewes,
And from the common'st creature plucke a Glove
And weare it as a favour, and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest Challenger.

Bull. As dissolute as desp'rate, yet through both,
I see some sparkes of better hope: which elder dayes
May happily bring forth. But who comes here?

Enter Anmerle.

Aum. Where is the King?

Bull. What meanes our Cousin, that he stares
And lookes so wildeley?

Aum. God save your Grace. I do beseech your Majesty
To have some conference with your Grace alone.

Bull. Withdraw your selves, and leave us here alone:
What is the matter with our Cousin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
My tongue cleave to my roofoe within my mouth,
Vnlesse a Pardon, ere I rise or speake.

Bull. Intended or committed was this fault?
If on the first, how hainous ere it be,
To win thy after-love I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave, that I may turne the key,
That no man enter till the tale be done.

Bull. Have thy desire.

Yorke within.

Yor. My Liege beware, looke to thy selfe,
Thou hast a Traytor in thy presence there.

Bull. Villaine, Ile make thee safe.

Aum. Stay thy revengefull hand, thou hast no cause to feare.

Yorke. Open the doore, secure foole-hardy King:
Shall I for love speake treason to thy face?
Open the doore, or I will breake it open.

Enter Yorke.

Bul. What is the matter (Vukle) speak, recover breath,
Tell us how neere is danger,
That we may arme us to encounter it.

Yor. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The reason that my halfe forbids me show.

Aum. Remember as thou read'st, thy promise past:
I do repent me, reade not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

Yor. It was (villaine) ere thy hand did set it downe.
I tore it from the traitors bosome, King.
Feare and not Love, begets his penitence;
Forget to pittie him, least thy pittie prove
A Serpent, that will sting thee to the heart.

Bull. Oh heinous, & wrong, and bould Conspiracie,
O loyall Father of a treacherous Sonne:
Thou sheere, immaculate, and silver fountaine,
From whence this streame, through muddy passages
Hath had his current, and defil'd himselfe.
Thy overflow of good, converts to bad,
And thine abundant goodnesse shall excuse
This deadly blot, in thy digressing sonne.

Yor. So shall my vertue be his vices bawd,
And he shall spend mine Honour, with his Shame:

As thriftlesse Sonnes their scraping Fathers Gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonor dyes,
Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:
Thou kill'st me in his life, giving him breath,
The Traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Dutcheffe within.

Dut. What hoa (my Liege) for heavens sake let me in.

Bull. What shrill-voic'd Suppliant makes this eager cry?

Dut. A Woman and thine Aunt (great King) 'tis I.

Speake with me, pittie me, open the dore,
A Begger begs, that never begg'd before.

Bul. Our Scene is alter'd from a serious thing,
And now chang'd to the Begger, and the King:
My daungerous Cofin, let your Mother in,
I know she's come to pray for your foule sin.

Yor. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More finnes for this forgivenessse, prosper may.
This fetter'd joynt cut off, the rest rests sound,
This let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Dutcheffe.

Dut. O King, beleeve not this heard-hearted man,
Love, loving not it selfe, none other can.

Yor. Thou franticke woman, what dost thou make here,
Shall thy old dugges once more a Traitor reare?

Dut. Sweet Yorke be patient, heare me gentle Liege.

Bul. Rise up good Aunt.

Dut. Not yet, I thee beseech.

For ever will I kneele upon my knees,
And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy: vntill thou bid me ioy.
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing Boy.

Aum. Vnto my Mothers prayers, I bend my knee.

Yorke. Against them both, my true joynts bended be.

Dut. Pleades he in earnest? Looke upon his Face,
His eyes do drop no teares: his prayers are in jest:
His words come from his mouth, ours from our brest.
He prayes but faintly, and would be denide,
We pray with heart, and soule, and all beside:
His wearie joynts would gladly rise, I know,
Our knees shall kneele, till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisie,
Ours of true zeale, and deepe integritie:
Our prayers do out-pray his, then let them have
That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.

Bul. Good Aunt stand up.

Dut. Nay do not say stand up.

But Pardon first, and afterwards stand up.
And if I were thy Nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to heare a word till now:
Say Pardon (King,) let pittie teach thee how.
The word is short: but not so short as sweet,
No word like Pardon, for Kings mouth's so meet.

Yor. Speake it in French (King) sayd Pardon ne moy.

Dut. Dost thou teach pardon, pardon to destroy?
Ah my sowre husband, my hard-hearted Lord,
That set'st the word it selfe, against the word,
Speake pardon as 'tis currant in our Land,
The chopping French we doe not understand.
Thine eye begins to speake, set thy tongue there;
Or in thy pitteous heart, plant thou thine eare,
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pearce,
Pittie may move thee, Pardon to rehearse.

Bul. Good Aunt, stand up.

Dut. I do not sue to stand,
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Bull.

Bull. I pardon him as heaven shall pardon me.

Duc. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee :
Yet am I sicke for feare : Speake it againe,
Twice saying Pardon, doth not pardon twaine,
But makes one pardon strong.

Bull. I pardon him with all my heart.

Duc. A God on earth thou art.

Bul. But for our trusty brother-in-Law, the Abbot,
With all the rest of that comforted crew,
Destruction straight shall dogge them at the heeles:
Good Vnckle helpe to order severall powres
To Oxford, or where ere these Traitors are :
They shall not live within this world I sweare,
But I will have them once know where.
Vnckle farewell, and Cofin adieu :
Your mother well hath prayd, and prove you true.

Duc. Come my old son, I pray heaven make thee new.

Exit.

Enter Exton and Servant.

Ext. Didst thou not marke the King what words he spake?

Have I no friend will rid me of this living feare :
Was it not so?

Ser. Those were his very words.

Ex. Have I no Friend? (quoth he:) he spake it twice,
And urg'd it twice together, did he not?

Ser. He did.

Ex. And speaking it, he wistly look'd on me,
As who shall say, I would thou wer't the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning the King at Pomfret : Come, let's goe;
I am the Kings friend, and will rid his Foe.

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Richard.

Rich. I have bin studying, how to compare
This Prison where I live, unto the World:
And for because the world is populous,
And heere is not a Creature, but my selfe,
I cannot doe it: yet Ile hammer't out.
My Braine, Ile prove the Female to my Soule,
My soule, the Father: and these two beget
A generation of still breeding Thoughts;
And these same Thoughts, people this Little World
In humors, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things Divine, are intermixt
With scruples, and do set the Faith it selfe
Against the Faith: as thus: Come little ones: & then again,
It is as hard to come, as for a Camell
To thred the posterne of a Needles eye.
Thoughts tending to Ambition, they do plot
Vnlikely wonders; how these vaine weake niles
May reare a passage through the Flinty ribbes
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walles:
And for they cannot, dye in their owne pride.
Thoughts tending to Content, flatter themselves,
That they are not the first of Fortunes slaves,
Nor shall not be the last. Like silly Beggars,
Who sitting in the Stockes, refuge their shame
That many have, and others must sit there;
And in this Thought, they finde a kind of ease,

Bearing their owne misfortune on the backe
Of such as have before indur'd the like.

Thus play I in one Prison, many people,
And none contented. Sometimes am I King;
Then Treason makes me with my selfe a Beggar;
And so I am. Then crushing penurie,
Perswades me, I was better when a King:
Then am I king'd againe: and by and by,
Thinke that I am un-king'd by Bullingbrooke,
And straight am nothing. But what ere I am, Musick
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing. Musicke do I heare?
Ha, ha? keepe time: How fowre sweet Musicke is,
When Time is broke, and no Proportion kept?
So is it in the Musicke of mens lives:
And here have I the daintinesse of care,
To heare time broke in a disorder'd string:
But for the Concord of my State and Time,
Had not an care to heare my true Time broke:
I wasted Time, and now doth Time waste me:
For now hath Time made me his numbring clocke;
My Thoughts, are minutes; and with Sighes they iarre,
Their watches to mine eyes, the outward Watch,
Whereto my finger, like a Dials point,
Is pointing still, in censing them from teares.
Now sir, the sound that tels what houre it is,
Are clamorous groanes, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: so Sighes, and Teares, and Groanes,
Shew Minutes, Houres, and Times: O but my Time
Runs poasting on, in Bullingbrookes proud joy,
While I stand fooling heere, his jacks o' th' Clocke.
This Musicke mads me, let it sound no more,
For though it have holpe madmen to their wits,
In me it seemes, it will make wise-men mad:
Yet bleiling on his heart that gives it me;
For 'tis a signe of love, and love to Richard,
Is a strange Brooch, in this all-hating world.

Enter Groome.

Groo. Haile Royall Prince.

Rich. Thankes Noble Peere.

The cheapest of us, is ten groates too deere.
What art thou? And how com'st thou hither?
Where no man ever comes, but that sad dogge
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Groo. I was a poore Groome of thy Stable (King)
When thou wer't King, who travelling towards Yorke,
With much adoo, at length have gotten leave
To looke upon my (sometimes Royall) masters face.
O how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London streetes, that Coronation day,
When Bullingbrooke rode on Roane Barbary,
That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse, that I so carefully have drest.

Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me gentle Friend,
How went he under him?

Groo. So proudly, as if he had disdained the ground.

Rich. So proud, that Bullingbrooke was on his backe;
That Iade hath eate bread from my Royall hand.
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall downe
(Since Pride must have a fall) and breake the necke
Of that proud man, that did usurpe his backe?
Forgivenesse horse: Why do I raile on thee,
Since thou created to be aw'd by man
Was't borne to beare? I was not made a horse,

And

And yet I beare a burthen like an Asse,
Spur-gall'd, and tyr'd by jauncing Bullingbrooke.

Enter Keeper with a Dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place, heere is no longer stay.

Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wer't away.

Groo. What my tongue dares nor, that my heart shall say. Exit.

Keep. My Lord, wilt please you to fall too?

Rich. Taste of it first, as thou wer't wont to doo.

Keep. My Lord I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton,
Who lately came from th' King, commands the contrary.

Rich. The divell take Henrie of Lancaster, and thee;
Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

Keep. Helpe, helpe, helpe.

Enter Exton and Servants.

Rich. How now? what meanes Death in this rude assault?
Villaine, thine owne hand yeelds thy deaths instrument;
Go thou and fill another roome in hell.

Exton strikes him downe.

That hand shall burne in never-quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand,
Hath with the Kings blood, slain'd the Kings owne land.
Mount, mount my soule, thy seate is up on high;
Whil't my grosse flesh sinkes downward, heere to dye.

Exton. As full of Valor as of Royall blood,
Both have I spilt: Oh would the deed were good,
For now the divell, that told me I did well,
Sayes, that this deede is chronicled in hell.
This dead King to the living King Ile beare,
Take hence the rest; and give them buriall heere. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Flourish. Enter Bullingbrooke, Yorke, with other Lords & attendants.

Bull. Vnkle Yorke, the latest newes we heare,
Is that the Rebels have consum'd with fire
Our Towne of Ciceter in Gloucestershire,
But whether they be tane or slaine, we heare not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome my Lord: What is the newes?

North. First to thy Sacred State, wish I all happinesse:
The next newes is, I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:

The manner of their taking may appeare
At large discourfed in this paper heere.

Bull. We thanke thee gentle Percy for thy paines,
And to thy worth will adde right worthy gaines.

Enter Fitz-waters.

Fitz. My Lord, I have from Oxford sent to London,
The heads of Broccas, and Sir Bennet Seely,
Two of the dangerous comforted Traitors,
That fought at Oxford, thy dire overthrow.

Bull. Thy paines Fitzwaters shall not be forgot,
Right Noble is thy merit, well I wor.

Enter Percy and Carlisle.

Per. The grand Conspirator, Abbott of Westminster,
With clog of Conscience, and sowre melancholly,
Hath yeelded up his body to the grave:
But heere is Carlisle, living to abide
Thy Kingly doome, and sentence of his pride.

Bull. Carlisle, this is your doome:
Choose out some secret place, some reverend roome
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy selfe:
So as thou liv'st in peace, dye free from strife:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever beene,
High sparkes of Honor in thee have I seene.

Enter Exton with a Coffin.

Exton. Great King, within this Coffin I present
Thy buried feare. Heerein all breathlesse lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies
Richard of Burdeaux, by me hither brought.

Bull. Exton. I thanke thee not, for thou hast wrought
A deede of Slaughter, with thy fatall hand,
Vpon my head, and all this famous Land.

Ex. From your owne mouth my Lord, did I this deed.

Bull. They love not poyson, that do poyson neede,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the Murderer, love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neyther my good word, nor Princely favour.
With Caine go wander through the shade of night,
And never shew thy head by day, nor light.
Lords, I protest my soule is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me, and make me grow.
Come mourne with me, for that I do lament,
And put on sullen Blacke incontinent:
Ile make a voyage to the holy-land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand.
March sadly after, grace my mourning heere,
In weeping after this untimely Beere.

Exeunt.

FJNJS:

The First Part of Henry the Fourth, with the Life and Death of HENRY Sirnamed HOT-SPURRE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with others.

King.

SO shaken as we are, to wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened Peace to pant,
And breath shortwinded accents of new broils
To be commenc'd in Stronds a-farre remote :
No more the thirstie entrance of this Soyle,
Shall dambe her lippes with her owne childrens blood :
No more shall trenching Warre channell her fields,
Nor bruise her Flowrets with the Armed hooves
Of hostile paces. Those opposed eyes,
Which like the Meteors of a troubled Heaven,
All of one Nature, of one Substance bred,
Did lately meete in the intestine shooke,
And furious cloze of civill Butchery,
Shall now in mutuall well-befecoming rankes
March all one way, and be no more oppos'd
Against Acquaintance, Kindred, and Allies.
The edge of Warre, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his Master. Therefore Friends,
As farre as to the Sepulcher of Christ,
Whose Souldier now, under whose blessed Crosse
We are impressed and ingag'd to fight,
Forthwith a power of English shall we levie,
Whose armes were moulded in their Mothers wombe,
To chase these Pagans in those holy Fields,
Over Whose Acres walk'd those blessed feete
Which fourteene hundred yeares ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter Crosse.
But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old,
And bootlesse 'tis to tell you we will go :
Therefore we meete not now. Then let me heare
Of you my gentle Cousin Westmerland,
What yesternight our Councell did decree,
In forwarding this decre expedience.
West. My Liege : This halfe was hot in question,
And many limits of the Charge set downe
But yesternight : when all athwart there came
A Post from Wales, loaden with heavy Newes ;
Whose worst was, That the Noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wilde Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
And a thousand of his people butchered :

Vpon whose dead corpes there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shamelesse transformation,
By those Welshwomen done, as may not be (Without much shame) re-told or spoken of.

King. It seemes then, that the tidings of this broile,
Brake off our businesse for the Holy land.

West. This matcht with other like, my gracious Lord,
Farre more vneven and unwelcome Newes
Came from the North, and thus it did report :
On Holy-roode day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archebald,
That ever-valiant and approoved Scot,
At Holmedon met, where they did spend
A sad and bloody houre :

As by discharge of their Artillerie,
And shape of likelyhood the newes was told :
For he that brought them, in the very heate
And pride of their contention, did take horse,
Vncertaine of the issue any way.

King. Heere is a deere and true industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his Horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soyle,
Betwixt the Holmedon, and this Seat of ours :
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome newes.
The Earle of Douglas is discomfited,
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty Knights Balk'd in their owne blood did Sir Walter see
On Holmedons Plaines. Of Prisoners, Hotspur tooke
Mordake Earle of Fife, and eldest sonne
To beate Douglas, and the Earle of Arboll,
Of Marry, Angus, and Menteith.

And is not this an honourable spoyle?
A gallant prize ? Ha Cousin, is it not ? In faith it is.

West. A Conquest for a Prince to boast of.

King. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, & mak'st me sin,
In envy, that my Lord Northumberland
Should be the father of so blest a sonne :
A Sonne, who is the Theame of Honors tongue ;
Amongst a Grove, the very straightest Plant,
Who is sweet Fortunes Minion, and her Pride :
Whil'st I by looking on the prayse of him,
See Ryot and Dishonor staine the brow
Of my yong Harry. O that it could be prov'd,
That some Night-tripping Faery, had exchang'd
In Cradle clothes, our Children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet :

Then

Then would I have his Harry, and he mine :
But let him from my thoughts. What thinke you Coze
Of this young Perceis pride ? The Prisoners
Which he in this adventure hath surpriz'd,
To his owne use he keepes, and sends me word
I shall have none but Mordake Earle of Fife.

West. This is his Vnckles teaching. This is Worcester
Malevolent to you in all Aspects :
Which makes him prune himselfe, and bristle up
The crest of Youth against your Dignity.

King. But I have lent for him to answer this :
And for this cause a while we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Ierusalem.

Cosin, on Wednesday next, our Councell we will hold
At Windfor, so informe the lords :

But come your selfe with speed to us againe,
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will my Liege.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Henry Prince of Wales, Sir Iohn Falstaffe, and Poins.

Fal. Now Hal, what time of day is it Lad ?

Prince. Thou art so fat-witted with drinking of old Sacke and unbuttoning thee after Supper, and sleeping upon benches in the afternoone, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldest truly know.
What a divell hast thou to doe with the time of the day ?
unlesse houres were cups of Sacke, and minutes Capons, and clockes the tongues of Bawdes, and dialls the signes of Leaping-houses, and the blessed Sunne himselfe a faire hot Wench in Flame-coloured Taffata, I see no reason, why thou shouldst bee so superfluous, to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed you came neere me now Hal. for we that take Purfes, go by the Moone and seven Starres, and not by Phcebus hee, that wand'ring Knight so faire. And I pray thee sweet Wagge, when thou art King, as God save thy Grace, Maiesty I should say, for grace thou wilt have none.

Prin. What ! none ?

Fal. No, not so much as will serve to be Prologue to an Egge and Butter.

Prin. well, how then ? Come roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marre then, sweet Wagge, when thou art King, let not us that are Squires of the Nights body, bee call'd Thieves of the Dayes beautie. Let us be Dianaes Forresters, Gentlemen of the Shade, Minions of the Moone ; and let men say, we be men of good Government, being governed as the Sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the Moone, under whose countenance we steale.

Prin. Thou say'st well, and it holds well too : for the fortune of us that are the Moones men, doeth ebbe and flow like the Sea, being governed as the Sea is, by the Moone : as for proesse. Now a purse of Gold most resolutely snatch'd on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday Morning ; got with swearing, Layd by :
and spent with crying, Bring in : now, in as low an ebbe as the foot of the Ladder ; and by and by in as high a flow as the ride of the Gallowes.

Fal. Thou say'st true Lad : and is not my Hostesse of the Taverne a most sweet Wench ?

Prin. As is the hony, my old Lad of the Castle : and is not a Buffe Ierkin a most sweet robe of durance ?

Fal. How how ? how now mad Wagge ? What in thy quips and thy quiddities ? What a plague have I to doe with a Buffe-Ierkin ?

Prin. Why, what a poxe have I to doe with my Hostesse of the Taverne ?

Fal. Well, thou hast call'd her to a reckning many a time and oft.

Prin. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part ?

Fal. No, Ile give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

Prin. Yea and elsewhere, so farre as my Coyne would stretch, and where it would not, I have us'd my credit.

Fal. Yea, and sould it, that were it heere apparant, that thou art Heire apparant. But I prythee sweet Wag, shall there be Gallowes standing in England when thou art King ? and resolution thus fobb'd as it is, with the rusty curbe of old Father Anticke the Law ? Doe not thou when thou art a King, hang a Theefe.

Prin. No, thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I ? O rare ! Ile be a brave Iudge.

Prin. Thou judgest false already. I meane, thou shalt have the hanging of the Theeves, and so become a rare Hangman.

Fal. Well Hal, well : and in some sort it jumpes with my humour, as well as waiting in the Court, I can tell
you.

Prin. For obtaining of suites ?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suites, whereof the Hangman hath no leane Wardrobe. I am as Melancholly as a Gyb-Cat, or a lugg'd Beare,

Prin. Or an old Lyon, or a Lovers Lute.

Fal. Yea, or the Drone of a Lincolnbare Bagpipe.

Prin. What say'st thou to a Hare, or the Melancholly of Moore-Ditch ?

Fal. Thou hast the most unfavoury similes, and art indeed the most comparative rascallst sweet yong Prince.
But Hal, I prythee trouble me no more with vanity, I would thou and I knew, where a Commodity of good names were to be bought : an old lord of the Councell rated me the other day in the street about you sir ; but I mark'd him not, and yet he talk'd very wisely, but I regarded him not, and yet he talkt wisely, and in the street too.

Prin. Thou didst well : for no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration, and art indeed able to corrupt a Saint. Thou hast done much harme unto me Hal, God forgive thee for it. Before I knew thee Hal, I knew nothing ; and now I am (if a man should speake truly) little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over : and I do not, I am a Villaine. Ile be damp'd for never a Kings sonne in Chri- stendome.

Prin. Where shall we take a purse to morrow, Iacke ?

Fal. Where thou wilt Lad, Ile make one : and I doe not, call me Villaine, and baffle me.

Prin. I see a good amendment of life in thee : From Praying, to Purse-taking.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my Vocation Hal. 'Tis no sin for a man to labour in his Vocation.

Poins. Now shall wee know if Gads hill have set a Watch. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in Hell were hot enough for him ? This is the most omnipotent Villaine, that ever cryed, Stand, to a true man.

Prin. Good morrow Ned.

Poins.

Poines. Good morrow sweet Hal. What saies Monsieur Remorse? What sayes Sir Iohn Sacke and Sugar. Jacke? How agrees the Divell and thee about thy Soule, that thou foldest him on Good-friday last, for a Cup of Madera, and a cold Capons legge?

Prin. Sir Iohn stands to his word, the devill shall have his bargaine, for he was never yet a Breaker of Proverbs: He will give the devill his due.

Poin. Then art thou damn'd for keeping thy word with the divell.

Prin. Else he had bin damn'd for cozening the divell.

Poy. But my Lads, my Lads, to morrow morning, by foure a clocke early at Gads hill, there are Pilgrimes going to Canterbury with rich Offerings, and Traders riding to London with fat Purfes. I have vizards for you all; you have horses for your selves: Gads-hill lyes to night in Rochester, I have bespoken Supper to morrow in Eastcheape; we may doe it as secure as sleepe: if you will go, I will stuffe you Purfes full of Crownes: if you will not, tarry at home and be hang'd.

Fal. Heare ye Yedward, if I tarry at home and go not, Ile hang you for going.

Poy. You will chops.

Fal. Hal. wilt thou make one?

Prin. Who, I rob? I a Theefe? Not I.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou cam'st not of the blood-royall, if thou dar'st not stand for ten shillings.

Prin. Well then, once in my dayes Ile be a mad-cap.

Fal. Why that's well sayd.

Prin. Well, come what will, Ile tarry at home.

Fal. Ile be a Traitor then, when thou art King.

Prin. I care not.

Poy. Sir Iohn, I pray thee leave the Prince & me alone, I will lay him downe such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, maist thou have the spirit of perswasion; and he the eares of profitting, that what thou speakest, may move; and what he heares may be beleev'd, that the true Prince, may (for recreation sake) prove a false theefe; for the poore abuses of the time, want countenance. Farewell, you shall finde me in Eastcheape.

Prin. Farewell the latter Spring. Farewell Alhollown Summer.

Exit Fal.

Poy. Now, my good sweet Hony Lord, ride with us to morrow. I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaffe, Harvy, Rossill, and Gads-hill, shall robbe those men that we have already way-lay'd; your selfe & I, will not be there: and when they have the booty, if you and I doe not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

Prid. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poy. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to faile; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves, which they have no sooner achieved, but wee'll set upon them.

Prin. I but tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment to be our selves.

Poy. Tut, our horses they shall not see, Ile tye them in the Wood; our vizards wee will change after wee leave them: and firrah, I have Cases of Buck-ram for the nonce, to immaske our noted outward garments.

Prin. But I doubt they will be too hard for us.

Poy. Well, for two of them, I know them to bee as true bred Cowards as ever turn'd backe: and for the third if he fight longer than he sees reason, Ile forswear Armes. The vertue of this Iest will be, the incomprehensible lyes that this fat Rogue will tell us, when we meete at Supper: how thirty at least he fought with, what Wardes, what blowes, what extremities he endured, and in the reproofe of this, lyes the jest.

Prin. Well, Ile goe with thee, provide us all things necessary, and meete mee to morrow night in Eastcheape, there Ile sup. Farewell.

Poy. Farewell, my Lord.

Exit Poy.

Prin. I know you all, and will a-while uphold The unyoak'd humor of your idleness:

Yet heretofore will I imitate the Sunne,

Who doth permit the base contagious cloudes

To smother up his Beauty from the world;

That when he please againe to be himselfe,

Being wanted, he may be more wondred at,

By breaking through the foule and ugly mists

Of vapours, that did seeme to strangle him.

If all the yeare were playing holidayes,

To sport, would be as tedious as to worke;

But when they seldome come, they wisht-for come,

And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.

So when this loose behaviour I throw off,

And pay the debt I never promised;

By how much better than my word I am,

By so much shall I falsifie mens hopes,

And like bright Mettall on a sullen ground:

My reformation glittering o're my fault,

Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes;

Than that which hath no soyle to set it off.

Ile so offend, to make offence a skill,

Redeeming time, when men thinke least I will.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the King, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspurre, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

King. My blood hath beene too cold and temperate, Vnap't to stirre at these indignities, And you have found me; for accordingly, You tread upon my patience: But be sure, I will from henceforth rather be my selfe, Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition, Which hath beene smooth as Oyle, soft as yong Downe, And therefore lost the Title of respect, Which the proud ne're payes, but to the proud.

Wor. Our house (my Sovereigne Liege) little deserves The scourge of greatnesse to be used on it, And that same greatnesse too, which our owne hands Have holpe to make so portly.

Nor. My Lord.

King. Worcester get thee gone: for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye.

O sir, your preface is too bold and peremptory, And Majestie might never yet endure

The moody Frontier of a servant brow,

You have good leave to leave us. When we need

Your use and counsell, we shall send for you.

You were about to speake.

Nor. Yea, my good Lord.

Those

Those Prisoners in your Highness demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmesdale tooke,
Were (as he sayes) not with such strength denied
As was delivered to your Majesty :

Who eyther through envy, or misprision,
Was guilty of this fault; and not my Sonne.

Hot. My Liege, I did deny no prisoners.
But, I remember when the fight was done,
When I was dry with Rage, and extreame Toyle,
Breathlesse, and faint, leaning upon my Sword,
Came there a certaine Lord, neat and trimly drest;
Fresh as a Bride-groome, and his Chin new reapt,
Shew'd like a stubble Land at harvest home.
He was perfum'd like a Milliner,
And 'twixt his Finger and his Thumbe, he held
A Pouncet-box : which ever and anon
He gave his Nose, and took't away againe :
Who therewith angry, when it next came there,
Tooke it in Snuffe. And still he smil'd and talk'd :
And as the Souldiers bare dead bodies by,
He call'd them untaught Knaves, Vnmannerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome Coarse
Betwixt the winde, and his Nobility.
With many holiday and Lady tearmes
He question'd me : Among the rest, demanded
My Prisoners, in your Majesties behalfe.
I then, all-smarting, with my wounds being cold,
(To be so pestered with a Poppingay)
Out of my Greefe, and my impatience,
Answer'd (neglectingly) I know not what,
He should, or should not : For he made me mad,
To see him shine so briske, and smell so sweet,
And talke so like a Waiting-Gentlewoman,
Of Guns, and Drums, and Wounds: God save the marke;
And telling me, the Sovereign'st thing on earth
Was Pharmacy, for an inward bruise :
And that it was great pittie, so it was,
That vilanous Salt-peter should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmelesse Earth,
Which many a good Tall Fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly. And but for these vile Gunnes,
He would himselfe have bene a Souldier.
This bald, unjoynted Chat of his (my Lord)
Made me to answer indirectly (as I sayd.)
And I beseech you, let not this report
Come currant for an Accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high Majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance considered, good my Lord,
What ever Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
May reasonable dye, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

King. Why yet he doth deny his Prisoners,
But with proviso and Exception,
That we at our owne charge, shall ransom straight
His Brother-in-Law, the foolish Mortimer,
Who (in my soule) hath wilfully betrayd
The lives of those, that he did leade to Fight, Against the great Magitian, damn'd Glendower :
Whose daughter (as we heare) the Earle of March
Hath lately married. Shall our Coffers then,
Be emptied, to redeeme a Traitor home?
Shall we buy Treason? and indent with Feares,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?

No : on the barren Mountaine let him starve :
For I shall never hold that man my Friend,
Whose tongue shall aske me for one peny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer,

Hot. Revolted Mortimer?

He never did fall off, my Sovereigne Liege,
But by the chance of Warre: to prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue. For all those Wounds,
Those mouthed Wounds, which valiantly he tooke,
When on the gentle Severnes siedgie banke,
In single Oppolition hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an houre
In changing hardiment with great Glendower :
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drinke
Vpon agreement, of swift Severnes flood;
Who then affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearefully among the trembling Reedes,
And hid his crisped-head in a hollow banke,
Blood stained with these Valiant Combatants.
Never did base and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly :
Then let him not be stand'ed with Revolt.

King. Thou dost bely him Percy, thou dost bely him;
He never did encounter with Glendower :
I tell thee, he durst as well have met the divell alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.

Art thou not asham'd? But Sirrah, henceforth
Let me not heare you speake of Mortimer.
Send me your Prisoners with the speediest meanes,
Or you shall heare in such a kinde from me
As will displease ye. My Lord Northumberland,
We License your departure with your sonne,
Send us your Prisoners, or you'll heare of it. Exit King.

Hot. And if the divell come and roare for them,
I will not send them. I will after straight
And tell him so : for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head,

Nor. What? drunke with choller? stay & pause awhile, Heere comes your Vnckle. Enter Worcester.

Hot. Speake of Mortimer?

Yes, I will speake of him, and let my soule
Want mercy, if I do not joyne with him.
In his behalfe, Ile empty all those Veines,
And shed my deere blood drop by drop i'th dust,
But I will lift the downfall Mortimer
As high i'th Ayre as this unthankfull King,
As this Ingrate and Cankred Bullingbrooke.

Nor. Brother, the King hath made your Nephew mad.
Wor. Who strooke this heate up after I was gone?

Hot. He will (forsooth) have all my prisoners :
And when I urg'd the ransom once againe
Of my wives Brother, then his cheeke look'd pale,
And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Nor. I cannot blame him : was he not proclaim'd
By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?

Nor. He was : I heard the Proclamation,
And then it was, when the unhappy King
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon) did set forth
Vpon his Irish Expedition :
From whence he intercepted, did returne
To be depos'd, and shortly murdered.

Nor. And for whose death, we in the worlds wide mouth
Live so scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of.

Hot. But soft I pray you ; did King Richard then Proclaime my brother Mortimer,
Heyre to the Crowne?

Nor. He did, my selfe did heare it.

Hot. Nay then I cannot blame his Cousin King,
That wish'd him on the barraine Mountaines starv'd.
But shall it be, that you that set the Crowne
Vpon the head of this forgetfull man,
And for his sake, wore the detested blot
Of murtherous subornations? shall it be,
That you a world of curses undergoe,
Being the Agents, or base second meanes,
The Cords, the Ladder, or the Hangman rather?
O pardon, if that I descend so low,
To shew the Line, and the Predicament
Wherein you range under this subtrill King.
Shall it for shame, be spoken in these dayes,
Or fill up Chronicles in time to come,
That men of your Nobility and Power,
Did gage them both in an unjust behalfe
(As both of you, God pardon it, have done)
To put downe Richard, that sweet lovely Rose,
And plant this Thorne, this Canker Bullingbrooke?
And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shooke off
By him, for whom these shames ye underwent?
No: yet time serves, wherein you may redeeme
Your banish'd Honors, and restore your selves
Into the good Thoughts of the world againe.
Revenge the geering and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud King, who studies day and night
To answer all the Debt he owes unto you,
Even with the bloody Payments of your deaths:
Therefore I say——

Wor. Peace Cousin, say no more.
And now I will unclaspe a Secret booke,
And to your quicke conceyving Discontents,
Ile reade you Matter, deepe and dangerous,
As full of perill and adventurous Spirit,
As to o're-walke a Current, roaring loud
On the unstedfast footing of a Speare.

Hot. If he fall in, good night, or sinke or swimme:
Send danger from the East unto the West,
So Honor crosse in from the North to South,
And let them grapple: The blood more stirres
To rowze a Lyon, then to start a Hare.

Nor. Imagination of some great exploit,
Drives him beyond the bounds of Patience.

Hot. By heaven, me thinkes it were an easie leap,
To plucke bright Honor from the pale-fac'd Moone,
Or dive into the bottome of the deepe,
Where Fadome-line could never touch the ground,
And plucke up drowned Honor by the Lockes:
So he that doth redeeme her thence, might weare
Without Co-rivall, all her Dignities:
But out upon this halfe-fac'd Fellowship.

Wor. He apprehends a world of Figures here,
But not the forme of what he should attend:
Good Cousin give me audience for a-while,
And list to me.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same Noble Scottes
That are your Prisoners.

Hot. Ile keepe them all.

By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would save his Soule, he shall not.

Ile keepe them, by this Hand.

Wor. You start away,
And lend no care unto my purposes:
Those Prisoners you shall keepe.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:
He said he would not ransom Mortimer:
Forbad my tongue to speake of Mortimer.
But I will finde him when he lyes asleepe,
And in his eare, Ile holla Mortimer.
Nay, Ile have a Starling shall be taught to speake
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keepe his anger still in motion.

Wor. Heare you Cousin: a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly desie,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bullingbrooke,
And that same Sword and Buckler prince of Wales.
But that I thinke his Father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I would have payson'd him with a pot of Ale.

Wor. Farewell Kinsman: Ile talke to you
When you are better temper'd to attend.

Nor. Why what a Waspe-tongu'd and impatient foole
Art thou, to breake into this Womans mood,
Tying thine eare to no tongue but thine owne?

Hot. Why looke you, I am whipt & scourg'd with rods,
Netled, and stung with Pismiers, when I heare
Of this vile Politician Bullingbrooke.

In Richards time: What de'ye call the place?

A plague upon't, it is in Gloucestershire:

'Twas where the madcap Duke his Vncle kept,
His Vncle Yorke, where I first bow'd my knee
Vnto this King of Smiles, this Bullingbrooke:
When you and he came backe from Radenspurgh.

Nor. At Barkley Castle.

Hot. You say true:
Why what a caudie deale of curtesie,
This fauning Gray-bound then did proffer me.
Looke when his infant fortune came to age,
And gentle Harry Percy, and kinde Cousin:
O, the Divell take such Couziners, God forgive me,
Good Vncle tell your tale, for I have done.

Wor. Nay, if you have not, too't againe,
Wee'll stay your leysure.

Hot. I have done insooth.

Wor. Then once more to your Scottish Prisoners.
Deliver them up without their ransome straight,
And make the Douglas sonne your onely meane
For powers in Scotland: which for divers reasons
Which I shall find you written, be assur'd
Will easily be granted you, my Lord.
Your Sonne in Scotland being thus imploy'd,
Shall secretly in the bosome creepe
Of that same noble Prelate, well belov'd,
The Archbishop.

Hot. Of yorke, is't not?

Wor. True, who beares hard
His Brothers death at Briston, the Lord Scroope.
I speake not this in estimation,
As what I thinke might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted and set downe,
And onely stayes but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it:

Vpon my life, it will do wond'rous well.

Nor. Before the gam's a-foot, thou still let'st slip.

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a Noble plot,

And

And then the power of Scotland, and of Yorke
To joyne with Mortimer, Ha.

Wor. And so they shall.

Hotsp. Infaith it is exceedingly well aym'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads, by raising of a Head :

For, beare our selves as even as we can,
The King will alwayes thinke him in our debt,
And thinke, we thinke our selves unsatisfied,
Till he he hath found a time to pay us home.
And see already, how he doth beginne
To make us strangers to his lookes of love.

Hot. He does, he does; wee'l be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell. No further go in this,
Then I by Letters shall direct your courle
When time is ripe, which will be fodainely:
He steale to Glendower, and loe, Mortimer,
Where you, and Douglas, and our powers at once,
As I will fashion it, shall happily meete,
To beare our fortunes in our owne strong armes,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

Nor. Farewell good Brother, we shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Vncle, adieu : O let houres be short,
Till fields, and blowes, and grones, applaud our sport. Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Carrier with a Lanterne in his hand.

1. Car. Heigh ho, an't be not foure by the day, Ile bee hang'd; Charles waine is over the new Chimney, and yet our horse not packt. What Ostler?

Ost. Anon, anon.

1. Car. I prethee Tom, beate Cuts Saddle, put a few Flockes in the point : the poore Iade is wrung in the withers, out of all casse.

Enter another Carrier.

2. Car. Pease and Beanes are as danke here as a Dog, and this is the next way to give poore Iades the Bottes :
This house is turned upside downe since Robin the Ostler dyed.

1. Car. Poore fellow never joy'd since the price of oats rose, it was the death of him.

2. Car. I thinke this is the most villanous house in all
London rode for Fleas : I am itung like a Tench.

1. Car. Like a Tench? There is ne're a King in Chri-stendome, could be better bit, then I have beene since the first Cocke.

2. Car. Why, you will allow us ne're a Iourden, and then we leake in your Chimny : and your Chamber-lye breeds Fleas like a Loach.

1. Car. What Ostler, come away, and be hang'd; come away.

2. Car. I have a Gammon of Bacon, and two razes of Ginger, to be delivered as farre as Charing-crosse.

1. Car. The Turkies in my Panniers are quite starved.
What Ostler? A plague on thee, hast thou never an eye in thy head? Can'st not heare? And t'were not as good a deed as drinke, to breake the pate of thee, I am a very Villaine. Come and be hang'd, hast no faith in thee?

Enter Gads-hill.

Gad. Good morrow Carriers. What's a clocke?

Car. I thinke it be two a clocke.

Gad. I prethee lend me thy Lanthorne to see my Gelding in the stable.

1. Car. Nay soft I pray ye, I know a tricke worth two of that.

Gad. I prethee lend me thine.

2. Car. I, when, canst tell? Lend mee thy Lanthorne (quoth-a) marry Ile see thee hang'd first.

Gad. Sirra Carrier: What time doe you meane to come to London?

2. Car. Time enough to goe to bed with a Candle, I warrant thee. Come neighbour Mugges, wee'll call up the Gentlemen, they will along with company, for they have great charge. Exeunt.

Enter Chamberlaine.

Gad. What ho, Chamberlaine?

Cham. At hand quoth Pick-purse.

Gad. That's even as faire, as at hand quoth the Cham-berlaine: For thou variest no more from picking of Purses, then giving direction, doth from labouring. Thou lay'st the plot, how.

Cham. Good morrow Master Gads-Hill, it holds currant that I told you yesternight. There's a Franklin in the wilde of Kent, hath brought three hundred Markes with him in Gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at Supper; a kinde of Auditor, one that hath abundance of charge too (God knowes what) they are up already, and call for Egges and Butter. They will away presently.

Gad. Sirra, if they meete not with S. Nicholas Clarks,
Ile give thee this necke.

Cham. No, Ile none of it: I prythee keepe that for the Hangman, for I know thou worshipst S. Nicolas as truly as a man of falshood may.

Gad. What talkest thou to me of the Hangman? If I bang, Ile make a fat payre of Gallowes. For, if I hang, old Sir Iohn hangs with mee, and thou know'st hee's no Starueling. Tut, there are other Troians that dream't not of, the which (for sport sake) are content to doe the Profession some grace; that would (if matters should be look'd into) for their owne Credit sake, make all Whole.
I am joyned with no Foot-land-Rakers, no Long-staffe six-penny strikers, none of these mad Mustachio-purple-ha'd-Maltwormes, but with Nobility, and Tranquillitie; Bourgomasters, and great Oneyers, such as can holde in,
such as will strike sooner then speakes; and speake sooner
then drinke, and drinke sooner then pray: and yet I lye, for they pray continually unto their Saint the Commonwealth; or rather, not to pray to her, but prey on her: for they ride up and downe on her, and make her their Boots.

Cham. What, the Commonwealth their Bootes? Will she hold out water in foule way?

Gad. She will, she will; Iustice hath liquord her. We steale as in a Castle, cocksure: we have the receipt of Fernseede, we walke invisible.

Cham. Nay, I thinke rather, you are more beholding to the Night, then the Fernseede, for your walking invisible.

Gad. Give me thy hand.

Thou shalt have a share in our purpose,
As I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false Theefe.

Gad. Goe too: Homo is a common name to all men.
Bid the Ostler bring the Gelding out of the stable. Farewell, ye muddy Knave. Exeunt.

Scena

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince, Poynes, and Peto.Poines. Come shelter, shelter, I have removed Falstaff's Horse, and he frets like a gum'd Velvet.Prin. Stand close.Enter Falstaffe.Fal. Poynes, Poynes, and be hang'd Poines.Prin. Peace ye fat-kidney'd Rascall, what a brawling dost thou keepe?Fal. What Poines. Hal?Prin. He is walk'd up to the top of the hill, Ile go seeke him,Fal. I am accurst to rob in that Theeves company: that Rascall hath removed my Horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travaile but foure foot by the squire further a foote, I shall breake my winde. Well, I doubt not but to die a faire death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that Rogue. I have forsworne his company hourelly any time this two and twenty yeare, and yet I am bewicht with the Rogues company. If the Rascall have not given me medicines to make me love him, Ile be hang'd, it could not be else: I have drunke Medicines. Poines, Hal, a Plague upon you both. Bardolph, Peto: Ile starve ere I rob a foot further. And 'twere not as good a deede as to drinke, to turne Trueman, and to leave those Rogues, I am the veriest Varlet that ever chewed with a Tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threescore and ten miles afoot with me: and the stony-hearted Villaines know it well enough. A plague upon't, when Theeves cannot bee true one to another.They whistle.Whew: a plague light upon you all. Give my Horse you Rogues: give me my Horse and be hang'd.Prin. Peace ye fat guttes, lye downe, lay thine eare close to the ground, and list if thou can heare the tread of Travellers.Fal. Have you any Leavers to lift me up againe being downe? Ile not beare mine owne flesh so far afoot again, for all the coine in thy Fathers Exchequer. What a plague meane ye to colt me thus?Prin. Thou ly'st, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.Fal. I prethee good Prince Hal, helpe me to my horse, good Kings sonne.Prin. Out you Rogue, shall I be your Ostler?Fal. Go hang thy selfe in thine owne heire-apparant Garters: If I be tane, Ile peach for this: and I have not Ballads made on all, and sung to filthy tunes, leta Cup of Sacke be my poyson: when a jest is so forward, and a foote too, I hate it.Enter Gads-hill.Gad. Stand.Fal. So I doe against my will.Poin. O'tis our Setter, I know his voyce:Bardolfe, what newes?Bar. Cae ye, cae ye; on with your Vizards, there's mony of the Kings comming downe the hill, 'tis going to the Kings Exchequer.Fal. You lie you rogue, 'tis going to the Kings Taverne.Gad. There's enough to make us all.Fal. To be hang'd.Prin. You foure shall front them in the narrow Lane: Ned and I, will walke lower; if they scape from yor encounter, then they light on us.Peto. But how many be of them?Gad. Some eight or ten.Fal. Will they not rob us?Prin. What, a Coward Sir John Paunch?Fal. Indeed I am not John of Gaunt's your Grandfather: but yet no Coward, Hal.Prin. Wee'l leave that to the prooffe.Poin. Sirra lacke thy horse stands behinde the hedge, when thou need'st him, there shalt thou finde him, Farewell, and stand fast.Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hang'd.Prin. Ned, where are our disguises?Poin. Heere hard by: Stand close.Fal. Now my Masters, happy man be his dole, say I: every man to his businesse.Enter Travellers.Tra. Come Neighbor: the boy shall leade our Horses downe the hill: Wee'l walke a-foot a while, and ease our Legges.Theeves, Stay.Tra. Iesu blese us.Fal. Strike: downe with them, cut the villains throats; a whorson Caterpillars: Bacon-fed Knaves, they hate us youth; downe with them, fleece them.Tra. O, we are undone, both we and ours for ever.Fal. Hang ye gorbellied knaves, are you undone? No ye Fat Chuffes, I would your store were heere. On Baconson, what ye knaves? Yong men must live, you are Grand lurers? Wee'l jure ye ifaith.Heere they rob them, and binde them. Enter the Prince and Poines.Prin. The Theeves have bound the True-men: Now could thou and I rob the Theeves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a Weekke. Laughter for a Moneth, and a good jest for ever.Poynes. Stand close, I here them comming.Enter Theeves againe.Fal. Come my Masters, let us share, and then to horse before day: and the Prince and Poynes bee not two arand Cowards, there's no equity stirring. There's no more valour in that Poynes, than in a wilde Ducke.Prin. Your money.Poin. Villaines.As they are sharing, the Prince and Poynes set upon them.They all run away, leaving the booty behind them.Prince. Got with much ease. Now merrily to Horse: The Theeves are scattred, and posselt with fear so strongly, that they dare not meet each other: each takes his fellow for an Officer. Away good Ned, Falstaffe sweates to death, and Lards the leane earth as he walkes along: we're not for laughing, I should pittie him.Poin. How the Rogue roar'd.Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Hotspurre solus, reading a Letter.But for mine owne part, my Lord, I could bee well contented to be there, in respect of the love I beare your house.

He

He could be contented: Why is he not then? in respect of the love he beares our house. He shewes in this, he loves his owne Barne better then hee loves our house. Let mee see some more, The purpose you undertake is dangerous. Why that's certaine: 'Tis dangerous to take a colde, to sleepe, to drinke: but I tell you (my Lord foole) out of this Nettle, Danger; we plucke this Flower, Safety. The purpose you undertake is dangerous, the Friends you have named uncertaine, the Time is selfe unforted, and your whole Plot too light, for the counterpoize of so great an Opposition. Say you so, say you so: I say unto you againe, you are a shallow cowardly Hinde, and you Lye. What a lacke-braine is this? I protest, our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid; our Friend true and constant: A good Plotte, good Friends, and full of expectation: An excellent plot, very good Friends. What a Frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my Lord of Yorke commends the plot, and the generall course of the action. By this hand, if I were now by this Rascall, I could braine him with his Ladyes Fan. Is there not my Father, my Vncle, and my Selfe, Lord Edmond Mortimer, my Lord of Yorke, and Owen Glendower? Is there not besides, the Dowglas? Have I not all their letters, to meete me in Armes by the ninth of the next Moneth? and are there not some of them set forward already? What a Pagan Rascall is this? An Infidell. Ha, you shall see now in very sincerity of Feare and Cold heart, will he to the King, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could devide my selfe, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skim'd Milke with so honorable an Action. Hang him, let him tell the King we are prepared. I will set forwards tonight.

Enter his Lady.

How now Kate, I must leave you within these two hours.

La. O my good Lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I this fortnight beene A banish'd woman from my Harries bed? Tell me (sweet Lord) what is't that takes from thee Thy stomacke, pleasure, and thy golden sleepe? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth? And start so often when thou sit'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheekes? And given my Treasures and my rights of thee, To thick-ey'd musing, and curst melancholly? In my faint slumbers, I by thee have watcht, And heard thee murmur tales of Iron Warres: Speake termes of mannage to thy bounding Steed, Cry courage to the field. And thou hast talk'd Of Sallies, and Retires; Trenches, Tents, Of Palizadoes, Frontiers, Parapets. Of Basiliskes, of Canon, Culverin. Of Prisoners ranome, and of Souldiers slaine, And all the current of a heady fight. Thy spirit within thee hath beene so at Warre, And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleepe, That beds of sweate hath stood upon thy Brow, Like bubbles in a late-disturbed Streame; And in thy face strange motions have appear'd, Such as we see when men restraine their breath On some great sodaine hast. O what portents are these? Some heavey businesse hath my Lord in hand, And I must know it: else he loves me not.

Hor. What ho; Is Gilliams with the Packet gone?

Ser. He is my Lord, an houre agoe.

Hor. Hath Butler bought those horses from the Sheriffe?

Ser. One horse, my Lord, he brought euen now.

Hor. What Horse? A Roane, a crop care, is it not?

Ser. It is my Lord.

Hor. That Roane shall bee my Throne. Well, I will backe him straight. Esperance, bid Butler, leade him forth into the Parke.

La. But heare you, my Lord.

Hor. What say'st thou my Lady?

La. What is it carries you away?

Hor. Why, my horse (my Love) my horse.

La. Out you mad-headed Ape, a Weazell hath not such a deale of Spleene, as you are tost with. In sooth Ile know your businesse Harry, that I will. I feare my Brother Mortimer doth stirre about his Title, and hath sent for you to line his interprize. But if you go—

Hor. So farre a foot, I shall be wearie, Love.

La. Come, come, you Paraquito, answer me directly Vnto this question, that I shall aske. Indeepe Ile breake thy little finger Harry, if thou wilt not tell me true.

Hor. Away, away, you trisler: Love, I love thee not, I care not for thee Kate: this is no world To play with Mammets, and to tilt with lips.

We must have bloody Noses, and crack'd Crownes, And passe them currant too. Gods me, my horse.

What say'st thou Kate? would'st thou have with me?

La. Do ye not love me? Do you not indeed?

Well, do not then. For since you love me not,

I will not love my selfe. Do you not love me?

Nay, tell me if thou speakest in jest, or no.

Hor. Come, wilt thou see me ride?

And when I am a horsebacke, I will sweare

I love thee infinitely. But harke you Kate,

I must not have you henceforth, question me,

Whither I go: nor reason whereabouts.

Whither I must; I must: and to conclude,

This Evening must I leave thee, gentle Kate.

I know you wife, but yet no further wife

Then Harry Peicis wife. Constant you are,

But yet a woman: and for secrecie,

No Lady closer. For I will beleewe

Thou wilt not utter what thou do'st not know,

And so farre will I trust thee, gentle Kate.

La. How so farre?

Hor. Not an inch further. But harke you Kate,

Whither I go, thither shall you go too:

To day will I set forth, to morrow you.

Will this content you Kate?

La. It must of force.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Prince and Poyes.

Prin. Ned, prethee come out of that fat roome, & lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poyes. Where hast beene Hall?

Prin. With three or foure Logger-heads, amongst 3. or fourescore Hogsheds. I have founded the verie base string of humilitie. Sirra, I am sworn brother to a lessh of Drawers, and can call them by their names, as Tom, Dicke, and Francis. They take it already upon their confidence, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the King of Curtelies: telling me flatly I am not proud Jack like Falstaffe, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, and when I am King of England, I shall command all the good Laddes in East-cheape. They call drinking deepe, dying Scarlet; and when you breake in your watring, then they they cry pen, and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an houre, that I can drinke with any Tinker in his owne Language during my life. I tell thee Ned, thou hast lost much honor, that thou wer't not with me in this action; but sweet Ned, to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this peniworth of Sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under Skinker, one that never spake other English in his life, then Eight shillings and six pence, and, You are welcome: with this shrill addition, Anon, Anon sir, Score a Pint of Bastard in the Halfe Moone, or so. But Ned, to drive away time till Falstaffe come, I prythee doe thou stand in some by-roume, while I question my puny Drawer, to what end he gave me the Sugar, and do never leave calling Francis, that his Tale to me may be nothing but, Anon: step aside, and Ile shew thee a President.

Poin. Francis.

Prin. Thou art perfect.

Poin. Francis.

Enter Drawer.

Fran. Anon, anon sir; looke downe into the Pomgar-net, Raffe.

Prince. Come hither Francis.

Fran. My Lord.

Prin. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth five years and as much as to—

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon sir.

Prin. Five yeares: Berlady a long Lease for the clinking of Pewter. But Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy Indenture, and shew it a faire paire of heele, and run from it?

Fran. O Lord sir, Ile be sworne upon all the Books in England, I could finde in my heart.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon sir.

Prin. How old art thou, Francis?

Fran. Let me see, about Michaelmas next I shall be—

Poin. Francis,

Fran. Anon sir, pray you stay a little, my Lord.

Prin. Nay but harke you Francis, for the Sugar thou gavest me, 'twas a peny worth, was't not?

Fran. O Lord sir, I would it had bene two.

Prin. I will giue thee for it a thousand pound: Aske me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon.

Prin. Anon Francis? No Francis, but to morrow Francis: or Francis, on thursday: or indeed Francis when thou wilt. But Francis.

Fran. My Lord.

Prin. Wilt thou rob this Leatherne Jerkin, Christall button, Not-pated, Agat ring, Puke stocking, Caddice garter, Smooth tongue, Spanish pouch.

Fran. O Lord sir, who do you meane?

Prin. Why then your browne Bastard is your onely drinke: for looke you Francis, your white Canuas doublet will sully. In Barbary sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What sir?

Poin. Francis.

Prin. Away you Rogue, dost thou heare them call?

Heere they both call him, the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What, stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the Guests within: My Lord, olde Sir John with halfe a dozen more, are at the doore: shall I let them in?

Prin. Let them alone awhile, and then open the doore.
Poin.

Enter Poin.

Poin. Anon, anon sir.

Prin. Sirra, Falstaffe and the rest of the Theeves, are at the doore, shall we be merry?

Poin. As merrie as Crickets my Lad. But harke yee, What cunning match have you made with this jest of the Drawer? Come, what's the issue?

Prin. I am now of all humors, that have shewed themselves humors, since the old dayes of Goodman Adam, to the pupill age of this present twelue a clock at midnight. What's a clocke Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon sir.

Prin. That ever this Fellow should have fewer words then a Parret, and yet the sonne of a Woman. His industry is up-staires and down-staires, his eloquence the parcell of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percies mind, the Hot-spurre of the North, he that killes me some fixe or seaven dozen of Scots at a Breakfast, washes his hands and sayes to his wife; Fie upon this quiet life, I want worke. O my sweet Harry sayes she, how many hast thou kill'd to day? Give my Roane horse a drench (sayes hee) and answers, some fourteene, an houre after: a trifle, a trifle. I pretthee call in Falstaffe, Ile play Percie, and that damn'd Brawne shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. Riv, sayes the drunkard. Call in Ribs, call in Tallow.

Enter Falstaffe.

Poin. Welcome Iacke, where hast thou bene?

Fal. A plague of all Cowards I say, and a Vengeance too, marry and Amen. Give me a cup of Sacke Boy. Ere I leade this life long, Ile sowe nether stockes, and mend them too. A plague of all cowards. Give mee a Cup of Sacke, Rogue. Is there no Vertue extant?

Prin. Didst thou never see Titan kisse a dish of Butter, pittifull hearted Titan that melted at the sweete Tale of the Sunne? If thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You Rogue, heere's Lime in this Sacke too: there is nothing but Roguery to be found in a Villanous man; yet a Coward is worle then a Cup of Sack with lime. A villanous Coward, go thy wayes old Iacke, die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten Herring: there lives not three good men unhang'd in England, and one of them is fat, and growes old, God helpe the while, a bad world I say. I would I were a Weaver, I could sing all manner of songs. A plague of all Cowards, I say still.

Prin. How now Woolfacke, what matter you?

Fal. A Kings Sonne? If I do not beate thee out of thy Kingdome with a dagger of Lath, and drive all thy Subjects afore thee like a flocke of Wilde-geefe, Ile never weare haire on my face more. You Prince of Wales?

Prin. Why you horsen round man? what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? Answer me to that, and *Poin*es there?

Prin. Ye fatch paunch, and yee call me Coward, Ile stab thee.

Fal. I call thee Coward? Ile see thee damn'd ere I call thee Coward: but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your backe: Call you that that backing of your friends? a plague upon such backing: give me them that will face me. Give me a Cup of Sack, I am a Rogue if I drunke to day.

Prince. O Villaine, thy Lippes are scarce wip'd, since thou drunk't last.

Falst. All's one for that. He drinkest.

A plague of all Cowards still, say I.

Prin. What's the matter?

Falst. What's the matter? here bee foure of us, have ta'ne a thousand pound this Morning.

Prin. Where is it, Iacke? where is it?

Falst. Where is it? taken from us, it is: a hundred upon poore foure of us.

Prin. What, a hundred, man?

Falst. I am a Rogue, if I were not at halfe sword with a dozen of them two houres together. I have scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the Doublet, foure through the Hose, my Buckler cut through and through, my Sword hackt like a Hand-saw, ecce signum. I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not doe. A plague of all Cowards: let them speake; if they speake more or lesse then truth, they are villaines and the sonnes of darknesse.

Prince. Speake sirs, how was it?

Gad. We foure set upon some dozen.

Falst. Sixteene, at least, my Lord.

Gad. And bound them.

Poin. No, no, they were not bound.

Falst. You Rogue they were bound, every man of them, or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gad. As we were sharing, some sixe or seaven fresh men set upon us.

Falst. And unbound the rest; and then come in the other.

Prince. What fought ye with them all?

Falst. All? I know not what ye call all: but if I fought not with fiftie of them, I am a bunch of Radish: if there were not two or three and fiftie upon poore olde Iacke, then am I no two-legg'd Creature.

Poin. Pray Heaven, you have not murdered some of them.

Falst. Nay, that's past praying for. I have pepper'd two of them: Two I am sure I have payed, two Rogues in Buckrom Sutes. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a Lye, spit in my face, call me Horse: thou knowest my olde word: here I lay and thus I bore my point; foure Rogues in Buckrom let drive at me.

Prince. What, foure? thou sayd'st but two, even now.

Falst. Foure Hal, I told thee foure.

Poin. I, I, he sayd foure.

Falst. These foure came all a-front, and mainely thrust at me; I made no more adoe, but tooke all their seaven points in my Targuet, thus.

Prince. Seven? why there were but foure, even now.

Falst. In Buckrom.

Poin. I, foure, in Buckrom Sutes.

Falst. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a Villaine else.

Prin. Prethee let him alone, we shall have more anon.

Falst. Doe'st thou heare me, Hal?

Prin. I, and marke thee too, Iacke,

Falst. Doe so, for it is worth the listning too: these nine in Buckrom, that I told thee of.

Prin. So, two more alreadie.

Falst. Their Points being broken.

Poin. Downe fell his Horse.

Falst. Beganto give me ground; but I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and with a thought, seaven of the eleven I pay'd.

Prin. O monstrous! eleven Buckrom men growne of two?

Falst. But as the Devill would have it, three mis-gotten Knaves, in Kendall Greene, came at my Backe, and let drive at me; for it was so darke, Hal, that thou could'st not see thy Hand.

Prin. These Lyes are like the Father that begets them, grosse as a Mountaine, open, palpable. Why thou Clay-brayn'd Guts, thou Knotty-pated Foole, thou Herfon ob-scene greasie Tallow Catch.

Falst. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

Prin. Why, how could'st thou know these men in Kendall Greene, when it was so darke, thou could'st not see thy Hand? Come, tell us your reason: what say'st thou to this?

Poin. Come, your reason Iacke, your reason.

Falst. What, upon compulsion? No: were I at the Strappado, or all the Rackes in the World, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion? If reasons were as plenty as Black-berries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

Prin. He be no longer guiltie of this sinne. This sanguine Coward, this Bed-presler, this Horse-back-breaker, this huge Hill of Flesh.

Falst. Away you Starveling, you Elfe-skin, you dried Neats tongue, Bulles-pissell, you stocke-fish: O for breth to vtter. What is like thee? You Tailors yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tucke.

Prin. Well, breath a-while, and then to't againe: and when thou hast tyr'd thy selfe in base comparisons, heare me speake but thus.

Poin. Marke Iacke.

Prin. We two, saw you foure set on foure and bound them, and were Masters of their Wealth: mark now how a plaine Tale shall put you downe. Then did we two, set on you foure, and with a word; outfac'd you from your prize, and have it: yea, and can shew it you in the House. And Falstaffe, you caried your Guts away as nimbly, with as quicke dexteritie, and roared for mercy, and stirr'd ranne and roar'd, as ever I heard Bull-Casse. What a Slave art thou, to hacke thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight. What trick? what device? what starting hole canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparant shame?

Poin. Come, let's heare Iacke: What trick hast thou now?

Fal. I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why heare ye my Masters, was it for me to kill the Heire apparant? Should I turne upon the true Prince? Why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware Instinct, the Lyon will not touch the true Prince: Instinct is a great matter. I was a Coward on Instinct: I shall thinke the better of my selfe, and thee, during my life: I, for a valiant Lyon, and thou for a true Prince. But Lads, I am glad you have the Mony. Hostesse, clap to the doores: watch to Night, pray to-morrow. Gallants, Lads, Boyes, Hearts of Gold, all the good Titles of Fellowship come to you. What, shall we be merry? shall we have a Play extempory.

Prin. Content, and the argument shall bee, thy running away.

Fal. A, no more of that Hal, and thou lovest me.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. My Lord, the Prince?

Prin.

Prin. How now my Lady the Hostesse, what say'st thou to me?

Hostesse. Marry, my Lord, there is a Noble man of the Court at doore would speake with you: he sayes, he comes from your Father.

Prin. Give him as much as will make him a Royall man, and send him backe againe to my Mother.

Falst. What manner of man is he?

Hostesse. An old man.

Falst. What doth Gravitie out of his Bed at Midnight? Shall I give him his answer?

Prin. Prethee doe lacke.

Falst. Faith, and Ile send him packing. Exit.

Prince. Now Sirs: you fought faire; so did you Peto, so did yon Bardol: you are Lyons too, you ranne away upon instinct: you will not touch the true Prince; no, sic.

Bard. Faith, I ranne when I saw others runne.

Prin. Tell mee now in earnest, how came Falstaffes Sword so hackt?

Peto. Why, he hackt it with his Dagger, and said, he would sweare truth out of England: but he would make you beleeve it was done in fight, and perswaded us to doe the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our Noses with Spear-grasse, to make them bleed, and then beslobber our garments, with it, and sweare it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven yeares before, I blusht to heare his monstrous devices.

Prin. O Villaine, thou stolest a Cup of Sacke eightene yeeres agoe, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blusht extempore: thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou rankest away; what instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My Lord, doe you see these Meteors? doe you behold these exhalations?

Prin. I doe,

Bard. What thinke you they portend?

Prin. Hot Livers, and cold Purfes.

Bard. Choler, my Lord, if rightly taken.

Prin. No, if rightly taken, Halter.

Enter Falstaffe.

Heere comes leane lacke, heere comes bare-bone. How now my sweete Creature of Bombast, how long is't agoe, lacke, since thou saw'st thine owne Knee?

Falst. My owne Knee? When I was about thy yeeres (Hal) I was not an Eagles Talent in the Wasse, I could have crept into any Aldermans Thumbe-Ring: a plague of sighing and griefe, it blowes a man up like a Bladder. There's villanous Newes abroad: heere was Sir Iohn Braby from your Father; you must goe to the Court in the Morning. The same mad fellow of the North, Percy; and hee of Wales, that gave Amamon the Baitinado, and made Lucifer Cuckold, and swore the Devill his true Leige-man upon the Crosse of a Welch-hooke; what a Palgue call you him?

Poin. O, Glendower.

Falst. Owen, Owen; the same, and his Sonne in Law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and the sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runnes a Horse-backe up a Hill perpendicular.

Prin. Hee that rides at high speede, and with a Pistoll kills a Sparrow flying.

Falst. You haue hit it.

Prin. So did he neuer the Sparrow.

Falst. Well, that Rascall hath good mettall in him, hee will not runne.

Prin. Why, what a Rascall art thou then, to prayse him so for running?

Falst. A Horse-backe (ye Cuckoe) but a foot he will not budge a foot.

Prin. Yes lacke, upon instinct.

Falst. I grant ye, upon instinct: Well, hee is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blew-Cappes more, Worcester is stolne away by Night: thy Fathers Beard is turn'd white with the Newes; you may buy Land now as cheape as stinking Mackrell.

Prin. Then 'tis like, if there come a hot Sunne, and this civill buffetting hold, wee shall buy Maiden-heads as they buy hob-nayles, by the hundreds.

Falst. By the Masse Lad, thou say'st true, it is like wee shall have good trading that way. But tell me Hall, are not thou horrible asfear'd? thou being Heire apparant, could the World picke thee out three such Enemyes againe, as that Fiend Douglas, that Spirit Percy, and that Devill Glendower? Art thou not horrible afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prin. Not a whit: I lacke some of thy instinct.

Falst. Well, thou wilt be horrible chidde to morrow, when thou comest to thy Father: if thou doe love me practice an answer.

Prin. Doe thou stand for my Father, and examine mee upon the particulars of my Life.

Falst. Shall I? content: This Chayre shall bee my State, this Dagger my Scepter, and this Cushion my Crowne.

Prin. Thy State is taken for a Ioynd-Stoole, thy Golden Scepter for a Leaden Dagger, and thy precious rich Crowne, for a pittifull bald Crowne.

Prin. Well, and the fire of Grace be not quite out of thee now shalt thou be moved. Give me a Cup of Sacke to make mine eyes looke redde, that it may bee thought I have wept, for I must speake in passion, and I will doe it in King Cambyses veine.

Prin. Well, heere is my Legge.

Falst. And heere is my speech: stand aside Nobilitie.

Hostesse. This is excellent sport, yfai th.

Fal. Weepe not, sweete Queene, for trickling teares are vaine.

Hostesse. O the Father, how hee holdes his countenance?

Fal. For Gods sake Lords, convey my trustfull Queen, For teares doe stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Hostesse. O rare, he doth it as like one of these harlotry Players as ever I see.

Fal. Peace good Pint-pot, peace good Tickle-braine. Harry, I doe not onely marvell where thou spendest thy time; but also, how thou art accompanied: For though the Camomile, the more it is troden, the faster it growes; yet Youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it weares. Thou art my sonne: I have partly thy Mothers Word, partly my Opinion; but chiefly, a villanous trick of thine Eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether Lippe, that doth warrant me. If then thou bee Sonne to mee, heere lyeth the point: why, being Sonne to mee, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed Sonne of heaven prove a Micher, and eat Black-berries? a question not to bee askt. Shall the Sonne of England proove a Theefe, and take Purfes? a question to bee askt. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is knowne to many many many in our Land, by the Name of Pitch : this Pitch (as ancient Writers doe report) doth defile ; so doth the companie thou keepest : for Harry, now I doe not speake to thee in Drinke, but in Teares ; not in pleasure, but in Passion ; not in Words onely, but in Woes also : and yet there is a vertuous man, whom I have often noted in thy companie, but I know not his Name.

Prin. What manner of man, and it like your Majestie ?

Falst. A goodly portly man yfaith, and a corpulent, of a chearefull Looke, a pleasing Eye, and a most noble Carriage, and as I thinke, his age some fiftie, or (byr lady) inclining to threescore ; and now I remember mee, his Name is Falstaffe : if that man should be lewdly given, he deceives mee ; for Harry, I see vertue in his Lookes. If then the Tree may be knowne by the Fruit, as the Fruit by the Tree, then peremptorily I speake it, there is Vertue in that Falstaffe : him keepe with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughtie Varlet, tell me, where hast thou bene this moneth ?

Prin. Do'st thou speake like a King ? doe thou stand for me, and Ile play my Father.

Falst. Depose me : if thou do'st it halfe so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heeles for a Rabbet-sucker, or a Poulterers Hare.

Prin. Well, heere I am set.

Falst. And heere I stand : judge my Masters.

Prin. Now Harry, whence come you ?

Falst. My Noble Lord, from East-cheape.

Prin. The complaints I heare of thee, are grievous.

Falst. Yfaith, my Lord, they are false : Nay, Ile tickle ye for a young Prince.

Prin. Swarest thou, ungracious Boy ? henceforth ne're looke on me : thou art violently carryed away from Grace : there is a Devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old Man ; a Tunne of Man is thy Companion : Why do'st thou converse with that Trunke of Humors, that Boulting-Hutch of Beallinesse, that swolne Parcell of Dropsies, that huge Bombard of Sacke, that stufte Cloake-bagge of Guts, that rosted Manning-Tree Oxe with the Puddings in his Belly, that Reverend Vice, that grey Inquire, that Father Rujian, that Vanitie in yeares ? wherein is he good, but to talke Sacke and drinke it ? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carue a Capon, and eate it ? wherein Cunning, but in Craft ? wherein Craftie, but in Villanie ? wherein Villanous, but in all things ? wherein worthy, but in nothing ?

Falst. I would your Grace would take me with you : whom meanes your Grace ?

Prin. That villanous abominable mis-leader of Youth, Falstaffe, that old white-bearded Sathan.

Falst. My Lord, the man I know.

Prin. I know thou do'st.

Falst. But to say, I know more harme in him then in my selfe, were to say more then I know. That he is olde (the more the pittie) his white haire doe witnesse it : but that hee is (saying your reverence) a Whore-master, that I utterly deny. If Sacke and Sugar be a fault, Heaven helpe the wicked : if to be olde and merry, be a sinne, then many an olde Hoste that I know, is damn'd : if to be fat, be to be hated, then Pharaohs leane Kine are to be loved. No, my good Lord, banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poines : but for sweete Iacke Falstaffe, kinde Iacke Falstaffe, true Iacke Falstaffe, valiant Iacke Falstaffe, and therefore more valiant, being as he is olde Iacke Falstaffe, banish not him thy Harryes companie, banish not him thy Harryes companie ; banish plumpe Iacke, and banish all the World.

Prince. I doe, I will.

Enter Bardolph running.

Bard. O, my Lord, my Lord, the Sherife, with a most monstrous Watch, is at thee doore.

Falst. Out you Rogue, play out the Play : I have much to say in the behalfe of that Falstaffe.

Enter the Hostesse.

Hostesse. O, my Lord, my Lord.

Falst. Heigh, heigh, the Divell rides upon a Fiddle-sticke : what's the matter ?

Hostesse. The Sherife and all the Watch are at the doore : they are come to search the House, shall I let them in ?

Falst. Do'st thou heare Hal, never call a true peece of Gold a Counterfeit : thou art essentially made, without seeming so.

Prince. And thou a naturall Coward, without instinct.

Falst. I deny your Majior ; if you will deny the Sherife, so : if not, let him enter. If I become not a Cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up : I hope I shal as soone be strangled with a Halter, as another.

Prince. Goe hide thee behinde the Arras, the rest walke up above. Now my Masters, for a true Face and good Conscience.

Falst. Both which I have had : but their date is out, and therefore Ile hide me.

Exit.

Prince. Call in the Sherife.

Enter Sherife and the Carrier.

Prince. Now Master Sherife, what is your will with me ?

She. First pardon me, my Lord. A Hue and Cry hath followed certaine men unto this house.

Prince. What men ?

She. One of them is well knowne, my gracious Lord, a grosse fat man.

Car. As fat as Butter.

Prince. The man, I doe assure you, is not heere, For I my selfe at this time have imploy'd him : And Sherife, I will engage my word to thee, That I will by to morrow Dinner time, Send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charg'd withall : And so let me entreat you, leave the house.

She. I will, my Lord : there are two Gentlemen Have in this Robbery lost three hundred Markes.

Prince. It may be so : if he have robb'd these men, He shall be answerable : and so farewell.

She. Good Night, my Noble Lord.

Prince. I thinke it is good Morrow, is it not ?

She. Indeepe, my Lord, I thinke it be two a Clocke.

Exit.

Prince. This oyle Rascall is knowne as well as Poules : goe call him forth.

Peto. Falstaffe ? fast a sleepe behinde the Arras, and snorting like a Horse.

Prince. Harke, how hard he fetches breath : search his Pockets.

He

He searcheth his Pockets and findeth certaine Papers.

Prince. What hast thou found?

Peto. Nothing but papers, my Lord.

Prince. Let's see, what be they? read them.

Peto. Item, a Capon.

ii.s.ii.d.

Item, Sawce.

iiii.d.

Item, Sacke, two Gallons,

v.s.viii.d.

Item, Anchoves and Sacke after supper.

ii.s.vi.d.

Item, Bread.

ob.

Prince. O monstrous, but one halfe penny-worth of Bread to this intollerable deale of Sacke? What there is else, keepe close, weele reade it at more advantage: there let him sleepe till day. Ile to the Court in the Morning: We must all to the Warres, and thy place shall be honorable. Ile procure this fat Rogue a Charge of Foot, and I know his death will be a March of Twelve-score. The Money shall be pay'd backe againe with advantage. Be with me betimes in the Morning: and so good morrow Peto.

Peto. Good morrow, good my Lord.

Exeunt

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Hotspurre, Worcester, Lord Mortimer, Owen Glendower.

Mort. These promises are faire, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hotsp. Lord Mortimer, and Cousin Glendower, Will you sit downe?
And Vnckle Worcester; a plague upon it, I have forgot the Mappe.

Glend. No, here it is:
Sir Cousin Percy, sit good Cousin Hotspurre:
For by that Name, as oft as Lancaster doth speake of you,
His Cheekes looke pale, and with a rising sigh,
He wisheth you in Heaven.

Hotsp. And you in Hell, as oft as he heares Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: At my Nativitie,
The front of heaven was full of fierie shapes,
Of burning Cressets: and at my Birth,
The frame and foundation of the Earth
Shak'd like a Coward.

Hotsp. Why so it would have done at the same season if your Mothers Cat had but kitten'd, though your selfe had never bene borne,

Glend. I say the Earth did shake when I was borne.

Hot. And I say the Earth was not of my minde:
If you suppose, as fearing you, it shooke.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the Earth did tremble.

Hot. Oh, then the Earth shooke
To see the Heavens on fire,
And not in feare of your Nativitie.
Diseased nature oftentimes breakes forth
In strange eruptions; and the teeming Earth
Is with a kinde of Colicke pinch and vext,
By the imprisoning of unruly Winde
Within her Wombe: which for enlargement striving,
Shakes the old Beldame Earth, and tombles downe

Steeple, and mosse-growne Towers. At your Birth,
Our Grandam Earth, having this distemperature,
In passion shooke.

Glend. Cousin: of many men
I doe not beare these Crossings: give me leave
To tell you once againe, that at my Birth
The front of Heaven was full of fierie shapes,
The Goates ranne from the Mountaines, and the Heards
Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields:
These signes have markt me extraordinarie,
And all the courses of my Life doe shew,
I am not in the Roll of common men.
Where is the Living, clipt in with the Sea,
That chides the Banks of England, Scotland, and Wales,
Which calls me Pupil, or hath read to me?
And bring him out, that is but womans soone,
Can trace me in the tedious wayes of Art,
And hold me pace in deepe experiments,
Hot. I thinke there's no man speakes better Welsh:
Ile to Dinner.

Mort. Peace Cousin Percy, you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call Spirits from the vaitie Deepe.

Hot. Why so can I, or so can any man:

But will they come, when you doe call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach thee, Cousin, to command the Devill.

Hot. And I can teach thee, Cousin, to shame the Divell,
By telling truth. Tell truth, and shame the Divell.

If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,
And Ile be sworne, I have power to shame him hence.
Oh, while you live, tell truth, and shame the Divell.

Mort. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable Chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bullingbrooke made head Against my power: thrice from the Banks of Wye,
And sandy-bottom'd Severne, have I hent him
Bootlesse home, and Weather-beaten backe.

Hot. Home without Bootes,
And in foule Weather too,
How scapes he Agues in the Divels name?

Glend. Come, heere's the Mappe:
Shall wee devide our Right,
According to our threefold order ta'ne?

Mort. The Arch-Deacon hath devided it
Into three Limits, very equally:
England, from Trent, and Severne hitherto,
By South and East, is to my part assign'd:
All Westward, Wales, beyond the Severne shore,
And all the fertile Land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower: And deare Couze, to you
The remnant Northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures Tripartite are drawne:
Which being sealed enterchangably,
(A businesse that this Night may execute)
To morrow, Cousin Percy, you and I,
And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth,
To meet your Father, and the Scottish Power,
As is appointed us at Shrewsbury.
My Father Glendower is not readie yet,
Nor shall we neede his helpe these foureteene dayes:
Within that space, you may have drawne together
Your Tenants, Friends, and neighboring Gentlemen.

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, Lords:
And in my conduct shall your Ladies come,
From whom you now must steale, and take no leave
For there will be a World of Water shed,

Vpon the parting of your Wives and you:

Hotsp. Me thinks my moiety, North from Barton here,
In quantitie equals not one of yours:
See, how this River comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my Land,
A huge halfe Moone, a monitrous Cante out.
He have the Currant in this place damn'd up,
And here the smug and Silver Trent shall runne,
In a new Chanell, faire and evenly:
It shall not winde with such a deepe indent,
To rob me of so rich a Bottome here.

Glend. Not winde? it shall, it must, you see it doth.

Mort. Yea, but marke how he beares his course,
And runnes me up, with like advantage on the other side,
Gelding the opposed Continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you.

Worc. Yea, but a litle Charge will trench him here,
And on this North side winne this Cape of Land,
And then he runnes straight and even.

Hotsp. He have it so, a litle Charge will doe it.

Glend. He not have it alter'd.

Hotsp. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hotsp. Who shall say me nay?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hotsp. Let me not understand you then, speake it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speake English, Lord, as well as you:
For I was train'd up in the English Court;
Where, being but young, I framed to the Harpe,
Many an English Dittie, lovely well,
And gave the Tongue a helpfull Ornament;
A Vertue that was never seene in you.

Hotsp. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart,
I had rather be a Kitten, and cry mew,
Then one of these same Meeter Ballad-mongers:
I had rather heare a Brazen Candlestick turn'd,
Or a dry Wheele grate on the Axle-tree,
And that would set my teeth on edge,
Nothing so much, as mincing Poetrie;
'Tis like the forc't gate of a shuffling Nagge.

Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.

Hotsp. I doe not care: He give thrice so much Land
To any well-deserving friend;
But in the way of Bargaine, marke ye me,
He cavill on the ninth part of a hayre,
Are the Indentures drawne? shall we be gone?

Glend. The Moone shines faire,
You may away by Night:
He haste the Writer; and withall,
Breake with your Wives, of your departure hence:
I am afraid my Daughter will runne madde.
So much: she doteth on her Mortimer.

Exit.

Mort. Fie, Cousin Percy, how you crosse my Father.

Hotsp. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me,
With telling me of the Moldwarpe and the Ant,
Of the Dreamer Merlin, and his Prophecies;
And of a Dragon, and a finne-lesse Fish,
A clip-wing'd Griffin, and a moulten Raven,
A couching Lyon, a ramping Cat,
And such a deale of skimble-skamble Stuffle,
As puts me from my Faith. I tell you what,
He held me last Night, at least, nine howres,
In reckning up the severall Devils Names,
That were his Lacqueyes:

I cry'd hum, and well, goe too,
But mark'd him not a word. O, he is astedious
As a tyred Horfe, a railing Wife,
Worse then a smoakie house. I had rather live
With Cheefe and Garlike in a Windmill farre,
Then feede on Cates, and have him talke to me,
In any Summer-House in Christendome.

Mort. In faith he was a worthy Gentleman;
Exceeding well read, and profited,
In strange Concealements:

Valiant as a Lyon, and wondrous affable,
And as bountifull, as Mines of India.

Shall I tell you, Cousin,

He holds your temper in a high respect,
And curbs himselfe, even of his naturall scope,
When you doe crosse his humor: 'faith he does.

I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might so have tempted him, as you have done,
Without the taste of danger, and reproofe:
But doe not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Worc. In faith, my Lord, you are too wilfull blame,
And since your coming hither, have done enough,
To put him quite besides his patience:
You must needes learne, Lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shew Greatnesse, Courage, Blood,
And that's the dearest grace it renders you;
Yet oftentimes it doth present harth Rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, Haughtinesse, Opinion, and Disdaine:
The least of which, haunting a Noble man,
Loseth mens hearts, and leaves behind a staine
Vpon the beautie of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.

Hotsp. Well, I am school'd:

Good-manners be your speede;

Heere come your Wives, and let us take our leave.

Enter Glendower, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spight that angers me,
My Wife can speake no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My Daughter weepes, shee'll not part with you,
Shee'll be a Souldier too, shee'll to the Warres.

Mort. Good Father tell her, that she and my Aunt Percy
Shall follow in your Conduct speedily.

Glendower speakes to him Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Glend. She is desperate heere:
A peevish selfe-will'd Harlotry,
One that no perswasion can doe good upon,

The Lady speakes in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy Lookes: that pretty Welsh
Which thou pow'r'st down from these swelling Heavens,
I am too perfect in: and but for shame,
In such a parley should I answer thee.

The Lady againe in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy Kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeble disputation:
But I will never be a Truant, Love,
Till I have learn'd thy Language: for thy tonghe

Maks.

Makes Welsh as sweet as Ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a faire Queene in a Summers Bowre,
With ravishing Division to her Lute.
Glend. Nay, if thou melt, then will she tunne madde.

The Lady speaks againe in Welsh.

Mori. O, I am Ignorance it selfe in this.
Glend. She bids you,
On the wanton Rushes lay you downe,
And rest your gentle Head upon her Lappe,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your Eye-lids Crowne the God of Sleepe,
Charming your blood with pleasing heavinesse;
Making such difference betwixt Wake and Sleepe,
As is the difference betwixt Day and Night,
The houre before the Heavenly Harnes'd Teeme
Begins his Golden Progresse in the East.
Mori. With all my heart Ile sit, and heare her sing:
By that time will our Booke, I thinke, be drawne.

Glend. Doe so:
And those Musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the Ayre a thousand Leagues from thence;
And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.
Hotsp. Come Kate, thou art perfect in lying downe:
Come, quicke, quicke, that I may lay my Head in thy Lappe.
Lady. Goe, ye giddy-Goose.

The Musicke playes.

Hotsp. Now I perceive the Devill understands Welsh,
And 'tis no marvell he is so humorous:
Byrlady he's a good Musitian.

Lady. Then would you be nothing but Musicall,
For you are altogether governed by humors:
Lye still ye theefe, and heare the Lady sing in Welsh.

Hotsp. I had rather heare (Lady) my Brach howle in Irish.

Lady. Would'st have thy Head broken?

Hotsp. No.

Lady. Then be still.

Hotsp. Neyther, 'tis a Womans fault.

Lady. Now God helpe thee.

Hotsp. To the Welsh Ladies Bed.

Lady. What's that?

Hotsp. Peace she sings.

Heere the Lady sings a Welsh Song.

Hotsp. Come, Ile have your Song too.

Lady. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hotsp. Not yours, in good sooth?

You sweare like a Comfit-makers Wife:
Not you, in good sooth; and, as true as I live;
And, as God shall mend me; and as sure as day:
And givest such Sarcenet suretie for thy Oathes,
As if thou never walk'st further then Finsbury.
Sweare me, Kate, like a Lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling Oath: and leave in sooth,
And such protest of Pepper-Ginger-bread,
To Velvet-Guards, and Sunday-Citizens.
Come, sing.

Lady. I will not sing.

Hotsp. 'Tis the next way to turne Taylor, or be Red-breast teacher: and the indentures bee drawne, Ile away within these two howres: and so come in, when ye will.

Exit.

Glend. Come, come, Lord Morimer, you are as slow,
As hot Lord Perrey is on fire to goe,
By this our Booke is drawne: wee'll but scale,
And then to Horse immediately.

Mori. With all my heart.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, give us leave:
The Prince of Wales, and I,
Must have some private conference:
But be neere at hand,
For we shall presently have need of you.

Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether Heaven will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done;
That in his secret Doome, out of my Blood,
Hee'll breed Revengement, and a Scourge for me:
But thou do'st fit in thy passages of Life,
Make me beleieve, that thou art onely mark'd
For the hot vengeance, and the Rod of heaven
To punish my Mistreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poore, such bare, such lewd, such meane attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art matcht withall, and grafted too,
Accompanie the greatnesse of thy blood,
And hold their levell with thy Princely heart?
Prince. So please your Majesty, I would I could Quit all offences with as cleare excuse,
As well as I am doubtlesse I can purge
My selfe of many I am charg'd withall:
Yet such extenuation let me begge,
As in reproofe of many Tales devis'd,
Which oft the Eare of Greatnesse needes must heare,
By smiling Pick-thankes, and base Newes-mongers;
I may for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faultie wabered, and irregular,
Finde pardon on my true submission.

King. Heaven pardon thee:
Yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which doe hold a Wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in Councell thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supply'de;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the Court and Princes of my blood.
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the Soule of every man
Prophetically do fore-thinke thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence beene,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheape to vulgar Company;
Opinion, that did helpe me to the Crowne,
Had still kept loyall to possession,
And left me in reputelesse banishment,
A fellow of no market, nor likely hood.
By being seldome seene, I could not stirre,
But like a Comet, I was wondred at,

That

That men would tell their Children, This is he:
Others would say, Where, Which is Bullingbrooke.
And then I stole all Courtesie from Heaven,
And drest my selfe in such Humility,
That I did pluke Allegiance from mens hearts,
Lowd Showts and Salutations from their mouthes,
Even in the presence of the Crowned King.
Thus I did keepe my Person fresh and new,
My presence like a Robe Pontificall,
Ne're seene, but wondred at: and so my State,
Seldome but sumptuous, shewed like a Feast,
And wonne by rarenesse such Solemnity.
The skipping King he ambled up and downe,
With shallow jesters, and rash Bavin Wits,
Soone kindled, and toone burnt, carded his State,
Mingled his Royalty with Carping Fooles,
Had his great Name prophaned with their Scornes,
And gave his Countenance, against his Name,
To laugh at gybing Boyes, and stand the push
Of every Beardless vaine Comparative;
Grew a Companion to the common Streetes,
Enteoff'd himselfe to Popularity:
That being dayly swallowed by mens Eyes,
They surfeted with Honye, and began to loathe
The taste of Swetnesse, whereof a little
More then a little, is by much too much.
So when he had occasion to be seene,
He was but as the Cuckow is in Iune,
Heard, not regarded: seene but with such Eyes,
As sicke and blunted with Community,
Affoord no extraordinary Gaze,
Such as is bent on Sunne-like Majesty,
When it shines seldome in admiring Eyes:
But rather drow'd, and hung their eye-lids down,
Slept in his Face, and rendred such aspect
As Cloudy men use to do their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very Line, Harry, standest thou:
For thou hast lost thy Princely Priviledge,
With vile participation. Not an Eye
But is awery of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more:
Which now doth that I would not have it doe,
Make blinde it selfe with foolish tendernesse.

Prince. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious Lord,
Be more my selfe.

King. For all the World,
As thou art to this houre, was Richard then,
When I from France set forth at Ravenspurgh;
And even as I was then, is Percy now:
Now by my Scepter, and my Soule to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Then thou the shaddow of Succession;
For of no Right, nor colour like to Right,
He doth fill fields with Harneis in the Realme,
Turnes head against the Lyons armed Iawes;
And being no more in debt to yeeres, then thou,
Leades ancient Lords, and reverent Bishops on
To bloody Battailles, and to brusing Armes.
What never-dying honour hath he got,
Against renowned Douglas? whose high Deedes,
Whose hor Incurfions and great Name in Armes,
Holds from all Souldiers chiefe Majoritie,
And Militarie Title Capitall.
Throughal the Kingdomes that acknowledge Chrifit,
Thrice hath the Hosburre Mars, in swathing Clothes,

This Infant Warrior, in his Enterprises,
Discomfited great Douglas, tane him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of the deepe Defiance up,
And shake the peace and safety of our Throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland.
The Arch-bishops Grace of Yorke, Douglas, Mortimer, Capitulate against us, and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these Newes to thee?
Why, Harry, doe I tell thee of my Foes,
Which art my neer'st and dearest Enemie?
Thou art like enough, through vassall Feare,
Base Inclination, and the start of Spleene,
To fight against me under Percies pay,
To dogge his heeles, and curtise at his frownes.
To shew how much thou art degenerate.

Prince. Doe not thinke so, you shall not finde it so:
And Heaven forgive them, that so much have tway'd
Your Majesties good thoughts away from me:
I will redeeme all this on Percies head,
And in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your Sonne,
When I will weare a garment all of blood,
And staine my favours in a bloody Maske:
Which washt away, shall scowre my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, when ere it lights,
That this same Child of honour and Renowne,
This gallant Hosburre, this all-prayed Knight,
And your unthought-of Haray chance to meet:
For every Honor sitting on his Helme,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled. For the time will come,
That I shall make this Northerne Youth exchange
His glorious Deedes for my In dignities:
Percy is but my Factor, good my Lord,
To engrosse up glorious deedes on my behalfe:
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every Glory up,
Yea, even the sleightest worship of his time,
Or I will teare the Reckoning from his Heart.
This, in the Name of Heaven, I promise here:
The which, if I promise, and doe survive,
I doe beseech your Majestie, may save
The long-growne Wounds of my intemperature:
If not, the end of Life cancels all Bands,
And I will dye a hundred thousand Deaths,
Ere breake the smallest parcell of this Vow.

King. A hundred thousand Rebels dye in this:
Thou shalt have Charge, and soveraigne trust herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now good Blunt? thy lookes are full of speed.

Blunt. So hath the Businesse that I come to speake of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,
That Douglas and the English Rebels met
The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury:
A mightie and a fearefull Head they are,
(If Promises be kept on every hand)
As ever offered foule play in a State.

King. The Earle of Westmerland set forth to day:
With him my sonne, Lord John of Lancaster,
For this advertisement is five dayes old.
On Wednesday next, Harry thou shalt set forward:
On Thursday, we our selves will march.
Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and Harry, you shall march f Through

Through Gloucestershire : by which account,
Our Businesse valued some twelve dayes hence,
Our generall Forces at Bridgenorth shall meete.
Our hands are full of Businesse : let's away,
Advantage feedes them fat, while men delay. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolph.

Falst. Bardolph, am I not false away vilely, since this last action? doe I not bate? doe I not dwindle? Why my skinne hangs about mee like an olde Ladies loose Gowne : I am withered like an olde Apple John. Well, Ile repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking : I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. And I have not forgotten what the in-side of a Church is made of, I am a Pepper Corne, a Brewers Horfe, the inside of a Church. Company, villanous Company hath beene the spoyle of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretfull, you cannot live long.

Falst. Why there is it : Come, sing me a bawdy Song, make me merry : I was as vertuously given, as a Gentleman need to be ; vertuous enough, swore little, did not above seaven times a weeke, went to a Bawdy-house not above once in a quarter of an houre, payd Mony that I borrowed, three or foure times ; lived well, and in good compasse : and now I live out of all order, out of compasse.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needes bee out of all compasse ; out of all reasonable compasse, Sir John.

Falst. Doethou amend thy Face, and Ile amend thy Life. Thou art our Admirall, thou bearest the Lanterne in the Poope, but 'tis in the Nose of thee ; thou art the Knight of the burning Lampe.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my Face does you no harme.

Falst. No, Ile be sworn : I make as good use of it, as many a man doth of a Deaths-Head, or a Memento Mori. I never see thy Face, but I thinke upon Hell fire, and Dives that lived in Purple ; for there he is in his Robes burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to vertue, I would sweare by thy Face ; my Oath should bee, By this Fire : But thou art altogether given over ; and wert indeede, but for the Light in thy Face, the Sunne of utter Darkenesse. When thou ran'st up Gads-Head in the Night, to catch my Horfe, if I did not thinke that thou hadst beene an Ignis fatuus, or a Ball of Wild-fire, there's no Purchase in Mony. O, thou art a perpetuall Triumph, an everlasting Bone-fire-Light : thou hast saved mee a thousand Markes in Linkes and Torches, walking with thee in the Night betwixt Taverne and Taverne : But the sacke that thou hast drunke mee, would have bought mee lights as good cheape, as the dearest Chandlers in Europe. I have maintain'd that Salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirtie yeeres, Heaven reward me for it.

Bard. I would my Face were in your belly.

Falst. So should I be sure to be heart-burn'd.

Enter Hostess.

How now, Dame Partlet the Hen, have you enquir'd yet who pick'd my Pocket?

Hostess. Why Sir John, what doe you thinke, Sir John? doe you thinke I keepe Thieves in my House? I have search'd, I have enquired, so haz my Husband, Man by Man, Boy by Boy, Servant by Servant : the tigh of a hayre was never lost in my house before.

Falst. Yelie Hostesse : Bardolph was shav'd, and lost many a hayre ; and Ile be sworn my Pocket was pick'd, goe to, you are a Woman, goe.

Hostess. Who? I defie thee : I was never call'd so in mine owne house before.

Falst. Goe to, I know you well enough.

Hostess. No, Sir John, you doe not know mee, Sir John : I know you, Sir John : you owe me Money, Sir John, and now you picke a quarrell, to beguile me of it : I bought you a dozen of Shirts to your Backe.

Falst. Douglas, filthy Douglas : I have given them away to Bakers Wives, and they have made Boulters of them.

Hostess. Now as I am a true Woman, Holland of eight shillings an Ell : You owe Mony here besides, Sir John, for your Dyet, and by-Drinkings, and Mony lent you, foure and twentie pounds.

Falst. He had his part of it, let him pay.

Hostess. Hee? alas hee is poore, hee hath nothing.

Falst. How? Poore? Looke upon his Face : What call you Rich? Let them coyne his Nose, let them coyne his Cheekes, Ile not pay a Denier. What, will you make a Younker of me? Shall I not take mine ease in mine Inne, but I shall have my Pocket pick'd? I have lost a Seale-Ring of my Grand-fathers, worth fortie Marke.

Hostess. I have heard the Prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that Ring was Copper.

Falst. How? the Prince is a lacke, a Sneake-Cuppe : and if he were heere, I would cudgell him like a Dogge, if he would say so.

Enter the Prince marching, and Falstaffe meets him, playing on his Trunchion like a Fife.

Falst. How now Lad? is the Winde in that Doore? Must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.

Hostess. My Lord, I pray you heare me.

Prince. What say'st thou, Mistresse Quickly? How doesthy Husband? I love him well, hee is an honest man.

Hostess. Good, my Lord, heare me.

Falst. Prethee let her alone, and list to me.

Prince. What say'st thou, lacke?

Falst. The other Night I fell asleepe heere behind the Arras, and had my Pocket pickt : this House is turn'd Bawdy-house, they picke Pockets.

Prince. What didst thou lose, lacke?

Falst. Wilt thou beleve me, Hal? Three or foure Bonds of fortie pound a peece, and a Seale-Ring of my Grand-fathers.

Prince. A Trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my Lord ; and I sayd, I heard your Grace say so : and (my Lord) hee speakes most vilely of you, like a foule-mouth'd man he is, and said, hee would cudgell you.

Prince. What he did not?

Host. There's neyther Faith, Truth, nor Woman-hood in me else.

Falst. There's

Falst. There's no more faith in thee then a stu'de Prune; nor no more truth in thee then in a drawne Fox: and for Wooman-hood, Maid-marian may be the Deputies wife of the Ward to thee. Go you nothing: go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Falst. What thing? why a thing to thanke heaven on.

Host. I am nothing to thanke heaven on, I would thou shouldst know it: I am an honest mans wife: and setting thy Knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Falst. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Fal. What beast? Why an Otter.

Prin. An Otter, sir John? Why an Otter?

Fal. Why? She's neither fish nor flesh; a man knowes not where to have her.

Host. Thou art unjust man in saying so; thou, or any man knowes where to have me, thou knave thou.

Prince. Thou say'st true Hostesse, and he slanders thee most grossely.

Host. So he doth you, my Lord, and sayde this other day, You ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Falst. A thousand pound Hal? A Million. Thy love is worth a Million: thou ow'st me thy love.

Host. Nay my Lord, hee call'd you Iacke, and said hee would cudgell you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bar. Indeed Sir John, you sayd so.

Fal. Yea, if he said my Ring was Copper.

Prince. If say 'tis Copper. Dar'st thou bee as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why Hal? thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare: but, as thou art a Prince, I feare thee, as I feare the roaring of the Lyons Whelpe.

Prince. And why not as the Lyon?

Fal. The King himselfe is to bee feared as the Lyon: Do'st thou thinke Ile feare thee, as I feare thy Father? nay if I do, let wy Girdle breake.

Prin. O, if it should, how would thy guttes fall about thy knees. But sirra: There's no roome for Faith, Truth, nor Honesty, in this bosome of thine: it is all fill'd uppe with Guttes and Midriffe. Charge an honest Woman with picking thy pocket? Why thou horton impudent imbold Rascall, if there were any thing in thy Pocket but Taverne Recknings, Memorandums of Bawdie-houses, and one poore penny-worth of Sugar-candie to make thee long-winded: if thy pocket were enrich'd with any other injuries but these, I am a Villaine: And yet you will stand to it, you will not Pocket up wrong. Art thou not asham'd?

Fal. Do'st thou heare Hal? Thou know'st in the state of Innocency, Adam fell: and what would poore Iacke Falstaffe do, in the dayes of Villany? Thou seest, I have more flesh then another man, and therefore more frailty. You confesse then you pickt my Pocket?

Prin. It appeares so by the Story.

Fal. Hostesse, I forgive thee:

Go make ready Breakfast, love thy Husband, Looke to thy Servants, and cherish thy Guests: Thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: Thou seest, I am pacified still. Nay, I prethee be gone.

Exit Hostesse.

Now Hal, to the newes at Court for the Robbery, Lad? How is that answered?

Prin. O my sweet Beefe: I must still be good Angell to thee.

The mony is paid backe againe.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying backe, 'tis a double Labour.

Prin. I am good Friends with my Father, and may doe any thing.

Fal. Rob me the Exchequer the first thing thou do'st, and do it with unwash'd hands too.

Bard. Do my Lord.

Prin. I have procured thee Iacke, a Charge of Foot.

Fal. I would it had bene of Horse. Where shal I finde one that can steale well? O, for a fine theefe, of two and twentie, or thereabout: I am heynously unprouided. Well God be thanked for these Rebels, they offend none but the Vertuous. I laud them, I praise them.

Prin. Bardolph.

Bar. My Lord.

Prin. Go beareth this Letter to Lord John of Lancaster To my Brother John. This to my Lord of Westmerland, Go Peto, to horse: for thou, and I, Have thirtie miles to ride yet ere dinner time.

Iacke, meet me to morrow in the Temple Hall

At two a clocke in the afternoone,

There shalt thou know thy Charge, and there receive Mony and Order for their Furniture.

The Land is burning, Percie stands on hye,

And either they, or we must lower lye.

Fal. Rare words? brave world.

Hostesse, my breakfast, come:

Oh, I could wish this Taverne were my drumme.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter Harrie Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my Noble Scot, if speaking truth In this fine Age, were not thought flatterie, Such attribution should the Douglas have, As not a Souldiour of this seasons stampe, Should go so generall currant through the world. By heaven I cannot flatter: I desire The Tongues of Soothers. But a Braver place In my hearts love, hath no man then your Selfe. Nay, taske me to my word: approve me Lord.

Dow. Thou art the King of Honor: No man so potent breathes upon the ground, But I will Beard him.

Enter a Messenger.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well. What Letters hast thou there? I can but thanke you.

Mess. These Letters come from your Father.

Hot. Letters from him?

Why comes he not himselfe?

Mess. He cannot come, my Lord,

He is greivous sicke.

Hot. How? haz he the leysure to be sicke now, In such a justling time? Who leades his power? Vnder whose Government come they along?

f 2

Mess.

Mess. His Letters beares his minde, not I his minde.

Wor. I prethee tell me, doth he keepe his Bed?

Mess. He did, my Lord, foure dayes ere I set forth :
And at the time of my departure thence,
He was much fear'd by his Physician.

Wor. I would the state of time had first beene whole,
Ere he by sicknesse had beene visited ;
His health was never better worth then now.

Hossp. Sicke now? droope now? this sicknes doth infect
The very Life-blood of our Enterprize,
'Tis catching hither, even to our Campe.
He writes me here, that inward sicknesse,
And that his friends by deputation
Could not so soone be drawne : nor did he thinke it meet,
To lay so dangerous and deare a trust
On any Soule remov'd, but on his owne.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,
That with our small conjunction we should on,
To see how Fortune is dispos'd to us,
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Because the King is certainly posselt
Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your Fathers sicknesse is a mayme to us.

Hossp. A perillous Gash, a very Limme lopt off :
And yet, in faith, it is not his present want
Seemes more then we shall finde it.
Were it good, to let the exact wealth of all our states
All at one Cast? To set so rich a mayne
On the nice hazard of one doubtfull houre,
It were not good : for therein should we reade
The very Bottome, and the Soule of hope
The very Lift, the very utmost Bound
Of all our fortunes.

Doug. Faith and so we should,
Where now remains a sweet reversion.
We may boldly spend, upon the hope
Of what is to come in :
A comfort of retyrement lives in this.

Hossp. A Rendezvous, a Home to flye unto,
If that the Divell and Mischance looke bigge
Vpon the Maidenhead of our Affaires.

Wor. But yet I would your Father had beene here :
The qualitie and Heire of our Attempt
Brookes no division : If will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdome, loyalty, and meere dislike
Of our proceedings, kept the Earle from hence.
And thinke, how such an apprehension
May turne the tide of fearefull Faction,
And breede a kinde of question in our cause :
For well you know, we of the offring side,
Must keepe aloofe from strict arbitrement,
And stop all fight-holes, every loope, from whence
The eye of reason may prie in upon us :
This absence of your Father drawes a Curtaine,
That shewes the ignorant a kinde of feare
Before not dreamt of.

Hossp. You strayne too farre.
I rather of his absence make this use :
It lends a Lustre, and more great Opinion,
A larger Dare to your great Enterprize,
Then if the Earle were here : for men must thinke,
If we without his helpe, can make a Head
To push against the Kingdome : with his helpe,
We shall o'returne it topsie-turvy downe :
Yet all goes well, yet all our joynts are whole,

Doug. As heart can thinke :

There is not such a word spoke of in Scotland,
At this Dreame of Feare.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hossp. My Cousin Vernon, welcome by my Soule,
Vern. Pray God my newes be worth a welcome, Lord.
The Earle of Westmerland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hither-wards, with Prince John.

Hossp. No harme : what more?

Vern. And further, I have learn'd,
The King himselfe in person hath set fourth,
Or hither-wards intended speedily,
With strong and mightie preparation.

Hossp. He shall be welcome too,
Where is his Sonne,
The nimble-footed Mad-Cap, Prince of Wales,
And his Cumrades, that daft the World aside,
And bid it passe?

Vern. All furnisht, all in Armes,
All plum'd like Estridges, that with the Winde
Bayted like Eagles, having lately bath'd,
Glittering in Golden Coates, like Images,
As full of spirit as the Moneth of May,
And gorgeous as the Sunne at Mid-summer,
Wanton as youthfull Goates, wilde as young Bulls.
I saw young Harry with his Beaver on,
His Cushes on his thighes, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his Seat,
As if an Angell dropt downe from the Clouds,
To turne and winde a fierie Pegasus,
And witch the World with Noble Horsemanship,

Hossp. No more, no more,
Worse then the Sunne in March :
This prayse doth nourish Agues : let them come.
They come like Sacrifices in their trimme,
And to the fire-ey'd Maid of smoakie Warre,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them :
The mayled Mars shall on his Altar sit
Vp to the eares in blood. I am on fire,
To heare this rich reprizall is so nigh,
And yet not ours. Come, let me take my Horse,
Who is to beare me like a Thunder-bolt,
Against the bosome of the Prince of Wales.
Harry to Harry, shall not Horse to Horse
Meete, and ne're part, till one drop downe a Coarse?
Oh, that Glendower were come.

Vern. There is more newes :
I learned in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his Power this fourteen dayes.

Doug. That's the worst Tidings that I heare of yet.

Wor. I by my faith, that beares a frosty sound.

Hossp. What may the Kings whole Battaile reach unto?

Vern. To thirty thousand.

Hos. Forty let it be,
My Father and Glendower being both away,
The powres of us, may serve so great a day.
Come, let us take a muster speedily.
Doomesday is neere ; dye all, dye merrily.

Doug. Talke not of dying, I am out of feare
Of death, or deaths hand, for this one halfe yeare.

Exeunt omnes.

Scene.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolph.

Falst. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry, fill me a Bottle of Sack, our Souldiers shall march through: we'll to Sutton-cop-hill to Night.

Bard. Will you give me money, Captaine?

Falst. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This Bottle makes an Angell.

Falst. And if it doe, take it for thy labour: and if it make twentie, take them all, Ile answere the Coynage. Bid my Lieutenant Peto meete me at the Townes end.

Bard. I will Captaine: farewell.

Exit.

Falst. If I bee not asham'd of my Souldiers, I am a sowc't-Gurnet: I have mis-us'd the Kings Presse dam-nably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fiftie Souldiers, three hundred and odder Pounds. I presse me none but good house-holders, Yeomens Sonnes: enquire me out contracted Bachelers, such as had bene ask'd twice on the Banes: such a Commodity of warme slaves, as had as lieve heare the Deuill, as a Drumme; such as feare the report of a Caliver, worse then a truck-Foole, or a hurt wilde-Ducke. I prest me none but such Tostes and Butter, with hearts in their Bellies no bigger then Pinnes heads, and they have bought out their services: And now, my whole Charge consists of Ancients, Corporals, Lieutenants, Gentlemen of Companies, Slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted Cloth, where the Gluttonous Dogges licked his Sores; and such, as indeed were never Souldiers, but discarded unjust Servingmen, younger Sonnes to younger Brothers, Revolted Tapsters and Officers, Trade-falne, the Cankers of a calme World, and long Peace, tenne times more dis-honorable ragged, then an old-fac'd Ancient; and such have I to fill up the roomes of them that have bought out their services: that you would thinke, that I had a hundred and fiftie totter'd Prodigalls, lately come from Swine-keeping, from eating Draffe and Huskes. A mad fellow met mee on the way, and told me, I had unloaded all the Gibbets, and prest the dead bodies. No eye hath seene such skar-Crowes: Ile not march through Couentry with them, that's flat Nay, and the Villaines march wide betwixt the Legges, as if they had Gyves on; for indeede, I had the most of them out of Prison. There's not a Shirt and a halfe in all my Company: and the halfe Shirt is two Napkins tackt together, and throwne over the shoulders like a Heralds Coat, without sleeves: and the Shirt, to say the truth, stolne from my Host of S. Albones; or the Red-Nose Inne-keeper of Daventry. But that's all one, they'll finde Linnen enough on every Hedge.

Enter the Prince, and the Lord of Westmerland.

Prince. How now blowne Jack? how now Quilt?

Falst. What Hal? How now mad Wag, what a Divell do'st thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmerland, I cry you mercy, I thought your Honour had already bene at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more then time that I were there, and you too: but my Powers are there already. The King, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all to Night.

Falst. Tut, never feare me, I am as vigilant as a Cat, to steale Creame.

Prince. I thinke to steale Creame indeed, for thy theft hath alredie made thee Butter: but tell me Jack, whose fellowes are these that come after?

Falst. Mine, Hal, mine.

Prince. I did never see such pittifull Rascals.

Falst. Tut, tut, good enough to tossle: foode for Powder, foode for Powder: they'll fill a Pir, as well as better: tush man, mortall men, mortall men.

Westm. I, but Sir John, me thinks they are exceeding poore and bare, too beggarly.

Falst. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their barenesse, I am sure they never learn'd that of me.

Prince. No, Ile be sworne, unlesse you call three fingers on the Ribbes bare. But sirra make haste. Percy is already in the field.

Falst. What, is the King encamp'd?

Westm. Hee is, John, I feare wee shall stay too long.

Falst. Well, to the latter end of a Fray, and the beginning of a Feast, fits a dull fighter, and a keene Guest.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Douglas, and Vernon.

Hotsp. Wee'll fight with him to Night.

Worc. It may not be.

Doug. You give him then aduantage.

Vern. Not a whit.

Hotsp. Why say you so? lookes he not for supply?

Vern. So doe we.

Hotsp. His is certaine, ours is doubtfull.

Worc. Good Cousin be advis'd, stirre not to night.

Vern. Doe not, my Lord.

Doug. You doe not counsaile well:

You speake it out of feare, and cold heart.

Vern. Doe me no slander, Douglas: by my Life,

And I dare well maintaine it with my Life,

If well-respected Honor bid me on,

I hold as little counsaile with weake feare,

As you, my Lord, or any Scot that this day liues.

Let it be seene to morrow in the Battell,

Which of us feares.

Doug. Yea, or to night.

Vern. Content.

Hotsp. To night, say I.

Vern. Come, come it may not be.

I wonder much, being me of such great leading as you are

That you fore-see not what impediments

Drag backe our expedition: certaine Horse

Of my Cousin Vernons are not yet come up,

Your Vncle Worcesters Horse came but to day,

And now their pride and mettall is asleepe,

Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,

That not a Horse is halfe the halfe of himselfe,

Hotsp. So are the Horses of the Enemie

In generall, journey bated, and brought low:

The better part of ours are full of rest.

f 3

Wor. The

Worc. The number of the King exceedeth ours :
For Gods sake, Cousin, stay till all come in.

The Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the King,
If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect.

Hotsp. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt :
And would to God you were of our determination.
Some of us love you well : and even those some Envie your great deservings, and good name,
Because you are not of our qualitie,
But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And Heaven defend, but still I should stand so,
So long as out of Limit, and true Rule,
You stand against anyoynted Majestie.
But to my Charge.

The King hath sent to know
The nature of your griefes, and whereupon
You conjure from the brest of Civill Peace,
Such bold Hostilitie, teaching his dutious Land
Audacious Crueltie. If that the King
Have any way your good defarts forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefes ; and with all speed
You shall have your desires, with interest ;
And Pardon absolute for your selfe, and these,
Herein mis-led, by your suggestion.

Hotsp. The king is kinde :
And well we know, the King
Knowes at what time to promise, when to pay.
My Father, my Vnckle, and my selfe,
Did give him that same Royaltie he weares :
And when he was not fixe and twentie strong,
Sicke in the worlds regard, wretched and low,
A poore unminded Out-law, sneaking home,
My Father gave him welcome to the shore :
And when he heard him sweare, and vow to God,
He came to be but Duke of Lancaster,
To sue his Liverie, and begge his Peace,
With teares of Innocencie, and tearmes of Zeale :
My Father, in kinde heart and pittie mov'd,
Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the Lords and Barons of the Realme
Perceiv'd Northumberland did leane to him,
The more and lesse came in with Cap and Knee,
Met him in Boroughs, Cities, Villages,
Attended him on Bridges, stood in Lanes,
Layd Gifts before him, proffer'd him their Oathes,
Gave him their Heires, as Pages followed him,
Even at the heeles, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatnesse knowes it selfe,
Steps me a little higher then his Vow
Made to my Father, while his blood was poore,
Vpon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh :
And now (forsooth) takes on him to reforme
Some certaine Edicts, and some strait Decrees,
That lay to heavie on the Common-wealth ;
Cryes out upon abuses, seemes to weepe
Over his Countries Wrongs : and by this Face,
This seeming Brow of Justice, did he winne
The hearts of all that he did angle for.
Proceeded further, cut me off the Heads
Of all the Favorites, that the absent King
In deputation left behinde him heere,

When he was personall in the Irish Warre.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to heare this.

Hot. Then to the point.

In short time after, he depos'd the King,
Soone after that, depriv'd him of his Life :
And in the neck of that, task't the whole State.
To make that worse, suffer'd his Kinsman March,
Who is, if every Owner were plac'd,
Indeed his King, to be engag'd in Wales,
There, without ranfome, to lye forfeited :
Disgrac'd me in my happy Victories,
Sought to intrap me by intelligence,
Rated my Vnckle from the Councell-Boord,
In rage dismiss'd my Father from the Court,
Broke Oath on Oath, committing Wrong on Wrong,
And in conclusion, drove us to seeke out
This head of safetie ; and withall, to prie
Into his Title : The which we finde
Too indirect, for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I returne this answer to the King?

Hotsp. Not so, Sir Walter.

Wee'lle with-draw a while :
Goe to the King, and let there be impawn'd
Some suretie for a safe returne againe,
And in the Morning early shall my Vnckle
Bring him our purpose : and so farewell.

Blunt. I would you would accept of Grace and Love.

Hotsp. And't may be, so we shall.

Blunt. Pray Heaven you doe.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the Arch-Bishop of Yorke, and Sir Michell.

Arch. Hie good Sir Michell, beare this sealed Briefe
With winged haste to the Lord Marshal,
This to my Cousin Scroope, and all the rest
To whom they are directed.
If you knew how much they doe import,
You would make haste.

Sir Mich. My good Lord, I guesse their tenor.

Arch. Like enough you doe.

To morrow, good Sir Michell, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch. For Sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The King, with mightie and quick-rayed Power,
Meetes with Lord Harrie : and I feare, Sir Michell,
What with the sicknesse of Northumberland,
Whose power was in the first proportion ;
And what with Owen Glendowers absence thence,
Who with them was rated firmly too,
And comes not in, over-rul'd by Prophecies,
I feare the Power of Percy is too weake,
To wage an instant tryall with the King.

Sir Mich. Why my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Douglas, and Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir Mich. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentlemen.

Arch. And

Arch. And so there is, but yet the King hath drawne
The speciall head of all the Land together :
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The Noble Westmerland, and warlike Blunt;
And many moe Corriuals, and deere men
Of estimation, and command in Armes.

Sir M. Doubt not my Lord, he shall be well oppos'd.

Arch. I hope no lesse : Yet needfull 'tis to feare,
And to prevent the worst, Sir Michell speed ;
For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the King
Dismiss his power, he meanes to visit us ;
For he hath heard our Confederacie,
And, 'tis but Wisedome to make strong against him :
Therefore make haste, I must goe write againe
To other Friends : and so farewell, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaff.

King. How bloodily the Sunne begins to peere
Above yon busky hill : the day lookes pale
At his distemperature.

Prin. The Southerne winde
Doth play the Trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the Leaves,
Foretels a Tempest : and a blust'ring day.

King. Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seeme foure to those that win.

The Trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester.

King. How now my Lord of Worcester ? 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such tearmes,
As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doffe our easie Robes of Peace,
To crush our old limbes in ungentle Steele :
This is not well, my Lord, this is not well.
What say you to it ? Will you againe unkne
This churlish knot of all-aborred Warre ?
And move in that obedient Orbe againe,
Where you did give a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhal'd Meteor,
A prodigie of Feare, and a Portent
Of broached Mischiefe, to the unborne Times ?

Wor. Heare me, my Liege :

For mine owne part, I could be well content
To entertaine the Lagge-end of my life
With quiet houres : For I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

King. You have not sought it : how comes it then ?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Prin. Peace, Chewet, peace.

Wor. It pleas'd your Majesty, to turne your looks
Of Favour, from my Selfe, and all our House ;
And yet I must remember you my Lord,
We were the first, and dearest of your Friends :
For you, my staffe of Office did I breake
In Richards time, and poasted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kisse your hand,

When yet you were in place, and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate, as I ;
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You swore to us,
And you did sweare that Oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing of purpose 'gainst the State,
Nor claime no further, then your new-falne right,
The seate of Gaunt, Dukedome of Lancaster.
To this, we sware our aide : But in short space,
It rain'd downe Fortune showing on your head,
And such a floud of Greatnesse fell on you,
What with our helpe, what with the absent King,
What with the injuries of wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King
So long in the unlucky Irish Warres,
That all in England did repute him dead :
And from this swarme of faire advantages,
You tooke occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the generall sway into your hand,
Forgot your Oath to us at Doncaster,
And being fed by us, you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull the Cuckowes Bird,
Vleth the Sparrow, did oppresse our Nest,
Grew by our Feeding, to so great a bulke,
That even our Love durst not come neere your sight
For feare of swallowing : But with nimble wing
We were inforc'd for safetie sake, to flye
Our of your sight, and raise this present Head,
Whereby we stand opposed by such meanes
As you your selfe, have forg'd against your selfe,
By unkinde usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworne to us in yonger enterprize.

King. These things indeede you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at Market Crosse, read in Churches,
To face the Garment of Rebellion
With some fine colour, that may please the eye
Of sickle Changelings, and poore Discontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes
Of hurly burly Innouation :
And never yet did Insurrection want
Such water-colours, to impaint his cause :
Nor moody Beggars, starving for a time
Of pell-mell hauocke, and confusion.

Prin. In both our Armies, there is many a soule
Shall pay full dearely for this encounter.
If once they joyne in triall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth joyne with all the world
In prayse of Henry Percy : By my Hopes,
This present enterprize set off his head,
I do not thinke a braver Gentleman,
More active, valiant, or more valiant young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter Age with noble deedes.
For my part, I may speake it to my shame,
I have a Truant bene to Chivalry,
And so I heare, he doth account me too :
Yet this before my Fathers Majesty,
I am content that he shall take the oddes
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.

King. And Prince of Wales, so dare we venter thee,
Albeit, considerations infinite

Do make against it : No good Worster, no,
We love our people well ; even those we love
That are misled upon your Cousins part :
And will they take the offer of our Grace :
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my Friend againe, and Ile be his.
So tell your Cousin, and bring me word,
What he will do. But if he will not yeeld,
Rebuke and dread correction waite on us,
And they shall do their Office. So be gone,
We will not now be troubled with reply,
We offer faire, take it advisedly,

Exit Worcester.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my Life,
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together,
Are confident against the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore, every Leader to his charge,
For on their answers will we set on them ;
And God befriend us, as our cause is just. Exeunt.

Manet Prince and Falstuffe.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me downe in the battell,
And bestride me, so ; 'tis a point of friendship.

Prin. Nothing but a Colossus can do thee that freindship :
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well.

Prin. Why, thou ow'st heaven a death.

Falst. 'Tis not due yet : I would be loath to pay him before his day. What neede I bee so forward with him that call's not on me ? Well, 'tis no matter, Honour prickes me on. But how if Honour pricke me off when I come on ? How then ? Can Honour set too a legge ? No : or an arme ? No : Or take away the greese of a wound ? No.
Honour hath no skill in Surgerie then ? No. What is Honour ? A word. What is that word Honour ? Ayre : A trim reckoning. Who hath it ? He that dy'de a Wednesday. Doth he feele it ? No. Doth he heare it ? No. Is it insensible then ? yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living ? No. Why ? Detraction will not suffer it, therefore Ile none of it. Honour is a meere Scutcheon, and so ends my Catechisme. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Worcester, and Sir Richard Vernon.

Wor. O no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard,
The liberall kinde offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere best he did.

Wor. Then we are all undone.
It is not possible, it cannot be,
The King would keepe his word in loving us,
He will suspect us still, and finde a time
To punish this offence in others faults :
Supposition, all our lives shall be sticke full of eyes ;
For Treason is but trusted like the Foxe,
Who ne're for same, so cherisht, and lock'd up,
Will have a wilde trick of his Ancestors :
Looke how he can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our lookes,
And we shall feede like Oxen at a stall,
The better cherisht, still the nearer death.
My Nephewes trespassse may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth, and heate of blood,

And an adopted name of Priviledge,
A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a Spleene :
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his Fathers. We did traine him on,
And his corruption being tane from us,
We as the Spring of all, shall pay for all :
Therefore good Cousin, let not Harry know
In any case, the offer of the King.

Ver. Deliver what you will, Ile lay 'tis so.
Heere comes your Cousin.

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. My Vnkle is return'd,
Deliver up my Lord of Westmerland.
Vnkle, what newes ?

Wor. The King will bid you battell presently.

Dow. Desie him by the Lord of Westmerland.

Hot. Lord Douglas : Go you and tell him so.

Dow. Marry and shall, and verie willingly.

Exit Douglas.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the King.

Hot. Did you begge any ? God forbid.

Wor. I told him gently of our greivances,
Of his Oath-breaking : which he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworne,
He calls us Rebels, Traitors, and will scourge
With haughty armes, this hatefull name in us.

Enter Douglas.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I have throwne
A brave defiance in King Henries teeth :
And Westmerland that was ingag'd did beare it,
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stept forth before the king,
And Nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hot. O, would the quarrell lay upon our heads,
And that no man might draw short breath to day,
But I and Harry Monmouth. Tell me, tell me,
How shew'd his Talking ? Seem'd it in contempt ?

Ver. No, by my Soule : I never in my life
Did heare a Challenge urg'd more modestly
Vnlesse a Brother should a Brother dare
To gentle exercise, and proove of Armes.

He gave you all the Duties of a Man,
Trim'd up your praises with a Princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a Chronicle,
Making you ever better than his prayle,
By still dispraying prayse, valed with you :
And which became him like a Prince indeed,
He made a blushing citall of himselfe,
And chid his Trewant youth with a Grace,
As if he mastred there a double spirit
Of teaching, and of learning instantly :
There did he pause. But let me tell the World,
If he out-live the envie of this day,
England did never owe so sweete a hope,
So much misconstrued in his warronnesse.

Hot. Cousin, I thinke thou art enamored
On his Follies : never did I heare
Of any Prince so wilde at Liberty.
But be he as he will, yet once ere night,
I will imbrace him with a Souldiers arme,
That he shall shrinke under my curtesie.
Arme, arme with speed. And Fellow's, Souldiers, Friends,
Better consider what you have to do,
Than I that have not well the gift of Tongue,

Can lift your blood up with perswasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Lord, heere are letters for you.

Hot. I cannot reade them now.

O Gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortnesse basely, were too long.
If life did ride upon a Dials point,
Still ending at the arrivall of an houre,
And if we live, we live to tread on Kings:
If dye; brave death, when Princes dye with us.
Now for our Consciences, the Armes is faire,
When the intent for bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My Lord prepare, the King comes on apace,

Hot. I thanke him, that he cuts me from my tale:
For I professe not talking: Onely this,
Let each man do his best. And heere I draw a Sword,
Whose worthy temper I intend to staine
With the best blood that I can meeete withall,
In the adventure of this perillous day.
Now Esperance Percy, and set on:
Sound all the lofty Instruments of Warre,
And by that Musicke, let us all imbrace:
For heaven to earth, some of us never shall,
A second time do such a curtesie.

They embrace, the Trumpets sound, the King entereth with his power, alarum unto the battell. Then enter Dowglas, and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blu. What is thy name, that in battell thus dost crossest me?
What honour dost thou seeke upon my head?

Dow. Know then my name is Dowglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me, that thou art a King.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Dow. The Lord of Stafford heere to day hath bought Thy likenesse: for instead of thee King Harry,
This sword hath ended him, so shall it thee,
Vnlesse thou yeeld thee as a Prisoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeeld thou haughtie Scot,
And thou shalt finde a King that will revenge
Lord Staffords death.

Fight, Blunt is slaine, then enters Hotspur.

Hot. O Dowglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumphed o're a Scot.

Dow. All's done, all's won, here breathles lies the King.

Hot. Where?

Dow. Heere.

Hot. This Dowglas? No, I know this face full well:
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Sembly furnish'd like the King himselfe.

Dow. Ah foole: go with thy soule whither it goes,
A borrowed title hast thou bought too deere.
Why didst thou tell me, that thou wert a King?

Hot. The King hath many marching in his Coates.

Dow. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coates,
He murther all his Wardrobe peece by peece,
Vntill I meet the King.

Hot. Vp, and away,

Our Souldiers stand full fairely for the day.

Exeunt.

Alarum, and enter Falstaffe solus.

Fal. Though I could scape shot-free at London, I feare the shot heere: here's no scoring, but upon the pate. Soft who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you:
here's no vanity, I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heavy too; heaven keepe Lead out of mee, I neede no more weight then mine owne Bowelles. I have led my rag of Muffins where they are pepper'd: there's not three of my 150, left alive, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes heere?

Enter the Prince,

Prin. What, stand'st thou idle here? Lend me thy sword,
Many a Nobleman lies starke and stiffe
Vnder the hooves of vantage enemies,
Whose deaths are unreveng'd. Prethy lend me thy sword

Fal. O Hal, I prethee give me leave to breath awhile:
Turke Gregory never did such deeds in Armes, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

Prin. He is indeed, and living to kill thee

I prethee lend me thy sword.

Falst. Nay Hal, if Percy bee alive, thou getst not my Sword; but take my Pistoll if thou wilt.

Prin. Give it me: What, is it in the Case?

Fal. I Hal, 'tis hot: There's that will Sacke a City.

The Prince drawes out a Bottle of Sacke.

Prin. What, is it a time to jest and dally now? Exit

Thomson is at him.

Fal. If Percy be alive. Ile pierce him: if he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of me, I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Give me life, which if I can save, so: if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and ther's an end. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

*Alarum, excursions, enter the King, the Prince,
Lord John of Lancaster, and Earle of Westmerland.*

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy selfe, thou bleed-dest too much: Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. lob. Not I, my Lord, unlesse I did bleed too.

Prin. I beseech your Majesty make up,
Least you retirement do amaze your friends.

King. I will do so:

My Lord of Westmerland leade him to his Tent.

West. Come my Lord. Ile leade you to your Tent

Prin. Leade me my Lord? I do not need your helpe,
And heaven forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this,
Where stain'd Nobility Iyes troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in massacres.

Job. We breath too long: come cousin Westmerland,
Our duty this way lies, for heavens sake come.

Prin. By heaven thou hast deceived me Lancaster,
I did not thinke thee Lord of such a spirit:

Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John;

But now, I do respect thee as my Soule.

King. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance then I did looke for
Of such an ungrowne Warriour.

Prin. O this Boy, lends mettall to us all.

Exit.

Enter Dowglas.

Dow. Another King? They grow like Hydra's heads:
I am the Dowglas fatall to all those

That weare those colours on them. What art thou
That counterfeits the person of a King?

King. The King himselfe: who Dowglas grieves at hart
So

So many of his shadowes thou hast met,
And not the very King. I have two Boyes
Seeke Percy and thy selfe about the Field:
But seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee: so defend thy selfe.

Dow. I feare thou art another countefeit:
And yet infaith thou bear'st thee like a King:
But mine I am sure thou art, who ere thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the K. being in danger,
Enter Prince.

Prin. Hold up thy head vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up againe: the Spirits
Of valiant Sherly, Stafford, Blunt, are in my Armes;
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee,
Who never promifeth, but meanes to pay.

They Fight, Douglas flyeth.

Cheerely My Lord: how fares your Grace?
Sir Nicholas Ganssey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton: Ile to Clifton straight.

King. Stay, and breath awhile.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion,
And shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life
In this faire rescue thou hast brought to me.

Prin. O heaven, they did me too much injury,
That ever sayd I hearkned to your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you,
Which would have bene as speedy in your end,
As all the poysonous Potions in the world,
And sav'd the Treacherous labour of your Sonne.

K. Make up to Clifton, Ile to Sir Nicholas Ganssey. Exit
Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prin. Thou speakest as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

Prin. Why then I see a very valiant rebell of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales, and thinke not Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two Starres keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double reigne,
Of Harry Percy, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it Harry, for the houre is come
To end the one of us; and would to heaven,
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.

Prin. Ile make it greater, ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Honors on thy Crest,
Ile crop to make a Garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight.
Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. Well said Hal, to it Hal. Nay you shall finde no
Boyes play heere, I can tell you.

Enter Douglas, he fights with Falstaffe, who falls down as if he were dead. The Prince killeth Percy.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou hast rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the losse of brittle life,
Then those proud titles thou hast wonne of me,
They wound my thoughts worse, then the sword my flesh:
But thought's the slave of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O, I could Prophesie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Lyes on my Tongue: No Percy, thou art dust
And food for ———

Prin. For Wormes, brave Percy. Farewell great heart:
Ill-weav'd Ambition, how much art thou shrunke?
When that this bodie did containe a spirit,

A Kingdome for it was too small a bound:
But now two paces of the vilest Earth
Is roome enough. This Earth that beares the dead;
Beares not alive so stout a Gentleman.

If thou wer't sensible of curtesie,
I should not make so great a shew of Zeale.
But let my favours hide thy mangled face,
And even in thy behalfe, Ile thanke my selfe
For doing these fayre Rites of Tenderesse.
Adieu, and take thy prayse with thee to heaven,
Thy ignomy sleepe with thee in the grave,
But not remembred in thy Epitaph.
What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this flesh
Keepe in a little life? Poore Iacke, farewell:
I could have better spar'd a better man.
O, I should have a heavy misse of thee,
If I were much in love with Vanitie.
Death hath not stricke so fat a Deere to day,
Though many dearer in this bloody Fray:
Imbowell'd will I see thee by and by,
Till then, in blood, by Noble Percy lye. Exit.

Falstaffe riseth up.

Falst. Imbowell'd? If thou imbowell mee to day, Ile give you leave to powder me, and eat me too to morrow.
I was time to counterfet, or that hotte Termagant Scot, had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I am no counterfeit; to dye, is to be a counterfeit, for hee is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: But to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life inde-cede. The better part of Valour, is Discretion; in the which better part, I have saved my life. I am affraide of this Gun-powder Percy though he be dead. How if hee should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid hee would prove the better counterfeit: therefore Ile make him sure:
yea, and Ile sweare I kill'd him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and no-bodie sees me. Therefore sirra, with a new wound in your thigh come you along me. Takes Hotspur on his backe.

Enter Prince and John of Lancaster.

Prin. Come Brother John, full bravely hast thou sleight thy Maiden sword.

John. But soft, who have we heere?
Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

Prin. I did, I saw him dead,
Breathlesse, and bleeding on the ground: Art thou alive?
Or is it fantasie that playes upon our eye-sight?
I prethee speake, we will not trust our eyes
Without our eares. Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certaine: I am not a double man: but if I am not Iacke Falstaffe, then am I a Iacke: There is Percy, if your Father will do me any Honor, so: if not, let him kill the next Percy himselfe. I looke to be either Earle or Duke, I can assure you.

Prin. Why, Percy I kill'd my selfe, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Did'st thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is given to Lying? I graunt you I was downe, and out of Breath, and so was he, but we rose both at an instant, and fought along houre by Shrewsburie clocke, If I may be belee-ved, so: if not, let them that should reward Valour, beare the sinne upon their owne heads. Ile take't on my death
I gave him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were alive, and would denie it, I would make him eate a peece of my sword.

John. This is the strangest tale that e're I heard.

Prin. This is the strangest Fellow, Brother John.

Come

Come bring your luggage Nobly on your backe:
For my part, if a lye may doe thee grace,
Ile gil'd it with the happiest tearmes I have.

A Retreat is sounded.

The Trumpets sound Retreat, the day is ours:
Come Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what Friends are living, who are dead. Exeunt.

Fal. Ile follow as they say, for Reward. Hee that rewards me, heaven reward him. If I do grow great againe, Ile grow lesse? For Ile purge, and leave Sacke, and live cleanly, as a Noble man shoul'd do. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

The Trumpets sound.

*Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with Worcester &
Vernon Prisoners.*

King. Thus ever did Rebellion finde Rebuke.
Ill-spirited Worcester, did we not send Grace,
Pardon, and tearmes of Love to all of you?
And would'st thou turne our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy Kinsmans trust?
Three Knights upon our party slaine to day,
A Noble Earle and many a creature else,
Had beene alive this houre,
If like a Christian thou had'st truly borne
Betwixt our Armies, true Intelligence.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to,

And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided, it falls on me.

King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too.
Other Offenders we will pause upon.

Exit Worcester and Vernon.

How goes the Field?

Prin. The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy slaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare, fled with the rest;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruiz'd
That the pursuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your Grace,
I may dispose of him.

King. With all my heart.

Prin. Then Brother Iohn of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong:
Goe to the Douglas, and deliver him
Vp to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free:
His Valour shewne upon our Crests to day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosome of our Adversaries.

King. Then this remains: that we devide our Power.
You Sonne Iohn, and my Cousin Westmerland
Towards Yorke shall bend you, with your deereft speed
To meet Northumberland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who (as we heare) are busily in Armes.
My Selve, and Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Checke of such another day,
And since this Businesse so faire is done,
Let us not leave till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt.

F 3 N 7 S.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth,

Containing his Death : and the Coronation of King Henry the Fifth.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

INDUCTION.

Enter Rumor.

RPen your Eares : For which of you will stop
The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumor speaks?
(from the Orient, to the drooping West
(Making the wind my Post-horse) still unfold
The Acts commenced on this Ball of Earth.
Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride,
The which, in every Language, I pronounce,
Stuffing the eares of them with false Reports :
I speake of Peace, while covert Enmitie
(Vnder the smile of safety) wounds the World :
And who but Rumor, who but onely I
Make fearefull Musters, and prepar'd Defence,
Whil'st the bigge yeare, swolne with some other griefes,
Is thought with childe, by the sterne Tyrant Warre;
And no such matter? Rumor, is a Pipe
Blowne by Surmise, Ielousies Conjectures;
And of so easie, and so plaine a stop,
That the blunt Monster, with uncounted heads,
The still discordant, wavering Multitude,
Can play upon it. But what neede I thus
My well-knowne Body to Anathomize
Among my household? Why is Rumor heere?
I run before King Harries victory,
Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsburie
Hath beaten downe young Hosspurre, and his Troopes,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion,
Even with the Rebels blood. But what meane I
To speake of truth at first? My Office is
To noyse abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Vnder the Wrath of Noble Hosspurres Sword :
And that the King, before the Douglas Rage
Stoop'd his Anointed head, as low as death.
This have I rumor'd through the peasant-Townes,
Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsburie,
And this Worme-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone,
Where Hosspurres Father, old Northumberland, Lyes crafty sicke. The Postes come tying on,
And not a man of them brings other newes
Then they have learn'd of Me. From Rumors Tongues,
They bring smooth-Comforts false, worse then True-wrongs.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L. Bar. Who keeps the Gate hoa?
Where is the Earle?

Pro. What shall I say you are?

Bar. Tell thou the Earle

That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.

Pro. His Lordship is walk'd forth into the Orchard,
Please it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate,
And he himselfe will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bar. Heere comes the Earle.

Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? Ev'ry minute now
Should be the Father of some Stratagem;
The Times are wilde: Contention (like a Horse
Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke loose,
And beares downe all before him.

L. Bar. Noble Earle,

I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury.

Nor. Good, and heaven will.

L. Bar. As good as heart can wish:

The King is almost wounded to the death:
And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harrie slaine outright: and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Douglas. Young Prince John,
And Westmerland, and Stafford, fled the Field.
And Harrie Monmouth's Brawne (the Hulke Sir John)
Is prisoner to your Sonne. O, such a Day.
(So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly wonne)
Came not, till now, to dignifie the Times
Since Casars Fortunes.

Nor. How is this deriv'd?

Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bar. I spake with one (my L.) that came fro thence,
A Gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these newes for true.

Nor. Heere comes my Servant Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last, to listen after Newes.

Enter Travers.

L. Bar. My Lord, I over-rode him on the way,
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More then he (haply) may retaille from me.

Nor. Now Travers, what good tidings comes fro you?

Tr.

Tra. My Lord, John Umfrevill turn'd me backe
With joyfull tydings; and (being better hors'd)
Out-rod me. After him, came spurring hard
A Gentleman (al. nost fore-spent with speed)
That stopp'd by me, to breath his bloodied horse.
He ask'd the way to Chester: And of him
I did demand what Newes from Shrewsbury:
He told me, that Rebellion had ill lucke,
And that yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold.
With that he gave his able Horse the head,
And bending forwards strooke his able heeles
Against the panting sides of his poore lade
Vp to the Rowell head, and starting so,
Hee seem'd in running, to devoure the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha? Againe:

Said he yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold?
(Of Hot-Spurre, cold-Spurre) that Rebellion,
Had met ill lucke?

L. Bar. My Lord: Ile tell you what,
If my yong Lord your Sonne, have not the day,
Vpon mine Honor, for a silken point
Ile give my Barony. Never talke of it.

Nor. Why should the Gentleman that rode by Travers
Give then such instances of Losse?

L. Bar. Who, he?

He was some hilding Fellow, that had stolne
The Horse he rode-on: and upon my life
Spake at adventure. Looke, here comes more Newes.

Enter Morton.

Nor. Yea, this mans brow, like to a Title-leaf,
